CALIFORNIA REPORTER

Covering Cases Reported in

PACIFIC REPORTER

170 P.—173 P.

Cite by Volume and Page of the

PACIFIC REPORTER

Thus:

170 P. 147

ST. PAUL, MINN.
WEST PUBLISHING CO.
1956

COPYRIGHT, 1918, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.
Pacific Reporter, Vol. 170, Nos. 1–5; Vol. 171, Nos. 1–7; Vol. 172, Nos. 1–6; Vol. 173, Nos. 1–10.

COPYRIGHT, 1956, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.

Cal.Rep. 170–173 P.
2–1967

CASES REPORTED

Vols. 170–173 P.

	P.
	Vol.	Page
A. B. Field & Co. v. Haven, App.	173	108
Ackerman v. Schultz, Sup.	172	609
Adams v. Anthony, Sup.	172	593
Adams; Town of Calistoga v., App.	172	624
Adolph Kutner Co.; Cohen v., Sup.	171	424
Ætna Accident & Liability Co.; Hub Hardware Co. v., Sup.	173	81
Aickley; Bond v., App.	173	483
Akahori; Penryn Land Co. v., App.	173	612
Alameda County v. Chambers, App.	170	650
Alameda County Bar Ass'n, In re, App.	170	432
Alaska Packers' Ass'n; Duluz v., Sup.	170	1133
Alison v. Chapman, App.	173	389
Allen v. Elliott, Sup.	171	686
Allen; Ferger v., App.	170	861
Allen v. Narver, Sup.	172	980
Allen; Pullin v., App.	173	772
Allen's Estate, In re, Sup.	171	686
Alloggi v. Southern Pac. Co., App.	173	1117
All Persons, etc.; Berton v., Sup.	170	151
American Nat. Bank; Skinkle v., App.	171	967
American Surety Co. of New York; Sherman v., Sup.	173	161
Amok Gold Mining Co. v. Canton Ins. Office, App.	171	1098
Amundson v. Shafer, App.	172	173
Amweg; Hollenbeck-Bush Planing Mill Co. v., Sup.	170	148
Anderson; Lanterman v., App.	172	625
Anderson; Mayer v., App.	173	174
Anderson v. Neal Institutes Co., App.	173	779
Anderson v. Recorder's Court, App.	171	812
Anderson; Stephens v., App.	171	811
Anderson; Watson v., App.	173	394
Anderson v. Wickliffe, Sup.	172	381
Anderson v. Wilcox, App.	172	398
Andrews v. Robertson, Sup.	170	1129
Anglo-California Trust Co.; Brandon v., Sup.	171	956
Anglo & London Paris Nat. Bank; Porter v., App.	171	845
Angst; Morton v., App.	173	90
Anthony; Adams v., Sup.	172	593
Anthony; Munn v., App.	171	1082
A. P. Hotaling & Co. v. Hamilton, App.	172	393
Armour & Co. v. R. Rosenberg & Sons Co., App.	173	404
Armstrong v. Industrial Accident Commission of State of California, App.	171	321
Asato v. Emirzian, Sup.	171	90
Asebez v. Bliss, Sup.	172	595
Ash v. Soo Sing Lung, Sup.	170	843
Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co.; Neale v., Sup.	172	1105
Avery; Dodge v., App.	172	759
Avery v. Wiltsee, Sup.	171	95

	P. Vol.	Page
Azevedo; Silva v., Sup.	173	929
Bailard, In re, Sup.	173	170
Baker; Fickes v., App.	171	819
Balboa Amusement Producing Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, App.	171	108
Bancroft v. Bancroft, Sup.	173	579
Bancroft v. Bancroft, two cases, Sup.	173	582
Bancroft v. Bancroft, Sup.	173	585
Bank of Bakersfield; Berry v., Sup.	170	415
Bank of Fruitvale v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, App.	170	852
Baranov v. Scudder, Sup.	170	1122
Bar Ass'n of San Francisco v. Philbrook, App.	170	440
Barkdoll; People v., App.	171	440
Barker Bros. v. Joos, App.	171	1085
Barnes v. District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate Dist., Sup.	173	1100
Barstow-San Antonio Oil Co.; Unwin v., App.	172	622
Bartollotti v. Police Court of City of Los Angeles, App.	170	161
Bashore v. Lamberson, App.	171	968
Bashore; Lamberson v., Sup.	173	401
Basler; Wood & Tatum Co. v., App.	173	1109
Batt v. Stedman, App.	173	99
Bauer; Hurt v., App.	173	601
Bay Shoe Laundry Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, App.	172	1128
Bayside Land Co.; Whiting-Mead Commercial Co. v., Sup.	172	598
Bazzuro; Croce v., App.	173	774
Beckett v. Stuart, App.	171	107
Beem v. Reichman, App.	171	972
Beer's Estate, In re, Sup.	171	1062
Beggs; People v., Sup.	172	152
Bekins Van Storage Co.; Watt v., App.	171	832
Bekins Van & Storage Co.; Hood v., Sup.	172	594
Bell v. Florence Trading Co., App.	170	172
Belland; Collins v., App.	173	601
Bellingham Bay Lumber Co. v. Western Amusement Co., App.	170	631
Bellingham Bay Lumber Co. v. Western Amusement Co., App.	170	632
Bennett; Catlett v., App.	173	598
Bennett; People v., App.	173	1004
Bennett; Ransome-Crummey Co. v., Sup.	171	304
Benoist v. Benoist, Sup.	172	1109
Benson; Robben v., App.	173	766
Benson v. Southern Pac. Co., Sup.	171	948
Benton v. Hunt, App.	172	177
Bergland's Estate, In re, Sup.	170	400
Berry v. Bank of Bakersfield, Sup.	170	415
Berton v. All Persons, etc., Sup.	170	151
Biaggi, In re, App.	172	1130
Birch; Thomas v., Sup.	173	1102
Birkel Co. v. Curtet, App.	172	165
Bissig v. Johnston Organ & Piano Mfg. Co., App.	171	816
Blair v. Brownstone Oil & Refining Co., App.	170	160
Blake v. Craig, App.	173	1005
Blevins v. Blevins, Sup.	173	402
Bliss; Asebez v., Sup.	172	595
Bliss v. Southern Pac. Co., App.	172	760
Blochman Commercial & Savings Bank v. F. G. Investment Co., Sup.	171	943
Blochman Commercial & Savings Bank v. Ketcham, App.	171	1084
Blochman Commercial & Savings Bank v. Moretti, Sup.	170	419

P.

	Vol.	Page
Boal v. Gassen, Sup.	172	588
Board of Park Directors; Gardner v., App.	170	672
Board of Police Com'rs of City and County of San Francisco; MacPhee v., App.	171	1086
Board of Police Com'rs of City and County of San Francisco; Taylor v., App.	171	1087
Bond v. Aickley, App.	173	483
Bones; People v., App.	170	166
Bonoff; Gerardi v., Sup.	172	596
Borba v. De Mello, App.	172	1113
Boyle v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, Sup.	170	1140
Bradford v. Fidelity Savings & Loan Soc., Sup.	170	404
Bradley; Bradley Co. v., App.	173	1009
Bradley; Bradley Co. v., App.	173	1011
Bradley; Bradley Co. v., App.	173	1013
Bradley Co. v. Bradley, App.	173	1009
Bradley Co. v. Bradley, App.	173	1011
Bradley Co. v. Bradley, App.	173	1013
Brady v. Brophy, Sup.	171	303
Brady's Estate, In re, Sup.	171	303
Brandes v. Superior Court in and for Santa Barbara County, App.	172	1130
Brandon v. Anglo-California Trust Co., Sup.	171	956
Branen; Foster v., Sup.	172	382
Brawley Co-op. Bldg. Co.; Hammond Lumber Co. v., Sup.	172	381
Bresee v. Dunn, Sup.	172	387
Breuner Co.; Long v., App.	172	1132
Bricker v. Rollins & Jarecki, Sup.	173	592
Briest; Robinson v., Sup.	173	88
Broad v. Broad, App.	170	658
Broderick Land & Investment Co.; Tainter v., Sup.	171	679
Brophy; Brady v., Sup.	171	303
Brown v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co., Sup.	173	403
Brown v. Lemon Cove Ditch Co., App.	171	705
Brown; People v., App.	173	621
Brownstone Oil & Refining Co.; Blair v., App.	170	160
Bryan; Hamaker v., Sup.	172	391
Bryan v. Tevis, Sup.	171	433
Bryson; Porter v., App.	170	1068
Buckler; Robertson v., Sup.	170	424
Budd v. Hughes, Sup.	171	287
Bullis v. Staniford, Sup.	171	1064
Burdell v. St. Luke's Hospital, App.	173	1008
Burmester v. Horn, App.	170	674
Butler v. Union Trust Co., Sup.	172	601
Byrne & McDonnell; Crocker Nat. Bank v., Sup.	173	752
C. A. Hooper & Co.; Gartlan v., Sup.	170	1115
Caldwell v. Regents of University of California, App.	170	666
California Gas & Electric Corp. v. Union Trust Co. of San Francisco, Sup.	172	146
California Trojan Powder Co. v. Garnsey, App.	171	1078
California Trona Co.; Countryman v., App.	170	1069
Callett v. Central California Traction Co., App.	171	984
Camm v. Justice's Court of Santa Rosa Tp., Sup.	170	409
Campbell v. Kennedy, Sup.	170	1107
Canton Ins. Office; Amok Gold Mining Co. v., App.	171	1098
Carmichael; Merchants' Nat. Bank v., Sup.	173	999
Carr v. Sacramento Clay Products Co., App.	170	446
Carrera, Ex parte, App.	172	979

	Vol.	Page
Castelhun; Gallwey v., App.	170	657
Catlett v. Bennett, App.	173	598
Cavasso; Downey v., App.	171	1077
C. C. Harris Oil Co. v. Standard Construction & Development Co., Sup.	173	83
Central California Traction Co.; Callett v., App.	171	984
Central California Traction Co.; Ilardi v., App.	172	763
Central Sav. Bank; Halsted v., App.	172	613
Central Sav. Bank; Halsted v., App.	172	614
Chambers; Alameda County v., App.	170	650
Chambers v. Gallagher, Sup.	171	931
Chambers v. Gibson, Sup.	173	752
Chambers v. Princeton University, Sup.	172	390
Chapman; Alison v., App.	173	389
Chase; De Kahn v., Sup.	170	608
Chesley; Levi v., Sup.	172	607
Chicago Bonding & Surety Co.; New England Equitable Ins. Co. v., App.	172	1122
Chicago Bonding & Surety Co.; Richardson & Fisher Co. v., App.	170	856
Chicago Bonding & Surety Co.; Union Mach. Co. v., App.	172	1113
Christin v. Clark, App.	173	109
Chung Sing v. Southern Pac. Co., Sup.	172	1103
Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank v. Tuffree, Sup.	172	586
Citron; Gentry v., App.	171	1079
City and County of San Francisco; Keyes v., Sup.	173	475
City Council of Oakland; Rockridge Place Co. v., Sup.	172	1110
City of Los Angeles; Fitzwilliam v., App.	170	685
City of Los Angeles; Murphy v., App.	170	685
City of Los Angeles; Nutting v., App.	170	680
City of Los Angeles; Rindge Co. v., App.	170	685
City of Los Angeles; Union Hollywood Water Co. v., Sup.	172	983
City of Napa v. Maxwell, App.	171	837
City of Oakland v. Industrial Accident Commission, App.	170	430
City of Oakland; Wheeler v., App.	170	864
City of Ontario; Farrell v., App.	173	392
City of Redding v. Shasta County, App.	171	806
City of Richmond; Partridge v., App.	172	166
City of San Mateo; The Emporium v., Sup.	171	434
City of Vallejo; Williams v., App.	171	834
City of Vallejo; Williams v., App.	171	837
City of Venice v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, App.	173	392
City of Watts v. Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County, App.	173	183
C. J. Kubach Co.; Frinier v., Sup.	171	952
Clark; Christin v., App.	173	109
Clark; People v., App.	173	102
Clarkin v. Morris, Sup.	172	981
Clark & Henery Const. Co.; Lillie v., App.	173	483
Clark & Henery Const. Co.; Wentland v., App.	173	480
Clemens Horst Co.; Reynolds v., App.	172	623
Cohen v. Adolph Kutner Co., Sup.	171	424
Cohen; Creely v., App.	170	643
Cole v. Mugridge, App.	171	827
Collins v. Belland, App.	173	601
Colton; Nelson v., App.	171	701
Combined Amusements Co.; Jordan v., App.	173	390
Commercial Pac. Cable Co.; Western Union Tel. Co. v., Sup.	171	317
Condon; Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank v., Sup.	172	591
Connell v. McGahie, App.	173	1115

P.

	Vol.	Page
Cooper v. Huntington, Sup.	172	591
Cooper v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, Sup.	171	684
Cople Co. v. Hindes, Sup.	170	155
Corbett v. Spanos, App.	173	769
Corning Irr. Co.; J. M. Howell Co. v., Sup.	171	100
Correa, Ex parte, App.	172	615
Coulter; Ransome-Crummey Co. v., Sup.	171	308
Countryman v. California Trona Co., App.	170	1069
Cowell; Skelly v., App.	173	609
Cowell Lime & Cement Co.; Long v., App.	173	492
Cowell Lime & Cement Co.; Osborn v., App.	173	492
Craig; Blake v., App.	173	1005
Craig v. Lee, App.	171	1089
Crane v. Heine, App.	170	433
Crane Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co., App.	173	494
Creely v. Cohen, App.	170	643
Crittenden v. Murphy, App.	173	595
Croce v. Bazzuro, App.	173	774
Crocker Nat. Bank v. Byrne & McDonnell, Sup.	173	752
Cudahy Packing Co. v. R. Rosenberg & Sons Co., App.	173	406
Cuneo v. Davis, App.	171	1079
Cunningham; Howard v., App.	171	976
Curran v. Wilson, App.	171	817
Curtet; George J. Birkel Co. v., App.	172	165
Custis v. Gehele, Sup.	170	1109
Cutler; Kurtz v., Sup.	172	590
Dam; Harding v., App.	173	603
Dam; Harding v., App.	173	604
Danziger; Scherer v., Sup.	173	85
Davis; Cuneo v., App.	171	1079
Davis v. Superior Court in and for San Joaquin County, App.	170	437
Dawes v. Tucker, Sup.	171	1068
Dawson v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., Sup.	170	603
De Kahn v. Chase, Sup.	170	608
De Leon; People v., App.	170	173
Della Mora v. Favilla, App.	173	770
De Mello; Borba v., App.	172	1113
Denver Stockyards Bank v. Martin, Sup.	170	428
Department of Public Service of City of Los Angeles; Mushet v., App.	170	653
Deseret Water, Oil & Irrigation Co. v. State, Sup.	171	287
Deusing, Ex parte, Sup.	173	930
District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate Dist.; Barnes v., Sup.	173	1100
Dodge v. Avery, App.	172	759
Dominguez; Soper v., Sup.	172	586
Donaldson; People v., App.	171	442
Dow v. George E. Dow Estate Co., App.	173	406
Dowell, Ex parte, App.	172	1121
Dowell; Marcone v., Sup.	173	465
Dow Estate Co.; Dow v., App.	173	406
Downey v. Cavasso, App.	171	1077
Doyle; Pedley v., Sup.	170	602
Dozier v. National Borax Co., App.	170	638
Drenth; Globe Grain & Milling Co. v., App.	171	821
Drouillard v. Southern Pac. Co., App.	172	405
Duluz v. Alaska Packers' Ass'n, Sup.	170	1133
Duncan v. Tom Poste, Inc., App.	172	163
Dunn; Bresee v., Sup.	172	387

	Vol.	Page
Dunn Auto Co.; S. C. Smith Estate v., App.	172	415
Durflinger; Patten & Davies Lumber Co. v., App.	172	979
Durst v. New Blue Point Mining Co., two cases, Sup.	171	417
Eastman v. Sunset Park Land Co., App.	170	642
East Side Canal & Irrigation Co.; Turner v., Sup.	171	299
E. Clemens Horst Co. v. New Blue Point Mining Co., Sup.	171	417
E. Clemens Horst Co.; Reynolds v., App.	170	1082
E. Clemens Horst Co.; Reynolds v., App.	172	623
Edgar; Ferguson v., Sup.	171	1061
Edinburg; Perkins v., App.	171	971
Edmonds v. Wilcox, Sup.	172	1101
Edson v. Mancebo, App.	173	484
Edwards v. Gear, App.	170	645
Eldorado Gold Star Mining Co.; Massie v., App.	171	814
Elgar; People v., App.	171	697
Elliott; Allen v., Sup.	171	686
Elliott; Hughes Mfg. & Lumber Co. v., Sup.	172	584
Emirzian; Asato v., Sup.	171	90
Employers' Liability Assur. Corp., Limited, of London, England, v. Industrial Accident Commission, Sup.	171	935
Emporium, The, v. City of San Mateo, Sup.	171	434
Epperly; Gazett v., App.	170	634
Escalera; People v., App.	171	975
Evans; Land v., Sup.	173	387
Ewer's Will, In re, Sup.	171	683
Ewing v. Richvale Land Co., App.	172	645
Farmer; French v., Sup.	172	1102
Farr v. Wolcott, Sup.	171	291
Farrell v. City of Ontario, App.	173	392
Favilla; Della Mora v., App.	173	770
Ferger v. Allen, App.	170	861
Fergus v. Venice Inv. Co., App.	172	396
Ferguson v. Edgar, Sup.	171	1061
Ferguson; Hough v., App.	171	804
Fest v. Superior Court of California in and for Sonoma County, App.	173	610
F. G. Investment Co.; Blochman Commercial & Savings Bank v., Sup.	171	943
Fickes v. Baker, App.	171	819
Fidelity Savings & Loan Soc.; Bradford v., Sup.	170	404
Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York; Bank of Fruitvale v., App.	170	852
Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, Sup.	171	429
Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v. Industrial Accident Commission of State of California, Sup.	170	1112
Field & Co. v. Haven, App.	173	108
Finn; Thaxter v., Sup.	173	163
First Federal Trust Co.; Hallidie v., Sup.	171	431
First Nat. Bank; Souza v., App.	172	175
First Nat. Bank v. Spalding, Sup.	170	407
First Sav. Bank; Halsted v., App.	172	613
First State Bank; Van Hagen v., App.	173	764
Fiske; Stoddard v., App.	170	663
Fiske's Estate, In re, Sup.	172	390
Fitzgerald v. Southern Pac. Co., App.	173	91
Fitzwilliam v. City of Los Angeles, App.	170	685
Flanagan; Grazer v., App.	170	1076
Flatland; Walsh v., App.	173	596
Fleishhacker v. Moran, App.	173	595

	P. Vol.	Page
Flinn v. Zion, App.	173	602
Florence Trading Co.; Bell v., App.	170	172
Florence Trading Co.; Titlow v., App.	170	172
Fontaine v. Lacassie, App.	171	812
Foreman v. Hunter Lumber Co., App.	173	408
Foster v. Branen, Sup.	172	382
Foster v. Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank, App.	172	392
Franck v. Moran, App.	171	841
Franklin; People v., App.	171	441
Franklin Fire Ins. Co.; Brown v., Sup.	173	403
Fraser v. Lumbard, Sup.	170	601
Fraser's Estate, In re, Sup.	170	601
Fraysier; People v., App.	172	1126
French v. Farmer, Sup.	172	1102
Fresno County Abstract Co.; Hopkins v., App.	173	106
Frey; Verein v., Sup.	171	802
Friedman; Hebrew Home for Aged Disabled v., Sup.	172	140
Friedman's Estate, In re, Sup.	172	140
Frinier v. C. J. Kubach Co., Sup.	171	952
Fuller; McWhirter v., Sup.	170	417
Fursman; Thomas v., Sup.	171	301
Fuster; Rawlings v., Sup.	171	955
Gabbert v. Perry, App.	173	412
Gallagher; Chambers v., Sup.	171	931
Gallwey v. Castelhun, App.	170	657
Gardner v. Board of Park Directors, App.	170	672
Garnsey; California Trojan Powder Co. v., App.	171	1078
Garrett v. Garrett, Sup.	172	587
Gartlan v. C. A. Hooper & Co., Sup.	170	1115
Gartland; Scholz v., App.	173	371
Gassen; Boal v., Sup.	172	588
Gastone; People v., App.	173	409
Gate City Oil Co.; San Joaquin Valley Bank v., App.	173	781
Gaul; Strecker v., App.	170	646
Gazett v. Epperly, App.	170	634
Gear; Edwards v., App.	170	645
Gear; Herron v., App.	170	646
Gehele; Custis v., Sup.	170	1109
Gentry v. Citron, App.	171	1079
George Cople Co. v. Hindes, Sup.	170	155
George E. Dow Estate Co.; Dow v., App.	173	406
George J. Birkel Co. v. Curtet, App.	172	165
Georgia Casualty Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, two cases, Sup.	170	625
Gerardi v. Bonoff, Sup.	172	596
Gibson; Chambers v., Sup.	173	752
Gill & Lutz; Sherwood & Sherwood v., App.	173	171
Gilmour v. North Pasadena Land & Water Co., Sup.	171	1066
Gintjee v. Knieling, App.	170	641
Glann's Estate, In re, Sup.	170	833
Globe Grain & Milling Co. v. Drenth, App.	171	821
Globe Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, App.	171	1088
Golden State Auto Tour Co.; Irwin v., Sup.	171	1059
Gonzales; People v., App.	173	407
Gordon v. Perkins, App.	171	698
Graff v. United Railroads of San Francisco, Sup.	172	603
Grant; Southern California Electric Co. v., Sup.	173	760
Graves v. Union Oil Co. of California, App.	173	618

	Vol.	Page
Grazer v. Flanagan, App.	170	1076
Great Western Electro-Chemical Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, App.	170	165
Greene v. Locke-Paddon Co., App.	172	168
Griffin v. Smith, Sup.	171	92
Griffith; O'Melveny v., Sup.	171	934
Guinn v. McReynolds, Sup.	170	421
Gumpel v. San Diego Electric Ry. Co., Sup.	172	605
Gurnsey's Estate, In re, Sup.	170	402
Hackett v. Lewis, App.	173	111
Haight v. Stewart, App.	172	769
Hall v. Thurston, Sup.	171	285
Hallawell v. Union Oil Co. of California, App.	173	177
Hallidie v. First Federal Trust Co., Sup.	171	431
Halsted v. Central Sav. Bank, App.	172	613
Halsted v. Central Sav. Bank, App.	172	614
Halsted v. First Sav. Bank, App.	172	613
Halsted v. Oakland Bank of Savings, App.	172	614
Hamaker v. Bryan, Sup.	172	391
Hamilton; A. P. Hotaling & Co. v., App.	172	393
Hammond Lumber Co. v. Brawley Co-op. Bldg. Co., Sup.	172	381
Hammond Lumber Co. v. Kearsley, App.	172	404
Hanford; People v., App.	171	112
Hansen; Kendrick v., App.	170	675
Harding v. Dam, App.	173	603
Harding v. Dam, App.	173	604
Harding v. Liberty Hospital Corp., Sup.	171	98
Hardisty; Wilcox v., Sup.	171	947
Harris Oil Co. v. Standard Construction & Development Co., Sup.	173	83
Hart, Ex parte, App.	172	610
Haven; A. B. Field & Co. v., App.	173	108
Hayes; Lewis v., Sup.	171	293
Hayes; MacDermot v., Sup.	170	616
Hayes; Valentine v., App.	173	410
Hazard, Gould & Co. v. Rosenberg, Sup.	170	612
Head Drilling Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, Sup.	170	157
Hebrew Home for Aged Disabled v. Friedman, Sup.	172	140
Heine; Crane v., App.	170	433
Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank v. Condon, Sup.	172	591
Henrici v. South Feather Land & Water Co., Sup.	170	1135
Henry Cowell Lime & Cement Co.; Long v., App.	173	492
Henry Cowell Lime & Cement Co.; Osborn v., App.	173	492
Henshaw v. Homeland Co., Sup.	170	826
Hepler v. Wright, App.	170	667
Herron v. Gear, App.	170	646
Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc.; Lee v., Sup.	171	677
Hill; People v., App.	172	1114
Hindes; George Cople Co. v., Sup.	170	155
Hodgkins v. People's Water Co., Sup.	171	945
Hoffman v. Pacific Coast Const. Co., App.	173	776
Hogan Lumber Co. v. Nichols, Sup.	170	1106
Holland v. Kelly, Sup.	171	421
Hollenbeck-Bush Planing Mill Co. v. Amweg, Sup.	170	148
Holmes v. Snow Mountain Water & Power Co., App.	172	178
Homeland Co.; Henshaw v., Sup.	170	826
Home Sav. Bank v. Los Angeles City Realty Co., Sup.	171	290
Hood v. Bekins Van & Storage Co., Sup.	172	594

	Vol.	Page
Hooper & Co.; Gartlan v., Sup.	170	1115
Hopkins v. Fresno County Abstract Co., App.	173	106
Horn; Burmester v., App.	170	674
Horr, Ex parte, Sup.	171	801
Horst Co. v. New Blue Point Mining Co., Sup.	171	417
Horst Co.; Reynolds v., App.	170	1082
Hotaling & Co. v. Hamilton, App.	172	393
Hough v. Ferguson, App.	171	804
Housel v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., Sup.	171	956
Howard v. Cunningham, App.	171	976
Howell Co. v. Corning Irr. Co., Sup.	171	100
Hubbard v. Jurian, App.	170	1093
Hubbell; Oberholzer v., App.	171	436
Hub Hardware Co. v. Ætna Accident & Liability Co., Sup.	173	81
Huckaby v. Northam, App.	171	1083
Hudson v. Ukiah Water & Improvement Co., Sup.	171	93
Huffaker; Phillips v., App.	170	431
Hughes; Budd v., Sup.	171	287
Hughes Mfg. & Lumber Co. v. Elliott, Sup.	172	584
Hunt; Benton v., App.	172	177
Hunt v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Sup.	173	1097
Hunter Lumber Co.; Foreman v., App.	173	408
Huntington; Cooper v., Sup.	172	591
Huntington v. Vavra, App.	172	166
Hurt v. Bauer, App.	173	601
Huse; Whitcomb v., App.	173	597
Hynes; McSweeney v., Sup.	170	615
Ilardi v. Central California Traction Co., App.	172	763
Industrial Accident Commission; Balboa Amusement Producing Co. v., App.	171	108
Industrial Accident Commission; City of Oakland v., App.	170	430
Industrial Accident Commission; Employers' Liability Assur. Corp., Limited, of London, England, v., Sup.	171	935
Industrial Accident Commission; Georgia Casualty Co. v., Sup.	170	625
Industrial Accident Commission; Globe Indemnity Co. v., App.	171	1088
Industrial Accident Commission; Great Western Electro-Chemical Co. v., App.	170	165
Industrial Accident Commission; Head Drilling Co. v., Sup.	170	157
Industrial Accident Commission; John A. Roebling's Sons Co. v., App.	171	987
Industrial Accident Commission; Kemper v., Sup.	171	426
Industrial Accident Commission; London & Lancashire Indemnity Co. v., App.	170	1074
Industrial Accident Commission; Mahaffey v., Sup.	171	298
Industrial Accident Commission; Maryland Casualty Co. v., Sup.	173	993
Industrial Accident Commission; Mesmer & Rice v., Sup.	173	1099
Industrial Accident Commission; Moore & Scott Iron Works v., App.	172	1114
Industrial Accident Commission; Parsons v., Sup.	173	585
Industrial Accident Commission; Santa Ana Sugar Co. of Santa Ana v., App.	170	630
Industrial Accident Commission; Shell Co. of California v., App.	172	611
Industrial Accident Commission; Southern Pac. Co. v., Sup.	170	822
Industrial Accident Commission; Southern Pac. Co. v., Sup.	171	1071
Industrial Accident Commission; Walker v., Sup.	171	954
Industrial Accident Commission; Whiting-Mead Commercial Co. v., Sup.	173	1105
Industrial Accident Commission; Williamson v., Sup.	171	797
Industrial Accident Commission of California; Bay Shore Laundry Co. v., App.	172	1128

	Vol.	Page
Industrial Accident Commission of California; Cooper v., Sup.	171	684
Industrial Accident Commission of California; Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v., Sup.	171	429
Industrial Accident Commission of California; Neal v., App.	171	696
Industrial Accident Commission of California; Stansbury v., App.	171	698
Industrial Accident Commission of State of California; Armstrong v., App.	171	321
Industrial Accident Commission of State of California; Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v., Sup.	170	1112
Ingle Mfg. Co. v. Scales, App.	172	169
Irvine v. Postal Telegraph-Cable Co., App.	173	487
Irwin v. Golden State Auto Tour Co., Sup.	171	1059
Jacinto; People v., App.	173	371
Jacobs; People v., App.	171	715
James v. P. B. Steifer Mining Co., App.	171	117
Jameson v. Tully, Sup.	173	577
Jepson's Estate, In re, Sup.	170	1182
Jepson's Estate, In re, Sup.	172	1107
Jesus Maria Rancho v. Southern Pac. Co., App.	172	183
J. F. Lucey Co. v. McMullen, Sup.	173	1000
J. M. Dunn Auto Co.; S. C. Smith Estate v., App.	172	415
J. M. Howell Co. v. Corning Irr. Co., Sup.	171	100
J. M. Overell Furniture Co. v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, App.	173	176
John A. Roebling's Sons Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, App.	171	987
John Breuner Co.; Long v., App.	172	1132
Johnson, Ex parte, App.	171	1074
Johnson Service Co. v. Latourrette-Fical Co., App.	170	1182
Johnston v. Murphy, App.	172	616
Johnston Organ & Piano Mfg. Co.; Bissig v., App.	171	816
Jolly v. McCoy, App.	172	618
Jones v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., Sup.	173	586
Jones' Estate, In re, Sup.	172	979
Joos; Barker Bros. v., App.	171	1085
Jordan v. Combined Amusements Co., App.	173	390
Judkins; Morris v., App.	172	163
Jurian; Hubbard v., App.	170	1093
Justice's Court of Los Angeles Tp., Los Angeles County; Solomon v., App.	171	817
Justice's Court of Santa Rosa Tp.; Camm v., Sup.	170	409
Kalish v. White, App.	173	494
Karales v. Los Angeles Creamery Co., App.	171	821
Katzenberger; Prophet v., App.	172	775
Kearsley; Hammond Lumber Co. v., App.	172	404
Keil & Hannon; Treloar v., App.	171	823
Keiper v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., App.	172	180
Kelly; Holland v., Sup.	171	421
Kelly v. Woolsey, Sup.	170	837
Kelsey Co. v. Spears, App.	173	606
Kemper v. Industrial Accident Commission, Sup.	171	426
Kendrick v. Hansen, App.	170	675
Kennedy; Campbell v., Sup.	170	1107
Keseling; People v., App.	170	627
Ketcham; Blochman Commercial & Savings Bank v., App.	171	1084
Keyes v. City and County of San Francisco, Sup.	173	475
Kingsbury; Walker v., App.	173	95
Kings County Development Co.; People v., Sup.	171	102

	Vol.	Page
Kinsey v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. of California, Sup.	172	1098
Knieling; Gintjee v., App.	170	641
Kubach Co.; Frinier v., Sup.	171	952
Kurtz v. Cutler, Sup.	172	590
Kuster; Lally v., Sup.	171	961
Kutner Co.; Cohen v., Sup.	171	424
Lacassie; Fontaine v., App.	171	812
Laine; People v., Sup.	171	941
Lally v. Kuster, Sup.	171	961
Lamberson; Bashore v., App.	171	968
Lamberson v. Bashore, Sup.	173	401
Land v. Evans, Sup.	173	387
Land's Estate, In re, Sup.	173	387
Langdon; Parkinson v., App.	171	710
Lanterman v. Anderson, App.	172	625
Latourrette-Fical Co.; Johnson Service Co. v., App.	170	1182
Lee; Ex parte, Sup.	171	958
Lee; Craig v., App.	171	1089
Lee v. Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc., Sup.	171	677
Lee; People v., App.	172	158
Lefurgey v. Prentice, App.	171	1080
Lemon Cove Ditch Co.; Brown v., App.	171	705
Levi v. Chesley, Sup.	172	607
Levings v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., Sup.	173	87
L. E. White Lumber Co. v. Mendocino County, Sup.	171	799
Lewis; Hackett v., App.	173	111
Lewis v. Hayes, Sup.	171	293
Lewis; Logan v., App.	170	851
Lewis; Noel v., App.	170	857
Lewis v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Sup.	173	1099
Liberty Hospital Corp.; Harding v., Sup.	171	98
Lillie v. Clark & Henery Const. Co., App.	173	483
Lima; People v., App.	172	762
Lindblom v. Round Valley Water Co., Sup.	173	994
Linn v. Peirsol, App.	173	763
Loaiza; Wright v., Sup.	171	311
Lobbett & Dean v. Oakland, A. & E. Ry., App.	172	1123
Locke-Paddon Co.; Greene v., App.	172	168
Logan v. Lewis, App.	170	851
London Guarantee & Accident Co.; Wilson v., App.	173	1006
London & Lancashire Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, App.	170	1074
Long v. Henry Cowell Lime & Cement Co., App.	173	492
Long v. John Breuner Co., App.	172	1132
Los Angeles City Realty Co.; Home Sav. Bank v., Sup.	171	290
Los Angeles Creamery Co.; Karales v., App.	171	821
Los Angeles Milling Co.; Southern Pac. Co. v., Sup.	170	829
Los Angeles Stone Co. v. National Surety Co., Sup.	173	79
Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank; Foster v., App.	172	392
Los Angeles & Arizona Land Co. v. Marr, Sup.	173	83
Love v. Pavert, Sup.	170	827
Lowe v. Lowe, Sup.	172	583
Lowe; Webster v., Sup.	170	850
Lowe's Estate, In re, Sup.	172	583
Lucey Co. v. McMullen, Sup.	173	1000
Lumbard; Fraser v., Sup.	170	601
Lutton v. Rau, App.	173	1111

CASES REPORTED

	P. Vol.	Page
Lyons; People v., App.	173	107
McCallum; Smith v., App.	172	408
McCarter v. Zeller, App.	170	636
McClellan v. State, App.	170	662
McCloud River Lumber Co.; Raftis v., App.	170	176
McCowan, In re, Sup.	170	1100
McCoy; Jolly v., App.	172	618
MacDermot v. Hayes, Sup.	170	616
McGahie; Connell v., App.	173	1115
Machado v. Machado, App.	172	1124
McKillop; Meyers v., App.	173	773
McManus v. Red Salmon Canning Co., App.	173	1112
McMullen; J. F. Lucey Co. v., Sup.	173	1000
McNeely v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, App.	173	102
MacPhee v. Board of Police Com'rs of City and County of San Francisco, App.	171	1086
McReynolds; Guinn v., Sup.	170	421
McSweeney v. Hynes, Sup.	170	615
McWhirter v. Fuller, Sup.	170	417
Marcone v. Dowell, Sup.	173	465
Marconi Wireless Tel. Co. of America v. North Pacific S. S. Co., App.	173	103
Madsen v. Madsen, App.	170	435
Mahaffey v. Industrial Accident Commission, Sup.	171	298
Maier; Southern California Iron & Steel Co. v., App.	172	615
Mana, Ex parte, Sup.	172	986
Mancebo; Edson v., App.	173	484
Marin Municipal Water Dist. v. Marin Water & Power Co., Sup.	173	469
Marin Municipal Water Dist. v. North Coast Water Co., Sup.	173	473
Marin Water & Power Co.; Marin Municipal Water Dist. v., Sup.	173	469
Marr; Los Angeles & Arizona Land Co. v., Sup.	173	83
Marsh; Ramish v., Sup.	172	1100
Martin; Denver Stockyards Bank v., Sup.	170	428
Maryland Casualty Co.; Crane Co. v., App.	173	494
Maryland Casualty Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, Sup.	173	993
Maryland Casualty Co. v. Matson Nav. Co., Sup.	171	427
Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Roberts, Sup.	171	313
Massie v. Eldorado Gold Star Mining Co., App.	171	814
Matson Nav. Co.; Maryland Casualty Co. v., Sup.	171	427
Matthews v. Matthews, App.	173	1007
Mayer v. Anderson, App.	173	174
Maxwell; City of Napa v., App.	171	837
Meade; Smith v., App.	171	815
Mendocino County; L. E. White Lumber Co. v., Sup.	171	799
Mendosa; People v., Sup.	173	998
Merchants' Golden Agency v. Roantree, App.	173	600
Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Carmichael, Sup.	173	999
Mesmer & Rice v. Industrial Accident Commission, Sup.	173	1099
Meyers v. McKillop, App.	173	773
Middleton; Whitcomb v., App.	173	597
Miller; People v., Sup.	170	817
Mohr v. North Rawhide Mining & Development Co., Sup.	170	600
Mooney, Ex parte, App.	171	109
Mooney; People v., Sup.	171	690
Moore & Scott Iron Works v. Industrial Accident Commission, App.	172	1114
Moran; Fleishhacker v., App.	173	595
Moran; Franck v., App.	171	841
Moreno v. New Guadalupe Mining Co., App.	170	1088

	Vol.	Page
Moretti; Blochman Commercial & Savings Bank v., Sup.	170	419
Morrill v. Stone & Webster Const. Co., Sup.	170	405
Morris; Clarkin v., Sup.	172	981
Morris v. Judkins, App.	172	163
Morton v. Angst, App.	173	90
Mt. Whitney Power & Electric Co.; Sickles v., Sup.	170	599
Mugridge; Cole v., App.	171	827
Munn v. Anthony, App.	171	1082
Murphy v. City of Los Angeles, App.	170	685
Murphy; Crittenden v., App.	173	595
Murphy; Johnston v., App.	172	616
Mushet v. Department of Public Service of City of Los Angeles, App.	170	653
Narver; Allen v., Sup.	172	980
Nathan v. Porter, App.	172	170
National Borax Co.; Dozier v., App.	170	638
National Surety Co.; Los Angeles Stone Co. v., Sup.	173	79
National Surety Co.; Panter v., App.	171	803
National Union Fire Ins. Co.; Northern Ins. Co. of New York v., App.	170	434
Neal v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, App.	171	696
Neale v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., Sup.	172	1105
Neal Institutes Co.; Anderson v., App.	173	779
Nelson v. Colton, App.	171	701
Nelson v. Thomas, App.	172	398
New Blue Point Mining Co.; Durst v., Sup.	171	417
New Blue Point Mining Co.; E. Clemens Horst Co. v., Sup.	171	417
New England Equitable Ins. Co. v. Chicago Bonding & Surety Co., App.	172	1122
New Guadalupe Mining Co.; Moreno v., App.	170	1088
Newman; Thompson v., App.	171	982
Nichols; Hogan Lumber Co. v., Sup.	170	1106
Noel v. Lewis, App.	170	857
Norris v. Wright, App.	171	1087
Northam; Huckaby v., App.	171	1083
North American Dredging Co. of Nevada v. Outer Harbor Dock & Wharf Co., Sup.	173	756
North Coast Water Co.; Marin Municipal Water Dist. v., Sup.	173	473
Northern Ins. Co. of New York v. National Union Fire Ins. Co., App.	170	434
North Pacific S. S. Co.; Marconi Wireless Tel. Co. of America v., App.	173	103
North Pasadena Land & Water Co.; Gilmour v., Sup.	171	1066
North Rawhide Mining & Development Co.; Mohr v., Sup.	170	600
Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Roberts, Sup.	171	313
Northwestern Pac. R. Co.; Ronconi v., App.	170	635
Noyes; Overton v., Sup.	170	1110
Nutting v. City of Los Angeles, App.	170	680
Oakland, A. & E. Ry.; Lobbett & Dean v., App.	172	1123
Oakland Bank of Savings; Halsted v., App.	172	614
Oberholzer v. Hubbell, App.	171	436
O'Hare's Estate, In re, Sup.	172	385
O'Melveny v. Griffith, Sup.	171	934
Osborn v. Henry Cowell Lime & Cement Co., App.	173	492
Ott; Rutherford v., App.	173	490
Otzen Packing Co.; Ward v., App.	171	833
Outer Harbor Dock & Wharf Co.; North American Dredging Co. of Nevada v., Sup.	173	756
Overell Furniture Co. v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, App.	173	176
Overton v. Noyes, Sup.	170	1110
Pacific Coast Const. Co.; Hoffman v., App.	173	776

P.

	Vol.	Page
Pacific Electric Ry. Co.; Dawson v., Sup.	170	603
Pacific Electric Ry. Co.; Housel v., Sup.	171	956
Pacific Electric Ry. Co.; Levings v., Sup.	173	87
Pacific Electric Ry. Co.; Poak v., Sup.	170	159
Pacific Electric Ry. Co.; Thomson v., Sup.	171	956
Pacific Electric Ry. Co.; Williams v., Sup.	170	423
Pacific Fire Extinguisher Co.; Park v., App.	173	615
Pacific Gas & Electric Co.; Keiper v., App.	172	180
Pacific Gas & Electric Co.; Town of Suisun City v., App.	170	1078
Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. of California; Kinsey v., Sup.	172	1098
Paladini v. Superior Court, Sup.	173	588
Pantages; Sharpless v., Sup.	172	384
Panter v. National Surety Co., App.	171	803
Papadakos v. Soares, Sup.	170	1114
Park v. Pacific Fire Extinguisher Co., App.	173	615
Parkinson v. Langdon, App.	171	710
Parsons v. Industrial Accident Commission, Sup.	173	585
Partridge v. City of Richmond, App.	172	166
Passow & Sons v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., Sup.	170	1124
Patten & Davies Lumber Co. v. Durflinger, App.	172	979
Paulsen's Estate, In re, App.	170	855
Pavert; Love v., Sup.	170	827
Pavert's Estate, In re, Sup.	170	827
P. B. Steifer Mining Co.; James v., App.	171	117
Peairs; Woody v., App.	170	660
Peck; Spier v., App.	171	115
Pedley v. Doyle, Sup.	170	602
Pedone; People v., App.	170	170
Peirsol; Linn v., App.	173	763
Penryn Land Co. v. Akahori, App.	173	612
Pensinger; Pit v., App.	173	598
People v. Barkdoll, App.	171	440
People v. Beggs, Sup.	172	152
People v. Bennett, App.	173	1004
People v. Bones, App.	170	166
People v. Brown, App.	173	621
People v. Clark, App.	173	102
People v. De Leon, App.	170	173
People v. Donaldson, App.	171	442
People v. Elgar, App.	171	697
People v. Escalera, App.	171	975
People v. Franklin, App.	171	441
People v. Fraysier, App.	172	1126
People v. Gastone, App.	173	409
People v. Gonzales, App.	173	407
People v. Hanford, App.	171	112
People v. Hill, App.	172	1114
People v. Jacinto, App.	173	371
People v. Jacobs, App.	171	715
People v. Keseling, App.	170	627
People v. Kings County Development Co., Sup.	171	102
People v. Laine, Sup.	171	941
People v. Lee, App.	172	158
People v. Lima, App.	172	762
People v. Lyons, App.	173	107
People v. Mendosa, Sup.	173	998
People v. Miller, Sup.	170	817

P.

	Vol.	Page
People v. Mooney, Sup.	171	690
People v. Pedone, App.	170	170
People v. Pera, App.	171	1091
People v. Sansom, App.	173	1107
People v. Schoon, Sup.	171	680
People v. Shaw, App.	172	401
People v. Smith, App.	171	696
People v. Soldavini, App.	173	933
People v. Southern Pac. Co., Sup.	171	294
People v. Swenson, App.	173	934
People v. Tanner, App.	171	439
People v. Taylor, App.	173	391
People v. Vogel, App.	171	978
People v. Wagner, App.	171	699
People v. Warriner, App.	173	489
People v. Webster, App.	172	768
People v. Wilson, App.	172	1116
People's Water Co.; Hodgkins v., Sup.	171	945
Pera; People v., App.	171	1091
Perkins v. Edinburg, App.	171	971
Perkins; Gordon v., App.	171	698
Perry; Gabbert v., App.	173	412
Philbrook; Bar Ass'n of San Francisco v., App.	170	440
Philbrook; Randall v., Sup.	170	835
Phillips v. Huffaker, App.	170	431
Phoedovius, Ex parte, Sup.	170	412
Pigg; Potter v., App.	170	1066
Piluso v. Spencer, App.	172	412
Pitt v. Pensinger, App.	173	598
Plant Inv. Co.; Sweinhart v., Sup.	172	386
Plumb v. Woods, Sup.	170	609
Plumb's Estate, In re, Sup.	170	609
Poak v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., Sup.	170	159
Police Court of City of Los Angeles; Bartollotti v., App.	170	161
Porter v. Anglo & London Paris Nat. Bank, App.	171	845
Porter v. Bryson, App.	170	1068
Porter; Nathan v., App.	172	170
Postal Telegraph-Cable Co.; Irvine v., App.	173	487
Poste, Inc.; Duncan v., App.	172	163
Potter v. Pigg, App.	170	1066
Potter v. Spaulding, App.	170	1061
Powell v. Powell, Sup.	170	147
Prentice; Lefurgey v., App.	171	1080
Prince v. Selby Smelting & Lead Co., App.	170	1075
Princeton University; Chambers v., Sup.	172	390
Prophet v. Katzenberger, App.	172	775
Pullin v. Allen, App.	173	772
Pusey's Estate, In re, Sup.	170	846
Raftis v. McCloud River Lumber Co., App.	170	176
Rahmel v. Rost, Sup.	171	1068
Raleigh, Ex parte, Sup.	171	950
Ramish v. Marsh, Sup.	172	1100
Randall v. Philbrook, Sup.	170	835
Randall's Estate, In re, Sup.	170	835
Ransome-Crummey Co. v. Bennett, Sup.	171	304
Ransome-Crummey Co. v. Coulter, Sup.	171	308
Rattray v. Wickersheim Implement Co., App.	171	964

P.

	Vol.	Page
Rau; Lutton v., App.	173	1111
Rawlings v. Fuster, Sup.	171	955
Recorder's Court; Anderson v., App.	171	812
Red Salmon Canning Co.; McManus v., App.	173	1112
Reed v. Reed, Sup.	172	600
Reed Orchard Co.; Vallejo & N. R. Co. v., Sup.	170	426
Reeve; Rushton v., Sup.	172	608
Regents of University of California; Caldwell v., App.	170	666
Reichman; Beem v., App.	171	972
Reynolds v. E. Clemens Horst Co., App.	170	1082
Reynolds v. E. Clemens Horst Co., App.	172	623
Richardson & Fisher Co. v. Chicago Bonding & Surety Co., App.	170	856
Richvale Land Co.; Ewing v., App.	172	645
Rindge Co. v. City of Los Angeles, App.	170	685
Roantree; Merchants' Collection Agency v., App.	173	600
Robben v. Benson, App.	173	766
Roberts; Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co. v., Sup.	171	313
Roberts; Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. v., Sup.	171	313
Roberts; Vandelinder v., App.	173	1106
Robertson; Andrews v., Sup.	170	1129
Robertson v. Buckler, Sup.	170	424
Robinson v. Briest, Sup.	173	88
Rockridge Place Co. v. City Council of Oakland, Sup.	172	1110
Roebling's Sons Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, App.	171	987
Rollins & Jarecki; Bricker v., Sup.	173	592
Ronconi v. Northwestern Pac. R. Co., App.	170	635
Rosenberg; Hazard, Gould & Co. v., Sup.	170	612
Rosenberg & Sons Co.; Armour & Co. v., App.	173	404
Rosenberg & Sons Co.; Cudahy Packing Co. v., App.	173	406
Rost; Rahmel v., Sup.	171	1068
Round Valley Water Co.; Lindblom v., Sup.	173	994
R. Rosenberg & Sons Co.; Armour & Co. v., App.	173	404
R. Rosenberg & Sons Co.; Cudahy Packing Co. v., App.	173	406
Rucker; Santa Barbara County v., App.	170	860
Rushton v. Reeve, Sup.	172	608
Rutherford v. Ott, App.	173	490
Ryan's Estate, In re, Sup.	171	297
Sacramento Clay Products Co.; Carr v., App.	170	446
St. Luke's Hospital; Burdell v., App.	173	1008
Saline Valley Salt Co. v. White, Sup.	170	820
Salsberry; Seymour v., Sup.	171	938
San Diego Electric Ry. Co.; Gumpel v., Sup.	172	605
San Fernando Pub. Co.; Waite v., Sup.	173	591
San Joaquin Valley Bank v. Gate City Oil Co., App.	173	781
Sansom; People v., App.	173	1107
Santa Ana Sugar Co. of Santa Ana v. Industrial Accident Commission, App.	170	630
Santa Barbara County v. Rucker, App.	170	860
Santina v. Tomlinson, App.	171	437
Scales; Ingle Mfg. Co. v., App.	172	169
Scattergood v. Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County, App.	173	110
Scherer v. Danziger, Sup.	173	85
Scholz v. Gartland, App.	173	371
Schoon; People v., Sup.	171	680
Schultz; Ackerman v., Sup.	172	609
Schwitalla, Ex parte, App.	172	617

	P.
	Vol.	Page
S. C. Smith Estate v. J. M. Dunn Auto Co., App.	172	415
Scudder; Baranov v., Sup.	170	1122
Seiler's Estate, In re, Sup.	170	1138
Selby Smelting & Lead Co.; Prince v., App.	170	1075
Selma Fruit Co.; Walker v., Sup.	171	309
Seymour v. Salsberry, Sup.	171	938
Shafer; Amundson v., App.	172	173
Sharpless v. Pantages, Sup.	172	384
Shasta County; City of Redding v., App.	171	806
Shaw; People v., App.	172	401
Shell Co. of California v. Industrial Accident Commission, App.	172	611
Shepard, In re, App.	170	442
Sherman v. American Surety Co. of New York, Sup.	173	161
Sherman; Whitney v., Sup.	173	931
Sherwood & Sherwood v. Gill & Lutz, App.	173	171
Sickles v. Mt. Whitney Power & Electric Co., Sup.	170	599
Sierra Park Co.; Winkler v., App.	171	805
Silva v. Azevedo, Sup.	173	929
Skelly v. Cowell, App.	173	609
Skinkle v. American Nat. Bank, App.	171	967
Smith; Griffin v., Sup.	171	92
Smith v. McCallum, App.	172	408
Smith v. Meade, App.	171	815
Smith; People v., App.	171	696
Smith Estate v. J. M. Dunn Auto Co., App.	172	415
Smith's Estate, In re, Sup.	171	289
Snow Mountain Water & Power Co.; Holmes v., App.	172	178
Soares; Papadakos v., Sup.	170	1114
Soldavini; People v., App.	173	933
Solomon v. Justice's Court of Los Angeles Tp., Los Angeles County, App.	171	817
Soo Sing Lung; Ash v., Sup.	170	843
Soper v. Dominguez, Sup.	172	586
South End Warehouse Co.; Youngberg v., Sup.	171	97
Southern California Electric Co. v. Grant, Sup.	173	760
Southern California Iron & Steel Co. v. Maier, App.	172	615
Southern Pac. Co.; Alloggi v., App.	173	1117
Southern Pac. Co.; Benson v., Sup.	171	948
Southern Pac. Co.; Bliss v., App.	172	760
Southern Pac. Co.; Chung Sing v., Sup.	172	1103
Southern Pac. Co.; Drouillard v., App.	172	405
Southern Pac. Co.; Fitzgerald v., App.	173	91
Southern Pac. Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, Sup.	170	822
Southern Pac. Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, Sup.	171	1071
Southern Pac. Co.; Jesus Maria Rancho v., App.	172	183
Southern Pac. Co. v. Los Angeles Milling Co., Sup.	170	829
Southern Pac. Co.; People v., Sup.	171	294
South Feather Land & Water Co.; Henrici v., Sup.	170	1135
Souza v. First Nat. Bank, App.	172	175
Spalding; First Nat. Bank v., Sup.	170	407
Spanos; Corbett v., App.	173	769
Spaulding; Potter v., App.	170	1061
Spears; Kelsey Co. v., App.	173	606
Spencer; Piluso v., App.	172	412
Spier v. Peck, App.	171	115
Spotton v. Superior Court, Sup.	171	801
Standard Construction & Development Co.; C. C. Harris Oil Co. v., Sup.	173	83
Staniford; Bullis v., Sup.	171	1064

	Vol.	Page
Stansbury v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, App.	171	698
State; Deseret Water, Oil & Irrigation Co. v., Sup.	171	287
State; McClellan v., App.	170	662
Stedman; Batt v., App.	173	99
Steifer Mining Co.; James v., App.	171	117
Stephens v. Anderson, App.	171	811
Stewart; Haight v., App.	172	769
Stinnett v. Superior Court in and for Merced County, App.	171	1076
Stoddard v. Fiske, App.	170	663
Stoll; Verdier v., App.	172	1127
Stone & Webster Const. Co.; Morrill v., Sup.	170	405
Stow v. Superior Court of California in and for Alameda County, Sup.	172	598
Strecker v. Gaul, App.	170	646
Stuart; Beckett v., App.	171	107
Sumida, Ex parte, Sup.	170	823
Sunset Park Land Co.; Eastman v., App.	170	642
Superior Court; Paladini v., Sup.	173	588
Superior Court; Spotton v., Sup.	171	801
Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; City of Venice v., App.	173	392
Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; J. M. Overell Furniture Co. v., App.	173	176
Superior Court in and for Merced County; Stinnett v., App.	171	1076
Superior Court in and for San Joaquin County; Davis v., App.	170	437
Superior Court in and for Santa Barbara County; Brandes v., App.	172	1130
Superior Court of California in and for Alameda County; Stow v., Sup.	172	598
Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County; City of Watts v., App.	173	183
Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County; Scattergood v., App.	173	110
Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County; Zierath v., App.	171	112
Superior Court of California in and for Sonoma County; Fest v., App.	173	610
Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco; Boyle v., Sup.	170	1140
Superior Court of Imperial County; Wessel v., Sup.	170	606
Superior Court of Los Angeles County; Hunt v., Sup.	173	1097
Superior Court of Los Angeles County; Lewis v., Sup.	173	1099
Superior Court of Los Angeles County; McNeely v., App.	173	102
Superior Court of San Diego County; United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v., App.	170	855
Sweinhart v. Plant Inv. Co., Sup.	172	386
Swenson; People v., App.	173	934
Tainter v. Broderick Land & Investment Co., Sup.	171	679
Tanner; People v., App.	171	439
Taylor v. Board of Police Com'rs of City and County of San Francisco, App.	171	1087
Taylor; People v., App.	173	391
Tevis; Bryan v., Sup.	171	433
Thaxter v. Finn, Sup.	173	163
Thiel Detective Co. v. Tuolumne County, App.	173	1120
Thomas v. Birch, Sup.	173	1102
Thomas v. Fursman, Sup.	171	301
Thomas; Nelson v., App.	172	398
Thompson v. Newman, App.	171	982
Thomson v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., Sup.	171	956
Thurston; Hall v., Sup.	171	285
Title Guarantee & Trust Co.; Jones v., Sup.	173	586
Titlow v. Florence Trading Co., App.	170	172

P.

	Vol.	Page
Tomlinson; Santina v., App.	171	437
Tom Poste, Inc.; Duncan v., App.	172	163
Town of Calistoga v. Adams, App.	172	624
Town of Suisun City v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., App.	170	1078
Treloar v. Keil & Hannon, App.	171	823
Tucker; Dawes v., Sup.	171	1068
Tuffree; Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank v., Sup.	172	586
Tully; Jameson v., Sup.	173	577
Tuolumne County; Thiel Detective Co. v., App.	173	1120
Turner v. East Side Canal & Irrigation Co., Sup.	171	299
Turner v. Watkins, App.	172	620
Turner's Estate, In re, Sup.	172	759
Ukiah Water & Improvement Co.; Hudson v., Sup.	171	93
Union Hollywood Water Co. v. City of Los Angeles, Sup.	172	983
Union Mach. Co. v. Chicago Bonding & Surety Co., App.	172	1113
Union Oil Co. of California; Graves v., App.	173	618
Union Oil Co. of California; Hallawell v., App.	173	177
Union Trust Co.; Butler v., Sup.	172	601
Union Trust Co. of San Francisco; California Gas & Electric Corp. v., Sup.	172	146
United Railroads of San Francisco; Graff v., Sup.	172	603
United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co.; Passow & Sons v., Sup.	170	1124
United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Superior Court of San Diego County, App.	170	855
Unwin v. Barstow-San Antonio Oil Co., App.	172	622
Valentine v. Hayes, App.	173	410
Vallejo & N. R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., Sup.	170	426
Vandelinder v. Roberts, App.	173	1106
Van Hagen v. First State Bank, App.	173	764
Vavra; Huntington v., App.	172	166
Venice Inv. Co.; Fergus v., App.	172	396
Verdier v. Stoll, App.	172	1127
Verein v. Frey, Sup.	171	802
Verwoert, In re, Sup.	171	105
Vogel; People v., App.	171	978
Wagner; People v., App.	171	699
Waite v. San Fernando Pub. Co., Sup.	173	591
Walker v. Industrial Accident Commission, Sup.	171	954
Walker v. Kingsbury, App.	173	95
Walker v. Selma Fruit Co., Sup.	171	309
Walsh v. Flatland, App.	173	596
Ward v. Otzen Packing Co., App.	171	833
Warriner; People v., App.	173	489
Watkins; Turner v., App.	172	620
Watson v. Anderson, App.	173	394
Watt v. Bekins Van Storage Co., App.	171	832
Webster v. Lowe, Sup.	170	850
Webster; People v., App.	172	768
Weinberg, Ex parte, App.	171	110
Weinberg, Ex parte, Sup.	171	937
Wells, In re, App.	171	110
Wells, In re, App.	172	93
Wentland v. Clark & Henery Const. Co., App.	173	480
Wessel v. Superior Court of Imperial County, Sup.	170	606
Western Amusement Co.; Bellingham Bay Lumber Co. v., App.	170	631
Western Amusement Co.; Bellingham Bay Lumber Co. v., App.	170	632
Western Fish Co.; White v., App.	173	934

	P.
	Vol.	Page
Western Union Tel. Co. v. Commercial Pac. Cable Co., Sup.	171	317
Wheeler v. City of Oakland, App.	170	864
Whitcomb v. Huse, App.	173	597
Whitcomb v. Middleton, App.	173	597
White; Kalish v., App.	173	494
White; Saline Valley Salt Co. v., Sup.	170	820
White v. Western Fish Co., App.	173	934
White Lumber Co. v. Mendocino County, Sup.	171	799
Whiting-Mead Commercial Co. v. Bayside Land Co., Sup.	172	598
Whiting-Mead Commercial Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, Sup.	173	1105
Whitney v. Sherman, Sup.	173	931
Wickersheim Implement Co.; Rattray v., App.	171	964
Wickliffe; Anderson v., Sup.	172	381
Wilcox; Anderson v., App.	172	398
Wilcox; Edmonds v., Sup.	172	1101
Wilcox v. Hardisty, Sup.	171	947
Williams v. City of Vallejo, App.	171	834
Williams v. City of Vallejo, App.	171	837
Williams v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., Sup.	170	423
Williams v. Youtz, Sup.	172	383
Williamson v. Industrial Accident Commission, Sup.	171	797
Wilson; Curran v., App.	171	817
Wilson v. London Guarantee & Accident Co., App.	173	1006
Wilson; People v., App.	172	1116
Wiltsee; Avery v., Sup.	171	95
Winkler v. Sierra Park Co., App.	171	805
Wolcott; Farr v., Sup.	171	291
Woods; Plumb v., Sup.	170	609
Woody v. Peairs, App.	170	660
Wood & Tatum Co. v. Basler, App.	173	1109
Woolsey; Kelly v., Sup.	170	837
Wright; Hepler v., App.	170	667
Wright v. Loaiza, Sup.	171	311
Wright; Norris v., App.	171	1087
Wright's Estate, In re, Sup.	170	610
Youngberg v. South End Warehouse Co., Sup.	171	97
Youtz; Williams v., Sup.	172	383
Zeller; McCarter v., App.	170	636
Zierath v. Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County, App.	171	112
Zion; Flinn v., App.	173	602

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

170 PACIFIC REPORTER

(176 Cal. 676)

POWELL v. POWELL et al. (S. F. 8554.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 13, 1917.)

EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF ⚷55(4)—APPLICATION FOR LEAVE TO PROVE.

Where plaintiffs applied under Code Civ. Proc. § 652, for leave to prove a bill of exceptions, an order to show cause having been made, the parties appeared, and defendants indicated their willingness to abide by suggestions that certain changes desired by plaintiffs should be made in the bill as same was proposed to be settled by the trial judge, and filed their written consent and undertaking that such changes should be made, the order to show cause will be discharged and the proceeding dismissed without prejudice to a future application in event the changes consented to be not made.

In Bank. Action by Laura G. Powell, as administratrix of the estate of Chas. G. Powell, deceased, against J. A. Powell and others. Petition by plaintiff against defendants and W. M. Conley, as judge of the superior court, for leave to prove bill of exceptions. Order to show cause discharged, and proceeding dismissed, without prejudice.

Howard Harron and Brewton A. Hayne, both of San Francisco, for petitioner. W. H. L. Hynes and Walter J. Burpee, both of Oakland, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an application for leave to prove a bill of exceptions under section 652, Code of Civil Procedure. An order to show cause was made, and on the return the whole matter was referred to the Chief Justice for consideration and action. The parties appeared before the Chief Justice and a hearing was there had. At the conclusion of such hearing the respondents indicated their willingness to abide by the suggestions of the Chief Justice that certain changes should be made in the bill of exceptions as the same is proposed to be settled by the trial judge, and accordingly have filed in this court their written consent and undertaking that such changes shall be made.

---

⚷For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

These proposed changes are in number four. If these changes are made in the bill, the bill as proposed to be settled by the trial judge, will sufficiently present appellant's case to enable her to make such points as she is entitled to make on her appeal, and a settlement of the bill of exceptions by this court will be unnecessary.

It is ordered that the order to show cause heretofore made in this matter be and the same is hereby discharged, and the proceeding dismissed without prejudice to a further application in the event that the changes consented to by the defendants and shown by their written consent filed herein are not in fact made.

(177 Cal. 159)

HOLLENBECK-BUSH PLANING MILL CO. v. AMWEG et al. (Sac. 2470, 2503.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1917. Rehearing Denied Jan. 28, 1918.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS 🔑227—SURETY BONDS —CONSTRUCTION.

Where a contractor entered into two contracts filed on different dates for different parts of the same work, a bond of a surety company purporting to cover a single contract filed on one of the dates, reciting a consideration equal to the sum of the two, covers both contracts, and can be sued on without demand or reformation, as surety bonds should be construed in the light of the circumstances attending the transaction.

2. MECHANICS' LIENS 🔑3 — CONTRACTORS' BONDS—STATUTES — CONSTITUTIONALITY — PENALTIES.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, as amended by St. 1911, p. 1313, making owners of lands liable for liens to the extent of the value of the labor and material if they do not provide a bond, is not invalid as contravening constitutional inhibitions of the imposition of penalties, as it really confers a right in limiting the liability if a bond is filed.

3. MECHANICS' LIENS 🔑223—CONTRACTORS' BONDS—TIME OF FILING—EFFECT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, relating to contractors' bonds, the failure to file the surety bond before work is commenced and at the time of filing the contractor's bond does not invalidate the contract of the surety company.

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑244, 300—MECHANICS' LIENS 🔑3—CONSTITUTIONALITY —DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

Const. art. 22, § 15, authorizing liens for labor and material in excess of contract price of work, does not contravene Const. U. S. Amend. 14, by denying equal protection of the law, or by depriving owners of real estate of property without due prcoess of law.

5. MECHANICS' LIENS 🔑229—CONTRACTORS' BOND—TIME OF FILING—EFFECT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, relating to contractors' bonds, the owner is liable for the full value of labor and material if the bond and contract are not filed before the work has commenced.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Separate actions by the Hollenbeck-Bush Planing Mill Company, a corporation, Robert Currie and others, the Pioneer Brick Company, a corporation, the Citrus City Lumber Company, a corporation, and Fred W. Stone and others, against F. J. Amweg, doing business as the F. J. Amweg Company, the Bradley Company, a corporation, R. Bradley, and the National Surety Company, a corporation, to foreclose mechanics' liens. From a judgment, the Bradley Company and others appeal. Affirmed in part, and reversed in part.

Orville C. Pratt, Jr., of San Francisco, for appellant. Power & McFadzean, of Visalia, Murry & Knupp, of Porterville, and Heller, Powers & Ehrman, of San Francisco, for respondent National Surety Co.

MELVIN, J. It has been stipulated that one transcript be used in the appeals from the judgment in these consolidated actions.

The appellants, except R. Bradley and Bradley Company (appellants in the appeal numbered Sac. 2470), are materialmen or laborers who commenced separate actions for the foreclosure of mechanics' liens upon certain real property in the city of Porterville, Tulare county. Bradley Company is the owner of the property on which is the building for the construction of which the liens were asserted. Defendant F. J. Amweg (doing business as F. J. Amweg Company) was the contractor who undertook the erection of said building, and the National Surety Company executed the bond in behalf of the contractor under the provisions of section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure.

In the five actions consolidated for trial a personal judgment was rendered against the contractor (who did not defend) for the full amounts of the asserted indebtedness, and liens for these sums were declared upon the real property upon which the building was erected. It was also adjudged that the owner, materialmen, and laborers could recover nothing from the National Surety Company. We will first consider the appeal from that portion of the judgment thus exonerating the surety company.

The contractor Amweg and the respondent Bradley Company entered into two written agreements for the construction of the building. Both were made on July 19, 1913. One covered all of the labor and material except the brickwork. The contract price was $8,222. This instrument was filed in the recorder's office on July 21, 1913. The second agreement was for the labor and material to be used in the construction of the brickwork in the building, and was for the sum of $3,000. This was recorded on July 25, 1913. On July 19, 1913, the National Surety Company executed and delivered the bond here in controversy, in the sum of $5,611, one-half of the aggregate amount of the two contracts for the construction of the building. In this bond it is recited that under date of July 19, 1913, Amweg entered into "a certain contract" for the erection of a building in Porterville for the sum of $11,222. This is the aggregate of the two sums specified in the two writings of that date. The agreement for the construction of the building is described in the singular throughout the bond. This bond was filed August 9, 1913. It was avowedly executed for the purpose of complying with the provisions of section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1911 (St. 1911, p. 1313).

[1] Respondent surety company contends that the bond in the singular number refers to an entirely different contract from the two agreements for the construction of the building; and that if as a matter of fact the parties intended it as one having application to those two writings there should have been a demand and if necessary an action for the reformation of said bond before plaintiffs could recover upon it. Both of these contentions are without merit. It is true that the liability of a surety is measured by the terms of the agreement, and that courts are not swift to extend that liability by construction; but a surety is not hedged by any sanctity which prevents the application of the same rules to the construction of its agreements as are used to admeasure the obligations arising under other contracts. The extent of the surety's liability must be gathered from the language used when read in the light of the circumstances attending the transaction. 5 Elliott on Contracts, § 3941. The circumstances surrounding the execution of this bond were such that there can be no rational doubt regarding the intention of the surety to indemnify its principal for certain losses which might arise under the two building contracts of the same date. The use of the singular rather than the plural amounts, at most, to a mere clerical error which could not have operated to the prejudice or injury of the surety. Hence it is not relieved from liability. 32 Cyc. 69; Stiewell v. American Surety Co., 70 Ark. 512, 68 S. W. 1021; Austin v. Union Paving & Contracting Co., 4 Cal. App. 610, 88 Pac. 731; Swain v. Graves, 8 Cal. 549; Morgan v. Thrift, 2 Cal. 562. We conclude, therefore, that the court properly found the bond to have been executed and delivered "in order to secure the faithful performance of said two contracts by the said defendant F. J. Amweg."

The court having reached a conclusion of law to the effect that the bond of the National Surety Company was invalid, that respondent seeks to uphold that conclusion upon the theory that section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure, providing for such a bond is unconstitutional, its counsel expressing a hope that this court will entertain "a new viewpoint" upon the subject and one different from that occupied by the court in bank when Roystone Co. v. Darling, 171 Cal. 526, 154 Pac. 15, was decided. But after an examination of the able discussion of the objections to said section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure, contained in the briefs of the respondent surety company we are constrained to adhere to the doctrines and conclusion of that case. Counsel's first attack upon the constitutionality of the statute is based upon the supposed violation of section 25 of article 4 of the Constitution inhibiting the passage of special laws. But this is not a new viewpoint. The same objection to the constitutionality of the act was urged in the Roystone Case, and Mr. Justice Shaw in his opinion in that case used the following language at page 542 of 171 Cal., at page 22 of 154 Pac.:

> "It is urged that the provisions of the act requiring persons who make building contracts to file a bond, while no such requirement is made of any other person who may wish to make other kinds of contracts, creates a lack of uniformity, and is class legislation. There is an intimation to this effect in Shaughnessy v. American Surety Co., 138 Cal. 543, 69 Pac. 250, 71 Pac. 701, but the point was not directly involved, and the case does not hold to that doctrine. It is not sustained by authority. The rules regarding legislation respecting classes have been thoroughly settled in this state. The case most often cited is Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 27 Pac. 604. The decision in that case has been followed in very many cases since it was rendered. The principle announced is that a law is general and constitutional when it applies equally to all persons embraced in a class founded upon some natural or intrinsic or constitutional distinction. To this it has been added, in some cases, that the distinction must have some reasonable relation to the legislation enacted respecting the class. The fact that the Constitution confers upon persons performing labor or furnishing materials for the construction of a building the right to a lien thereon at once establishes these persons as a class, and makes a constitutional distinction between them and all other persons making contracts. This justifies legislation for the benefit of such claimants and governing the conduct and contracts of the owner of the property and the person contracting to construct buildings thereon. There is no improper classification."

Further, respondent attempts to show that section 1203, Code of Civil Procedure, as it stood prior to 1911 and the provisions for a bond contained in section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1911, are the same in result to the owner as each imposed upon him an improper burden in addition to the right of lien given to the persons furnishing labor and materials. This same matter was discussed and decided adversly to respondent's contention in Roystone Co. v. Darling, supra.

[2] It is further argued that the provisions exempting the owner from liability beyond the contract price if he file a bond and making him liable for liens to the extent of the value of the labor and materials if he do not provide such bond is in violation of constitutional inhibitions of the imposition of penalties by legislative enactment. The Constitution (section 15, art. 22) guarantees a lien to the mechanic and materialman extending to the full value of all labor bestowed and material furnished. But the Legislature may, under authority given by the Constitution, provide certain conditions upon compliance with which the owner may restrict recovery to the sum mentioned in the contract. Such provision does not impair any existing right of the owner—does not, in short, penalize him—but the effect is "to confer a right not previously existing by which his liability may, under certain circumstances, be curtailed." Stimson Mill Co. v. Nolan, 5 Cal. App. 754, 91 Pac. 262.

Nor does the statute in question discriminate against the owners of real property. Respondent by way of illustration refers to work which might be done upon a gold dredger of equal value with that bestowed upon a building attached to real property, implying that the owner of the dredger would not be compelled to protect himself by filing a bond while the owner of the building would be required to furnish such security. The illustration proves no unconstitutional discrimination. In either case a lien for the full value of the labor would attach if the owner did not protect himself by a bond. In the one case the lien would attach incidentally to the land as well as to the building, but that is due to the Constitution itself, and not do anything in the criticized statute. Other points made by respondent are fully met by the authorities cited above, and require no further discussion. If the court's determination that the contract was invalid was based upon the supposed unconstitutionality of section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure, such conclusion was erroneous.

[3] The failure to file the surety bond before work was commenced and at the time of the filing of the contractor's bond did not invalidate the contract of the surety company. Hammond Lumber Co. v. Willis, 171 Cal. 565, 153 Pac. 947. It follows that the portion of the judgment relieving the National Surety Company from all liability under its bond must be reversed.

We now come to the consideration of Sac. No. 2470, which is the appeal of the Bradley Company. R. Bradley, the other appellant, is but a nominal party, and will be disregarded in the following discussion.

The liens foreclosed by the judgment amount to $4,731.92, exclusive of interest and costs. The unpaid balance of the contract price remaining in the hands of the owner, after deducting the necessary outlay for completing the building—the contractor having abandoned it—amounts to $2,913.60. This appellant, the owner of the property, contends that the judgment of foreclosure is erroneous and excessive to the extent of the discrepancy between these two amounts, conceding its liability and the binding effect of the liens upon its land up to the amount last specified, namely, $2,913.60.

[4] Appellant contends that it has complied substantially with the provisions of section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure, and so has limited its liability to the unpaid portion of the contract price. It also contends that section 15 of article 22 of the Constitution of California, interpreted by our decisions as authorizing liens for work and material in excess of the contract price, is itself in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which forbids any state to deny to any one within its jurisdiction the equal protection of its laws or to deprive any such person of property without due process of law.

Considering the latter contention first we find Californian authority in Stimson Mill Co. v. Nolan, supra, supporting the validity of our own constitutional provision regarding liens as not authorizing the taking of property without due process of law. It is true that that case was decided before the amendment to section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure, but the reasoning is none the less applicable to an interpretation of that statute in its present form and of the constitutional provision giving to laborers and materialmen liens to the extent of the value of their services and the materials furnished. The court said, in part (5 Cal. App. at page 760, 91 Pac. at page 265):

> "Assuming, as we do, the validity of section 15, article 22, of the Constitution, which guarantees the lien, we find that this constitutional right of the laborer and materialman extends to the full value of all labor and materials bestowed or furnished; and, without legislation, such value is the measure of recovery. The Legislature has seen fit, under the authority given it by the Constitution, to provide by the sections complained of certain conditions, upon the observance of which the constitutional measure of lien and recovery is restricted to the sum specified in the contract between the owner and contractor. There is no attempt to enlarge the rights of lien claimants under any circumstances, for under the sections mentioned, where a valid contract is made, the value of the thing furnished measures the extent to which any claim can be found. The effect, therefore, of these sections is not to impair any existing right of the owner, but, in effect, to confer a right not previously existing by which his liability may, under certain circumstances, be curtailed. The owner's liberty of action in relation to this property is not invaded by the statute. He need not employ an intermediary to erect his building, but if he does. the law ingrafts upon his act certain consequences. Henry v. Evans, 97 Mo. 47, 10 S. W. 872 [3 L. R. A. 332]. There is no taking of property without due process of law. The contract by the owner is made voluntarily and with the Constitution and laws in mind, and they form part of such contract; and he must be taken to have consented to the effect of such enactments."

Similar doctrine is contained in the opinion in Jones v. Great Southern Fireproof Hotel Co., 86 Fed. 370, 30 C. C. A. 108, written by the late Judge Lurton, who afterwards became a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. Commenting upon the lien statute of the state of Ohio, the learned judge said:

> "Such statutes rest upon the principle of natural justice which lies at the foundation of the many liens or preferences among creditors which we have cited from both the common and civil law. It is true that a lien is created in favor of one with whom the owner has no direct contractual relations. But, if the owner makes the contract with the law before him, the law enters into and becomes a part of the contract. The legal effect of the contract is to give a lien to all who, at the instance of his contractor, shall be employed to furnish labor or materials for the work which he has let out. So far as such a statute is limited to future contracts, it cannot be said to impair the obligation of a contract. If the law be subject to no other objections, it impairs no contract, for all thereafter made are entered into upon the basis of the law. 'The inhibition of the Constitution is wholly prospective. The states may legislate as to contracts thereafter made as they see fit. It is only those in existence when the hostile law is passed that are protected from its effect.' Edwards v. Kearney, 96 U. S. 595 [24 L. Ed. 793]; Greenwood v. Freight Co., 105 U. S. 13 [26 L. Ed. 961]; Denny v. Bennett, 128 U. S. 489, 9 Sup. Ct. 134 [32 L. Ed. 491]; Smith v. Parsons, 1 Ohio, 236 [13 Am. Dec. 608]; Weil v. State, 46 Ohio St. 450, 21 N. E. 643. Neither can the owner be said to be thereby deprived of his property without due process of law. He has voluntarily made a contract with the law before him. He has thereby subjected his property to liability for certain debts of the contractor. His own voluntary consent is an element in the transaction. He knows what the law is, and makes a contract under that law. It is idle to say that under such circumstances he is deprived of his property without due process of law. Provident Inst. for Savings v. Jersey City, 113 U. S. 506–514, 5 Sup. Ct. 612 [28 L. Ed. 1102]."

It is true that the statute under review in that case expressly provided that liens should be limited in amount to the contract price, but that fact does not impair the reasoning of the court as applicable to our Constitution as interpreted by this court. Judge Lurton's opinion is supported by citations to the rulings of courts of different states in cases involving interpretation of statutes providing for liens which attach without respect to the indebtedness of the owner to the contractor.

The weight of authority is in favor of the validity of statutes and constitutional provisions like our own, and in this behalf respondents have cited the following cases which amply support their views: Henry v. Evans, 97 Mo. 47, 10 S. W. 868, 3 L. R. A. 332; Mallory v. La Crosse Abattoir Co., 80 Wis. 170, 49 N. W. 1071; Smith v. Newbaur, 144 Ind. 95, 42 N. E. 40, 1094, 33 L. R. A. 685; Hightower v. Bailey, 108 Ky. 198, 56 S. W. 147, 49 L. R. A. 255, 94 Am. St. Rep. 350; Laird v. Moonan, 32 Minn. 358, 20 N. W. 354; The Victorian, 24 Or. 121, 32 Pac. 1040, 41 Am. St. Rep. 838; Barrett v. Millikan, 156 Ind. 510, 60 N. E. 310, 83 Am. St. Rep. 220.

[5] To the contention that the appellant, who is the owner of the property, is entitled to relief in equity notwithstanding its failure to file the bond at the time indicated by the statute, respondent cites the case of Hammond Lumber Co. v. Willis, supra, and Roystone Co. v. Darling, supra, where it was held that the failure to file the building contract and bond as provided by section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure, entitled each lien claimant to a lien against the property to the full amount of the materials used or the labor expended thereon less any credits justly to be made in favor of the owner or contractor. We can see no method distinguishing this case from the Hammond Lumber Company Case. The fact that the contract was tardily filed in this case and not filed at all in the other case makes no difference. But although the failure to file the building contract in this case subjects appellant Bradley Company to a lien upon its property for the full amount due from the plaintiffs the Bradley Company has its remedy against the surety company for the difference between the full amount due plaintiff and the fund in the hands of the owner, provided such amount shall not exceed the penal sum of the surety company's bond. In this connection it is to be noticed that the bond by its terms placed an obligation upon the surety to protect its principal from all liens against its property in excess of the contract price, even if section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure, should be declared unconstitutional.

That part of the judgment in the appeal known as "Sacramento No. 2503" which exonerates the National Surety Company from all liability is reversed, with directions to the superior court to enter judgment in accordance with the views herein expressed. That part of the judgment from which the Bradley Company appeals is affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.

(176 Cal. 610)

BERTON v. ALL PERSONS, etc.

(S. F. 6873.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 7, 1917. Rehearing Denied Jan. 3, 1918.)

1. BOUNDARIES 🔑33—DESCRIPTION—HIGHWAY.

The presumption created by Civ. Code, §§ 831, 1112, that a landowner owns the fee to the middle of the street, is overcome where the deeds from the original platter conveyed only to, and along, the street line.

2. EASEMENTS ⚷58(1) — CONVEYANCE OF PLATTED LAND—OBSTRUCTIONS.

Where the owner of land platted it with a cul-de-sac marked "F. Place," and conveyed with reference to the plat, retaining the fee, he could not obstruct the "place" whether a public highway or a private easement.

3. DEDICATION ⚷19(5) — REQUISITES—SALE WITH REFERENCE TO PLAT.

Where abutting lands were conveyed with reference to a recorded plat showing a cul-de-sac marked "Frank Place," but the deeds did not describe such passageway except one which called it a private alleyway, there was a dedication.

4. QUIETING TITLE ⚷44(2)—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action to quiet plaintiff's title in an alleged public street, a deed by which the platter had conveyed his interest in the street to the abutting owners is admissible, where the platter had not previously conveyed his fee title to the street.

5. QUIETING TITLE ⚷52—MCENERNEY ACT —JUDGMENT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Action to rèstore records destroyed by public disaster, and to quiet title, brought under the McEnerney Act (St. 1906, Ex. Sess. p. 78), is in rem, and the judgment therein if valid on its face is absolutely conclusive upon all private rights.

6. STATUTES ⚷233—CONSTRUCTION AS BINDING STATE—PRESUMPTIONS.

Since a state becomes subject to its own laws only by its own grace, its submission is never inferred, but must be shown expressly or by fair intendment.

7. QUIETING TITLE ⚷52—MCENERNEY ACT—JUDGMENT—CONCLUSIVENESS—"PERSON."

"Persons," as used in the McEnerney Act, making judgment in action to restore records destroyed by public disaster, and to quiet title conclusive on all persons, does not apply to the state, which is not a person, nor to the city and county of San Francisco, so as to determine public rights in a dedicated street; such corporations being in that regard representative of the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Person.]

8. QUIETING TITLE ⚷44(2)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Judgment roll under McEnerney Act in action to restore records destroyed by public disaster and to quiet title is not admissible against city and county of San Francisco in subsequent action to quiet title.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; B. V. Sargent, Judge.

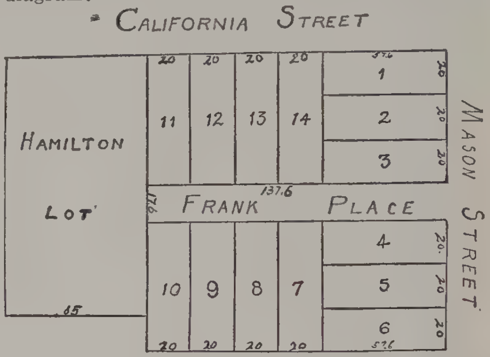
Action to quiet title by Marie E. E. Berton against all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, City and County of San Francisco, Mary Hamilton, and the Anglo-American Securities Company. Judgment for defendants named, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed. On rehearing in bank. Affirmed.

Harding & Monroe and J. R. Pringle, all of San Francisco (Robert H. Borland, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant. Percy V. Long, N. J. Manson, Dorn & Dorn & Savage, and Theodore J. Savage, all of San Francisco, for respondents. Burrell G. White, Stoney, Rouleau, Stoney & Palmer, and Garret W. McEnerney, all of San Francisco, amici curiæ.

PER CURIAM. The above-entitled cause was heard in department, and the following opinion and decision handed down:

"The action was to quiet title. The appeal is from the judgment given in favor of defendants and against plaintiff.

"The common source of title was in Edward Franklin. He plotted his land, dividing it into numbered lots as shown by the accompanying diagram:



"Frank place is thus shown as a cul-de-sac, extending to and abutting on the land of Hamilton, which land Franklin did not own. In 1853 Franklin began the sale of these lots. The first was of a lot described by metes and bounds, and further described as 'subdivision No. 4 of said 50-vara lot No. 596 * * * as per plan annexed.' Annexed to this deed and recorded with it was the diagram, plot or plan as herein delineated, saving that the Hamilton lot was not thereon indicated. Thereafter Franklin conveyed all of the other lots to various grantees, in each case describing the portion conveyed by the lot number. The first of these deeds made reference to Frank place as 'a private alleyway.' In no other deed was there any such designation. By successive conveyances Franklin divested himself in terms of title to all of the 14 lots. Thereafter, in 1864, he made a deed to Lacy in which, declaring himself to have been the owner of this 50-vara lot No. 596, and reciting that he had at various times sold to divers persons subdivisions of this vara lot fronting on a street or place called 'Franklin Place,' he remised and released unto Lacy and other owners and holders of portions and subdivisions of vara lot No. 596, fronting on Frank place, all his right and title to Frank place 'to be used and kept open as a public street and highway and for no other use whatever.' Frank place was continuously kept open and used as a public street until plaintiff acquired title to lots 9, 10, 11, and 12, when she proceeded to inclose that portion of Frank place fronting her lots by bulkheading across Frank place along the extension of the easterly line of her lots 9 and 12. She followed these obstructions with this action. The defendants are the city and county of San Francisco, insisting that the land in controversy is one of its public streets; the defendant Hamilton urging the same contention, and being especially interested by reason of the location of her own lot, and the Anglo-American Securities Company owning a lot fronting on Frank place and immediately adjacent upon the east to plaintiff's land.

"Appellant's first and most serious contention is over the introduction in evidence against her objection of the deed by Franklin to Lacy. The injury caused to appellant's case by the introduction of this deed, if Franklin at the time he made it had no title in Frank place which he could thus dedicate, is of course apparent. Appellant's contention is that he had no such title. Her argument in this behalf is based upon the language of section 831 of the Civil Code, to the effect that 'an owner of land bounded by a road or street is presumed to own to the center of the way, but the contrary may be shown,' and section 1112 of the Civil Code, to the effect that 'a transfer of land bounded by a highway passes the title of a person whose estate is transferred to the soil in front to the center thereof unless a different intent appears from the grant.' The only California case which appellant cites is Masterson v. Munro, 105 Cal. 431, 38 Pac. 1106, 45 Am. St. Rep. 57, which simply announces the indisputable proposition that where the description in the deed to the grantee is of a numbered lot of land according to the official map of the city, and the deed contains a further description by metes and bounds, courses and distances, which latter description is in conflict with the measurements and dimensions of the lot number, the latter will control. The argument, supported by citations of authority from courts other than our own, is then advanced that, treating these descriptions as merely descriptions by lot number, the presumption will arise, in accordance with the sections of the Code above quoted that the conveyance was made of each lot by lot number and carried title to the middle of Frank place. Appellant is driven to invoke this rule of construction because the facts are that in each of the deeds which Franklin made he carried out a description by metes and bounds, and the side lines of Frank place are in each instance given as a boundary. Thus, 'to the northerly line of Frank place and easterly along said line.'

[1] "The decisions of our court are to the effect that while the presumption declared by the Codes will in all proper cases be given effect, it is one which in many ways may be rebutted, and one of the specific ways in which it is declared that it is rebutted is by a description precisely such as the grantor Franklin made in these deeds. Thus, where the description read, 'thence along the eastern line of Sacramento street 150 feet,' this court declared, 'It is very clear, therefore, that the parties to the instrument intended that the lot should run up to the eastern line and not to the middle of the street.' Severy v. C. P. R. R. Co., 51 Cal. 194. See, also, Macadamizing Co. v. Williams, 70 Cal. 534, 12 Pac. 530.

[2] "Moreover, a reliance by appellant upon these Code sections must necessarily result in a surrender of her case, for the presumption which extends title to the middle of a street or highway necessarily presupposes the existence of such street or highway, and if such street or highway therefore was dedicated and does exist, plaintiff has absolutely no right to obstruct it, and since the whole controversy is over her right to obstruct it, we are justified in assuming that a decree of a court that she owns the naked fee, subject to the easement of a highway, or even of a private way, would be of little value. For whether considered as a public highway or a private way, the rights of all the abutting property owners are so well defined as to forbid the thought that their use of this way could be interfered with. Williams v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 150 Cal. 594, 89 Pac. 330; Petitpierre v. Maguire, 155 Cal. 242, 100 Pac. 690.

[3] "So far as we have proceeded with this discussion it has remained a matter of indifference whether Frank place was in law a public street or a private way. But no doubt can be entertained that it is a public highway of the city and county of San Francisco, and this for the following reasons: But one of the deeds—and that the first one—made by Franklin spoke of Frank place as a private way. The others are silent. He recorded a map showing this street, and sold his lots by descriptions running along the lines of this street. Under these sales, for the reasons above given, he still retained in himself the fee of Frank place, subject to the easement. His recording of this plat and the selling of his lands by specific reference to it, accomplished a complete dedication or offer of dedication which was accepted by use of the public. Stone v. Brooks, 35 Cal. 489; Archer v. Salinas, 93 Cal. 43, 28 Pac. 839, 16 L. R. A. 145; San Leandro v. Le Breton, 72 Cal. 170, 13 Pac. 405; Smith v. City of San Luis Obispo, 95 Cal. 463, 30 Pac. 591; Los Angeles v. McCollum, 156 Cal. 148, 103 Pac. 914, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 378; 3 Dill. Mun. Corp. (5th Ed.) § 1079.

[4] "Up to this point, then, we have the case of a public highway with a fee to the soil, subject to the public use, in Franklin. Thereafter he conveyed his fee to the respective lot owners in proportion to their ownership of the lots fronting on Frank place, the effect of which was simply to give this plaintiff title to such portion of Frank place as fronts her lots, subject to the easement of the public highway. Such being the unquestioned condition of the titles, it was not error for the court to admit the deed in controversy, and all other asserted errors growing out of the introduction of ordinances and maps and judgment rolls require no consideration."

In appellant's petition for hearing before the court in bank which followed, the very just complaint was made that the department had omitted to discuss and to pass upon the asserted error of the trial court in refusing to admit in evidence a judgment roll in an action previously brought by the plaintiff under the McEnerney Act, by the judgment in which action, which had become final, the title of appellant to the land in dispute had been quieted against all the world. Upon this showing a hearing before the court in bank was ordered primarily for a consideration of this ruling of the trial court in refusing to admit this judgment roll in evidence.

[5] The McEnerney Act is drafted as its very title imports for the twofold purpose of restoring records of title destroyed by public disaster as in the fire succeeding the earthquake of April, 1906, in San Francisco, and, second, to quiet the title of the plaintiff or petitioner after such restoration. It is an action in rem. Title, etc., Co. v. Kerrigan, 150 Cal. 289, 88 Pac. 356, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682, 119 Am. St. Rep. 199; Hoffman v. Superior Court, 151 Cal. 386, 90 Pac. 939. An inspection of the judgment roll offered in evidence discloses: First, that the city and county of San Francisco was not named therein as one of the persons, parties, or corporations claiming an interest in the property, and that, therefore, there was nothing in the action to bring directly to the attention of the authorities of the city and county of San Francisco the fact that the city's rights were or might be involved. Second, it is made to appear from the evidence taken by the court upon the question of the right to introduce this judgment roll that the city and county of San Francisco did not appear in that action: "The Court: The city and county made no claim? Mr. Pringle: No, your honor." Third, that in plaintiff's affidavit declaring the names of the persons whom affiant knew or believed to claim an interest in the property no mention is made of the city and county of San Francisco. In the present action the city and county of San Francisco did appear by answer asserting its rights in the disputed property as a public highway of the city.

It is apparent, therefore, that the binding and conclusive force of the earlier judgment as against the city and county of San Francisco must come, if it exists at all, from the fact that a judgment under the McEnerney Act, valid on its face, is a judgment in rem and so "binding on the whole world," unless and until set aside under familiar equitable principles.

That the judgment here offered is valid upon its face cannot be disputed. As little may it be questioned but that such a judgment is conclusive upon all private rights and so is conclusive against all the rights of private persons, individuals, associations, and corporations whether in the judgment named or unnamed. Thus beyond question this previous judgment was binding upon all the private litigants in the present action.

[6] It is to be considered, however, what may be its binding force and effect upon the state itself and upon the state's public agencies and mandatories such as for some purposes municipal corporations always are. In brief, our inquiry is, What was the effect of this previous judgment upon the city and county of San Francisco, present and objecting to its introduction as an estoppel against its own claim? Law is a rule of conduct dictated by the superior, the state, for the conduct and control of its people. It is only by its own grace that the state ever becomes subject to the operation of its own laws, and while in later governmental development the state frequently makes declaration that it will submit its own rights to determination in its own or other courts, yet as such declarations are always in the nature of impairments of the sovereign power, this submission of the state is never inferred in favor of the private litigant, but must be found either actually expressed in an act or by fair intendment and interpretation to belong in the act. It is unnecessary to cite illustrations of this. They are too familiar. Suffice it to refer to the fact that title by adverse possession as against the state can only be secured under such permissive law. The mechanics' lien law of universality in its operation does not apply to the land and buildings of the state.

[7] A reading of the McEnerney Act discloses not only a failure by the state to declare itself bound by decrees so obtained, but makes manifest that the statute was dealing only with the private rights of private persons. Giving to "persons" its broad and indubitable meaning the statute was dealing with the private rights of individuals, associations, copartnerships, and corporations other than public agencies acting in their public capacity. A sovereign state is not a person.

Certain considerations briefly stated must serve to confirm this view. Sections 749, 750, and 751 of the Code of Civil Procedure were the law of this state before the adoption of the McEnerney Act. A reference to the language of these sections and to the language of the McEnerney Act will disclose that in some respects the latter act carefully followed the language of the earlier sections of the Code dealing, as does the McEnerney Act, with the determination of adverse claims to real property and to the quieting of title. In section 751 it is declared that a judgment so obtained against persons known and unknown "shall have the effect of a judgment in rem except as against the state of California and the United States." The McEnerney Act was passed to enable private owners to clear up the multitudinous questions that inevitably arose by the destruction of the records of their titles, for in this state the utmost dependence in all land transactions had come to be placed upon such records. In its essence it is a private statute taking on its unquestioned public character from the very multitude of private interests which were involved. Nothing in the language of the statute even conduces to the belief that it was designed that claims held by public agencies and public mandatories for the sake of the public, as in the matter of highways, parks, wharves, and the like, would ever be determined in such an action, at least, without notice to the agencies charged with the duty of protecting the public rights. In this sense the city and county of San Francisco is a representative of the state. The state's exclusion from the scope of such judgments is the exclusion of the city and county of San Francisco. We do not mean here to be understood as saying, for we do not decide, that such an agency may not be brought in by appropriate pleading, and that so brought in the conflicting rights may not be heard and determined. What we do hold is this, that unless those rights have been so heard and determined the judgment in rem rendered will not be held to include them nor the trustee or agency charged with the duty of maintaining and upholding them.

We think this to be a perfectly sound enunciation of the underlying legal and equitable principles involved, but, in addition, the argument of inconvenience has its force. It would open the door upon the one hand to great frauds, upon the other hand, to great labor and expense upon the part of municipalities, if under circumstances such as here presented, such a decree could deprive without the slightest notice to the municipality, and without anything other than the constructive notice to put it on its guard, a city of its public park, of a portion of its streets, or of a section of its water front; while to avoid this, if such were the law, would entail the onerous labor and expense of an examination of every pleading in every action brought under this act.

[8] It is concluded, therefore, that while as between these private litigants the judgment roll was admissible as a determination by the estoppel of a judgment of their private rights pro and con over the private rights of way, that as against the city and county of San Francisco contending for the existence of a public highway the judgment was without force and was properly refused admission in evidence, and as this conclusion, for the reasons given in the department opinion above set forth, is determinative of the question here in controversy against the contention of appellant, and as the other propositions advanced for reconsideration before the court in bank have been adequately and satisfactorily treated in the department opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

(34 Cal. App. 576)

GEORGE COPLE CO. v. HINDES.
(S. F. 7509.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 6, 1917.)

1. FRAUD 🔑43—EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY—ACTION FOR DAMAGES—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

A complaint in an action for damages for defendant's fraud and in exchange of property, alleging that the building conveyed was erected upon a grade below the established official grade of San Francisco, that defendant concealed the fact that it was built below such grade, and that it was six inches below the curb of the street as established by the board of public works which under the charter had control of the grades of public streets, was sufficient as against a special demurrer that the complaint did not show by what authority the board could establish any grade other than street grades, since, the charter of the city of San Francisco being a state law, it was not necessary to plead its terms to show such authority.

2. FRAUD 🔑47—COMPLAINT—DAMAGES.

The complaint, specifically alleging that to cure defects in the construction of the building's basement floor would cost $3,430, that to raise it to the official grade would cost $5,203, and alleging other matters out of which the existence of general damages would necessarily arise, and that plaintiff was damaged in the amount of $10,000, was not demurrable on the ground that it did not show how plaintiff had been damaged in the sum of $10,000 or in any other sum, as the necessary inference was that all damages over the alleged special damages were general damages.

3. FRAUD 🔑59(2)—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

The measure of damages in an action for fraud and deceit in the exchange of properties is the difference between the actual value of what the defrauded party received and the value which he would have received had the representations been true.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George E. Crothers, Judge.

Action by the George Cople Company against Edward B. Hindes. Judgment for defendant, which on plaintiff's appeal was reversed, with instruction to overrule the defendant's demurrer, and defendant petitioned the Supreme Court for a transfer to and a hearing in that court. Petition denied.

The following is the opinion of Richards, J., in the District Court of Appeal, with whom Lennon, P. J., and Kerrigan, J., concurred:

This is an appeal from a judgment against the plaintiff after an order sustaining the defendant's demurrer to the plaintiff's second amended complaint, the plaintiff having declined to further amend its pleading.

The action is one for the recovery of damages for the alleged fraud and deceit of the defendant occurring in the course of an exchange of real properties between the parties to the action. The property which the plaintiff received in such exchange consisted of a piece of real estate in the city of San Francisco upon which a building had been erected prior to said exchange. The complaint undertakes to set forth circumstantially and in detail the particulars wherein the alleged fraudulent misrepresentations and concealments of the defendant consisted, and it is at certain of these averments that the special demurrer of the defendant is aimed.

[1] The complaint alleged that the building which the plaintiff received from the defendant "was erected upon a grade below the official grade theretofore established by the board of public works for said Sixth street for the erection of said building thereon," and further alleges, as one of the specifications of fraud, "that defendant concealed from plaintiff the fact that the building was built far below the official grade required by the building laws of the city and county of San Francisco." It is averred in this connection that the building was found to be a mean depth of six inches below the curb line of the street as established by the board of public works; and it is also alleged that the board of public works has control of the grades of public streets by virtue of its powers derived from the charter of the city. The special demurrer aimed at these allegations was that "it cannot be ascertained therefrom by what authority the board of public works therein mentioned established, or could establish, any grade other than grades upon which streets must be constructed." We are of the opinion that the complaint was sufficiently definite to avoid this ground of demurrer. The board of public works of the city of San Francisco derives its powers from the charter of said municipality, and, the charter being a state law, it was not necessary to plead its terms in order to show that the board had the authority it is alleged to have exercised in the establishment of the official grade of Sixth street, and we think it otherwise sufficiently clear that the gravamen of the plaintiff's complaint in regard to this particular charge was that the building had been erected below the official grade of the street, which fact had been concealed from the plaintiff by the defendant in making the exchange in question. Whether such concealment was actionable must, of course, depend upon the proofs at the trial of the cause.

[2] The other ground of special demurrer urged by the respondent before the trial court was that it could not be ascertained from the plaintiff's complaint how the plaintiff had been damaged in the sum of $10,000 or any other sum. The complaint in this behalf alleged that to cure certain alleged defects in the construction of the basement floor of the building would cost $3,430, and that to raise the building to the official grade would cost $5,203. These are items of special damage, and are therefore specifically set forth in the complaint, and it is also and further alleged therein that the plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $10,000, for which sum judgment is sought. The respondent adds together the two above specified items of special damage, and finds that they aggregate only $8,633, and hence argues that an uncertainty arises out of the fact that the plaintiff alleges his total damages to be $10,000. But no such uncertainty exists. The complaint alleged certain matters out of the existence of which general damages would necessarily arise. It was not necessary to specify these in the complaint; they were covered by the general averment of the prayer; and the fact that the items of damage which were required to be specifically averred did not aggregate the total damages alleged to have been sustained created no uncertainty in the complaint, since the necessary inference was that all of the damages claimed by the plaintiff above the aggregate of the alleged special damages were general damages, and recoverable as such. We are therefore of the opinion that in so far as the general order of the trial court is to be construed as sustaining the special demurrer of the defendant, the court was in error.

It is, however, contended by the respondent that if the order of the court sustaining his demurrer can be justified upon any of the grounds alleged therein, this appeal must fail. There is no doubt as to the correctness of this position; but in order to sustain the ruling of the trial court, the respondent must succeed in showing that his general demurrer was good.

[3] The only objection urged against the sufficiency of the complaint as stating a cause of action is that the complaint fails to show that the property which the plaintiff received in the exchange was actually of less value than the property which it gave in the exchange. It was the contention of the respondent in the trial court and his contention here that the rule and measure of damages in cases of this character is such that a plaintiff is only entitled to recover the difference between the actual value of that which he parts with and the actual value which he receives under the cotnract or exchange, and that this plaintiff, in failing to bring the averments of his complaint within this rule, has failed to state a cause of action. The difficulty with respondent's position is that the Supreme Court of this state, in the recent case of Hines v. Brode, 168 Cal. 510, 143 Pac. 730, has seen fit to declare a different rule of damages in cases of this character than that for which the respondent contends, viz.: "That the measure of damages which a person is ordinarily entitled to recover in an action for deceit in the sale of property is the difference between the actual value of the property and its value had the property been as represented."

It is conceded that the plaintiff's complaint is sufficiently tested by this rule, and since the above statement of the rule in Hines v. Brode, supra, is in our opinion not dictum in that case, it is binding upon this court, and hence an extended review of the cases cited by the respondent from other jurisdictions in an effort to overthrow the rule would serve no useful purpose.

Tested by the foregoing rule the plaintiff's complaint was sufficient as against the defendant's general demurrer, and hence the order of the court sustaining the same was error.

The judgment is reversed, with instructions to the trial court to overrule the defendant's demurrer on all the grounds urged therein.

John Ralph Wilson, of San Francisco, for appellant. Perry Evans, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The petition for transfer to, and hearing in, this court is denied.

The opinion of the District Court of Appeal declares the law of this state, with respect to the measure of damages in an action for deceit in the sale or exchange of property, to be settled by our decision in Hines v. Brode, 168 Cal. 507, and cases there cited. The rule thus laid down is that the party defrauded is entitled to recover the difference between the actual value of what he received and the value which it would have had if the representations had been true. While the authorities in other jurisdictions are conflicting, the weight of decision, and, we think, the better reasoning, support this rule.

There would be no occasion to say more on the subject, but for the fact that the respondent contends, with some justice, that our own decisions on the point are not in harmony. He calls attention, in particular, to Cross v. Bouck, 53 Cal. Dec. 701, decided in this court since the case of Hines v. Brode. In Cross v. Bouck it was held that on an exchange of property fraudulently induced, the plaintiffs, who had received nothing of value, might recover the actual value of the consideration transferred to the defendants. On the facts of the case, as it was presented, the rule was proper. One who has, by fraud, been induced to part with property, receiving nothing in return, must be entitled to recover at least the value of what he has thus given. He is certainly damaged to the extent of the consideration thus obtained from him. And this was all that was sought by the plaintiffs in Cross v. Bouck. They did not ask for the more liberal award which they might have claimed upon showing the value which would have attached to the property they bargained for, if the facts had been as represented. The opinion, like all opinions, must be read in the light of the case presented for decision. The expressions of the court in Cross v. Bouck, while not so carefully guarded as they might have been, were not intended to throw any doubt upon the soundness of the rule established in this state by Hines v. Brode and earlier cases.

177 Cal. 194

HEAD DRILLING CO. et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

(S. F. 8257.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 9, 1918. Rehearing Denied Feb. 7, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑376(1) — INJURY TO SERVANT — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION — "FURTHER DISABILITY."

Under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 283) § 12, imposing upon the employer the burden of compensating his employés for disability caused by personal injury sustained by accident only when such injury happens in the course of the employment and arises out of it, and section 16, subsec. "c," as amended by St. 1915, p. 1085, permitting compensation for "further disability" only when the original injury has caused the further disability, a "further disability" caused by the employé's negligence, and not happening in the course of a subsequent employment by the same employer, and arising out of it, is not compensable.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑376(1) — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—INJURY TO SERVANT—FURTHER DISABILITY.

A subsequent accident resulting in "further disability," where not the result of lack of ordinary care of the injured employé, may be regarded as a part of the proximate consequences of the original accident within Workmen's Compensation Act, § 16, subsec. "c," as amended by St. 1915, p. 1085, as to compensation for "further disability."

3. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑417(7) — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION — FINDINGS OF COMMISSION—REVIEW.

A finding of the Industrial Accident Commission will not be disturbed where it cannot be said as a matter of law that it is without evidence to support it.

In Bank. Proceedings before the Industrial Accident Commission by W. H. Scott, employé, against the Head Drilling Company, employer, and the Georgia Casualty Company, insurer. Award for employé and employer, and insurance carrier makes application for a writ of review. Award affirmed.

Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, for petitioners. Christopher M. Bradley, of San Francisco, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is a proceeding to review an award in favor of one W. H. Scott for injuries due to accident on February 24, 1916, in the course of and arising out of his employment, against the Head Drilling Company, his employer, and the Georgia Casualty Company, insurer of the employer. It was concluded by the commission that the disability of Scott, continued up to and still existed at the time of judgment by the commission, and the award was for $243.12 as the balance due as disability indemnity to September 15, 1916, and for the further sum of $15.56 per week from that date until the termination of the disability or the further order of the commission, not to exceed in all 240 weeks. The award is attacked solely on the ground that any disability beyond the period of 14 weeks from March 10, 1916, was in fact due to a second accident and injury which did not occur in the course of Scott's employment, and on account of which the employer is in no way responsible, and that the commission had no jurisdiction to award compensation for the disability in so far as it was caused by the second injury.

On February 24, 1916, Scott, while removing a sprocket from an engine, was struck by a flywheel, sustaining a fracture of several ribs and a Pott's fracture of the left leg. The fracture of the leg was further described in the findings as a spiral fracture, and the evidence disclosed that the fibula was badly comminuted. He was taken to a hospital, where he remained till April 12th, being attended by a doctor who was paid by the insurance company. There appears to be no question as to the very serious nature of the fracture, the difficulty of setting the bones in place and in thereafter holding them in place until a permanent union was effected, and the slowness of complete recovery. According to some of the evidence, a recovery within four months "would be very good." After reducing the swelling and removing "several little fragments" of bone, the doctor "tried to get the bone lined up in proper apposition," and "used kangaroo tendon to support the broken fragments in place," and put the leg from the toes to just below the knee in a plaster cast. At the end of four or five weeks the cast was split and opened for "massage and manipulation," but still used as a protection, being held by bandages over it. An X-ray taken by the doctor indicated, according to his testimony, that the bones were "in good position." There is some uncertainty in the evidence of the doctor as to the exact date when this X-ray was taken. We assume it was after the cast was opened, but there is testimony that this was some little time before Scott's discharge from the hospital. About the 12th day of April he was discharged from the hospital, the doctor deeming it best that he should begin to use the leg, but still supervising the case. He went to his home, the cast still on the leg, using crutches. On the evening of April 15th what is called the "second accident" occurred. Scott testified that he was sitting at the dining room table, and arose to get some kodak pictures that were on a wardrobe shelf just back of him. He said:

> "I raised up and turned around like this and got the pictures, and when I turned back there was a wrinkle in the rug that straightened out under the good foot. I didn't have to take a step, but when the wrinkle straightened out I caught my hand on the table and chair, and this heel struck the pedestal of the table or a chair. I don't know which it was. I never fell. I never fell to the floor. It hurt me quite a bit for about an hour, and after that I didn't realize any more pain, and I slept all right that night."

An X-ray taken within two or three days thereafter showed that the fragments of bone were not entirely in place.

The Accident Commission made the following finding:

> "That during the course of the employé's convalescence from his injuries, and while his fractured leg was still in a cast, it was found, on or about April 15, 1916, that the broken portions of the fibula, previously placed in apposition for healing, had separated, necessitating further surgical treatment and prolonged disability; that the danger of such separation from natural causes in a fracture of this type, a spiral fracture, is very great and of frequent occurrence, with or without any immediate exciting cause; that the danger of such subsequent separation is to be anticipated in fractures of this type and is a natural consequence of the original injury; that the evidence is insufficient to show that the separation was due to any substantial independent intervening cause or to any independent intervening cause; but that said separation was instead a proximate and natural result of the original injury."

It is earnestly argued that there is no support in the evidence for this finding in so far as it establishes that the separation of the broken portions of the fibula was not due to any independent intervening cause, but was in fact a proximate and natural result of the original injury. Of course, the basis for this contention is the claim that the evidence establishes without conflict that the incident of April 15th caused the displacement. There certainly is strong support for this theory in the record, and it may be that the claim is well based, but, if this be so, we do not think it disposes of the case. We are of the opinion that a subsequent incident or accident aggravating the original injury may be of such a nature and occur under such circumstances as to make such aggravation the proximate and natural result of the original injury. Whether the subsequent incident or accident is such, or should be regarded as an independent intervening cause is a question of fact for the commission, to be decided in view of all the circumstances, and its conclusion must be sustained by the courts whenever there is any reasonable theory evidenced by the record on which the conclusion can be upheld. The testimony of Scott, as to exactly what occurred on the evening of April 15th must be accepted here as true. According to this, there was nothing but the accidental striking by Scott of the heel of the foot of the injured limb against the pedestal of the table or a chair, done in the attempt to save himself from a fall, something to have been reasonably anticipated when he was discharged from the hospital in the condition in which he then was, and all of which happened without any negligence on his part. Surely, if such a thing might cause a displacement of the bones, he was in no condition to be called on to go about without an attendant, and it was reasonably to be anticipated that if he was left thus to care for himself, such a thing would occur. We have already noted the serious nature of the fracture, the length of time required to effect a permanent reunion of the bones, and the extreme difficulty of keeping the bones in place and preventing displacement. Under all the circumstances it appears to us that it might well be concluded, as was concluded by the commission, that such an incident as was described by Scott was not an independent, intervening cause, within the meaning of the law, but that the striking of the heel and consequent separation of the bones, which had been partially, but not permanently, united, was simply a proximate and natural result of the original injury. Our conclusion is not at all opposed, in our opinion, to what is said in Pacific Coast Casualty Co. v. Pillsbury, 171 Cal. 319, 153 Pac. 24. The question there was whether the commission is authorized by the act to award compensation to the employé "for an additional injury sustained by him afterward, not in the course of his employment, by an accident or act which aggravates the first injury and prolongs the disability." The answer was that it had no such authority if the subsequent injury "is neither the natural nor the proximate result of the injury received in the course of the employment." It was fully recognized in that case, we think, that the subsequent injury may be the proximate result of the injury received in the course of the employment, and compensable under the act, and the finding to that effect in this matter has sufficient support in the evidence.

The award is affirmed.

I concur: LAWLOR, J.

SHAW, J. (concurring). [1-3] The Workmen's Compensation Act imposes upon the employer the duty and burden of compensating his employé for a disability caused by a personal injury sustained by accident, only when such injury happens in the course of the employment and arises out of it. Section 12. Compensation for a "further disability," under subsection "c" of section 16, as amended in 1915 (Stats. 1915, p. 1085), is allowed only when "the original injury has caused further disability." It follows that a "further disability" not caused by the original injury, but by the employé's own negligence, and not happening in the course of a subsequent employment by the same employer, and arising out of it, is not compensable at all under the act. This being so, the award for the further disability here under review can be sustained only upon the ground that the subsequent accident and resulting displacement of the fractured bone was not the result of a lack of ordinary care on the part of the injured employé. An injury so occurring subsequently may be regarded as a part of the proximate consequences of the original accident. The finding of the commission is in effect a finding that at the time of the second accident Scott was not guilty of a lack of the ordinary care which reasonably prudent persons in his condition exercise for their own safety from injury. I think it cannot be said, as matter of law, that such finding is without any evidence to support it. For these reasons I concur with the conclusion of the Chief Justice.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; WILBUR, J.

(177 Cal. 190)

POAK v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO.

(L. A. 4114.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 9, 1918. Rehearing Denied Feb. 7, 1918.)

1. CARRIERS 🔑315(4)—INJURIES TO PASSENGER—PLEADING AND PROOF—VARIANCE.

Where a complaint alleged that defendant negligently started a street car while plaintiff was on the car step getting off, there was no fatal variance with a finding that the car started while plaintiff was in the car, but that she went on out and stepped off, thinking the car stationary, under Code Civ. Proc. § 469, relating to review on appeal.

2. CARRIERS 🔑303(4)—INJURIES TO PASSENGER—STARTING OF CAR—DUTY OF CONDUCTOR.

Where a conductor rings to go on while in the front of a street car without looking back to see if any one was rising to get off, he is negligent.

3. CARRIERS 🔑347(11)—INJURIES TO PASSENGER—LEAVING MOVING CAR—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION OF FACT.

Whether an old woman defective of sight and hearing was guilty of contributory negligence in stepping off of a moving street car, held, under the evidence, a question of fact for the trial court, in the absence of a jury.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by Mary S. Poak against the Pacific Electric Railway Company, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank Karr, R. C. Gortner, and A. W. Ashburn, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. Foster C. Wright, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Action against a street railway company to recover damages for personal injuries. A jury was waived, and the court gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $1,000 and costs. The defendant appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

The allegations of the complaint, with respect to negligence, are that while plaintiff, a passenger on one of defendant's cars, was in the act of alighting, the car was started without warning or notice to her, throwing her upon the pavement of the street.

The findings are not in exact accord with these averments. In substance, the court found that the car had stopped at a street crossing, which was plaintiff's destination; that while the car was slowing down to make the stop, the plaintiff arose from her seat in the inclosed or center part of the car, and walked toward the rear platform, from which steps led to the ground. The conductor, who was at the front of the car, did not look back, and did not see that plaintiff was going out, although there was nothing to obstruct his view in her direction. He gave the starting signal, and the car started, while plaintiff was still a few feet from the exit steps. The motion of the car was gradual and even, "and was not evident to plaintiff's senses." It was dark, and the street pavement was such that it did not "afford easy suggestion, by inspection, of movement above or past it." Believing that the car was at rest, the plaintiff stepped from it after it had run about 75 feet, and was thrown violently to the street.

[1] We think, however, that there was no such variance between the facts alleged and those found as would justify a reversal of the judgment. The allegation of the complaint was that the car was negligently started while plaintiff was on the steps, and that she was thereby thrown from the car. The finding was that the car had already started before plaintiff had reached the steps, and that she was thrown to the pavement in consequence of her endeavoring to alight from the moving car, which she thought to be stationary. But the essential act of negligence was the same under either state of facts. Whether we take the theory of the complaint or that of the findings, the fault of the conductor lay in starting the car after it had been brought to a stop, and before the passenger had time to alight, as she desired to do. Whatever may have been the precise position of the plaintiff at the moment the car started, she was attempting to leave the car, and was acting in the belief that the car was and would be kept at rest. The case is not like those in which it has been held that a plaintiff who relies, in his pleading, upon the negligent starting of a car while he is attempting to alight or get on, cannot recover upon proof of an attempt to alight from or board a moving car. Chicago City Ry. Co. v. Gates, 135 Ill. App. 180; Peterson v. Metropolitan Str. Ry. Co., 211 Mo. 498, 111 S. W. 37; Patterson v. Westchester Elec. Ry. Co., 26 App. Div. 336, 49 N. Y. Supp. 796. In the cases cited, it did not appear, as it does here, that the person injured had acted in the belief, reasonable under the circumstances, that the car was at rest. There was, therefore, no ground for claiming that the injuries were due to the negligent starting of the car, which was the sole act of negligence alleged. But in the present case, although the car was moving when plaintiff left it, the negligent act upon which the court based its conclusion was still the improper starting of the car, and this, as we have pointed out, was the very breach of duty asserted in the complaint.

It is quite plain, from a reading of the record, that the discrepancy between the pleading and the proof could not have misled the defendant to its prejudice. Under these circumstances, we would be required, under section 469 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to treat the variance as immaterial, without the necessity, even, of resorting to the liberal provision of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution.

[2] The contention that the court erred in holding the starting of the car to be an act of negligence is without merit. It was found that the conductor did not look toward the rear of the car before giving the starting signal, and, in effect, that he could and would have seen plaintiff moving toward the exit if he had so looked. Clearly it was his duty to take reasonable care to see whether any passenger was preparing to alight before giving the signal to start the car. Leavenworth Elec. R. Co. v. Cusick, 60 Kan. 590, 57 Pac. 519, 72 Am. St. Rep. 374; Memphis Str. Ry. Co. v. Shaw, 110 Tenn. 467, 75 S. W. 713; Birmingham Union Ry. Co. v. Smith, 90 Ala. 60, 8 South. 86, 24 Am. St. Rep. 761; Britton v. Street Ry. Co., 90 Mich. 159, 51 N. W. 276. Booth on Street Railways (2d Ed.) § 349.

[3] Nor can it be said that plaintiff was, as matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence. While it is, ordinarily, negligence per se for a passenger to attempt to alight from a moving car (Joyce v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 147 Cal. 274, 82 Pac. 204), there may be circumstances which would warrant a different conclusion. Here it appears that the plaintiff was somewhat advanced in years, her hearing was not of the best, and her sight was slightly impaired. She did not know that the car was in motion, and the evidence warranted the conclusion that she was not at fault in failing to know this. Under these circumstances, the question whether she had been guilty of negligence was one of fact for the trial court, and the finding in her favor cannot be held to be without support.

The judgment and the order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; LAWLOR, J.

---

35 Cal. App. 394

BLAIR v. BROWNSTONE OIL & REFINING CO. et al. (Civ. 1922.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 23, 1917. Rehearing Denied Dec. 22, 1917.)

1. DAMAGES 🔑45—BREACH OF CONTRACT—EXPENDITURES.

Where plaintiff was prevented from keeping a well-digging contract by defendant's failure to furnish necessary tools and appliances as agreed, the profits lost by plaintiff did not constitute the exclusive measure of damages, and plaintiff could recover the amount which he was induced to expend on the faith of the contract, including a fair allowance for his own time and services in the absence of any showing that such expenses were extravagant and unnecessary for the purpose of carrying out the contract, as one who has voluntarily and wrongfully put an end to a contract cannot say that the party injured has not been damaged to the amount of what he has been induced fairly and in good faith to expend.

2. WORK AND LABOR 🔑14(1)—RESCISSION OF CONTRACT—RECOVERY ON QUANTUM MERUIT.

When a party injured by the stoppage of a contract elects to rescind, he cannot recover any damages for the breach of the contract either for outlay or for loss of profits, but recovers the value of his services actually performed as upon a quantum meruit.

3. CONTRACTS 🔑313(1)—BREACH—RENUNCIATION OF CONTRACT.

Though when one party puts an end to a contract the other party cannot sue on the stipulations contained in the contract, the willful and wrongful putting an end to a contract and preventing the other party from carrying it out is itself a breach of the contract for which an action will lie for the recovery of all damages which the injured party has sustained.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by Charles H. Blair against the Brownstone Oil & Refining Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Leonard B. Slosson, of Los Angeles, and Geo. E. Farrand, of Ventura, for appellants. William H. Fuller and Chas. E. Putnam, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, Judge pro tem. This case has been heard three times in the trial court, by a different judge on each occasion. On each of the two earlier trials judgment went for the defendant, but the judgments were reversed on appeal in each instance. Blair v. Brownstone Oil & Refining Co., 17 Cal. App. 471, 120 Pac. 41; Id., 168 Cal. 632, 143 Pac. 1022. On the trial which last took place judgment was recovered by the plaintiff. The defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

The parties entered into a contract by which Blair agreed to deepen a well for the Brownstone Company at an agreed price for each foot of increase of depth. By the contract the company bound itself to supply to Blair all tools, machinery, and appliances to be used in the performance of his work. Blair had proceeded to a certain stage of the work, when its further prosecution was stopped by the refusal of the company to furnish a certain cable needed in his operations, and which it was the company's duty to supply under the clause of the contract binding it to provide tools and appliances. Blair brought this action in two counts to recover from the company for his operations under the contract. The first count is for damages, the second for the reasonable value of the work done. The trial court determined that the same sum was due upon each of these alternative counts, and rendered judgment for the amount.

[1] Under the count for damages evidence was received of the amount of Blair's expenditures under his partial performance of the agreement, as well as evidence showing the value of his own services. The amount for which judgment was rendered is the total of these figures. No evidence was offered tending to show what profit Blair lost by reason of his cessation of work under the contract. The company contends that the only proper measure of damages in the case is the loss of profit, and that, as there was no evidence upon that point, the finding of the court that Blair was damaged in the amount for which judgment was allowed is not supported by the evidence.

[2, 3] To the proposition that the amount of profits lost is the sole measure of damages counsel cite Hale v. Trout, 35 Cal. 229; Winans v. Sierra Lumber Co., 66 Cal. 61, 4 Pac. 952; McConnell v. Corona City Water Co., 149 Cal. 60, 85 Pac. 929, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1171; and Ahlers v. Smiley, 163 Cal. 200, 124 Pac. 827. These cases lay down the familiar rule that loss of prospective profits under an uncompleted contract is a proper measure of damages, but they decide nothing as to the exclusiveness of that measure. The rule which supports the judgment in this action is well expressed in United States v. Behan, 110 U. S. 338, 345, 347, 4 Sup. Ct. 81, 84 (28 L. Ed. 168), where it is said:

> "When a party injured by the stoppage of a contract elects to rescind it, then, it is true, he cannot recover any damages for a breach of the contract, either for outlay or for loss of profits; he recovers the value of his services actually performed as upon a quantum meruit. There is then no question of losses or profits. But when he elects to go for damages for the breach of the contract, the first and most obvious damage to be shown is the amount which he has been induced to expend on the faith of the contract, including a fair allowance for his own time and services. If he chooses to go further and claims for the loss of anticipated profits, he may do so, subject to the rules of law as to the character of profits which may be thus claimed. It does not lie, however, in the mouth of the party who has voluntarily and wrongfully put an end to the contract to say that the party injured has not been damaged at least to the amount of what he has been induced fairly and in good faith to lay out and expend (including his own services) after making allowance for the value of materials on hand; at least it does not lie in the mouth of the party in fault to say this, unless he can show that the expenses of the party injured have been extravagant, and unnecessary for the purpose of carrying out the contract. * * * It is to be observed that when it is said in some of the books that, where one party puts an end to the contract, the other party cannot sue on the contract, but must sue for the work actually done under it, as upon a quantum meruit, this only means that he cannot sue the party in fault upon the stipulations contained in the contract, for he himself has been prevented from performing his own part of the contract upon which the stipulations depend. But surely the willful and wrongful putting an end to a contract, and preventing the other party from carrying it out, is itself a breach of the contract for which an action will lie for the recovery of all damage which the injured party has sustained. The distinction between those claims under a contract which result from a performance of it on the part of a claimant, and those claims under it which result from being prevented by the other party from performing it, has not always been attended to. The party who voluntarily and wrongfully puts an end to a contract and prevents the other party from performing it is estopped from denying that the injured party has not been damaged to the extent of his actual loss and outlay fairly incurred."

The rule thus strikingly laid down finds support in other authorities, in which further cases will be found plentifully cited upon the point. 3 Sutherland on Damages (3d Ed.) § 713, pp. 2182, 2183; Cederberg v. Robison, 100 Cal. 93, 34 Pac. 625; Holt v. United Security L. Ins. & Trust Co., 76 N. J. Law, 585, 72 Atl. 301, 307, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 691; Brady v. Oliver, 125 Tenn. 595, 147 S. W. 1135, 1142, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 60, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 376.

As the judgment is sustainable under the count for damages, it is not necessary to consider objections made by the appellant to the judgment as depending upon the other count.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

---

35 Cal App. 372

BARTOLLOTTI v. POLICE COURT OF CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al.

(Civ. 2412.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 22, 1917.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑208(6½)—CLASS LEGISLATION—STATUTES.

St. 1911, p. 416, § 1, declares that persons engaged in manufacturing, bottling, and selling certain commodities, may file in the office of the secretary of state a description of the marks, names, or devices used on the receptacles in which the commodities are sold, while section 2 declares that it shall be unlawful for any person or persons, corporation or corporations, to fill with olive oil, salad oil, or any substitution therefor, or similar to olive oil, ripe or green olives, soda waters, mineral or aerated waters, porter, ale, cider, ginger ale, milk, cream, beer, small beer, lager beer, weiss beer, white beer, or other beverages, etc., any bottle, box, siphon, or keg, marked or distinguished with or by any name, mark, or device of which a description shall have been filed and published, as provided in section 1, or deface, erase, obliterate, cover up, or otherwise remove or conceal any such name, mark, or device thereon, or to sell, buy, give, take, or otherwise dispose of or traffic in the same, without the written consent of the persons or corporations whose mark or device shall be or shall have been in or upon the bottle, box, siphon, etc. Held, that in view of the fact that the statute not only protected persons engaged in bottling and using bottles and other similar containers for their goods, but also protected the public against adulteration of such articles, the statute was not invalid under

Const. art. 1, § 11, declaring that all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation, or under Const. U. S. Amend. 14, declaring that no state shall deny to any persons within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law, the legislation not being improper as class legislation, and the statute being directed in part against the refilling of receptacles with adulterated products.

2. PROHIBITION 🔑28—SCOPE OF INQUIRY—ASSUMPTIONS.

Where the petition for a writ of prohibition to restrain prosecution under St. 1911, p. 416, relating to refilling marked bottles, showed that petitioner could have been arrested under the general statutes without any recourse to the search warrant provided for in the statute of 1911, it must be assumed that he was so arrested, and the constitutionality of the search warrant provisions need not be determined.

3. PROHIBITION 🔑20—PETITION—CONSTRUCTION.

An averment in a petition for prohibition that a search warrant was served does not show invasion of petitioner's premises for service, and cannot be so construed to sustain petitioner's contention as to the invalidity of the statute under which the search warrant was issued.

4. PROHIBITION 🔑13—NATURE OF REMEDY.

Though the proceedings under a search warrant under which petitioner's premises were invaded were illegal, prohibition is not an appropriate remedy for redress, the act already having been completed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Petition by Frank Bartollotti for a writ of prohibition against the Police Court of the City of Los Angeles and George S. Richardson. From a judgment for respondents, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

James W. Bell, of Los Angeles, and Noel C. Edwards, for appellant. Rose S. Phillips, Deputy City Prosecutor, and Martin E. Geibel, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WORKS, Judge pro tem. In this proceeding the appellant seeks a writ of prohibition restraining the respondent police court from trying him under a charge of having committed a misdemeanor in violating the provisions of a certain act of the Legislature. The respondents answered and made a motion for judgment on the pleadings, which was granted. The appeal is from the judgment.

[1] The act under which it is sought to punish Bartollotti is found at page 416, Statutes of 1911 (Deering's Gen. Laws, Act 4122). Section 1 of the act provides, to state it in general terms, that persons engaged in manufacturing, bottling, and selling certain commodities, also specifically mentioned in section 2, which is set forth below, may file in the office of the county clerk and of the secretary of state a description of the names, marks, or devices used on the receptacles in which the commodities are sold, and cause the description to be published for a certain period in a newspaper.

Section 2 of the act follows:

"It is hereby declared to be unlawful for any person or persons, corporation or corporations, to fill with olive oil, salad oil, or any substitution for, or similar to olive oil, ripe or green olives, soda waters, mineral or aerated waters, porter, ale, cider, ginger ale, milk, cream, beer, small beer, lager beer, weiss beer, white beer, or other beverages, or Worcestershire or other sauce or sauces, or with medicine, compounds, or mixtures, any bottle, box, siphon or keg, so marked or distinguished as aforesaid, with or by any name, mark or device, of which a description shall have been filed and published, as provided in section one of this act, or deface, erase, obliterate, cover up, or otherwise remove or conceal any such name, mark or device thereon, or to sell, buy, give, take or otherwise dispose of or traffic in the same, without the written consent of, or unless the same shall have been purchased from the person or persons, corporation or corporations, whose mark or device shall be or shall have been in or upon the bottle, box, siphon, or keg so filled, trafficked in, used, or handled as aforesaid. It is hereby declared to be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation engaged in the manufacture, preparation or selling of drugs, or food products to use bottles, in bottling or packing their products that have been previously used for other purposes. Any person or persons or corporation offending against the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished for the first offense by imprisonment of not less than ten days nor more than six months or by a fine of fifty cents for each and every such bottle, box, siphon or keg so filled, sold, used, disposed of, bought, or trafficked in, or by both such fine and imprisonment; and for each subsequent offense by imprisonment not less than twenty days nor more than one year, or by a fine of not less than one dollar nor more than five dollars for each and every bottle, box, siphon, and keg so filled, sold, used, disposed of, bought or trafficked in, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the magistrate before whom the offense shall be tried."

In passing this law the Legislature had at least two purposes in view. One of these was to protect the owners of a certain kind of property, peculiar in character and devoted to a peculiar use, as compared with property generally. Another object was the protection of the general public from fraud, imposition, and deception. It is from both these aspects that the statute must be viewed from time to time, as we consider the various objections which are made to its constitutionality by the appellant.

It is insisted that the act is invalid because it makes it unlawful for any person to refill receptacles marked or distinguished as provided in the act, or to sell, or traffic in them, without the written consent of the person whose mark is upon the receptacle. In considering this point we are to regard the statute as one for the protection of the owners of receptacles and not as one for the protection of the general public. No argument need precede the assertion that the protection or good of the general public cannot constitutionally be made to depend upon the consent of any private individual or group of individuals.

That the statute is constitutional in that feature of it which looks to the protection of individuals is now comparatively well settled.

There are statutes upon the general subject in many of the states of the Union. Some of these have been held unconstitutional, but they have been so declared largely, but not altogether, because of differences between them and the act which is now before us. The California law is the counterpart of acts which have been passed in several of the states. Where that general form of statute is in effect it has been generally, if not always, held to be constitutional as against all grounds of assault upon it. While we speak now only of the feature of the statute designed to protect ownership in receptacles, by requiring the written consent of the owners to their use, the cases which we cite cover other objections which have been made to the constitutionality of such enactments. People v. Cannon, 63 Hun, 306, 18 N. Y. Supp. 25; People v. Cannon, 139 N. Y. 32, 34 N. E. 759, 36 Am. St. Rep. 668; Commonwealth v. Anselvich, 186 Mass. 376, 71 N. E. 790, 104 Am. St. Rep. 590; Commonwealth v. Goldburg, 167 Ky. 96, 180 S. W. 68. These cases thoroughly meet the contention that the act is unconstitutional upon the ground now under consideration. That it provides for the protection of the property rights of a certain class of citizens there can be no doubt; but the classification is entirely justified for the reason that the property is of a peculiar character and devoted to a peculiar use as we have already stated. The owners of the property are entitled, therefore, in the exercise of a discretion which has been left to the legislative will, to a peculiar protection in their ownership. Commonwealth v. Anselvich, supra.

The most exhaustive, as well as one of the latest, cases on the particular subject under present discussion, as well as upon the general constitutional questions in this action presented, is Commonwealth v. Goldburg, supra. The Court of Appeals of Kentucky there said:

"It is of course, manifest that in the enactment of this law the Legislature intended to, and did, create a class, and intended to, and did, protect this class in the use of the branded containers employed by it in its business. And to make more effective the purpose of the law, it provided means by and through which persons violating its provisions might be punished. But so far as the mere question of the authority for legislative classification is concerned, there is no room for dispute. It has been time and again settled by courts everywhere that it is competent for the Legislature to create classes and deal with these classes, both in respect to civil as well as criminal rights and liabilities, separately, the only limitation being that the classification must rest upon some reasonable difference existing between the class selected for treatment and other classes of persons or property. So that the mere fact that the Legislature may confer upon a certain class rights and privileges not enjoyed by other classes is in itself no objection to the statute unless the classification is arbitrary or unreasonable. * * * The criminal laws of the state are made up of classifications. Almost every criminal statute selects a class and treats it separately. The statutes that impose a punishment for forgery, larceny, embezzlement, destroying property, obtaining money by false pretenses, giving worthless checks, making false statements, selling mortgaged property, wrongfully converting money or property, and for selling misbranded seeds or foods, are pertinent illustrations of the right of classification and the extent to which it has been carried. So, too, this same rule of classification has been extended with equal freedom and equal authority to statutes not penal in their nature but only intended to regulate civil or contract rights and liabilities. Examples of this character of legislation are found in the banking laws, the insurance laws, laws relating to negotiable instruments, and laws regulating telephone and telegraph companies, common carriers, and the sale of foodstuffs."

In a case not cited above (Rhodes v. Sperry & Hutchinson Co., 193 N. Y. 223, 85 N. E. 1097, 34 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1143, 127 Am. St. Rep. 945), language was used by the court which is in point here, although the action was not a criminal one, but was a civil action for damages and for an injunction. It was brought under a statute of New York which provided that the portrait of any living person should not be used for advertising purposes without his consent. The court said:

"While it appears to be conceded by counsel for the appellant that the Legislature may declare any act to be a private tort which it may declare to be a public offense, the requirement of a written consent to authorize the use of one's name or portrait by others for advertising or trade purposes is denounced as an interference with personal liberty 'without due process of law.' I am unable to see that this requirement is any more objectionable than was that in the statutes under consideration in the case of People v. Cannon, 139 N. Y. 32, 34 N. E. 759, 36 Am. St. Rep. 668, commonly known as the 'Bottling Act' (Laws 1887, p. 475, c. 377, amended by Laws 1888, p. 242, c. 181). That statute declared it to be unlawful for any person to fill with beverages or medicine any marked bottle, without the written consent of the person or corporation whose mark or device had been placed upon the bottle, and it was construed to be constitutional in all respects. It would not be difficult to refer to many examples of legislation in which the right to a civil remedy was made dependent upon the absence of consent in behalf of the party claiming to be injured. Thus, the copyright laws of the United States prescribe the forfeiture of a book published in violation thereof, and permit a civil action for damages only where the publication of the copyrighted work is made 'without the consent of the proprietor of the copyright first obtained in writing signed in the presence of two or more witnesses.' Rev. St. U. S. § 4964 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3413)."

Bartollotti contends that the act violates the provisions of section 11 of article 1 of the Constitution of the state, which reads that "all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation," as well as the clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution to the effect that no state shall "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws"; in brief, that the act is class legislation.

In support of this general claim as to the invalidity of the act, a discussion of which has to some extent been anticipated above, Bartollotti specifies certain more particular objections. He points out that the statute is silent as to the disposition of the contents of refilled receptacles; that it is not concerned with the intent operating in the mind of one who refills them, although it makes the refilling a crime; that it is not, therefore, directed at the possible adulteration of contents; and that it is designed solely for the protection of the owners of receptacles.

If these assertions were all justly made there would be some room for the contention that the statute is class legislation, for the Legislature may not pass laws intended to protect the owners of specific kinds of property in their ownership to the exclusion of all other kinds, unless the property the owners of which are so protected is so different from property generally as to require or deserve the enactment of special laws in regard to it. This particular question we have discussed above. This law, however, was enacted partially for the purpose, as we have already stated, of protecting the public from the adulteration or imitation of a large and general class of commodities which lend themselves, with greater or less ease, to adulteration and imitation. It happens, incidentally, looking now at the act as for the protection of the public alone and forgetting what we have said above as to its features as a protection of ownership, that the venders of such commodities are by it protected in the use and ownership of the receptacles in which their wares are customarily sold. This is no objection to the validity of the statute. If the general public is protected by a statute in those matters in which the lawmaking power owes protection to the public in a due exercise of the police power, it can make no difference that the statute at the same time yields a peculiar benefit to some class or classes of persons. The commodities mentioned in the act may very well become known, and it is a matter of common knowledge that they do become known, by the coverings under which they are vended. Adulteration and imitation could therefore readily be accomplished if the receptacles were permitted indiscriminately to be reused by any but the producers of the articles which they were originally designed to cover and which they have come to be recognized by the world as actually covering. The subject-matter of the act bears a distinct and appropriate relation to its purpose to protect the public. In re Griffenhagen, 18 N. Y. Supp. 29, note; People v. Cannon, supra; Commonwealth v. Anselvich, supra; Commonwealth v. Goldburg, supra.

[2] Section 4 of the act provides that whenever any person who has registered a description of the name or mark used by him on receptacles in which he vends his wares, as allowed by section 1, makes oath before a magistrate that he has reason to believe that any of his receptacles are being unlawfully used or filled by any person, "the said magistrate must thereupon issue a search warrant to discover and obtain the same." Thereupon the magistrate may cause the alleged illicit holder of the receptacles to be brought before him, may inquire into the circumstances of his possession, must punish him if he finds him guilty, and must, in that event, award the possession of any property taken under the search warrant to the owner.

Bartollotti contends that section 4 is unconstitutional both as invading his right to personal liberty and his right of property. The record does not present the question of an unconstitutional invasion of the right to personal liberty. The amended petition for prohibition contains, aside from the statement of certain conclusions of law as to unconstitutionality, only the following allegation concerning the search warrant, omitting formal verbiage:

> "That * * * one Nate Volen made application to the said police court * * * for two search warrants in the form of affidavits, * * * and thereupon the said police court * * * issued two search warrants; * * * that thereafter * * * your petitioner herein was served with said search warrants and at the same time placed under arrest for the alleged violation" of the statute.

From this language it plainly appears that the arrest may have been entirely separate and apart from all questions involving either the issuance or service or the conduct of any proceedings whatever under the search warrant. Under the law Bartollotti could have been arrested under the provisions of section 2 of the act, without any attempt to resort to proceedings under search warrant (Pen. Code, §§ 1426, 1426a, 1427), and we must assume against the pleader that he was so arrested. As a matter of fact, it is that section which he is charged with having violated.

[3, 4] Nor can any question arise here on the score of an invasion of Bartollotti's premises for the purpose of prosecuting search under the warrant. It will be noted that the amended petition alleges only that the search warrant was "served." This falls far short of a statement that Bartollotti's property was invaded for the purpose of making search. It is conceivable that one to whom a search warrant is delivered by an officer might surrender without search the property described in the warrant. But if we pass this question by, it is sufficient to say, granting that there was an invasion of Bartollotti's property under the search warrant, that the act has been completed, and that prohibition, from its very nature, cannot be invoked to prevent it.

It is palpable, also, that in this case no question can be presented because of the constitutional provision that property cannot be taken without due process of law, under the language of the statute commanding the magistrate to award to the owner any property taken under search warrant. Even if we concede that the allegation of the petition that the warrant was served includes the statement that search was made under it, there is no allegation whatever that any property was either found or taken.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

---

35 Cal. App. 450

GREAT WESTERN ELECTRO-CHEMICAL CO. et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION et al. (Civ. 2339.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 3, 1917.)

MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑405(4)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—CAUSE OF INJURY—JURISDICTION OF INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION—EVIDENCE.

In proceedings for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, it being claimed that the employé was injured by getting caustic in his eye because he did not wear glasses, thus violating a rule of the employment, on evidence that the caustic was spilled on the employé's back when he was stooping down, and only got into his eyes when an attempt was being made to pull his shirt off over his head, and that the injury to his eye would probably have occurred whether he had on his glasses or not, the Industrial Accident Commission had jurisdiction to determine that failure of the employé to wear his glasses was not the cause of the injury.

Petition for writ of review, by the Great Western Electro-Chemical Company, employer, and the Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation, Limited, against the Industrial Accident Commission and Peter J. Connelly, employé, to review an award under the Workmen's Compensation Act in favor of Connelly. Petition denied.

Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, for petitioners. Chris. M. Bradley, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The petitioners herein contend that the Industrial Accident Commission acted beyond and in excess of their jurisdiction in the making of an award in favor of Peter J. Connelly, an applicant before it, in his application against the Great Western Electro-Chemical Company, his employers, and their insurer, Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation, Limited, the basis of their contention being that the undisputed evidence in the case shows that at the time of receiving the injuries for which the applicant, Peter J. Connelly, claimed compensation, he was guilty of willful misconduct from which his injuries directly arose, such willful misconduct consisting in his willful disobedience of the orders and instructions of his employers with respect to the wearing of glasses in connection with the doing of the work in which he was engaged at the time of the injury of which he complains.

The Great Western Electro-Chemical Company was engaged in the business of making caustic, which it was dangerous for its employés to handle or work with unless their eyes were protected by the wearing of glasses, which the said corporation furnished to its employés, and directly and expressly instructed them to wear when engaged in their work. The applicant for compensation had always worn such glasses theretofore in obedience to such express instructions, but a few moments before his injuries had taken off his glasses and omitted to replace them when he undertook to fill his kettle from a tank containing caustic by means of a pump connected with said tank. While so engaged a quantity of the caustic from the valves of said pump or tank was spilled upon his back, and from thence got into one of his eyes, causing the injury of which he complains.

The petitioner's contention is that the caustic got into the eye of the injured employé because his glasses were off, and that, having removed his glasses in direct violation of the positive instructions of his employer, he was guilty of willful misconduct, by reason of which he is not entitled to recover. An examination of the entire evidence taken before the Industrial Accident Commission, however, convinces us that there was a very serious question as to whether or not the absence of the glasses in any way contributed to or caused the applicant's injury, the evidence seeming to show quite clearly that when he was injured he was stooping down, and that while in this position the caustic was spilled upon his back, and only got into his eyes while an attempt was being made to pull his shirt off over his head, and that the injury to his eye would probably have occurred whether he had his glasses on at that time or not, and hence that the absence of the glasses was not a contributing cause of his injury. Such being the state of the evidence, we are unable to say that the Commission did not have jurisdiction to determine that the omission of the applicant to wear his glasses at the moment of his injuries was the cause of such injuries.

The petitioners herein further contend that the applicant should not have recovered because the evidence showed that in his manner of using the pump which caused the caustic to be spilled upon his back, the applicant did not follow his instructions as to the manner in which such pump was to be operated. We do not find, however, from a reading of the entire record that the applicant had ever received any instructions from a superior officer or employé as to the manner in which such pump should be operated, and that the utmost that can be said with reference to this matter is that he was simply negligent in the use of said pump, but was not guilty of any willful misconduct in that connection at the time of his injuries.

The Commission so found, and we think the evidence justifies their conclusion in that regard.

The petition is denied.

---

35 Cal. App. 429

PEOPLE v. BONES. (Cr. 402.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 1, 1917.)

1. Homicide 🔑139 — Manslaughter — Indictment—Sufficiency.

Indictment alleging that defendant willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously killed a human being sufficiently charges the offense of manslaughter under Pen. Code, § 192, defining manslaughter.

2. Homicide 🔑127 — Manslaughter — Indictment—Sufficiency.

In information charging manslaughter under Pen. Code, § 192, defining the offense, it is not necessary to allege whether the homicide was voluntary or involuntary.

3. Homicide 🔑255(2) — Manslaughter — Evidence—Sufficiency.

Evidence held to warrant submission to jury of forms of verdict for both voluntary and involuntary manslaughter.

4. Criminal Law 🔑1172(1) — Appeal — Harmless Error.

Punishment for manslaughter under Pen. Code, § 193, being the same whether the manslaughter is voluntary or involuntary, accused is not prejudiced by submission of general verdict of "guilty as charged" or "not guilty," though the evidence warranted submission of both classes of manslaughter.

5. Homicide 🔑286(1) — Instructions — Intent.

Instruction that intent in homicide need not be proved by positive and direct evidence, but may be proved by all the facts and circumstances and testimony, is not objectionable as charging that the intent to do an unlawful act is presumed from the commission of the act.

6. Homicide 🔑300(3)—Defenses—Self-Defense.

The instruction to weigh the defense of self-defense by what a reasonable man would have done under the circumstances, and that, if a reasonable person would have believed he was in danger of receiving bodily harm, and that the danger was pressing and imminent, he would be justified in using such force as would protect him from bodily harm, is proper.

7. Homicide 🔑340(2)—Appeal—Harmless Error.

In prosecution for manslaughter, instruction on malice, although improper, was without prejudice.

8. Homicide 🔑164 — Evidence — Admissibility.

Accused in prosecution for manslaughter having produced evidence that deceased was a large strong man, and accused was a small man, and having asked a physician whether a man of accused's size could strike a blow sufficient to kill deceased, the state could show accused's ability as an athlete, and that he had, a few years previous, engaged in boxing matches.

9. Criminal Law 🔑1169(8) — Appeal — Harmless Error—Evidence.

In such case accused was in no event prejudiced when the witness stated that it was his opinion that accused was a very unskillful boxer.

10. Criminal Law 🔑939(1)—New Trial—Newly Discovered Evidence—Diligence.

Accused was not entitled to new trial on ground of newly discovered evidence consisting of testimony of persons present at the time of the homicide, which occurred in a community of small population, and of testimony as to deceased's habits when intoxicated, since any diligence must have produced such testimony at the trial.

11. Criminal Law 🔑938(1)—New Trial—Newly Discovered Evidence—Diligence.

Whether a motion for new trial should be granted on ground of newly discovered evidence is addressed to sound discretion of trial court.

12. Homicide 🔑250—Manslaughter—Evidence—Sufficiency.

Evidence held to sustain conviction of the crime of manslaughter.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Emmet Seawell, Judge.

Ira Leslie Bones was convicted of manslaughter, and from such judgment and order denying motion for new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

W. F. Cowan and C. E. Davis, both of Santa Rosa, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of manslaughter, and was sentenced to suffer imprisonment in the state prison for the term of 3½ years. He appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The homicide occurred in a saloon at Bodega bay, Sonoma county, on the 23d day of August, 1916. The deceased, Miles Gaffney, a dairyman by occupation and engaged in said business in the vicinity of Bodega Bay, had been in the said saloon at several different times during the day of the homicide. Late in the afternoon of said day, at about 5 o'clock, the defendant, accompanied by one Eugene Elphick, entered the saloon, and there met the deceased. Elphick and the deceased shortly thereafter engaged in a dice-throwing game to determine which of the two should pay for a watermelon. Elphick won the game, and the deceased then said that he would treat to the drinks, whereupon he placed a piece of money on the bar, and the three men, Gaffney, Elphick, and Bones, drank. A controversy then arose between Gaffney and Elphick relative to the watermelon for which the dice game had been played, and it appears that the position of the deceased was that, having paid for the drinks, he was not obligated to pay for a watermelon for Elphick. The price of the melon was greater than the amount paid by Gaffney for the drinks, and it seems, as we understand the record, which is not entirely clear as to that particular matter, Elphick wanted Gaffney to pay him the difference between the two amounts. At any rate, during the progress of the controversy, Elphick appealed to the barkeeper to say whether he was or was not right in his contention, whereupon the defendant interposed the observation, "Yes; that is right," or words to that effect. The deceased thereupon said to the defendant, "What the h——ll are you butting in for?" or "What are you butting in for?" there being testimony that the expression was in both of the forms as thus given.

Continuing the narration of the facts as they were testified to by the witness Roberts, testifying for the people, it appears that after the above remark by Gaffney to Bones the latter, addressing the former, said, "You have been giving me the worst of it all day." Gaffney made no reply to Bones, but within a brief space of time thereafter Bones struck Gaffney two blows with his hands or fists on each side of the jaw. At this time Gaffney was standing near or against the wall of the building or room, with his hands down by his sides, and had previously made no demonstration indicating an intention to assault or strike Bones. Upon being struck by Bones as stated, Gaffney turned his head sideways, and then fell or slid down the wall to the floor in a lump. Bones hastily left the saloon, exclaiming, as he was passing through the door, "Come on out." Gaffney did not fall to the floor violently or strike his head either against the wall or floor. It was soon discovered, upon examination, that Gaffney was unconscious, and immediately those present, including the defendant, made an unavailing attempt to resuscitate him by rubbing his body and pouring water over his chest. The deceased was then carried by several men, Bones assisting, to a garage near by, where he expired. A doctor was called to attend him, but arrived after the death of Gaffney.

An autoptical examination of the deceased disclosed that his neck had been severely injured and a small part of the spinal cord chipped or broken, causing a hemorrhage, which, declared the doctor who conducted the autopsy, caused his death. The doctor testified that the injury to the spinal cord was undoubtedly caused by violence and that it could have been produced by a blow upon the neck, whereby the neck could be sufficiently thrown out to pinch the spinal cord, and so cause the hemorrhage from which Gaffney died.

[1] 1. The point first made by the defendant is that the information upon which he was tried and convicted does not charge the crime of manslaughter, or, for that matter, any crime. The charging part of the information is as follows:

> "The said Ira Leslie Bones, on or about the 23d day of August, A. D., one thousand nine hundred and sixteen, at and in the county of Sonoma, state of California, did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously kill and murder one Miles Gaffney, a human being, contrary," etc.

It will be observed that there was no attempt to charge the defendant with the crime of murder, as that offense is defined by section 187 of the Penal Code; the element of malice not entering into the charge as laid. The contention of the defendant is, however, that the information fails to charge the crime of manslaughter because it does not directly allege that the killing was done without malice. It is further contended that, assuming that the information sufficiently charged the crime of manslaughter, the information is still insufficient because it does not state whether the crime was voluntary or involuntary manslaughter. It is argued, in support of the last-stated proposition, that the defendant was entitled to be informed by the accusatory pleading of the precise crime for which he was to be tried, and that the information did not furnish him with that information.

Section 192 of the Penal Code defines manslaughter as follows:

> "Manslaughter is the unlawful killing of a human being, without malice. It is of two kinds: 1. Voluntary—upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion. 2. Involuntary—in the commission of an unlawful act, not amounting to felony; or in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death, in an unlawful manner, or without due caution and circumspection."

The information, it will be observed, charges that the killing was willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously done. Thus, it not being charged that the killing was done "with malice aforethought," it necessarily follows and is implied that the crime as charged amounts to manslaughter, and no more. So viewing the information, it may properly be said that it charges the crime defined in section 192 of the Penal Code substantially in the language of said section, and it is therefore sufficient to have apprised the defendant of the particular offense to which he was required to plead and interpose any defense which might be available to him.

[2] We do not agree to the proposition that it was necessary to show by proper averment in the information which one of the two kinds of manslaughter it was intended to accuse the defendant of. As where murder is charged and to the jury is left the determination from the evidence under appropriate instructions of which degree thereof, if any, the defendant is guilty, so in a case where manslaughter is charged it is for the jury to decide upon the evidence, under proper instructions, of which kind, if of any, the defendant is guilty. Of course, it is a cardinal rule of criminal pleading that a public offense must be so charged and described in the indictment or information that the accused may experience no difficulty in ascertaining from the accusatory pleading precisely what he is expected and will be called upon in law to meet. This is manifestly essential to the interposition in a full and proper manner of any defense the accused may have to make to the charge. The rule thus stated was not varied from in the present case. Whether manslaughter be voluntary or involuntary, it is the unlawful act whereby human life is taken that constitutes the offense in either case. While there exists a distinction between the two kinds of manslaughter, resulting, however, only from the difference in the circumstances under which the act of killing is committed, still no difficulty can be encountered by one accused by an information charging manslaughter generally, or without reference to the particular kind which the evidence may show it to be, to make as complete and perfect a defense against either kind of manslaughter as he might if one of the two kinds were specifically charged. A person so charged can certainly be placed at no greater disadvantage or inconvenience in making his defense than may a person charged with the crime of murder by an information which does not specify, as the law does not require to be specified, the degree of that crime of which it is sought to charge and convict him.

[3, 4] 2. The court, in an instruction proposed by the accused, told the jury that the information charged the defendant with the crime of manslaughter, but on its own motion added to said instruction the following:

> "It is not claimed by the prosecution that defendant is guilty of murder in any degree, but it is claimed that he is guilty of involuntary manslaughter. This is the issue for you to determine."

In turning the case over to the jury, after the reading of the instructions had been concluded, the court presented to the jury two forms of verdict, viz.:

> (1) "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of involuntary manslaughter."
> (2) "We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty."

Before the jury retired, however, the court withdrew the form first above given and substituted therefor the following form:

> "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty as charged in the information."

And in this form the jury returned their verdict of conviction.

It is contended that the prosecution of the defendant was conducted solely upon the theory that, if the defendant was guilty of any offense at all, it was that of involuntary manslaughter, that the giving to the jury of the form of verdict in which they returned their conclusion to the court amounted to an instruction that the defendant might properly be convicted of voluntary manslaughter, and that the direction so given was inconsistent with the instruction first above referred to, and therefore tended to confuse the jury as to their duty under the evidence.

We think the evidence was such as to have justified the court in submitting to the jury a form of verdict for both voluntary and involuntary manslaughter; but it cannot be said that the defendant was prejudiced by the failure of the court to do so. The punishment for manslaughter of either kind is the same, viz. by imprisonment in the state prison not exceeding 10 years (Pen. Code, § 193), and we cannot say that the punishment imposed upon the defendant would have been any less than or different from that meted out by the court had the jury found and returned a verdict specifically finding the defendant guilty of involuntary manslaughter. In the matter of punishment the court appears to have been guided by considerations of clemency, when it is considered that in the exercise of its discretion in that respect it might have imposed a much heavier penalty. Indeed, the punishment imposed—3½ years in the penitentiary—would seem to be such as might reasonably have been imposed had the accused been specifically adjudged guilty of involuntary manslaughter.

[5] 3. The court, after explaining to the jury in apt language that, to consummate a crime, there must be a concurrence or joint operation of act and intent, proceeded:

> "The intent must be proved. But it is never required of the prosecution to prove an unlawful intent by positive and direct evidence. In many cases such proof could not be made. Intent may be proved by all the facts and circumstances disclosed by the evidence and testimony taken in connection with the case."

It is said that this instruction in effect declares:

> "That the intent to do an unlawful act is presumed when the commission of the act is shown."

We do not so read the instruction. Of course, the instruction does in effect say that the intent must be inferred from all the circumstances shown in connection with the case, and this is obviously a correct statement of the rule. Indeed, the intent with which any act may be done can be shown in no other way; for intent has its seat in the human mind, and cannot be proved as physical facts or those which are the objects of the senses may be shown. It must be shown by external circumstances—that is, as the court stated, by the circumstances surrounding and characterizing the act.

[6] 4. It is said that the court's instruction on the law of self-defense was not sufficiently full and complete properly to enlighten the jury on that important feature of the case; the accused having testified that the deceased was the aggressor in the affray, first attacked him, and that he deemed it necessary under the circumstances as they appeared to his mind to strike the deceased for his own protection against bodily injury. There is no ground for complaint in this respect. The court submitted to the jury the law of justifiable homicide as it is written in the Code. Furthermore, the court read to the jury the following concrete instruction:

> "It is the claim of the defendant that he was justified in striking Miles Gaffney; that he acted in necessary defense of his person. I charge you that in determining that issue you must apply this rule: What would a reasonable person, situated as the defendant was, seeing what he saw and knowing what he knew, have done under the circumstances that confronted Bones? If a reasonable person would have believed that he was in danger of receiving bodily harm, and that said danger was pressing and imminent, then he would be justified in using such force as would protect him from bodily harm."

The instructions upon self-defense were full and clearly expressed. The difficulty appears to have been that the evidence addressed to that defense did not measure up, in the judgment of the jury, to the law upon that subject as it was stated by the court.

[7] 5. Some criticism is made of the instruction in which the court defined the malice which must characterize the act of taking human life to make it murder. The instruction was out of place in this case, as malice is not an element of the offense charged in the information herein. But the instruction was clearly without prejudice.

[8] 6. It is urged that the court committed prejudicial error in its ruling whereby the prosecution was permitted to question the witness Mathews relative to the defendant's ability as an athlete and the fact that he had several years previous to the trial engaged in boxing matches. It was shown by the testimony that the deceased was a very large man physically, being about six feet in stature and weighing approximately 200 pounds, and that the defendant was a small man, both in stature and avoirdupois, weighing between 110 and 115 pounds. On cross-examination the attorney for the defendant asked the doctor who made the autoptical examination of the deceased and who testified for the people the following question:

> "In your knowledge as a physician, would you say that a man weighing between 110 and 115 pounds could deliver a blow that would cause death in that manner?" referring to the cause of Gaffney's death as explained by the witness.

The doctor answered:

> "That depends upon the training of the man as to his power to strike a blow, and the condition of the man receiving it."

Other questions on the same line were propounded to the doctor by counsel for the defendant; the obvious purpose thereof being to show that the blows delivered upon the jaws of the deceased by Bones could not have had any direct connection with the cause of death.

The object of the testimony relative to Bones' athletic training and activities was evidently to show that, although small physically, he was capable of delivering blows with his fists or hands with great force and violence. This testimony was objected to by the defendant, but the court, in overruling the objection, explicitly stated that no prejudice against the accused because he might have engaged in boxing should be assumed by the jury, "but that the sole purpose is to show whether he is a man of physical power," and solely upon that theory and in rebuttal of any inference unfavorable to the people's case which the jury might draw from the questioning of the doctor by defendant's attorney, as above indicated, the testimony was allowed.

[9] We think the testimony was proper. The issue as to the ability of the defendant to inflict a violent blow upon the person of another was injected or introduced into the trial by counsel for the defendant himself, and it thereupon became important for the prosecution to show, if it could, that by the mere size or physical appearance of the defendant the jury were not to be entirely governed in determining whether the blows inflicted by him upon the deceased were or could have been of sufficient force to produce the injury from the effect of which he is supposed to have died. This is particularly true in view of the fact that the defendant sought to establish the proposition through the cross-examination of the people's main medical witness that the cause of death was chronic heart affliction. But in no event could the testimony complained of have worked very serious damage to the defendant, since the witness Mathews declared that, when he saw the boxing match between the defendant and another party several years before, he formed the opinion that the accused was a very unskillful boxer.

[10, 11] 7. One of the grounds upon which the motion for a new trial was based and pressed was that of newly discovered evidence. In support of the motion on this ground a number of affidavits by an equal number of persons were filed. Some of the affiants deposed that Gaffney was intoxicated on the day and at the time he was struck by defendant, and that they witnessed a part of the difficulty leading to the death of Gaffney, and then recited in their affidavits certain facts and circumstances to which they would testify if a new trial were granted, and which would tend or appear to tend to the vindication of the conduct of the accused in striking the deceased. Others deposed that they had known the deceased for many years in the vicinity of Bodega Bay, and that they could and would testify that, when under the influence of intoxicating liquor, he was of a quarrelsome and belligerent disposition. Again, others of the affiants declared, in addition to stating that Gaffney was intoxicated on that day and was the aggressor in the trouble with the defendant, that the chief witness for the people, Roberts, was himself greatly intoxicated on the occasion of the difficulty; the inference being that his mental condition was such that he could not have formed a very clear or accurate conception of how it occurred or who started it or how it started, notwithstanding that he was present at the commencement, during the progress, and at the termination of the trouble.

A new trial may be granted "when new evidence is discovered material to the defendant, and which he could not, with reasonable diligence, have discovered and produced at the trial." Pen. Code, § 1181, subd. 7.

It is apparent even from the record as it is presented to this court that the defendant could not have exercised the degree of diligence required to procure the testimony which the affidavits state the makers of them would give in the event of a new trial. Some of the affiants were, as seen, in the saloon at the time the difficulty was begun and in progress. These witnesses should certainly have been known to the defendant. As to the testimony respecting the character of the deceased for peace and quiet, the defendant surely ought to have been able, by proper diligence, to have procured its presentation to the jury. He had known the deceased in Bodega Bay and vicinity, no doubt a small community, so far as population is concerned, in which presumably everybody knows every other resident and is more or less familiar with his personal character and disposition. But, however that may be, it is settled:

> That "whether a motion for a new trial should or should not be granted upon the ground of newly discovered evidence is a proposition which is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and that the denial of a new trial on that ground will not be reversed unless it clearly appears that the court abused its discretion by its action in that regard." People v. Lim Foon, 29 Cal. App. 270, 283, 155 Pac. 477; People v. Loui Tung, 90 Cal. 377, 27 Pac. 295; People v. Tallmadge, 114 Cal. 427, 430, 46 Pac. 282.

Quite clearly it cannot be said in this case that the trial court abused its discretion in denying a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence.

[12] Lastly, it is contended that the evidence does not support the verdict. We have by the above recital of the facts shown that there is no tenable ground for this contention. The testimony alone of the witness Roberts, who was in no degree impeached, except in so far as testimony introduced by the defense varied from his, is amply sufficient to support the verdict and to have justified it, if the jury, as appears to be true, believed it.

No legal reason has been shown for sending the case back for a trial de novo, and therefore the judgment and the order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

---

35 Cal. App. 452

PEOPLE v. PEDONE. (Cr. 693.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 3, 1917.)

1. Criminal Law 🔑1170½(5) — Harmless Error—Cross-Examination of Defendant to Show Aliases.

In a prosecution for murder, where the evidence overwhelmingly showed defendant's guilt, cross-examination of defendant by the prosecuting officer, who asked him if he had not, at various times and different places, been known by names other than the one he gave, though ordinarily not proper, was not reversible error.

2. Criminal Law 🔑730(2)—Appeal—Harmless Error — Statement of Prosecuting Attorney.

In a prosecution for murder, where the prosecuting officer told the jury that the people hoped to show that defendant had entered into a conspiracy to murder deceased because he refused to pay Black Hand money, that it would be shown that defendant and his coconspirators shortly before the homicide had caused to be sent to deceased letters in which it was stated that, unless deceased deposited $2,000 at a certain place, a terrible tragedy would occur in his family, and that on the day of the murder deceased had received one of such letters, which was in his possession at the time of his death, the action of the prosecuting officer in making such statements was harmless to defendant, though the letters were not admissible in evidence, the court at once instructing that the statement was not evidence, that the jury as reasonable and intelligent men knew as much, but that if they did not they were so advised.

3. Criminal Law 🔑1037(1) — Appeal — Waiver of Objection to Acts.

Defendant, during the trial not having assigned as misconduct acts of the prosecuting officer objected to on appeal, must be deemed to have waived any objection.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Pat R. Parker, Judge.

Joseph Pedone was convicted of murder in the first degree, and from the judgment and an order denying his motion for new trial, he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

C. V. Riccardi, of Los Angeles, and J. L. Maloy, of San Jose, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

KERRIGAN, J. Defendant was jointly indicted with his brother, Antone Pedone, Sr., and the latter's son, Antone Pedone, Jr., for the crime of murder, it being alleged that on the 30th day of November, 1916, at the city and county of San Francisco, they killed Gaetano Ingrassia. Defendant demanded a separate trial, which being duly had, the jury returned a verdict finding him guilty of murder in the first degree and fixing his punishment at life imprisonment. He now appeals from said judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The defendant testified at the trial in his own behalf, and claimed that the deceased, being a stranger to him, was the aggressor in the encounter which led to his death, and that he, the defendant, took his life only in self-defense. On the other hand, the testimony introduced on behalf of the people showed that the deceased was, without warning, set upon by the three Pedones, who were armed with pistols and a rifle, and was killed with these weapons, two of the wounds being received by the deceased after he was disabled and was lying prostrate upon the ground behind some chicken coops in front of a grocery store where he had taken refuge.

There is no claim—nor could there be—that the evidence does not sustain the verdict. In fact the record overwhelmingly shows that the deceased was brutally murdered, and that the defendant was guilty of the crime.

[1] On direct examination the defendant gave his name as Joseph Pedone. On cross-examination the prosecuting officer, over the objection of defendant's counsel, was allowed to ask him if he had not at various times and different places been known by other names, to each of which questions he answered in the negative. It has been quite recently held by our Supreme Court that such cross-examination ordinarily is not proper. People v. Mohr, 157 Cal. 732, 109 Pac. 476; People v. Fleming, 166 Cal. 381, 136 Pac. 291, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 881; contra, People v. Meyer, 75 Cal. 383, 17 Pac. 431; but the case at bar, we think, is readily distinguishable from the Mohr and the Fleming Cases. In those cases the cross-examination of the defendants was attended by circumstances prejudicial to them. In the Mohr Case the entire cross-examination consisted of an attempt to show that the defendant had been known by a number of different names, and it was conducted in such a manner as to indicate to the jury that the prosecuting officer was in a position to show by written data that the unfavorable intimations contained in the questions were true. The court said:

> "It appears * * * that these questions were asked in such a manner as to indicate that the district attorney had in his hands, at the time he asked the questions, written data to support the same."

In the Fleming Case the defendant answered a similar question in the affirmative, and was compelled to make an explanation of why he had gone under an assumed name, which explanation brought out a circumstance which reflected discreditably upon him. That case, too, on the evidence was very close—unlike the present one—and grave doubt was entertained by the appellate court as to the defendant's guilt. It concluded therefore that it was only reasonable to infer that the explanation drawn from the defendant materially contributed to the verdict. For that and other reasons the judgment was reversed. No such condition here exists, and the act of the district attorney complained of does not constitute reversible error.

[2] In his opening statement the prosecuting officer told the jury that the people hoped to prove that the defendant with his brother and nephew had entered into a conspiracy to murder the deceased, because "he had refused to pay them $2,000 that they had demanded of him as Black Hand money"; that it would be shown that the Pedones shortly before the homicide had caused to be sent to the deceased letters, in which it was stated that, unless the deceased deposited at a certain place $2,000, a terrible tragedy would occur in his family, and that on the very day of the murder the deceased had received one of those letters, which was in his possession at the time of his death. At the time this statement was made defendant's counsel objected to it—without, however, assigning the making of it as misconduct—saying that the prosecuting officer knew that these letters were not admissible in evidence, and that they had been offered in evidence in the trial of one of the other persons charged with this crime held before another judge, and rejected. During the trial the letters were in fact offered in evidence, although not in the presence of the jury, and rejected for the reason that the people failed to show that the defendant either sent or caused them to be sent to the deceased.

We are unable to say that the prosecuting attorney acted in bad faith in making this statement to the jury of what he would show to them; but in any event, and whatever motive may have prompted the observation, we are satisfied that no substantial injury resulted to the defendant therefrom, for the court at once instructed the jury that the statement was not evidence; that they (the jury), as reasonable and intelligent men knew as much, but that if they did not they were so advised; and added:

> "You are instructed at this time that any statement of counsel is not evidence. Counsel is stating to you on behalf of the people the facts that he intends to prove, which by no means are to be considered by you men as having been proved."

Early in the trial of the case, and doubtless in order to establish a motive for the crime, the people introduced evidence tending to show that the deceased was a man of some means, owning a piece of real property and having $4,000 on deposit in a bank; but upon it appearing that the prosecution was unable to prove that the deceased was generally reputed to be a man of wealth, or that the defendant knew anything about his financial condition, the court struck out this testimony, and cautioned the jury to disregard it.

[3] Another act of the prosecuting officer is argued in the defendant's brief as constituting misconduct, but little attention appears to have been paid to the matter at the time it occurred, and it was not assigned as such. In fact none of the acts of the prosecuting officer now complained of as misconduct were so characterized at the time they occurred, and in every instance except the one just referred to the court struck out the objectionable matter, and of its own motion promptly and emphatically instructed the jury to disregard it. It is well settled in this state that, the defendant, not having during the trial assigned as misconduct the acts now objected to, he must be deemed to have waived any objection thereto, and that, even if he had made such assignment, the trial court having cautioned the jury as to its duty in the premises, it will ordinarily be presumed upon appeal that the jury followed the court's admonition, and that no prejudice, therefore, resulted to the defendant in the trial of his case.

In conclusion it may be added that while we think the prosecuting attorney overstepped the bounds of strict legal propriety in some of the instances pointed out by the defendant, yet, as before stated, a review of the record satisfies us, particularly in view of the prompt action of the trial court in reference thereto, that neither the misconduct of the prosecutor nor the cross-examination of the defendant in respect of his being known by another name had any appreciable effect upon the jury in the consideration of their verdict.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

---

35 Cal. App. 457

TITLOW et al. v. FLORENCE TRADING CO.

BELL et al. v. SAME.

(Civ. 1939.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 3, 1917.)

1. EXPLOSIVES 🔑9—NEGLIGENCE IN SELLING GASOLINE FOR KEROSENE — EXPLOSION OF LAMP—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action against a trading company for negligence in filling a can for kerosene with gasoline, evidence held to show that the customer's lamp did not explode up to the time his wife ran to call a neighbor.

2. EXPLOSIVES 🔑9 — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In such action, whether the customer's wife acted as an ordinarily prudent person in leaving the lamp after lighting it while she ran for a neighbor on perceiving the lamp's peculiar behavior was a question for the jury.

3. EXPLOSIVES 🔑9—NEGLIGENCE IN SELLING GASOLINE FOR KEROSENE—PROXIMATE CAUSE —SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In such action, defendant's negligence having been shown, evidence held sufficient to justify the jury in taking the position that the immediate cause for the precipitation of the customer's lamp to the floor was the natural and to be expected consequence of defendant's negligence, so that such negligence was the proximate cause of the damage.

4. TRIAL 🔑260(1) — INSTRUCTIONS — REPETITION.

Instructions covered by other instructions given, so far as they properly stated the law, were properly refused.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Actions by Charles Titlow and another, and by Stella K. Bell and the Concordia Fire Insurance Company of Milwaukee, a corporation, against the Florence Trading Company, a corporation. From judgments for plaintiffs, and orders denying its motions for new trials, defendant appeals. Judgments and orders affirmed.

Fred W. Morrison, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Hindman & Yakey and Raymond E. Hoyt, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WORKS, Judge pro tem. These two actions were consolidated and tried together before a jury. The respondent Charles Titlow was the occupant, and the respondent Stella K. Bell was the owner, of a certain dwelling house which was destroyed by fire, the action having been commenced to recover damages from the Florence Trading Company for the negligence of one of its servants, which negligence is alleged to have been the proximate cause of the loss which respondents Titlow and Mrs. Bell suffered. Judgments were rendered in favor of the respondents and it is from these judgments and from orders denying motions for new trials that the trading company appeals.

[1] The appellant contends that the evidence fails to show that the negligence charged against it, granting that such negligence existed, was the proximate cause of the fire, and that, accordingly, the verdict is without the support of evidence in that particular. The jury was justified in finding the following facts to exist: The trading company was, during the period of interest to us now, in the mercantile business, and sold gasoline and kerosene, which it delivered to its customers, one of whom was Titlow. Two cans were kept on the premises of Titlow, a round red can for the reception of gasoline and a square white can for the reception of kerosene, and the deliveryman of the trading company, knowing the use to which the cans were respectively put, had filled them on at least one or two occasions before the one which now concerns us. However, at that time, the time now in question, he reversed the process, placing kerosene in the round can and gasoline in the square can, filling them both full. Titlow's wife then, not knowing of the deliveryman's mistake, filled a kerosene lamp from the gasoline content of the square can, supposing she was getting the kerosene which it was her custom to draw from that receptacle. Some time after filling the lamp, Mrs. Titlow lighted it, although it was in the afternoon, for the purpose of heating her curling iron. She was alone at the time. She says the lamp "exploded, but I can't tell what happened. It didn't act right, but I don't know what it did. I can't tell whether the flame shot up, or flickered, or what. I can't tell anything about whether it made a noise or not. I don't remember anything that happened. I grabbed the curtain and put it in front of me. I did not get any oil on me. I don't know where the lamp was." Later she testified that the lamp did "flicker, or spurted. I can't explain just what it was. I know it acted very peculiar." As soon as the lamp "exploded," to quote Mrs. Titlow, she ran to the front of the house and called Mrs. Strause, a neighbor who lived near at hand. Mrs. Strause hurried to the Titlow residence, and, according to her, "went into the bedroom and picked up a rug and went into the bedroom and saw the lamp lit there and picked it up and ran out of doors with it. It was ablaze." This was on direct examination. On cross-examination Mrs. Strause said, "I found the lamp on the floor in the bedroom, laying on its side. It was blazing. I ran through the front door and threw the lamp on the ground, and I went back in the house." During these occurrences, and until after the lamp was carried out, Mrs. Titlow acted in a dazed manner. She nearly or quite lost consciousness at about the time Mrs. Strause returned from disposing of the lamp. The evidence also shows, from the testimony of experts and from tests made in the presence of the jury, that a lighted kerosene lamp, similar to the one in question here, filled with gasoline, or with a mixture of gasoline and kerosene, will not explode, within the ordinary meaning of that word, until it has burned from 2 to 12 minutes, and that, in the interim, it will burn with a hissing sound and with a sputtering flame eight or more inches high. From this chain of facts and circumstances it is manifest that the lamp did not explode up to the time Mrs. Titlow ran to call Mrs. Strause, although the former does use that word in describing the phenomenon to which she was witness. It could have done no more than burn with a high, sputtering flame and with a hissing sound.

[2] It is claimed by appellant that Mrs. Titlow should have acted with greater presence of mind, that she should have disposed of the lamp herself, and that, because she did not, appellant's negligence cannot be said to have been the proximate cause of the damage which resulted from the fire. This claim cannot be maintained. Whether Mrs. Titlow acted as an ordinarily prudent person would have acted, under all the circumstances, was a question for the jury and it may have well concluded that she, a woman, and unused to handling such affairs, could not have been expected to conduct herself differently, even if Mrs. Strause did do, when called, what Mrs. Titlow could have done as well without calling her. If the jury stopped to contrast the actions of the two women, it was entirely within its province in viewing the conduct of Mrs. Strause as arising from a rare presence of mind.

[3] In support of its claim that the verdict is not supported by the evidence, the trading company asserts that Mrs. Titlow was guilty of contributory negligence in precipitating the lamp to the floor, in some manner unknown. Of course, the query naturally arises as to how the lamp got on the floor in the position in which Mrs. Strause found it. On this question the jury may have indulged several assumptions. Mrs. Titlow may have held the lamp in her hand while lighting it, and may have incontinently dropped it when it began its misbehavior. If that was not the case, she may have knocked it from some table or stand with the curtain which she mentions in her testimony, as she fled. Other assumptions as to the occurrence may have struck the jury; but whatever the jury assumed as an immediate cause for the precipitation of the lamp to the floor, it was justified in taking the position, the negligence of the defendant having been shown, that such immediate cause was the natural and to be expected consequence of that negligence, and that, therefore, the negligence was the proximate cause of the damage, the cause which set all other causes in motion.

[4] The appellant contends that the trial court erred in refusing two certain instructions which were requested by it. The instructions were properly refused because, so far as they properly stated the law, they were covered by other instructions given.

The judgments and orders are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

35 Cal. App. 467

PEOPLE v. DE LEON. (Cr. 695.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 5, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 31, 1918.)

1. INFANTS 🔑20—ACTS TENDING TO CAUSE DELINQUENCY OF INFANTS—INFORMATION.

An information alleging that defendant was manager of a café where drinks were sold, and that he was present when a girl of 17 years was served several gin fizzes, sets forth an offense under Juvenile Court Law (St. 1915, p. 1246) § 21, providing that any person who shall commit any act or omit the performance of any duty, which act or omission causes or tends to cause or encourage any person under the age of 21 years to come within the provisions of subdivisions 1 to 13 of section 1 of this act, or which act or omission contributes thereto shall be guilty of a misdemeanor; especially in view of Pen. Code, § 397B, providing that every person who sells, gives, or delivers to any minor under the age of 18 years any intoxicating drink, or who, as proprietor or manager of any saloon, or public house where intoxicating liquors are sold, permits any such minor child to visit such saloon or public house, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

2. INFANTS 🔑20—CONTRIBUTING TO DELINQUENCY—CRIMINAL OMISSIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The mere fact that defendant manager was present at a café when a minor entered, was served two gin fizzes, and danced half an hour, was sufficient to support a verdict of guilty of an omission tending to delinquency in violation of Juvenile Court Law, § 21, providing that any person who omits the performance of any duty, which causes or tends to cause or encourage any person under the age of 21 years to become a delinquent, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor; it not being necessary to prove that the minor became delinquent.

3. INFANTS 🔑12—OMISSIONS CAUSING DELINQUENCY—STATUTES—CONSTITUTIONALITY.

Juvenile Court Law, § 21, making any act or omission of duty which causes or tends to cause or encourage any minor to become delinquent a misdemeanor, is not unconstitutional, as being too vague and indefinite for enforcement, but the duty omitted must be a definite legal duty.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

Maurice De Leon was convicted of a violation of the juvenile court law, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Harry J. Stafford, of San Francisco, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., and E. E. Herrscher, Asst. Dist. Atty., of San Francisco, for the People.

RICHARDS, J. The defendant, Maurice De Leon, was convicted by a jury of a misdemeanor, consisting in the alleged violation of the provisions of section 21 of the juvenile court law (St. 1915, p. 1246), approved June 5, 1915, by the doing or omission of acts which tended to and did encourage, cause, and contribute to the delinquency of a minor.

The information charged and the proof showed that the said defendant was at the time of his alleged offense the manager of a café in the city and county of San Francisco known as the Paris-Louvre, where intoxicating liquors were sold and consumed; that among the duties of said defendant was that of keeping and preventing minors under the age of 18 years from visiting said place, and of preventing the sale or delivery of any intoxicating drink to such persons therein. The evidence showed that upon the evening of February 3, 1917, while the said defendant was the manager of said café and was present and engaged in the performance of his duties there a girl 17 years old visited the café with a male companion named Sawyer at about the hour of midnight, remaining about three-quarters of an hour, and that while there she ordered and was served with two gin fizzes by one of the waiters, which she drank upon the premises. The defendant admitted that he was present in the café at the time, but denied that he saw said minor there or knew of her presence; and he further offered evidence to show that there was a sign or notice at the entrance to the place stating that "No minors are allowed," and that there were also special officers employed and stationed at the entrance to the café for the express purpose of keeping minors and objectionable persons out; and that the employés of the place including the waiter had been instructed not to serve a minor with intoxicating liquor, and warned that if they or any of them did so they would be discharged.

The jury found the defendant guilty. His motion for a new trial was denied, and he was thereupon sentenced to serve a term of 60 days in the county jail; and from such verdict, order, and sentence he prosecutes this appeal.

The appellant urges three grounds for a reversal: First, that the information does not charge a public offense; second, that the evidence was and is insufficient to warrant his conviction; and, third, that the section of the juvenile court law under which the defendant was prosecuted and convicted is unconstitutional.

In support of the first of these asserted grounds for a reversal the main and material contention of the appellant aside from his attack upon the juvenile court law as unconstitutional is his claim that the information is fatally defective in its failure to charge that the said minor ever became a delinquent within the scope and terms of the juvenile court law as the result of any acts or omissions of the defendant at the time and place in question or at all. The language of section 21 of the juvenile court law under which the defendant was charged and convicted is as follows:

> "Any person who shall commit any act or omit the performance of any duty, which act or omission causes or tends to cause or encourage any person under the age of 21 years to come within the provisions of subdivisions 1 to 13 inclusive of section 1 of this act, or which act or omission contributes thereto * * * shall be guilty of a misdemeanor."

The subdivisions of section 1 of said law to which the foregoing section refers defined a delinquent minor to be one "who is leading, or from any cause is in danger of leading, an idle, dissolute, lewd or immoral life." Section 397B of the Penal Code reads in part as follows:

> "Every person who sells, gives or delivers to any minor child, male or female, under the age of 18 years, any intoxicating drink in any quantity whatsoever, or who, as proprietor or manager of any saloon, or public house where intoxicating liquors are sold, permits any such minor child under the age of 18 years, to visit said saloon or public house where intoxicating liquors are sold, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor."

[1] We are of the opinion that the information in the instant case when read in the light of the foregoing provisions of the Penal Code and of the juvenile court law sufficiently sets forth a public offense. It expressly charges the defendant with acts and omissions in violation of the legal duty imposed upon him by the express terms of section 397B of the Penal Code; and it then proceeds to expressly charge that this breach of duty on the part of the defendant, which was in itself a misdemeanor, did manifestly tend to and did encourage, cause, and contribute to the said minor girl becoming and remaining such a person as is described in section 1 of the juvenile court law, to wit, a person under the age of 21 years who is leading or is in danger of leading an idle, dissolute, or immoral life.

We do not deem it necessary or proper to give to the foregoing clause of the information or the foregoing provisions of the juvenile court law the narrow and restricted construction for which the appellant herein contends. The evident object and main purpose of the juvenile court law was not so much punitive as it was preventive. Its intent was to put a barrier across the threshold of those entrances to downward ways which are open before the feet of youth. Section 397B of the Penal Code makes it a misdemeanor for any person in the position in which the defendant was to sell, give, or deliver any intoxicating drink to a minor under the age of 18 years, or even to permit such a minor to visit the saloon or public house where such intoxicating liquors are sold—this without regard to whether the minor is evilly affected by the breach of duty which this section of the Penal Code imposes, upon the theory apparently that to visit saloons or to drink intoxicants therein tends directly to draw them toward idle, dissolute, and immoral habits of life.

These sections of the juvenile court law were evidently drawn with this section of the Penal Code in view, and with the intent of preventing, if possible, the breach of duty which the Penal Code section aims to punish. To require the prosecution to allege and prove that the defendant's breach of duty had resulted in the minor's actual entry upon an idle, dissolute, or immoral life would be to practically nullify the beneficial objects of the law. We find no merit, therefore, in the contention of the appellant that the information fails to state a public offense.

With respect to the appellant's second point, that the evidence was insufficient to warrant a conviction, we are satisfied after a careful reading of the record that this contention is also devoid of merit.

[2] The defendant was the manager of the public drinking place in question. His duty under section 397B of the Penal Code as well as under the terms of his employment was not to permit this minor to either visit or drink intoxicating liquor in the café of which he was the manager. He was present there when this minor girl of the age of 17 years came with a male companion about midnight to the café, and when she not only was served with and drank intoxicating liquors, but remained there drinking and dancing for three-quarters of an hour. These admitted facts were amply sufficient to justify the jury in finding the defendant guilty of the specific breach of duty which both the Penal Code and the juvenile court law define and punish.

[3] Finally the appellant contends that section 21 of the juvenile court law under which the defendant was convicted is unconstitutional, for the reason, as his counsel assert, that said section is too vague and indefinite for enforcement, and is generally lacking in the precision which is required in penal statutes. We are not cited to any decision in this or any jurisdiction wherein this contention in respect of the unconstitutionality of juvenile court laws has been sustained, although such laws similar to that in question here have been frequently before courts of last resort during the past several years, in cases where their constitutionality has been assailed upon other grounds, and wherein such laws have been uniformly upheld. Lindsay v. Lindsay, 257 Ill. 328, 100 N. E. 892, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 908, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 1222; Commonwealth v. Fisher, 213 Pa. 48, 62 Atl. 198, 5 Ann. Cas. 92; Pugh v. Bowden, 54 Fla. 302, 45 South. 499, 14 Ann. Cas. 816; Mill v. Brown, 31 Utah, 473, 88 Pac. 609, 120 Am. St. Rep. 935; In re Sharp, 15 Idaho, 120, 96 Pac. 563, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 886; Travis v. State, 31 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 492; State v. Dunn, 53 Or. 304, 99 Pac. 278, 100 Pac. 258. The juvenile court laws of 1909 and of 1911—which did not essentially differ from the present statute—were brought several times before the Supreme Court and appellate courts of this state for consideration as to their constitutionality, and by them upheld. Nicholl v. Koster, 157 Cal. 416, 108 Pac. 302; Matter of Maginnis, 162 Cal. 200, 121 Pac. 723; Moore v. Williams, 19 Cal. App. 600, 127 Pac. 509. In the case of People v. Bergotini, 172 Cal. 717, 158 Pac. 198, the question of the unconstitutionality of the juvenile court law while before the court for decision, and while argued upon all the grounds presented in the instant case, was not decided, the case being reversed upon other grounds; but the Chief Justice in his concurring opinion used some instructive language applicable to the case at bar. Referring to the intent of the Legislature in enacting the particular section of the statute under review in its application to the facts of that case he said:

> "To give this section such a construction as would support the information herein or sustain this conviction on the evidence introduced on the trial would necessarily attribute to the Legislature the intent thereby to make any act or omission that in fact causes or tends to cause, encourage or contribute, however remotely, to the dependency or delinquency of a minor a crime. * * * I am satisfied that the statute before us may not reasonably be construed as including any such case. It is entirely fair and permissible to construe it as referring exclusively to acts or omissions done or made directly with relation to the minor child. No case has been cited, and I am able to find none, involving any other kind of an act or omission. For instance, one who willfully commits lascivious acts in the presence of a child capable of comprehension or toward such child, or has immoral relations with a child, or does with relation to the child any of the very numerous things that may directly cause, tend to cause, or contribute to its dependency, such acts or omissions are clearly within the scope of the statute."

These views are directly applicable to the case and question before us in the light of the suggestions of appellant's counsel as to its possible application to supposititious cases wherein acts innocent in themselves might be held criminal according to the whim or prejudice of some judge or jury. It is not by such extreme or fanciful standards that the validity of the statute is to be determined, but rather by the reasonableness of its application to cases like the instant one wherein the act or omission of the defendant amounts to the breach of a definite legal duty, and is of such a nature and tendency as to affect directly the welfare of the minor. Such is the instant case; and we deem the law in question susceptible of such a reasonable construction as shall confine its application to cases of this character; and that so construed and applied it is not subject to the strictures as to its alleged unconstitutionality which are urged upon this appeal.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

(35 Cal. App. 397)

RAFTIS v. McCLOUD RIVER LUMBER CO. et al. (Civ. 1727.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 24, 1917.)

1. Evidence 🔑373(2) — Contracts — Execution by Agent—Authentication.

In an action for injuries to a sawmill employé, subsequently induced to work in a lath mill by a party who had a contract with the sawmill to manufacture lath, the contract between the sawmill and such party was properly admitted, though executed by the corporation by its "Assistant to the president," without the corporate seal, and without a resolution of the directors authorizing it; the signer testifying that he was the company's general manager, with authority to execute any contract pertaining to the business.

2. Master and Servant 🔑330(3) — Independent Contractor—Contract.

A contract by an individual with a lumber company to manufacture lath from material furnished by the company, which also furnished all belts, saws, oils, etc., under which the contractor furnished all labor and had charge of and was responsible for all machinery, and the employés were carried on the company's pay roll, and the wages paid were charged to the contractor, establishes the relation of employer and independent contractor.

3. Corporations 🔑399(2) — Authority of General Managing Agent.

If a corporation's business is transacted by a general managing agent, who is suffered to exercise general authority in respect to the business, the corporation is bound by his acts within the scope of the powers assumed by him, as if expressly granted; and in respect to the management of its business, a general managing agent and superintendent is the representative of the corporation, and in the transaction of its ordinary affairs may do what the corporation itself could do within the scope of its powers.

4. Principal and Agent 🔑21—Testimony of Agent to Prove Agency.

The rule that the declarations of an agent as against his principal are inadmissible to prove the fact of agency does not apply to his testimony as a witness on the trial in which the fact of agency is in issue.

5. Master and Servant 🔑332(4)—Injuries to Servant—Instructions.

In an action for injuries to the employé of a sawmill, who left the mill to work in the lath mill operated by the sawmill's independent contractor to manufacture lath, the court properly refused to give plaintiff's instruction, intended to embody the position that, by allowing the servant to keep his badge and receive his time check as before the change in employment, and by not informing him of the sawmill's contract with the independent contractor, the sawmill caused the servant to regard the independent contractor as its agent or foreman, the instruction being uncertain and confusing, without support in the evidence.

6. Master and Servant 🔑315 — Duty of Master When Servant Left Employment for That of Independent Contractor.

Where, at the request of a sawmill's independent contractor to manufacture lath, on the promise of more money, the sawmill's employé voluntarily left the sawmill and went to work in the lath mill, no legal duty rested on the sawmill, when the employé changed from one mill to the other, to inform him of the situation that the operator of the lath mill was an independent contractor, and not a foreman; the contract having been made openly.

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; J. F. Lodge, Judge.

Action by Stephen Raftis, by his guardian ad litem, Solon H. Williams, against the McCloud River Lumber Company and O. R. Benning. From a judgment for defendant company, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, and L. F. Coburn, of Yreka, for appellant. Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, of San Francisco, and Taylor & Tebbe, of Yreka, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. This is an action for damages for personal injuries received by plaintiff, who was 18 years of age at the time he was injured. The complaint is in the usual form, alleging among other things the employment of plaintiff by defendant corporation, and the negligent conduct of defendants, which conduct was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury. O. R. Benning defaulted. The McCloud River Lumber Company filed an answer, denying any negligence on its part, and setting up that plaintiff was at the time of his injury in the employ of O. R. Benning, with whom it claims to have stood in the relation of independent contractor. The essential facts as presented to the jury, who found in favor of defendant, may be epitomized as follows:

The defendant corporation is the owner of a mill at McCloud, Siskiyou county, used to convert raw timber into finished lumber for the market. On its premises it had established a sawmill, sash and door factory, box factory, and lath mill, and in connection with these a hospital. It owned all the machinery in each building, and operated it all from a central power plant. However it carried on its business in other departments, as regards the lath mill, it contracted with

O. R. Benning, and had done so for several years, for the manufacture of the lath. By the terms of the contract the corporation was to furnish material to Benning at a certain price, Benning was to employ his own men, manufacture lath, and sell same back to the corporation at a contract price. Benning's men were paid by the corporation each month at its office, and the amount charged to Benning. In May, 1913, plaintiff was employed by the defendant company in its box factory. It appears that each man, upon being employed, was given a badge with a number on the front side and with the name of the defendant company on the back. Plaintiff received such a number. While working in the box factory, plaintiff was approached by Benning and asked to work in the lath mill, being offered a raise in salary. Plaintiff accordingly went into the lath mill. He kept his same number, drew his time at the defendant company's office, and received payment on its checks, just as he had done in the box factory. While working in the lath mill, plaintiff was injured, his left hand being caught in the saws of one of the machines.

The theory upon which plaintiff went to trial was that the defendant company was his employer and Benning its foreman, but that, even if Benning was an independent contractor, the company so conducted its operations as to cause plaintiff to believe he was still working for it under Benning as foreman, and therefore it is liable in either alternative. It is at once apparent that, if it be decided that an independent contractor relationship existed it becomes unnecessary to consider any question based upon the theory that the relation of master and servant existed between plaintiff and the lumber company. In this connection plaintiff urges that the evidence is insufficient to establish the relation of independent contractor; that the court erred in admitting in evidence a contract made by Benning and F. F. Spencer, as manager of the lumber company; and that it erred in refusing to give an instruction intended to embody plaintiff's theory that respondent's remissness in not disillusioning plaintiff of his belief that he was still working for them virtually estopped them from setting up that Benning was not their foreman.

[1-3] We are of the opinion that the contract was properly admitted, and therefore that, not only did the court commit no error, but the contract, even in the absence of other evidence to be found in the record, sufficiently establishes the independent contractor relationship. By said contract Benning bound himself to manufacture all the lath possible from the material furnished by respondent at a certain price, Benning to furnish all labor and have charge of and be responsible for all machinery, though defendant corporation furnished all belts, saws, oils, etc. All Benning's employés were to be carried on defendant's pay roll and the wages paid charged to Benning. On the part of the corporation the contract was signed "The McCloud River Lumber Company, by F. F. Spencer, Assistant to the President." The admissibility of the contract was objected to generally, and upon the ground that it had not been authenticated; there being neither a corporate seal from which authority might be presumed nor a resolution of the board of directors giving authority to Spencer to execute such contract. But the testimony of F. F. Spencer, both direct and on cross-examination, was to the effect that he stood in the position of general manager with full authority "to execute any contract pertaining to the operation of the company's business." And it is now well established in this state that if a corporation's business "is transacted by a general managing agent, who is suffered to exercise general authority in respect to the business, the corporation is bound by his acts within the scope of the powers assumed by him, in the same manner as if expressly granted. In respect to the management of its business, a general managing agent and superintendent is the representative of the corporation, and may do in the transaction of its ordinary affairs what the corporation itself could do within the scope of its powers." McKiernan v. Lenzen, 56 Cal. 61; Greig v. Riordan, 99 Cal. 316, 33 Pac. 913. The contract here clearly falls within the scope of the authority testified to by Spencer, and by such testimony it is fully authenticated.

[4] Counsel for plaintiff labors under some misapprehension as to the true rule of law when he declares that:

> "It is, of course, a well-established principle of law, needing the citation of no authority, that an agent cannot by his own testimony establish his authority to bind his principal."

> "The rule that the declarations of an agent are as against his principal inadmissible to prove the fact of his agency does not apply to his testimony as a witness on the trial in which such fact is in issue; and consequently the testimony of the agent, unless he is disqualified for some other reason, is competent to establish the fact of his agency and the existence of facts from which the agency may be inferred." 2 Corpus Juris, 933.

[5, 6] But, even admitting that the independent contractor relationship is established (so runs appellant's argument), the respondent may still be held, since by allowing plaintiff to keep his badge and receive his time check just as before, and not informing him of the contract with Benning, it caused plaintiff to regard Benning as its agent, and therefore the court's refusal to give plaintiff's instruction intended to embody this position was reversible error. The instruction in its material parts is:

> "If you find from the evidence in this case that * * * plaintiff was employed by the defendant corporation in its box factory, * * * and after working in said box factory * * * he was transferred to the lath mill owned by the said defendant company, where he worked until the time he received the injuries complained of, and that no knowledge or intimation was at any time given him by any person which would cause, or tend to cause, him or any reasonable person in his position to believe or suspect that any change of master occurred in connection with his employment, and that * * * plaintiff in good faith believed that he was working for the defendant corporation," then if you further find that defendant corporation was negligent, and that said negligence proximately caused plaintiff's injury, you must find for the plaintiff.

The instruction was unwarranted on various grounds. It is uncertain and confusing, in that it does not appear therefrom by whom plaintiff was transferred to the lath mill; it of course being necessary that said transfer be made by the defendant company in order that it might be held. And even assuming that the instruction designated the defendant company, it is contrary to all evidence in the case, and, therefore without any support in the record. There is nothing whatever to indicate that the defendant company had anything to do with plaintiff's transfer to the lath mill. It appears, on the contrary, that at the request of Benning and on the promise of more money plaintiff voluntarily, and uninfluenced by any act of the defendant company, went to work in the lath mill. It cannot be claimed that Benning was respondent's agent nor that he was held out as such. The contract between the lumber company and Benning was made openly and does not appear to have been kept a secret. That plaintiff did not know of it is, perhaps, his own misfortune. The company did no act to create the belief in the minds of third parties that Benning was their agent, other than to allow him, under his contract, to supervise the operations in its lath mill. Benning, it is to be noticed, wore no badge such as the employés of the company wore. Surely no legal duty rested upon respondent, when plaintiff changed from one mill to the other, to inform him of the situation. Plaintiff was the master of his own acts, and it must be assumed acted with his eyes open. In this respect, therefore, in so far as the instruction intended to state that such a duty rested on the respondent, and that it must be held responsible for plaintiff's lack of knowledge, it failed to state the law. Smith v. Belshaw, 89 Cal. 427, 26 Pac. 834; Houghton v. Loma Prieta Lumber Co., 152 Cal. 574, 93 Pac. 377.

The case of Donnelly v. San Francisco Bridge Co., 117 Cal. 417, 49 Pac. 559, in no way militates against this conclusion. In that case the evidence shows a clear case of ostensible agency. The prior relations between the parties to the action created a duty upon the defendant therein to notify the plaintiff that their former foreman had become an independent contractor. In that case the plaintiff did nothing after the contract had been made that he had not done before, nor was there any change whatever in the circumstances surrounding him. In the present case it does not appear that Benning had ever been an agent of the respondent, nor had plaintiff ever worked under him as such. As already pointed out, nothing appears to have been done by respondent to cause plaintiff to believe that Benning was their foreman at the time of the accident, nor was his transfer to the lath mill directed by respondent, but was the voluntary act of plaintiff himself. The court committed no error in refusing to give the instruction.

The above determination of the issue of the independent contractor relationship really disposes of the case, and renders unnecessary any discussion of appellant's assignments of error based on the theory that a master and servant relationship existed between plaintiff and defendant corporation. However, it may be said that upon such theory no prejudicial error appears to have been committed, and the jury was justified in rejecting the contention of plaintiff that the accident was due to any negligence of respondent. The matter is presented quite fully and satisfactorily in the brief of respondent, to which no reply has been made by appellant. No doubt, if any plausible reply could be made, it would have been presented by the able counsel for appellant.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

(177 Cal. 227)

In re BERGLAND'S ESTATE. (L. A. 5216.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 15, 1918.)

1. Appeal and Error 🔑345(1) — Exceptions, Bill of 🔑36(3) — Time for Proceedings — Effect of Motion for New Trial—"Pending."

Code Civ. Proc. § 650, provides that a party desiring to have exceptions settled in a bill of exceptions may, at any time within ten days after the entry of judgment or, if proceedings on motion for new trial be pending within ten days after notice of the decision denying such motion, prepare the draft of a bill and serve it on the adverse party. Section 939 provides that an appeal may be taken within the time therein specified, and that if proceedings on motion for a new trial are pending, the time for appeal from the judgment shall not expire until 30 days after entry of the order determining such motion or other termination of the proceedings upon such motion. Held, that within the meaning of these sections a proceeding for a new trial was "pending" where notice of intention to move for a new trial was filed, though no further steps were taken for three months.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Pending.]

2. WILLS 🔑665 — CONDITION AGAINST CONTEST—PROBATE OF LATER WILL.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1298, requiring the custodian of a will on learning that the maker is dead to deliver it to the superior court or the executor, section 1299, authorizing any person interested to petition to have a will proved, and section 1301, providing that an executor failing to petition for the probate of a will may be held to have renounced his right to letters testamentary, the mere proposing for probate of a later and inconsistent will was not a violation of a provision against contests contained in an earlier will.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1033(7)—HARMLESS ERROR—ERRORS FAVORABLE TO APPELLANT.

Parties contesting the validity of one of several wills filed for probate and not opposing or excepting to the dismissal of the petition for the probate of such will on the petitioner's motion, were not prejudiced by such dismissal.

4. WILLS 🔑384—PROBATE—APPEAL—SCOPE OF REVIEW.

Whether a beneficiary has forfeited her right under a will containing a provision against contests properly arises on distribution, and cannot be determined on appeal from an order admitting the will to probate.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Proceeding to probate wills of Andrew Bergland, deceased. From an order probating two wills of the decedent, the contestants appeal. Affirmed.

John H. Bowlby, of San Diego, for appellants. Luce & Luce, of San Diego, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. [1] This is an appeal from an order made November 7, 1916, probating two wills of Andrew Bergland, one will dated June 7, 1910, with two codicils; the other will dated August 29, 1915. Notice of this decision was served on appellants on November 10, 1916. Ten days thereafter appellants served their notice of intention to move for a new trial, but took no further steps thereon until February 10, 1917, three months thereafter, when they served notice to bring said motion on for hearing February 19, 1917, at which time the motion was dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. Respondent moves to dismiss on the ground that the notice of appeal, served and filed March 8, 1917, was too late, for the reason that no motion for new trial was pending within the meaning of section 939, Code of Civil Procedure, within 30 days of said notice of appeal. This position is not well taken. The filing of the notice of intention to move for new trial within time started a new proceeding, which remained pending until disposed of by the court or by operation of law, to wit, on February 10, 1917, and therefore the motion to dismiss should be denied.

On February 20th appellants obtained an order extending to March 1, 1917, the time to file a bill of exceptions to the decision of the court, and on that date the bill of exceptions was served on respondent. Respondent gave notice to dismiss the bill of exceptions for the reason that the same was not served within time. The motion to dismiss the bill of exceptions was denied by the court, and, exception thereto being reserved therein, the bill of exceptions was settled on March 14, 1917. Respondent's contention that the proposed bill of exceptions was not presented within time is based upon the same contention, viz. that proceedings for new trial were not pending, and, for the above reason, is not well taken. Section 650, Code Civ. Proc.

[2-4] The will of June 7, 1910, made respondent Kate J. Misner a residuary legatee and devisee as to one-fourth of decedent's property. The will of August 29, 1915, gave her all the money of decedent in bank; but it is claimed that respondent was not entitled to have said last-mentioned will probated because in the will of June 7, 1910, there is a proviso cutting off with $5 all contesting devisees and legatees, and that respondent was a contestant within the meaning of said proviso for the reason that she had proposed for probate another and later will, dated December 25, 1915, revoking all former wills. All said petitions and contests thereof were heard together.

The mere proposing for probate of a later and inconsistent will was not a violation of a provision against contest contained in an earlier will. It was her duty to file the will (Code Civ. Proc. § 1298) and her right to petition for its probate (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1299, 1301). Appellants contested the validity of said will, and, although present, did not oppose or except to the court's order of dismissal on respondent's motion of her petition for its probate and were not prejudiced by such dismissal. In their argument appellants assume that the allegations of their contest that said will was forged and that the decedent was incompetent on December 25, 1915, are true, but no evidence thereon was offered. The question of whether or not respondent has forfeited her right properly arises on distribution (Estate of Hite, 155 Cal. 436, 101 Pac. 443, 21 L. R. A. [N. S.] 953, 17 Ann. Cas. 993), and cannot be determined on this appeal.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied, and the order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.

177 Cal. 211

In re GURNSEY'S ESTATE. (Sac. 2625.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 15, 1918.)

1. EVIDENCE 🔑461(1)—PAROL EVIDENCE TO VARY WRITING — UNAMBIGUOUS INSTRUMENTS.

A written instrument executed by a husband and wife whereby they agreed that a deposit account opened with a savings bank and all deposits thereafter made to such account by either of them should be owned by them as joint tenants was not uncertain or ambiguous in its meaning, and its terms or legal effect could not be changed by evidence that the wife did not know she was a party to a joint account, and thought that the only effect of the agreement was to enable either party to draw the money from the bank by check.

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE 🔑266 — TITLE TO BANK DEPOSITS—"JOINT INTEREST"—"JOINT TENANCY."

Under Civ. Code, § 683, defining a "joint interest" as one owned by several persons in equal shares by a title created by a single will or transfer when expressly declared therein to be a joint tenancy, and Bank Act (St. 1909, p. 90) § 16, providing that, when a deposit with a bank shall be made in the names of the depositor and another person or persons and in form to be paid to either or the survivors such deposit, and any additions thereto shall become the property of such persons as joint tenants, such agreement created a "joint tenancy," and the title to community money deposited in such account passed out of the community at the time of the deposit, and became the joint property of the husband and wife, whether the wife understood its exact nature when she signed the agreement and accepted its benefits or not.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phases, First and Second Series, Joint Interest; Joint Tenancy.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑909(1) — PRESUMPTIONS TO SUPPORT JUDGMENT — MATTERS NOT SHOWN BY RECORD.

In a proceeding to collect an inheritance tax, where it appeared from the record that a joint account was opened in a savings bank in 1911 by the deposit of $3,000, and that other deposits were made thereafter, but it did not appear whether the subsequent deposits were made before or after the taking effect of Inheritance Tax Act 1913 (St. 1913, p. 1066), it will be presumed on appeal, if necessary to sustain the court's decision, that they were made prior to the taking effect of such act, as all facts necessary to sustain the decision must be presumed in its favor unless the contrary appears in the record.

4. TAXATION 🔑861 — INHERITANCE TAX — LAW GOVERNING.

The question of liability to inheritance taxes must be determined by the law in force at the time the title vests in virtue of the transfer.

5. TAXATION 🔑879(1) — INHERITANCE TAXES —TRANSFERS IN CONTEMPLATION OF DEATH.

Under Inheritance Tax Act 1905 (St. 1905, p. 341), imposing inheritance taxes upon all property transferred by deed, grant, sale, or gift, made in contemplation of the death of the grantor, vendor, or bargainor, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after such death, where a husband and wife deposited community funds in a bank under an agreement that the deposit should be owned by them as joint tenants, the right of survivorship accruing to the wife on the death of the husband was not taxable in the absence of anything other than the creation of the joint deposit showing any postponement or restriction of the enjoyment or use of the deposit by either party, since a joint tenancy is not a testamentary disposition, and does not of itself raise any inference or presumption that it was created in contemplation of death or intended to take effect at or after death.

6. JOINT TENANCY 🔑6—NATURE AND INCIDENTS OF ESTATE.

A transfer to joint tenants gives each of the tenants immediately the title and right of possession and enjoyment of the whole property, and the survivor succeeds to no new title or right on the death of his cotenant, but is merely relieved thereby from the cotenant's further interference.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

Proceeding for the collection of an inheritance tax on the estate of William H. Gurnsey, deceased. From an order refusing to allow the payment of the tax, the State Controller appeals. Affirmed.

Robert A. Waring, Inheritance Tax Atty., and J. Paul Miller, Asst. Inheritance Tax Atty., both of Sacramento, for appellant. W. A. Fish, of Red Bluff, for respondent John N. Gurnsey. W. P. Johnson, of Red Bluff, for respondent Harriet A. Gurnsey.

SHAW, J. The state controller has appealed from an order of the superior court refusing to allow the payment of inheritance tax upon the sum of $10,151.97, which he claims was subject to such tax.

On April 11, 1911, the decedent, W. H. Gurnsey, and his wife, Harriet A. Gurnsey, executed an instrument in writing whereby it was agreed between them that the deposit account that day opened with the People's Savings Bank in their joint names, and all deposits thereafter made to said account by either of them, should be held and owned by said husband and wife as joint tenants, in joint tenancy. The instrument contained other terms descriptive of the nature and legal effect of the joint tenancy, but they did not change the legal character of the joint estate thereby created, as defined at common law and as declared by section 683 of the Civil Code and section 16 of the Bank Act of 1909 (Stats. 1909, p. 87), then in force.

This agreement was left with the People's Savings Bank, and at the same time and in pursuance thereof W. H. Gurnsey, out of the community property, deposited in said bank to said account the sum of $3,000. Thereafter, from time to time, other money was deposited by said W. H. Gurnsey to said account, and at the date of his death, which occurred on February 9, 1915, the amount of said account was the sum of $10,151.97.

In pursuance of his claim that this money was subject to inheritance tax, the appellant introduced the oral testimony of the widow, Harriet A. Gurnsey, detailing the conversation at the time said agreement was executed. She stated, in substance, that the agreement was executed in the bank, and was delivered to the cashier at the time of the deposit; that her husband stated that he wanted to deposit the money so that either he or she could draw it out at any time; that she did not read the agreement, and did not understand the effect of it, except that she knew that either one of them could draw the money from the bank by check, and that she did not really know that she was a party to a joint account prior to her husband's death. It is clear, however, that she intended to take by the agreement whatever benefits it conferred upon her. Neither she nor her husband drew any money from the account during his lifetime.

[1, 2] The agreement above set forth is in no respects uncertain or ambiguous. Its meaning is entirely clear. No testimony by either party was admissible to change its terms or its legal effect, in the absence of fraud or mistake. It is doubtful if the state authorities could set up such fraud or mistake in order to establish the right to inheritance tax in such a case, but whether this be true or not, no such claim is made in this case. The effect of the agreement was to create a joint estate in the property to which it relates, and the evidence introduced could not, under these circumstances, be allowed in any way to change the terms or legal effect of the agreement. The title to the money deposited passed out of the community at the time of the deposit, and it then became the joint property of the husband and wife, invested with all the attributes of such property, whether the wife understood its exact nature when she signed the agreement and accepted its benefits or not.

The only question for determination, therefore, is whether, under this agreement, the property so deposited is subject to the payment of the inheritance tax.

[3, 4] The inheritance tax law in force at the time the joint account was created and the first $3,000 was deposited thereto in April, 1911, was the act of 1905 (Stats. 1905, p. 341). The transfer to the joint account was complete, and the title to the fund vested in the joint tenants as soon as the deposit was made. The title to each additional sum deposited thereafter would vest when such sum was deposited. The dates of such additional deposits do not appear. The record shows merely that they were made "thereafter"; that is, after the first deposit of $3,000 in April, 1911. It therefore follows that, if there are any provisions of the Inheritance Tax Law of 1913 which differ from those of the Act of 1905 with respect to the liability of this money to such tax, the act of 1913 must be disregarded, and the question decided wholly upon the provisions of the act of 1905. The decision of the court below was that the fund on deposit at the death of Gurnsey in 1915 was not taxable. All the facts necessary to sustain this decision must be presumed in favor thereof unless the contrary appears in the record. Hence, if necessary to sustain the decision, we must presume that all of the deposits were made prior to the taking effect of the act of 1913. The rule on the subject is that the question of liability to inheritance taxes must be determined by the law in force at the time the title vests in virtue of the transfer. Hunt v. Wicht, 162 Pac. 639, L. R. A. 1917C, 961.

[5] The act of 1905 imposes inheritance taxes upon all property "which shall be transferred by deed, grant, sale, or gift, made in contemplation of the death of the grantor, vendor or bargainor, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after such death."

The decision of the court below has the effect of a finding that the said joint deposit was not created or made by either party thereto in contemplation of death, or with the intent that the donee should not have the possession or use thereof until after the donor's death. This finding is not contrary to the evidence. The creation of a joint tenancy is not a testamentary disposition. Of itself it raises no inference or presumption that it was done in contemplation of death. The evidence shows that the only purpose mentioned was to place the money so that each could draw it out at pleasure without the consent of the other, and that nothing was said between them concerning the death of either, or concerning the postponement of enjoyment by either, or restriction of the use of either. The court was justified in its conclusion that there was no expression by either party of the idea that the deposit was made to effect a transmission of the property at the death of William H. Gurnsey, or that he was to have the exclusive use thereof during his lifetime. The instrument itself, therefore, controls, and the case depends upon the nature of a joint estate. The argument of the controller is that the creation of a joint deposit by a husband and wife out of money which was previously community property is in legal effect a transfer of property to vest in the other upon the death of either; that the intent of the husband in the creation of this deposit is conclusively presumed to have been to transfer the property to his wife, to take effect in possession and enjoyment by her, at his death.

This question was under consideration by this court in McDougald v. Boyd, 172 Cal. 753, 159 Pac. 168, where a joint account was created by a husband and wife in a manner substantially the same as here. The court said:

> "Mrs. Boyd did not take any interest in the deposits as heir of or successor to her deceased husband. She took by virtue of her estate originating at the time of creation of the joint tenancies. The imposition of the tax cannot, therefore, be sustained upon the theory that the deposits formed a part of the estate of Colin M. Boyd, passing upon his death to his wife. * * * Boyd died on March 13, 1912. The inheritance tax statute then in force was the act approved April 7, 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 713), and this act did not undertake to impose a tax on the right accruing to a surviving joint tenant upon the death of his cotenant."

The act of 1911, so far as that subject is concerned, is similar to the act of 1905, upon which the present case depends. The joint tenancy referred to in the Civil Code (section 683), and here involved, is the estate known as such at common law. In Kennedy v. McMurray, 169 Cal. 287, 146 Pac. 647, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 515, we held that a joint deposit account made in the same manner as the account here involved created a joint tenancy, and that such deposit was no part of the estate of the party who first died. In Estate of Harris, 169 Cal. 725, 147 Pac. 967, the court decided that a joint tenancy in personal property could be created by parol, and that "upon the death of one of two joint tenants the survivor thereupon becomes the sole owner of the entirety, not by descent, but by survivorship and in virtue of the original grant creating the tenancy."

[6] In Hannon v. S. P. Co., 12 Cal. App. 355, 107 Pac. 335, the subject was treated at greater length. It was there shown that at common law the title to the joint property did not pass to and "vest in the survivor" upon the death of his cotenant, but that "each tenant was seised of the whole estate from the first, and no change occurred in his title on the death of his cotenant"; that "it simply 'remained' to him," and came to him "wholly from the original grant," so that after the death of one, the other, in pleading his title, could allege a conveyance by the original grantor to himself, without mention of the cotenant, citing Coke on Littleton, § 286, and 1 Washburn on Real Property, 646, and concluding with the following:

> "It is therefore a mistake to say of joint tenants that the title vests in the survivor upon the death of the cotenant, or that it descends to him from his cotenant; for it had already vested in him by, and at the time of, the original grant."

This is the legal effect of a joint tenancy at common law and under our Code, and it would, of course, prevail without regard to the actual intent of the donor who created it. The inheritance tax law, prior to 1915, imposed such tax upon transfers by gift, "intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment," by the donee, only at or after the death of the donor. A transfer to joint tenants, without other conditions, does not come within that description, for, as above shown, it gives to the donee immediately the title and the right of possession and enjoyment of the whole, and he succeeds to no new title or right upon the death of his cotenant, but is merely relieved thereby from the further interference of the cotenant. The Legislature of 1915 was evidently of the same opinion. The act of 1915 declares that deposits to joint account of the donor and donee in joint tenancy "shall be deemed to be a transfer intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after the death" of the donor. Stats. 1915, p. 436. The statement in McDougald v. Boyd, supra, that the act of 1911 did not undertake to impose such tax upon the "right accruing to a surviving joint tenant upon the death of his cotenant" is, in our opinion, correct. Some restriction upon the possession and enjoyment of the donee, other than that arising from the law of joint tenancy, was necessary, under the previous acts, to bring the transfer within its definition.

The appellant refers to many cases where gifts and other transfers were made by the decedent in his lifetime, but the control of the property was retained by him, and where from the circumstances the court deduced the conclusion that the transfer was made in contemplation of death, or to take effect in possession and enjoyment after death. These cases have no application here. The finding of the court below, upon sufficient evidence to sustain it, that this transfer was not made in contemplation of death, or to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after death, excludes the basis upon which these decisions were founded. The mere creation of a joint account and the addition to it of deposits made by way of gift from the community property to the joint estate, as we have shown, do not constitute conclusive evidence that the gifts were made in contemplation of death, or were intended to take effect at or after death. There is no force in the argument that the husband had entire control of the property from the time of the deposits until his death. It could be as truly said that the wife had such control. The agreement determined the persons who had the right of control of the property, and by its terms the wife had as full control as the husband. Upon the death of either the property remained, and all of it remained, the property of the survivor, as it was, in contemplation of law, from the time of its creation.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; MELVIN, J.; SLOSS, J.; WILBUR, J.

---

177 Cal. 247

BRADFORD v. FIDELITY SAVINGS & LOAN SOCIETY et al. (L. A. 4071.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 17, 1918.)

1. TENDER ⚷28—SUFFICIENCY—DETERMINATION.

While under Code Civ. Proc. § 2076, failure of vendor to object to amount of tender was a waiver of the objection that it was less than the option required, the insufficiency as to amount could be considered by the court in determining sufficiency of the tender.

2. TENDER ⚷16(4)—SUFFICIENCY—ESTOPPEL.

Where vendor objected to tender as being merely "conversation" money, estoppel would go only to sufficiency of tender, and would not affect the question of the amount to be actually paid.

3. TENDER 🔑13(2)—SUFFICIENCY.

Where the purchaser did not have the money at the time of the tender, but claimed to have borrowed $60,000, and the amount due under the option was $91,000, the court was justified in finding that there was no tender.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by S. P. Bradford against the Fidelity Savings & Loan Society and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

William Schreider, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Tanner, Odell, Odell & Taft and S. W. Odell, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. This is an appeal from the judgment. The defendant corporation gave an option to purchase certain land to Milton K. Young, who was the attorney and trustee for the plaintiff. The exact amount to be paid under the option was not stated therein, but was to be determined with reference to certain moneys thereafter to be paid out by the defendant for the purchase of said land, the completion of a building thereon, and for the clearing of the title thereof. Within the time fixed by the provisions of said option the plaintiff and said Young gave defendant a written acceptance of said option, and in general terms tendered the various amounts specified in the option in the same general terms as specified therein, and fixed the amount so tendered at $61,352.77. The court found that the amount actually due under the terms of said option at that time was over $91,000. Plaintiff did not have the money at the time of the written tender, but claims to have arranged to borrow $60,000 upon the land in question. The defendant declined to either accept or refuse said tender, but did object to considering merely "conversation" money. It is evident that plaintiff could not pay an obligation of $91,000 from said fund of $60,000. He, however, claims that, as no objection was made to the tender on the ground that the amount was insufficient, that question cannot now be raised, and that he was not required to produce the money unless the tender was accepted. The evidence was sufficient to justify the finding that at the time said offer in writing was delivered to the defendant's agent "he demanded that the plaintiff produce and exhibit the money in cash." The court was justified in its further finding that:

"It is not true that the plaintiff is ready or willing or able to pay the defendant the sum of $61,352.77 or to comply with the terms of his said agreement."

[1-3] It is, no doubt, true that a failure to object to the amount of the tender was a waiver of the objection that it was less than the option required (section 2076, Code Civ. Proc.), but in considering the sufficiency of the tender, the court was justified in considering that fact. The estoppel only goes to the question of the sufficiency of the tender, and does not at all affect the question of the amount to be actually paid. Latimer v. Capay Valley Co., 137 Cal. 286, 70 Pac. 82; Colton v. Oakland Bank of Savings, 137 Cal. 376, 383, 70 Pac. 225. Under the circumstances the trial court was justified in finding that no tender was made (Doak v. Bruson, 152 Cal. 17, 21, 91 Pac. 1001; Allen v. Chatfield, 172 Cal. 60, 68, 156 Pac. 47; Civ. Code, § 1495), and that the amount actually due was over $91,000.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.

---

177 Cal. 199

MORRILL v. STONE & WEBSTER CONST. CO. (L. A. 4104.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 14, 1918. Rehearing Denied Feb. 11, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑278(3)—FAILURE TO FURNISH SAFE PLACE TO WORK — EVIDENCE.

In an action for injuries sustained by plaintiff while constructing a derrick to be used for hoisting materials for building, evidence held sufficient to justify a finding that the master was negligent in failing to provide for plaintiff a safe walk upon which he could pass along a wall as he was directed to do by the foreman.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑204(1)—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—STATUTE.

As the Roseberry Act (St. 1911, p. 796), declaring that assumption of risk is no defense where the danger is caused by the negligence of the master, was in force at the time of the injury, it could not be claimed that plaintiff servant in walking over ship-laps, knowing that they had been laid temporarily for a different purpose, assumed the risk.

3. NEGLIGENCE 🔑135 — SLIGHT CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

In an action for injuries sustained by plaintiff while engaged in constructing a derrick to be used for hoisting materials for a reinforced concrete building, the finding that plaintiff's negligence was slight in comparison to defendant's negligence held sustained by the evidence.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by J. H. Morrill against the Stone & Webster Construction Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Haas & Dunnigan, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Porter, Morgan & Parrot, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Defendant appeals from the judgment. The action was to recover damages for personal injuries suffered by the plaintiff, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant. The answer averred that the plaintiff's own negligence contributed to the injury complained of. The court found that the injury was caused by the negligence of the defendant, and also that the negligence of the plaintiff contributed thereto, but that the negligence of the plaintiff was slight in comparison with that of the defendant, and of a nature which served only to reduce the damages to which the plaintiff was entitled. In this the court followed the provisions of the act of 1911, known as the Roseberry Act, which was in force at the time of the injury to the plaintiff. Stats. 1911, p. 796. The defendant concedes that the finding that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence which contributed to his injury is sustained by the evidence, but it earnestly contends that there was no substantial evidence to prove that the defendant's negligence caused the injury, either directly or indirectly.

The defendant was the general contractor for the erection of a reinforced concrete building. At the time of the injury the plaintiff was in the employ of the defendant, assisting in the construction of said building. The walls of the building were at that time in process of construction to a greater height. They were of concrete, and were made by pouring the concrete into a board form, so constructed as to hold the concrete, which was to constitute the wall, in place while it was setting or hardening. This form was made by setting upright pieces of wood proper distances apart, and nailing boards on the inside thereof so as to form a box, into which the concrete was poured. At the time of the injury the top of the form was about 12 feet above the level of the concrete which had then been poured into it. The boards of this form were from three to four inches wide and three-fourths of an inch thick, and were of an inferior quality of lumber, known in the trade as "ship-lap." The carpenters were engaged in nailing this ship-lap to the uprights, and the boards required for their use were temporarily laid along the top of the frame of the form on some wires stretched across the same to hold the uprights in their proper place. The plaintiff was what is called a rigger. His part of the work was to set up derricks and other apparatus required for the purpose of raising materials to the points where the workmen were engaged in construction. He and a fellow workman were ordered to take a guy rope and fasten it at a point designated by the foreman. In order to do this it was necessary for him to go to the top of the form on which the workmen were engaged in nailing the ship-lap, and walk over a part of it upon the ship-lap so laid on the top thereof ready for the carpenters below, and to carry with him a coil of rope weighing about 70 pounds. The fellow workman preceded him, and walked along the top of the form and upon these boards in safety. When the plaintiff stepped upon one of the boards it broke and the resulting fall threw him over against a projecting timber, whereby he received the injury complained of. The board on which he stepped was not strong enough to bear his weight and that of the rope he was carrying. The plaintiff did not look at the board, but walked right along after his fellow workman, supposing that the boards were of sufficient strength to hold his weight. The plaintiff was not instructed to examine the boards to see if they were of sufficient strength to bear his weight, nor was he warned concerning them. The allegation of the complaint is that plaintiff, while walking across said wall, was compelled to walk on said boards, and that they "were inadequate and insufficiently strong to bear his weight," and that the defendant had negligently failed to provide a safe and proper place to work for the plaintiff while so engaged. The boards in question had been placed along the wall by the men engaged in erecting the form to be used by them as required, and were not intended to be used as a platform or as a place upon which other workmen should walk.

[1, 2] These facts are not controverted, and they show that there was sufficient evidence to justify the finding of the court that the defendant was negligent in the performance of its duty to provide for the plaintiff a safe walk upon which he could pass along the wall as he was directed to do. Prior to the enactment of the act of 1911 aforesaid, it might have been claimed that the plaintiff, in going along the wall, knowing that the ship-lap was placed thereon temporarily for a different purpose, and not as a place upon which to walk, would have assumed the risk of the danger arising from the weakness of such lumber, and, consequently, that he could not recover. But that act declares that the fact that the servant assumed the risk of the danger by which he suffers injury is not a defense to an action for damages where the danger is caused by negligence of the defendant. The fact that the board broke with the plaintiff's weight demonstrates that it was not of sufficient strength for the purpose to which the defendant then devoted it. If two thicknesses of the boards had been laid, as could easily have been done, the two would doubtless have sustained the weight. It being the defendant's duty to exercise ordinary care to provide sufficiently strong supports for the plaintiff while passing along the wall, it cannot be disputed that its failure to do so under these circumstances was negligence. This establishes the truth of the aforesaid allegation of the complaint.

[3] The finding that the plaintiff's negligence was slight in comparison with that of the defendant is also sustained by the evidence. The question of negligence is usually a question of fact for the court or jury during the case. Upon the facts heretofore stated we cannot say as matter of law that the plaintiff's negligence was gross or was not slight in comparison with that of the defendant. These comprise all the points raised upon the appeal that are worthy of consideration. As to excessive damages, see Aldrich v. Palmer, 24 Cal. 516.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; LAWLOR, J.

177 Cal. 217

FIRST NAT. BANK OF REDONDO v. SPALDING. (L. A. 4058.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 15, 1918.)

1. EVIDENCE ⚷461(1) — GUARANTY ⚷27 — WRITTEN INSTRUMENTS—CONSTRUCTION.

A separate instrument guaranteeing payment of notes must be construed with the notes, and the circumstances may be shown to learn the intent of the guarantor; the rule that a surety or guarantor may stand upon the strict terms of his contract meaning merely that his liability is not to be extended by implication beyond the express terms of the instrument in which his guaranty is contained.

2. GUARANTY ⚷9—NOTES—GROUNDS OF DISCHARGE.

A guarantor was fully bound, notwithstanding the failure of his separate written guaranty to specify an increased rate of interest after maturity, attorney fee for collection, and payment of notes in gold.

3. GUARANTY ⚷54—NOTES—ALTERATIONS—DISCHARGE OF GUARANTOR.

Where dates of notes were changed to postpone running of interest until the makers actually received the consideration for the notes, a guarantor under a written guaranty providing that any extension might be granted was not discharged.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by the First National Bank of Redondo, a corporation, against A. G. Spalding. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. Defendant dying pending the appeal, his executrix, Elizabeth Churchill Spalding, is substituted as defendant. Affirmed.

Riley & Heskett, of San Diego, for appellant. Allen & Weyl, of Los Angeles, and Sam Ferry Smith, of San Diego, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. A. G. Spalding appealed from a judgment whereby he was held liable upon a contract of guaranty regarding two of four certain notes therein specified. Pending appeal Mr. Spalding died, and the executrix of his last will, Elizabeth Churchill Spalding, has been substituted as appellant.

It appears from the evidence that C. L. Hyde and Jess Knight were the managing stockholders of a corporation known as Knight & Hyde Mining Company. They applied to the president of the respondent corporation for a loan. He refused to loan money upon the note of the corporation, but agreed to furnish credit up to $10,000 upon the execution and delivery of four notes for $2,500 each, signed respectively by C. L. Hyde, Jess Knight, Mary Hyde, and Lillie J. Knight (the two latter being the wives respectively of the men of like surnames), provided A. G. Spalding would guarantee the payment of these obligations. The consideration for these notes was not to pass to the makers but to the mining company. Mr. Spalding was interested in the success of the mining company, whether as a stockholder or a pledgee of stock as collateral for loans does not clearly appear. The cashier of respondent bank prepared four notes and a contract of guaranty. These were taken to San Diego from Redondo, and the last-named instrument was signed by Mr. Spalding. There is a conflict of testimony regarding the question whether or not he inspected copies of the notes before signing the said contract, but it is conceded by appellant that under our rule we must assume the court's decision upon this matter was an adoption of the testimony to the effect that he did examine the copies. The notes and guaranty all bore date of December 24, 1909. The guaranty was as follows:

> "Redondo, Cal., Dec. 24, 1909.
>
> "For value received, I hereby guarantee to First National Bank of Redondo, California, the payment of certain promissory notes amounting to ten thousand dollars ($10,000.00) in favor of the First National Bank of Redondo, California, signed by the following persons, to wit:
>
> Jess Knight........................$2,500.00
> C. L. Hyde........................ 2,500.00
> Lillie J. Knight.................... 2,500.00
> Mary Hyde........................ 2,500.00
>
> "Due one day after date and bearing interest at the rate of eight (8) per cent. per annum, with all costs of collection, including reasonable attorney's fees, and authorize extensions of time to maker, and same shall not affect my liability.
>
> "Demand, notice of nonpayment, and protest waived. A. G. Spalding."

Each note was a duplicate of the other three, except the signature, and was a promise to pay one day after date the principal sum with interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum from date until maturity and from maturity at the rate of 1 per cent. per month. Each contained the following sentence:

> "Should suit be commenced, or an attorney employed, to enforce the payment of this note, I agree to pay 5 per cent. on amount unpaid as attorney's fees. Principal and interest payable in gold coin of the United States."

The court found that on December 24, 1909, and prior to the acceptance of the notes by plaintiff, Mr. Spalding guaranteed their payment, and that all of the notes except that executed by Mr. Knight were after the date thereof delivered to and accepted by plaintiff. New notes were subsequently executed by Mary E. Hyde and Jess Knight providing for 10 per cent. on the amount unpaid instead of 5 per cent., as in the originals for attorney's fees, but, as the judgment was in favor of defendant regarding the alleged guaranty of the payment of these two notes, we need not be greatly concerned with them on this appeal.

It was found that the notes were deposited with the Knight & Hyde Mining Company after December 24, 1909, to be delivered by it to plaintiff with request that their dates be changed to correspond with the times when the consideration should pass from plaintiff to the Knight & Hyde Mining Company, and that pursuant to said request plaintiff altered the dates, the two notes involved in this appeal being redated as follows: The note signed by Lillie J. Knight January 13, 1910, and that signed by C. L. Hyde February 16, 1910. The court further found that the only authority or right for said alterations, "so far as the defendant is concerned, was and is the provision in said contract of guaranty wherein said defendant authorized the plaintiff to give the makers of said notes extension of time, and that such extension should not affect his liability."

Appellant's first contention is that the notes described in the guaranty are not substantially the same as those actually executed. The guarantor specified notes bearing interest at 8 per cent., but those actually signed, being one day notes, bore interest at 8 per cent. for only a day, and thereafter at a higher rate. The notes specified a certain percentage of any unpaid balance as attorney's fee; the contract of guaranty a "reasonable" fee. The notes provide for payment in gold coin of the United States, while the guaranty does not so specify. Further, appellant interprets the contract as applying to the four notes as one obligation, and not to each individually. Appellant insists that all of these differences are substantial and exonerate the guarantor.

[1] None of these objections is valid. While it is true that contracts of this sort may not be varied by parol, it is always competent nevertheless to consider the circumstances of their execution in learning the intent of the guarantor. The fact that Mr. Spalding had copies of these very notes before him when he signed the contract of guaranty makes this just the sort of an agreement that we would have to interpret if the guaranty were indorsed upon the notes themselves. The contract referred in terms to the notes. It did not purport to set them out in all of their parts; the language clearly being not designed to limit the scope of the guaranty, but to describe the notes. The guaranty should not be construed separately from the notes but the instruments should be read together in the light of surrounding circumstances so that the true intention of the parties may be ascertained. Sections 1642 and 1647, Civ. Code; First National Bank of Redlands v. Bowers, 141 Cal. 253, 74 Pac. 856; Howland v. Aitch, 38 Cal. 133; Burnett v. Piercy, 149 Cal. 178–189, 86 Pac. 603; Otis v. Haseltine, 27 Cal. 81; Hazeltine v. Larco, 7 Cal. 32; Bagley v. Cohen, 121 Cal. 604, 53 Pac. 1117; and Gagan v. Stevens, 4 Utah, 348, 9 Pac. 706. In First National Bank v. Bowers, supra, the rule of interpretation was thus stated by Mr. Justice Lorigan, who wrote the opinion of the court:

> "Contracts of guaranty are not affected by rules different from those employed in construing other contracts, but, like all other contracts, should receive a fair and liberal interpretation, according to the true import of their language, and may be explained by reference to the circumstances under which they are made and the matter to which they relate. Civ. Code, § 1647. 'As guaranties are contracts of extensive use in the commercial world, upon the faith of which large credits and advances are made, care should be taken to hold the party bound to the full extent of what appears to be his engagement. Letters of guaranty are commercial instruments, generally drawn up by merchants, sometimes inartificial and often loose in their structure and form. They should not, therefore, be construed with nice and technical care, but according to the facts and circumstances accompanying the transaction, holding in view as the main object to ascertain and effectuate the intentions of the parties.' 2 Daniel on Negotiable Instruments, p. 791."

While it is true that a surety or guarantor may stand upon the strict terms of his contract, this means merely that his liability is not to be extended by implication beyond the express terms of the instrument in which his guaranty is contained. London & San Francisco Bank v. Parrott, 125 Cal. 472, 58 Pac. 164, 73 Am. St. Rep. 64.

[2] We are of the opinion that the guarantor was fully bound, notwithstanding the failure of the separate writing signed by him to specify the increased rate of interest, the proportion of the amount due which should be a "reasonable" fee, and the kind of money in which the notes should be paid. The remaining argument that the guarantor was released by the bank's failure to accept the first note executed by Mr. Knight has no force. Nothing in the contract indicates that he was to be entirely exonerated if his liability should be relieved to the extent of one-fourth thereof (as the court found it was), by the substitution of a new and unauthorized note containing a new obligation in place of the one originally signed by Mr. Knight.

[3] The only other question requiring decision is whether or not the change in the date of the two notes signed by Mrs. Knight and Mr. Hyde amounted to such material alteration as to excuse the guarantor from performance of his expressed obligation. The authorization given by Mr. Spalding for extensions of time to the maker of each note, such extensions not to affect his liability, was in the broadest and most unequivocal language. If under it new notes had been executed after the originals had been long in the possession of the plaintiff after delivery, he would have been in no position to complain, for it is well settled that the taking of a renewal note does not exempt the principal or the guarantor except upon agreement that such will be the effect of the new writing. London & San Francisco Bank v. Parrott, supra; Brown v. Olmsted, 50 Cal. 162; Savings Bank v. Central Market Co., 122 Cal. 28, 54 Pac. 273; and Comptoir D'Escompte v. Dresbach, 78 Cal. 15, 20 Pac. 28. The change of the dates at the time of legal delivery had exactly the same effect as the making of renewal notes and the guarantor could not be injured by such act. There is no pretense that the alterations were fraudulent or made for any purpose other than postponing the running of interest on each note to the true date of the passing of the consideration. The alteration of an instrument to make it correspond to the intention of the parties does not vitiate it. A change in an instrument honestly made to effectuate the design of the parties by giving expression to it does not destroy the force of the writing. Daniel on Negotiable Instruments, § 1403; Sill v. Reese, 47 Cal. 294-348; Osborn v. Hall, 160 Ind. 153, 66 N. E. 457; and McRaven v. Crisler, 53 Miss. 542. It is contended that, because under the finding of the court the only authority for the change in the dates was that given by the terms of the contract of guaranty, we may not gather any implied consent to the alteration from the other parts of the transaction, from which it appears that the purpose of the guaranty was to secure credit at the bank for the mining company for the benefit of all the parties concerned, including Mr. Spalding. Conceding this point for the sake of argument, we are nevertheless of the opinion that the finding supports the judgment. The expressed consent to extensions of time did not specify when nor the manner in which those extensions were to be made and while the method adopted is not to be highly commended its use was no more injurious to the guarantor than a more orderly procedure would have been.

No other matters discussed in the briefs require analysis or comment.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WILBUR, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.

---

35 Cal. App. 293

CAMM v. JUSTICE'S COURT OF SANTA ROSA TP. et al. (S. F. 8613.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 12, 1918.)

1. CERTIORARI 🔑1—SCOPE OF REVIEW.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1068, providing that a writ of error may be granted by any court, except a police or justice's court, when an inferior tribunal, board, or officer exercising judicial functions has exceeded the jurisdiction of such tribunal, board, or officer, and there is no appeal, nor, in the judgment of the court, any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, the sole office of the writ of certiorari is to test the question of jurisdiction.

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE 🔑194(1) — CERTIORARI—SCOPE OF REVIEW.

When the justice or police court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and has acquired jurisdiction of the person, the mode for correction of errors is appeal under Code Civ. Proc. § 974, providing therefor, and not by certiorari.

3. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE 🔑208(1) — CERTIORARI—SCOPE OF REVIEW.

On certiorari to review the judgment of a justice court, no facts de hors the record may be considered.

4. CLUBS 🔑12 — ACTIONS — PLEADING — SUFFICIENCY.

Complaint alleging that a club was an association doing business and had become indebted to plaintiff for goods sold was sufficient showing to authorize maintenance of action against the club; it being unnecessary to show the specific purposes of the association, or to show whether it was operated for pecuniary profit.

5. ASSOCIATIONS 🔑20(1) — ACTIONS — DISMISSAL.

Where plaintiff sued an association and its individual members, and dismissed as to the individuals, the court did not lose jurisdiction, since it was plaintiff's right to proceed either against the association or its members.

6. ASSOCIATIONS 🔑20(4)—PROCESS—SERVICE.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 388, as to associations, service of summons on one of the associates is a service on the association.

7. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE 🔑197(2) — CERTIORARI—JURISDICTION.

As affecting right to certiorari, the justice court acted within its jurisdiction in an action against an association in rendering judgment by default against the club, while demurrers to the complaint interposed by individual members were still pending and undisposed of, and thereafter when the time had expired within which the club might have appealed in dismissing as to the individuals.

8. CERTIORARI 🔑29—SCOPE.

An erroneous judgment rendered by a court having jurisdiction to render it cannot, merely because it is erroneous, operate as the basis for a writ of review.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thos. C. Denny, Judge.

Petition by John L. Camm for review of proceedings of the Justice Court of Santa Rosa Township, County of Sonoma, in an action by H. S. Smith against the Sonoma County Good Roads Club and the petitioner. Judgment of dismissal, and petitioner appeals. Affirmed. Application for hearing in Supreme Court denied.

Following is the opinion of Hart, J., in the District Court of Appeal, concurred in by Chipman, P. J., and Burnett, J.:

Plaintiff filed, in the superior court of Sonoma county, a third amended petition asking for a review of the proceedings of the defendant, the justice's court, in an action in said justice's court, commenced on the 7th day of April, 1915, in which H. S. Smith, one of the defendants herein, was plaintiff and the Sonoma County Good Roads Club and some 30 individuals, including this plaintiff were defendants. A demurrer to said petition was sustained, without leave to amend, and judgment was entered dismissing the action. From this judgment plaintiff appeals.

It appears from the petition that, on April 13, 1915, a summons was issued in said action of Smith v. Sonoma County Good Roads Club et al., and was served on each of said individual defendants by delivering to each of them a copy of said summons attached to a copy of the complaint; that, on the 14th day of April, 1915, each of said individual defendants filed a demurrer to said complaint; that, while said demurrers were pending and undisposed of, a judgment by default was entered in said justice's court against the Sonoma County Good Roads Club, an association, in the sum of $264.25; that on "the 26th day of July, 1915, and after the time in which an appeal might have been taken from said judgment by default, and while the said demurrers of each of said individual defendants was pending and undisposed of," said cause of action against the individual defendants was dismissed; that on the 13th day of August, 1915, an execution was issued out of said justice's court directing the sheriff to levy upon the property of said Sonoma County Good Roads Club; that said execution was returned unsatisfied, and on August 14, an execution was issued against the individual property of this plaintiff.

It is then alleged in the petition that on the 16th of August, 1915, upon being advised of the issuance of said execution against his individual property, plaintiff instituted a suit in equity in the superior court, praying that said H. S. Smith and the sheriff be enjoined from levying said execution upon his individual property; that said superior court denied the prayer of plaintiff in said equity suit; that it was because plaintiff believed that his proper remedy was by suit in equity for an injunction that he did not immediately, on the 16th day of August, 1915, institute this action; "that at no time between the 21st of April, 1915, when said judgment by default was entered, and the 26th day of July, 1915, when said individual defendants were dismissed, did plaintiff believe, or have any reason to believe, or know that said defendant H. S. Smith claimed, or pretended to claim, that said default judgment was binding upon plaintiff and his property"; and that he believed he was absolved in toto from any judgment obtained in said action.

The petition then alleges: "That said plaintiff was during the times mentioned in said complaint, and is now, a member of said Sonoma County Good Roads Club, an association; that said association was not at any of the times mentioned in said complaint, or at any other time, and is not now an association composed of two or more persons associated in any business under a common name; that on the contrary said Sonoma County Good Roads Club was and is a nontrading, unincorporated association composed of voluntary members of the public generally, and was at all times mentioned in said complaint engaged in instilling, promoting, furthering, and advancing the interests of the public of the state of California in repairing, maintaining, and improving the streets, roads, highways, and byways of and in the county of Sonoma." It is also alleged that plaintiff moved, in said justice's court, to set aside and recall said execution, which said motion was denied.

Attached to the petition is a copy of the complaint of H. S. Smith, filed in the justice's court, against said club and this plaintiff and others as defendants. The allegations of said complaint are that, within four years last past, the Sonoma County Good Roads Club became indebted to plaintiff, upon an open book account, in the sum of $264.25, for goods, wares, and merchandise sold and delivered; "that the defendant the Sonoma County Good Roads Club is an association doing business at the city of Santa Rosa; * * * that the defendants above named other than the said Sonoma County Good Roads Club are each and all officers of said club or members of said club, and were members of said club at the time that said goods, wares, and merchandise were sold and delivered to said club, and said debt incurred."

[1] It is elementary that the sole office of the writ of certiorari is to test and determine a question of jurisdiction, and our Code so declares. Code Civ. Proc. § 1068. That section provides: "A writ of review may be granted by any court, except a police or justice's court, when an inferior tribunal, board, or officer, exercising judicial functions, has exceeded the jurisdiction of such tribunal, board or officer, and there is no appeal, nor, in the judgment of the court, any plain, speedy and adequate remedy."

[2] From a judgment rendered in a civil action in a justice's or a police court an appeal may be taken to the superior court (Code Civ. Proc. § 974), and thus a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy is afforded for the correction of errors occurring at the trial of such actions in said courts or for erroneous judgments rendered in actions triable and tried therein. When, therefore, such courts have under the law jurisdiction of the subject-matter of an action instituted therein and have regularly acquired jurisdiction of the person of the party proceeded against in such action, the mode for the correction of any errors which may have been made in the course of the trial of the action or for the correction of erroneous judgments rendered by such courts is by appeal and not through the instrumentality of a proceeding on certiorari or by means of any other jurisdictional writ.

If, then, the respondent, justice's court, has under the law jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action complained of here and legally acquired jurisdiction of the alleged association, "Sonoma County Good Roads Club," it will follow that the writ petitioned for herein will not lie to correct any errors characterizing the said trial of the action in the justice's court or the judgment rendered in said action by the justice.

The amount sued for in the said action was the sum of $264.25, and, concededly, therefore, a justice's court has jurisdiction of such an action. Code Civ. Proc. § 112, subd. 1. The single question, then, remains: Did the respondent, court, acquire jurisdiction of the said alleged association? Against the contention that the said court did so obtain jurisdiction, several points are urged:

First, it is proper to state that the theory upon which the plaintiff in the action in the justice's court proceeded against the "Good Roads Club" was that it was an "association" within the meaning or contemplation of section 388 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Said section reads as follows: "When two or more persons, associated in any business, transact such business under a common name, whether it comprises the names of such persons or not, the associates may be sued by such common name, the summons in such cases being served on one or more of the associates; and the judgment in the action shall bind the joint property of all the associates, and the individual property of the party or parties served with process, in the same manner as if all had been named defendants and had been sued upon their joint liability."

[3] The point first presented and discussed in their brief by counsel for the appellant is that the "Sonoma County Good Roads Club" is not an association within the meaning or contemplation of the above section, and, as supporting this proposition, counsel declare, in their opening brief, that said club, "as is disclosed by the record herein, is a nontrading, unincorporated association composed of voluntary members of the public generally, engaged in instilling, promoting, furthering, and advancing the interests of the public in the improvement and maintenance of the streets, roads, highways, and byways of the county of Sonoma, and never was an association composed of two or more persons associated in any business under a common name." But, even if it were true, as the argument of counsel seems to assume, that associates in a "nontrading, unincorporated association" cannot in an action be proceeded against according to the provisions of section 388 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is to be observed that the statement in the brief of appellant that it is such an association is not based upon anything appearing from the record in the action brought against the Good Roads Club, but is taken from the petition for the writ therein prayed for. Nowhere is it made to appear in the record, to the inspection of which this court must be confined in deciding the question submitted by this appeal, that the said club is "a nontrading, unincorporated association," etc. To the contrary, the complaint in the action in the justice's court alleged that it is "an association doing business," etc., from which we may justly infer that it is engaged in trade of some character. It is true that the judgment from which this appeal is prosecuted was rendered and entered against the appellant upon the motion to discharge the alternative writ and upon the demurrer to the petition for the writ, and it is also true that a demurrer necessarily admits all the material facts well pleaded; and perhaps it is upon the theory that a demurrer admits facts so pleaded that counsel for the appellant assume that the statement (above quoted) in the petition for the writ as to the character of the Good Roads Club is an admitted fact in the proceeding for the writ of review. But, if this be their position, it is wholly fallacious and the proposition sought to be deduced therefrom consequently untenable. As above stated, and as is obviously true, the sole question to be determined in a proceeding of the character of the one before us is whether, in a given case, the tribunal, in the application therein of the judicial powers cast upon it by law, has exceeded its lawful jurisdiction, and in determining this question the court must confine itself to the inspection of the record brought up for review. In other words, no facts de hors or extrinsic to the record so brought up may be considered. In re Grove, 61 Cal. 438, 453; Ex parte Sternes, 77 Cal. 156, 162, 19 Pac. 275, 11 Am. St. Rep. 251; De Pedrorena v. Superior Court, 80 Cal. 144, 146, 22 Pac. 71.

[4] But we do not think it was necessary, to authorize the maintenance of the action against the members of the club by their common name, to show by the complaint the specific purpose or purposes for which the members of the club had so associated themselves together, nor is it important whether it was a voluntary association and not organized and conducted for pecuniary profit to its projectors or members. Armstrong v. Superior Court, 173 Cal. 341, 342, 159 Pac. 1176. By this we mean to say that section 388 has reference to an association of two or more persons who thus band together for the purpose of transacting as a single body any kind of business, whether for profit to themselves or for charitable or philanthropic purposes, and that, where persons so associated, to effectuate the specific objects of their association and for the benefit thereof, create liabilities against themselves as such associates, such persons, as such associates, may be proceeded against by their common name in any action to enforce the liabilities so created.

The complaint in the action in the justice's court alleged, as we have seen, that said club is an association doing business at the city of Santa Rosa, etc., and that it had contracted an indebtedness with the plaintiff in the sum of $264.25 "for goods, wares and merchandise sold and delivered to said * * * Club." This constituted a showing sufficient to authorize the maintenance of the action against the club, or, perhaps it is more accurate to say, against the members of the club as associates in business under the common name of said club or association.

[5] Another point made by the appellant is that, "assuming, for the purposes of the argument only, the justice's court did acquire and have jurisdiction over said association and that process had been served upon it, * * * the dismissal of each and all of the individual defendants served with process constituted and was a dismissal of the case in toto, and by reason thereof the judgment complained of became a nullity," the justice's court having by said act of dismissal "lost jurisdiction of said cause and of each and all of the defendants." This point is obviously without merit.

It will not be disputed—indeed, counsel for the appellant expressly so admit in their brief—that the association herein concerned, as much so as a partnership, was and is, as regards its rights and obligations, a distinct legal entity. It was therefore proper for the plaintiff to proceed either against the association alone or against both the association and its members as individuals, and this would be the proper course if the members had bound themselves as individuals as well as associates in the association to the liability sought to be enforced. And where an action as against the members as individuals proved to be, in point of fact, groundless, the dismissal of the action as to them would involve an act no different from that in any other action in which several persons might be joined as defendants and the action dismissed as to one or more of the parties so joined. It is no uncommon practice or occurrence to join in an action at law the members of a partnership as individuals with the partnership itself, and as well might it be said that the dismissal of the action as against the members of the partnership as individuals would operate, per se, as a dismissal of the action against the partnership as such. No one would attempt to support such a proposition. See Redwood City Salt Co. v. Whitney, 153 Cal. 421, 423, 95 Pac. 885; Asbestos, etc., Co. v. Lennig-Rapple Co., 26 Cal. App. 177, 146 Pac. 188; Code Civ. Proc. § 578.

[6] It is next contended that the Good Roads Club was not served with summons. But the petition for the writ itself declares that the appellant was served with summons, and the complaint in the justice's court alleges that the appellant was one of the members of said club—an associate in said association. Under section 388 this constituted a service on the association or club.

[7, 8] There is considerable criticism in the briefs of the action of the justice's court in entering judgment by default against the Good Roads Club while the demurrers to the complaint, interposed by the individual members of the club who were proceeded against as defendants, were still pending and undisposed of, and thereafter, when the time had expired within which an appeal might have been taken from the judgment so entered against the club, ordering a dismissal of the action as against the individual members named as such as defendants. There is nothing in the action so complained of which affects the question of jurisdiction. It was clearly within the jurisdiction of the justice's court to adopt the course complained of. Why the association, whose members it may well be presumed knew of the entering of the judgment against it by default, did not appeal from said judgment when the opportunity was still open to it to do so—whether from willful neglect or inadvertence—we do not, of course, know; but it is about as plain and unquestionable a proposition as could be met with that the justice's court was acting within its jurisdiction when it rendered the judgment by default against the association. If the court for any reason committed error in doing so or the judgment for any reason was erroneous, the remedy provided for the correction of such error or such erroneous judgment is in an appeal to the superior court. An erroneous judgment rendered by a court having jurisdiction to render it cannot, merely because it is erroneous, operate as the basis for a writ of review. Karry v. Superior Court, 162 Cal. 281, 284, 122 Pac. 475, 128 Pac. 760.

By the terms of section 388, execution may be issued against the individual property of the member or members of the association sued who have been served with process for the satisfaction of any judgment rendered against the association. The petition for the writ states that, on the 13th day of April, 1915, a summons was issued in said action and with a copy of the complaint was served upon each of the individual defendants on the 14th day of April, 1915. Thus it is admitted that the appellant, who was one of the "individual defendants," was served with process. His individual property was therefore subject to an execution to satisfy the judgment rendered against the association.

Some other specific questions are discussed in the briefs, but, having considered herein the more important points presented, we deem it unnecessary to notice others herein. We are satisfied after examining all the points and the very able arguments advanced in support thereof, that the justice's court was well within its jurisdiction in dismissing the action against the members of the association as individuals, in rendering judgment by default against the association, and in issuing execution in said action to satisfy the judgment so rendered against the individual property of the appellant.

The judgment appealed from is accordingly affirmed.

W. H. Early, of Petaluma (A. H. Crook, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant. E. J. Dole, of Petaluma, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. In denying the petition for a hearing in this court after decision of the District Court of Appeal of the Third Appellate District, we deem it proper to say that we do not consider what is said in the opinion on the question of the liability of the appellant's individual property to an execution to satisfy the judgment rendered against the association to be at all essential to the affirmance of the judgment appealed from.

Our denial of the petition for a hearing is not to be taken as an approval of what is said by the District Court of Appeal on this question. On the merits of that question we express no opinion.

The application for a hearing in this court is denied.

---

177 Cal. 238

Ex parte PHOEDOVIUS. (Cr. 2108.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 17, 1918.)

1. Statutes 🔑77(3) — General or Special Laws.

The provision of Pen. Code, § 627b, as amended by St. 1917, p. 651, making shipping by parcel post of wild birds or wild animals or fish a misdemeanor, does not violate Const. art. 1, § 11, requiring laws of a general nature to have uniform operation, for the impracticability of enforcing other provisions of the law for inspection, etc., as to game delivered to the postal service for transportation, furnishes a sufficient basis for excluding the parcel post from the means whereby game may be shipped.

2. Constitutional Law 🔑278(6) — Game 🔑4—Due Process.

Nor does such provision improperly interfere with property rights or deprive an owner of game of his right to use the parcel post without due process of law, since private ownership of game is but a qualified right subject to reasonable legislative regulations.

3. Commerce 🔑55—Interference with.

Such provision is not invalid as an interference with interstate commerce, since its effect upon such commerce is remote and indirect, and, the ultimate ownership of game being in the state, the state has power to allow game to become an article of commerce only under restrictions imposed by the state.

4. Post Office 🔑2 — Interference with Mail—Constitutional Law.

Such provision is not invalid as an unlawful interference with the postal service; its effect thereon being indirect and remote.

In Bank. Application for habeas corpus by Frank Phoedovius. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

Nathan Moran, of San Francisco, for petitioner. Carl Westerfeld, of San Francisco, for respondent. W. H. Lamar, of Washington, D. C., amicus curiæ.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. The petitioner was convicted of a violation of the provision of section 627b of the Penal Code, which declares that "any person who ships any of the wild birds or wild animals or fish by parcel post is guilty of a misdemeanor," and adjudged to pay a fine of $25, and in default of such payment to be imprisoned. Held in the custody of the sheriff of San Mateo county by virtue of this judgment, he seeks his discharge on habeas corpus, claiming that this provision of law is invalid.

Said section 627b, as amended July 27, 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 651), contains various provisions as to the conduct of common carriers and individuals in the matter of the shipment and the receiving for shipment of wild birds, wild animals, and fish, and the transportation thereof, violation of any of which provisions is declared to be a misdemeanor. These provisions, which prohibit the receipt by a common carrier from, or the transportation for, any one person of more than the legal limit of game allowed to be taken or killed by one person, or the shipping or offer for shipment by an individual of any such excess, and which also require every common carrier to keep all shipments of game in open view, labeled with the name and residence of the shipper and of the consignee, and the exact contents of the package, were designed, of course, to prevent shipment of wild game illegally taken and to enable the authorities to more easily discover violations of the game laws, all with a view to the proper preservation of the wild game of the state for the people of the state. The section, as so amended, contains the provision involved in this proceeding, one entirely new in this state, but obviously having the same purpose as the other provisions. It is urged on his behalf in this proceeding that the provision of the statute is void as being both an unlawful interference with a federal instrumentality, viz. the postal service of the United States, and an attempt to regulate interstate commerce. Petitioner also claims that it constitutes an unlawful interference with the property right of citizens to use the United States mail, and that it is in violation of section 11 of article 1 of our own Constitution, which requires that all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation.

[1] Of course, no one disputes the proposition that the postal service is a federal instrumentality under the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress, and that a state may in no way regulate or burden the operation thereof. It is this very fact which furnishes the basis for the discrimination against the use of that service by our citizens in the shipment of "wild game" (included in which is fish, People v. Truckee Lumber Co., 116 Cal. 397, 48 Pac. 374, 39 L. R. A. 581, 58 Am. St. Rep. 183), and in favor of other methods of shipment. When game is deposited in the parcel post it is at once subject to the exclusive control of the postal authorities under the statutes of the United States and regulations of the Post Office Department, and absolutely free from state inspection and control. For reasons which are obvious the federal government could not tolerate the slightest interference with its officers and employés in the handling and delivery of the mail. For the purpose of protecting the game of the state for the use of the people of the state, the Legislature has enacted many laws relative to the taking of game, some prohibiting the taking of certain kinds at any time, others prohibiting the taking of certain kinds except during a certain time known as the "open season" for such game, others limiting the number of certain kinds that may be taken by one person during a stated time, and so on. As a method of guarding against illegal taking of game it has been provided that the fish and game commissioners of the state shall see that the game laws are strictly enforced, and "shall inspect all buildings, other than dwellings, and all receptacles, other than the clothing actually worn by a person at the time of inspection, where game or fish may be stored or placed, and all boxes and packages containing fish or game that are held for transportation by any transportation company or common carrier; * * * to inspect regularly * * * all boxes and packages, containing fish or game that are held for transportation by any transportation company or common carrier." Also to "seize and take possession of all game or fish," which has been illegally taken, killed, or had in possession, or has been shipped or offered for shipment contrary to any of the laws of the state. It is necessarily conceded that these provisions as to inspection and seizure by the state officers of game shipped or offered for shipment cannot be enforced as to shipments by mail. Any attempt to so enforce them would indeed be an attempted unlawful invasion of the exclusive federal jurisdiction. If these provisions for inspection and seizure of game found to be illegally taken are valid enactments of state law, the fact that they cannot be enforced as to game delivered to the postal service for transportation furnishes a sufficient basis for excluding the parcel post from the means by which game may be shipped, in so far as any objection of special legislation or want of uniformity in operation under our state Constitution is concerned.

[2] The argument of learned counsel for petitioner in support of the proposition that the provisions as to inspection, etc., are invalid as improperly interfering with property rights, and that the provision here involved which precludes petitioner from using the United States mail for the shipment of game is in effect a deprival of his property right to use the United States mail without due process of law, to our minds fails to give due effect to the well-settled doctrine as to the nature and extent of one's property right in wild game. That doctrine was stated by this court through Mr. Justice Van Fleet in Ex parte Maier, 103 Cal. 476, 483, 37 Pac. 402, 42 Am. St. Rep. 129, in language subsequently approvingly quoted by the Supreme Court of the United States in Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 529, 16 Sup. Ct. 600, 40 L. Ed. 793, as follows:

> "The wild game within a state belongs to the people in their collective, sovereign capacity; it is not the subject of private ownership, except in so far as the people may elect to make it so; and they may, if they see fit, absolutely prohibit the taking of it, or any traffic or commerce in it, if deemed necessary for its protection or preservation, or the public good."

The offense there charged was that of selling deer meat in violation of a state statute which prohibited any such sale in California. The meat sold was cut by the defendant from the carcass of an entire deer theretofore brought by him from the state of Texas, in which state it had been lawfully killed. It was contended that the statute did not and could not prohibit the sale of meat lawfully taken in another state. It was held that the statute both did and lawfully could prohibit such a sale, and that while the law was of course intended only for the protection of the game of this state, the intention was to accomplish that very end by prohibiting the sale wherever game was in fact obtained, and that such a law was reasonably adapted to that end. All state laws reasonably looking to this end have consistently been maintained by the courts, the theory being that the ownership of the sovereign authority being in trust for all the people of the state, it is the duty of the Legislature to enact such laws as will best preserve the subject of the trust and leave the beneficial use in future to the people of the state. In Geer v. State of Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 16 Sup. Ct. 600, 40 L. Ed. 793, the Supreme Court of the United States upheld a statute of Connecticut which forbade the transportation without the state of game lawfully killed or taken within the state, or the having of such game in one's possession with the intent to procure its transportation beyond the state. In Ex parte Kenneke, 136 Cal. 527, 69 Pac. 261, 89 Am. St. Rep. 177, a statute prohibiting the buying or selling of quail was upheld by this court. The court, through Mr. Justice McFarland, said:

> "Wild game belongs to the whole people, and the Legislature may dispose of it as may seem to it best, subject only to constitutional limitations against discriminations. Within those limitations the Legislature, for the purpose of protecting game, may pass such laws as to it seem most wise; and 'the measures best adapted to that end are for the Legislature to determine, and courts cannot review its discretion.'"

It was held that the law did not destroy a right of property, the court approvingly quoting from American Express Co. v. State, 133 Ill. 649, 24 N. E. 758, 9 L. R. A. 138, 23 Am. St. Rep. 641, as follows:

> "The fallacy of the position consists in the supposition that the person who may kill quail has an absolute property in the dead animals. * * * The Legislature had the right to permit persons to kill or take game upon such terms and conditions as its wisdom might dictate, and that the person killing game might have such property interest in it, and such only, as the Legislature might confer. * * * The person killing quail under this statute has but a qualified property in the birds after they are killed. * * * But the law which authorized him to kill the quail has withheld the right to sell or the right to ship for the purpose of sale, and when such person undertakes to ship for sale, he is undertaking to assert a right not conferred by law. The act, therefore, does not destroy a right of property, because no such right exists."

In State v. Rodman, 58 Minn. 393, 59 N. W. 1098, it was said that the Legislature may adopt reasonable regulations not only as to the time and manner in which game may be taken and killed, "but also imposing limitations upon the right of property in such game after it has been reduced to possession." It was further said that such legislation deprives no person of his property, because the person reduces game to possession "subject to such conditions and limitations as the Legislature has seen fit to impose." See, also, Silz v. Hesterberg, 211 U. S. 31, 29 Sup. Ct. 10, 53 L. Ed. 75. Such has been the uniform course of decision. We are, of course, speaking of regulations which may reasonably be held by the Legislature to look to the preservation of the game of the state for the beneficial use of the people of the state. The person taking or killing game takes or kills subject to the limitations of any such reasonable regulation by the state, and his right of property therein is qualified thereby. We can see no good ground for a claim that regulations subjecting such game to inspection by state officers when offered for shipment or when in course of transportation under shipment for the purpose of enabling illegal takings to be detected, or to seizure by such officers when found by them to be illegally taken, are in any way an unreasonable exercise of the power of the Legislature in this behalf. Whatever rights the shipper has in game shipped by him are subject to these regulations, as are necessarily the rights of the transportation company and the consignee. And the same thing is necessarily true of the law here involved prohibiting the shipping of game by parcel post. It is a reasonable complement of the regulations as to inspection, without which the inspection in course of transportation could be had only as to such game as is shipped by some other means than the United States mail. The person having game in his possession which he desires to ship acquires and holds it subject to the condition that he will not ship it by parcel post, and no property right in such game is violated by a law which makes it a crime for him to do so. We are entirely at a loss to see how a person's property right to use the United States mail for all lawful purposes is violated by a law which prohibits his use thereof for the purpose of transmitting property which he has acquired and holds subject to the condition that he shall not so transmit it.

The case of Ex parte Knapp, 127 Cal. 101, 59 Pac. 315 (involving the question of the validity of a county ordinance), relied on by learned counsel for petitioner in this connection, is sufficiently distinguished as to such a case as this by what was said by the court in Ex parte Kenneke, supra, as follows:

> "There is no question in the case at bar as to the reasonableness of an ordinance as in Ex parte Knapp, 127 Cal. 101 [59 Pac. 315], and other cases cited; the provision attacked here is a law of the state passed by the Legislature."

[3] The claim that the state law here involved is an unauthorized regulation of interstate commerce is, we think, fully answered by decisions of the United States Supreme Court, the final arbiter on this question. A similar claim was made in Geer v. State of Connecticut, supra, and held to be without foundation. The court, through its present Chief Justice, after exhaustively discussing the question of property in wild game, said:

> "The right to preserve game flows from the undoubted existence in the state of a police power to that end, which may be none the less efficiently called into play, because by doing so interstate commerce may be remotely and indirectly affected. * * * The exercise by the state of such power therefore comes directly within the principle of Plumley v. Massachusetts, 155 U. S. 461, 473 [15 Sup. Ct. 154, 39 L. Ed. 223]. The power of the state to protect by adequate police regulations its people against the adulteration of articles of food (which was in that case maintained), although in doing so commerce might be remotely affected, necessarily carries with it the existence of a like power to preserve a food supply which belongs to all the people of the state, which can only become the subject of ownership in a qualified way, and which can never be the object of commerce except with the consent of the state and subject to the conditions which it may deem best to impose for the public good." (The italics are ours.)

In another portion of the opinion the court speaks of the "consequent power of the state to follow such property into whatever hands it might pass with the conditions and restrictions deemed necessary for the public interest." In the later case of Silz v. Hesterberg, supra, a similar claim was made, and the court held that the law (one prohibiting the possession of wild game during the close season, whether killed within or without the state) was not directed against commerce or any of its regulations, but only indirectly and remotely affected the operations of commerce, and was of obligatory force upon citizens within the territorial jurisdiction of the state. The court said:

> "That a state may not pass laws directly regulating foreign or interstate commerce has frequently been held in the decisions of this court. But while this is true, it has also been held in repeated instances that laws passed by the states in the exertion of their police power, not in conflict with laws of Congress upon the same subject, and indirectly or remotely affecting interstate commerce, are nevertheless valid laws."

It is sought to draw a distinction between these cases and the statute here involved, in that our laws permit the shipment beyond the borders of the state of game killed within the state, thus making game, it is said, "articles of interstate commerce." We do not consider the distinction material. The difficulty with the argument is that we have not made wild game an article of interstate commerce in the full and unrestricted sense. For so long as it remains within this state, at least, it remains burdened with the conditions imposed for the purpose of protecting the game of the state, to the effect that it may be shipped only in certain ways. As to this the language of Mr. Chief Justice White in Geer v. Connecticut, supra, that such game "can never be the object of commerce except with the consent of the state and subject to the conditions which it may deem best to impose for the public good" is specially pertinent. Our own case of Ex parte Maier, supra, is also in point to the effect that there is in our law no unwarranted interference with interstate commerce.

[4] The principles controlling the determination of the question just discussed are equally applicable to the claim that the state law here involved is an unlawful interference with the postal service of the United States. As said by respondent, there is no attempt here to regulate the postal establishment or in any way or degree to affect its operations. Looking to the proper protection of the game of the state for its people, the Legislature has prohibited any person within the state from shipping it by parcel post. It must be assumed here that such provision is reasonably necessary to such proper protection. The sole purpose of the enactment is the protection of game for the people of the state. The most that can be said in this connection is that the law may indirectly and remotely affect the postal department by depriving it of this patronage and the consequent revenue which would be paid as postage. But this, we think, in view of the decisions we have referred to, cannot be held to make the law invalid as unlawfully interfering with the postal service. In a well-considered opinion, the court of common pleas of Northampton county, Pa., reached a similar conclusion as to a recent statute of that state which prohibited shipments of game by parcel post. See Commonwealth v. Reimel, 44 Pa. Co. C. R. 557.

We see no good ground upon which the statutory provision attacked may be held invalid.

The writ is discharged, and the petitioner remanded to the custody of the sheriff of San Mateo county.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.; WILBUR, J.

---

177 Cal. 206

BERRY et al. v. BANK OF BAKERSFIELD.
(L. A. 4113.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 15, 1918.)

1. TENDER 🔑14(4) — COUPLING WITH DEMAND FOR RETURN OF PROPERTY.

The validity of the tender was not impaired by coupling with it a demand for return of property pledged as security, in view of Civ. Code, §§ 1498, 1504, providing that, where a debtor is entitled to performance of a condition precedent to or concurrent with performance on his part, he may make his offer depend upon due performance of such condition, and that an offer of payment has the same effect as performance.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1011(1)—FINDINGS ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE—REVIEW.

Finding of trial court that defendant had no right to hold certificates pledged except as security for one of two notes, based on the court's interpretation of plaintiff's testimony as a positive denial of the testimony of defendant's president that the parties agreed that the pledge should cover both notes, held a conclusion from conflicting evidence controlling on appeal.

3. PLEDGES 🔑22—EXTENT OF LIEN—SUBSEQUENT OBLIGATIONS.

Civ. Code, § 3054, giving a banker a general lien upon all property in his hands belonging to a customer for a balance due from such customer in the course of business, does not change the rule that, where a security is pledged for a certain note, the bank is not entitled to a lien for the payment of another note.

4. PLEDGES 🔑36—PLEADING—ANTICIPATORY DAMAGES—"SPECIAL DAMAGES."

In replevin under Code Civ. Proc. § 667, the depreciation in value of pledged property unlawfully detained was an element of damage naturally to be contemplated, and therefore covered by plaintiff's averment of general damage; "special damages" being such as do not ordinarily arise from the breach complained of, but depend upon the peculiar circumstances of the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Special Damages.]

5. Pleading ⚷279(2)—Damages—Accrual after Commencement of Action.

No supplemental pleading was required to warrant recovery of damages resulting after the commencement of the action in view of Civ. Code, § 3283, providing that damages may be awarded in a judicial proceeding for detriment resulting after commencement thereof.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Howard A. Peairs, Judge.

Action by H. F. Berry and others against the Bank of Bakersfield. From a judgment against it and from an order denying a motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. Wiley, R. B. Lambert, and Wiley & Lambert, all of Bakersfield, for appellant. E. L. Foster and Chas. A. Barnhart, both of Bakersfield (Everts & Ewing, of Fresno, of counsel), for respondents.

SLOSS, J. The defendant, Bank of Bakersfield, appeals from a judgment against it, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

The complaint alleges that on February 1, 1911, the plaintiff H. F. Berry deposited with the defendant bank, as security for the payment of a $14,000 note executed by him to the bank, a certificate for 82,144 shares of the capital stock of the Black Jack Oil Company. Said shares were held by H. F. Berry as trustee for himself and the other plaintiffs; the certificate being in the name of H. F. Berry, trustee. It is alleged, further, that the defendant was informed at the time of the transaction that the plaintiffs were the owners of the shares. On July 11, 1912, shortly before the commencement of the action, the plaintiffs tendered to the defendant the sum of $1,015.28, the balance due on the note, together with interest, and demanded the return of the stock, but the defendant refused to deliver, and still unlawfully withholds and detains, the same. The complaint contains an allegation that the value of the property is $82,144 (i. e., $1 per share), and that plaintiffs have been damaged by the withholding and detention of the property in the sum of $10,000. The complaint prays for the recovery of the possession of the property, or its value in case delivery cannot be had, and for $10,000 damages, and costs.

By its answer the defendant denied certain allegations of the complaint, and pleaded affirmatively that on March 20, 1912, the plaintiffs H. F. Berry and F. O. Brock executed to the defendant their promissory note for $3,810, and that at the same time the plaintiff, H. F. Berry, pledged the shares of stock here involved to the defendant, as security for such note, upon which $2,310 is still due.

At the trial it was stipulated that transfers of their interests had been made by certain of the plaintiffs, and appropriate substitutions were made. The court found, in accordance with the allegations of the complaint, that when H. F. Berry made the $14,000 note and deposited the stock as security therefor, the defendant bank was informed that the plaintiffs were the owners of said stock. It found, further, that said plaintiffs were, in fact, the owners of such stock; that the tender and demand were made as alleged by the plaintiffs; that H. F. Berry did not pledge the stock to the defendant as security for the $3,810 note described in the answer; and that said shares were not held by the defendant as security for this note. It is further found that the value of the stock at the time of the commencement of the action was 50 cents per share, but that, pending the action, such value had decreased, until at the time of the trial the stock was worth no more than 10 cents per share Plaintiff H. F. Berry, finds the court, was damaged by the withholding of the property in the sum of $10,952.40, the difference between the value of the shares at the time of the commencement of the action and at the time of the trial, less $1,015.28, the balance due on the promissory note, or a net damage of $9,937.12. The further findings are not, we think, material to the points calling for decision on this appeal. Judgment was given that the plaintiffs recover from the defendant the certificate for 82,144 shares, and, in case delivery cannot be made, that they recover $8,214.40, the value thereof, and that plaintiff Berry recover from the defendant the sum of $9,937.12 damages.

[1] If the pledged property was held by the bank as security for the payment of the first note only, the plaintiffs unquestionably were entitled to a return of their property upon the tender of the balance due upon such note. The validity of the tender was not impaired by the fact that it was coupled with a demand for the return of the property. The pledgor had a right to make his offer of payment conditional upon a redelivery of the property pledged, and such offer extinguished the lien of the pledgee. Civ. Code §§ 1498, 1504; Loughborough v. McNevin, 74 Cal. 250, 253, 14 Pac. 369, 15 Pac. 773, 5 Am. St. Rep. 435; Haile v. Smith, 113 Cal. 656, 662, 45 Pac. 872; Wolff v. Canadian Pac. Ry. Co., 123 Cal. 535, 543, 56 Pac. 453.

[2] The appellant, however, attacks the findings which declare that it had no right to hold the certificate except as security for the $14,000 note. It claims a right to retain the property as security for the note of March 20, 1912, for $3,810: First, because of an alleged agreement with H. F. Berry, one of the pledgors, that the property should be so held; and, second, by virtue of a banker's lien. On the question of the alleged agreement with H. F. Berry there was a specific finding against the defendant. The contention that this finding is against the evidence cannot be upheld. It is true that S. L. Mack, cashier of the Bank of Bakersfield, testified directly that at the time the second note was made it was agreed between him and H. F. Berry that the stock should be retained by the bank as security for the new loan. But Berry testified to the contrary. The appellant seeks to interpret Berry's testimony as constituting a virtual admission that the fact was as stated by Mack. But this is not the necessary purport of Berry's version of the interview. What he said may fairly be interpreted as amounting to a positive denial of any agreement to make the stock security for the new loan. This was the view taken by the trial court, and we must accept its conclusion as a finding on conflicting evidence, controlling in an appellate court.

[3] If, under the contract of the parties, the certificate was pledged as security, simply, for the $14,000 note, the defendant was not entitled to hold it, under its alleged banker's lien, to secure another obligation. The banker's lien referred to in section 3054 of the Civil Code was familiar, as a part of the law, long before the enactment of the Codes. Section 3054 does not extend its scope. It has always been the rule that a banker holding securities pledged for the payment of a particular debt has no lien upon them for the payment of other claims. 1 Jones on Liens (3d Ed.) § 251; 1 Morse on Banks and Banking, § 325; Bell v. Bank of Cal., 153 Cal. 234, 238, 94 Pac. 889; Smith v. Hall, 67 N. Y. 48; Masonic Savings Bank v. Bangs' Adm'r, 84 Ky. 135, 4 Am. St. Rep. 197; Armstrong v. Chemical Nat. Bank (C. C.) 41 Fed. 234, 6 L. R. A. 226.

[4] The action was one for the recovery of specific personal property, the Code equivalent of the common-law writ of replevin. Section 667 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that in such an action judgment for the plaintiff "may be for the possession or the value thereof, in case a delivery cannot be had, and damages for the detention." This was the relief sought by the complaint, and granted by the judgment. The court found that the value of the property at the time of the trial was 10 cents per share, and the judgment provided for the return of the certificate to the plaintiffs, or, in case delivery could not be had, for the sum of $8,214.40, being the value of the shares at the rate of 10 cents each. The further provision of the judgment that the plaintiff H. F. Berry recover $9,937.12 damages gave to said plaintiff "damages for the detention," as provided in section 667. This part of the recovery was based upon the findings of the court that H. F. Berry was the owner of 27,381 of the shares described in the certificate, and that he had been damaged by the withholding of the certificate in a sum measured by the depreciation in the value of the stock (40 cents per share) between the commencement of the action and the date of trial. The appellant contends that such depreciation constitutes special damage, which cannot be recovered unless specifically pleaded. But we cannot give our assent to this claim. Special damages, which must be pleaded, are such as do not ordinarily arise from the breach complained of, but depend upon the peculiar circumstances of the case. In Stevenson v. Smith, 28 Cal. 103, 87 Am. Dec. 107, the plaintiff in an action for the recovery of a mare and colt sought, under a general allegation of damage, to recover for the loss arising from the act of the defendants in giving the animals poor pasturage, and the further circumstance that the mare was a brood mare, and that, by the detention, the breeding season was lost. It was very properly held that the first of these items did not result from the detention itself, but from the improper conduct of the defendants in keeping the animals, while the second item depended upon the extraordinary value of the animal for a particular purpose. These items, therefore, were not embraced within an allegation of general damage. But the situation here is very different. The depreciation in the value of property unlawfully detained by a defendant is an element of damage naturally to be anticipated, and therefore covered by an averment of general damage. Wells on Replevin (2d Ed.) § 535; Clow v. Yount, 93 Ill. App. 112; 34 Cyc. 1564, note 49. It has so been held in this state with respect to an automobile (Morris v. Allen, 17 Cal. App. 684, 121 Pac. 690), and there is no reason for applying a different rule to the case of oil stocks, which are in their nature fluctuating and uncertain in value.

[5] No supplemental pleading was required to warrant the recovery of damages resulting after the commencement of the action. Civ. Code, § 3283; McLennan v. Ohmen, 75 Cal. 558, 17 Pac. 687; Hicks v. Drew, 117 Cal. 305, 49 Pac. 189. It was therefore proper to show the value of the stock at or about the time of the commencement of the action, and its value at the time of the trial. The testimony on these points was sufficient to sustain the court's findings.

What we have said sufficiently covers the material points raised.

The judgment and the order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.

---

35 Cal. App. 288

McWHIRTER v. FULLER et ux.

(S. F. 8607.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 12, 1918.)

MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑330(3) — AGENCY — DRIVING AUTOMOBILE.

That a wife is driving an automobile owned by her husband with his express consent and permission raises the presumption that she was his agent, and makes a prima facie case against the husband in favor of one injured while she was driving the car.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Pat. R. Parker, Judge.

Action by Henry McWhirter against George P. Fuller and wife. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant George P. Fuller appeals. Affirmed by the District Court of Appeal. On application for hearing by the Supreme Court in bank after the judgment. Application denied.

The following is the per curiam opinion in the District Court of Appeal:

This is an action for damages for personal injuries and damage to personal property arising out of a collision between an automobile owned and driven by plaintiff, and one owned by appellant, George P. Fuller, but driven by his wife, the defendant May A. L. Fuller.

Under the terms of section 171a of the Civil Code a husband is not liable for the torts of his wife "except in cases where he would be jointly liable with her if the marriage did not exist." It is not here claimed that the appellant kept this car for the use of his wife, and that at the time of the accident it was being used for the purpose for which it was purchased and kept, in which event, in every just sense and according to the weight of authority, she would be regarded as his agent, on the theory that it is as much the duty of the husband to furnish to his wife, within his means, recreation and pleasure, as it is to furnish her with food and clothing. Missell v. Hayes, 86 N. J. Law, 348, 91 Atl. 322; Birch v. Abercrombie, 74 Wash. 486, 133 Pac. 1020, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 59; Kayser v. Van Nest, 125 Minn. 277, 146 N. W. 1091, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 970; Marshall v. Taylor, 168 Mo. App. 240, 153 S. W. 527. See, also, Berry, Automobiles, § 653 et seq. Nor is it claimed that the mere relationship of husband and wife tends to establish in a case of this kind arising in tort the relationship of principal and agent. But the plaintiff did prove that the car in question was owned by the appellant, and was being operated by his wife at the time of the accident with his express consent and permission. Under the weight of authority, this was sufficient to raise the presumption that the wife was the agent of the husband. In the majority of states it is held that where it is shown that the vehicle which caused the injury belonged to the defendant, a presumption arises that the driver was using the vehicle as the agent of the owner. This justifies a jury in inferring that such is the case, and authorizes it to find for the plaintiff under the rule of respondeat superior. A prima facie case is established. The question of agency or employment of the driver is a fact peculiarly within the knowledge of the owner—oftentimes unknown to the injured party; and the burden is upon the owner to overthrow this presumption by evidence, of which the law presumes he is in possession. He is called upon to rebut this evidence and presumption by showing that the fact is otherwise. In the case at bar no attempt was made to do so. The rule is well illustrated in the following cases: In Birch v. Abercrombie, 74 Wash. 486, 133 Pac. 1020, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 59, a daughter, of age, was using her father's automobile for her own pleasure. Defendant was held responsible for damage occasioned by her. It was contended that the evidence failed to support the findings inasmuch as the evidence showed that the parent's consent was lacking; but the court said: "This contention ignores the admitted ownership of the automobile by the appellants W. R. Abercrombie and [his] wife. It is well established that, in cases of this kind, where the vehicle doing the damage belonged to the defendants at the time of the injury, that fact establishes prima facie that the vehicle was then in possession of the owner, and that whoever was driving it was doing so for the owner. We have repeatedly so held—citing cases. The burden was thus cast upon the appellants to overcome this presumption by competent evidence, and it was for the jury to say upon such evidence whether the burden had been sustained."

In the New York case of Ferris v. Sterling, 214 N. Y. 249, 108 N. E. 406, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 1161, the same rule of evidence is recognized. There a father was held responsible for an automobile accident while the machine was being driven by his son, who was of age, the court saying: "The license number of the car, coupled with the evidence that the defendant held the license, was prima facie proof that the defendant was the owner. It was more than that; it was prima facie proof that the custodian of the car was then engaged in the owner's service. * * * The property being proved to belong to defendant, * * * a presumption arises that it was in use for his benefit, and on his own account."

The same rule is established in New Jersey. In Edgeworth v. Wood, 58 N. J. Law, 463, 33 Atl. 940, it was said: "Considering the great improbability that any other owner of a wagon would thus paint and mark it, a plain inference could be drawn from the evidence that the wagon in question was in the ownership of the company [defendant]. If that inference be drawn, it is sufficient to establish prima facie that the wagon being owned by the company was in its possession, and that whoever was driving it was doing so for the company."

In Gershel v. White's Express Co., 113 N. Y. Supp. 919, it is said: "The proof that the colliding wagon bore the name 'White's Express Company,' taken with the defendant corporation's failure to give any evidence tending to show that it did not operate the particular wagon, although it had admitted by its answer that it did operate and control wagons and vehicles in and about the streets of the city, sufficed for a prima facie case of ownership. * * * Damages, within the verdict, were proven by testimony as to the actual expense of making adequate repairs to the article injured. * * *"

And in Shearman & Redfield on Negligence (6th Ed.) vol. 1, § 158, the authors state the rule, as gleaned by them from the authorities, thus: "When the plaintiff has suffered injury from the negligent management of a vehicle, car or carriage, it is sufficient prima facie evidence that the negligence was imputable to the defendant, to show that he was the owner of the thing, without proving affirmatively that the person in charge was the defendant's servant. It lies with the defendant to show that the person in charge was not his servant, leaving him to show if he can that the property was not under his control at the time, and that the accident was occasioned by the fault of a stranger, an independent contractor, or other person, for whose negligence the owner would not be answerable."

It must be conceded that the complaint was defective; but we think the error in overruling the demurrer thereto must be regarded as harmless, the appellant having had a full opportunity at the trial to rebut the inferences arising from his ownership of the automobile the negligent driving of which was the cause of the plaintiff's damage, and to show fully, if he desired to do so, any facts and circumstances which would have absolved him from liability.

The judgment is affirmed.

J. R. Wilson, of San Francisco, and C. B. Morris, for appellant. Gus. L. Baraty, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. In denying the application for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District we deem it proper to say that, as we understand the opinion as to the effect of proof that the car in question was owned by the appellant and was being operated by his wife at the time of the accident with his express consent and permission, it is simply that a prima facie case was thereby established, authorizing an inference by court or jury, in the absence of substantial proof to the contrary, that the wife was using the car as the agent of the husband.

The application for a hearing in this court is denied.

177 Cal. 256

BLOCHMAN COMMERCIAL & SAVINGS BANK v. MORETTI et al. (L. A. 4120.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 18, 1918.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES ⚷497(5)—FRAUD—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where fraud in the inception of a note is shown, the burden of proof is on the indorsee to show that he is an innocent holder, but is discharged where he shows that he purchased for value in the usual course of his business, and he need not show that his assignor took without notice of defendant's equities.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚷1027—SCOPE OF REVIEW.

Where the uncontradicted evidence warranted direction of verdict for plaintiff in action on note received by it in the usual course of banking business, errors in the admission or rejection of evidence touching the infirmities of the original transaction will not be considered on appeal.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

Action by the Blochman Commercial & Savings Bank, a corporation, against Fiorenzo Moretti and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

George B. Watson and Riley & Heskett, all of San Diego, for appellants. Sam Ferry Smith, of San Diego, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action upon a promissory note executed by the defendants and transferred to the plaintiff's assignor before maturity. The answer of the defendants admitted the execution of the note, but proceeded to set forth that in the making and delivery thereof to the persons by whom it was transferred to the assignor of plaintiff they were misled by certain false and fraudulent misrepresentations as to the present and prospective value of the stock of a certain corporation known as the Western Underwriting & Mortgage Company, in which stock they were thus induced to invest, giving the note in question as a portion of its purchase price. Upon the issues thus tendered the cause came on for trial before a jury. The plaintiff produced the note with evidence showing its transfer to plaintiff's assignor before maturity in the regular course of business at a discount amounting to 1 per cent. per annum upon the rate of interest specified in the note, and that the plaintiff's assignor issued in payment therefor its negotiable certificate of deposit for the full value of said note, payable six months after date, which said certificate of deposit, after passing through the hands of several indorsees, had been paid when due. The defendants, on their behalf, offered proof to sustain the alleged infirmities attending the execution and delivery of the note, and also as to the worthlessness of the stock for the purchase of which it had been given. At the conclusion of the trial the plaintiff moved the court for a directed verdict in its favor upon the ground that the uncontradicted evidence in the case showed that the plaintiff's assignor was an innocent purchaser of the note for value before maturity and without notice of any equities in favor of its makers. The court granted said motion, and the jury returned a verdict in plaintiff's favor in response to said direction, and from the judgment thereupon rendered and entered the defendants prosecute this appeal.

In the briefs of counsel for appellant much space is devoted to a review of the evidence presented at the trial in support of their conclusions as to the infirmities attending the making of the note in question, and as to certain alleged errors of the trial court in the admission or rejection of evidence touching these infirmities; but in view of the order of the trial court directing a verdict in plaintiff's favor upon the sole ground that according to the undisputed evidence it was the assignee of an innocent purchaser of said note before maturity for value and without notice of the defendants' equities, these alleged errors of the trial court became immaterial, unless it shall first be determined that its said order was erroneous, and this, therefore, is the only material issue before us upon this appeal.

[1] On behalf of the appellants it is contended that in addition to showing that the plaintiff's assignor had become the purchaser of said negotiable note in the usual course of business for value, the plaintiff was further bound to affirmatively show that its said assignor had taken said note without notice of the defendants' equities; or, in other words, that the defendants having offered evidence tending to prove that they had been induced to make and deliver said note through such fraudulent representations on the part of the original holders thereof as would have sufficed to have defeated the same in the hands of others than innocent holders thereof, they had by such proofs cast upon the plaintiff the burden of proving that its assignor took the same without notice; and that the plaintiff had not tendered sufficient proofs to sustain the burden when at the conclusion of the evidence the court made its order directing a verdict in its favor. The chief authority upon which the appellant relies in support of this contention is the case of Union Collection Co. v. Buckman, 150 Cal. 159, 88 Pac. 708, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 568, 119 Am. St. Rep. 164, 11 Ann. Cas. 609. That was an action to recover upon two certain negotiable notes issued in renewal of certain other notes given during the course of a gambling game and against the collection of which the defense of an illegal consideration was urged. In the opinion of the court in that case the following language was used:

> "It is also well settled that even in the case of negotiable paper, where an action is brought by a subsequent holder, when it is shown that the same was obtained from the maker by fraud or duress, or that the consideration therefor was illegal, a prima facie case of notice to such holder is made out, and the burden of proving that he took without notice before maturity and for value is thrown upon him."

The appellants herein principally rely upon the foregoing statement of what they contend to be the correct rule of law governing the burden of proof in this class of cases. On behalf of respondent, however, it is urged that while the language used in the case above quoted does attempt to lay down the rule that when it has been shown by the maker of a negotiable instrument that its execution has been accomplished through fraud, the burden of proof is cast upon the holder to show that he took the note before maturity, for value and without notice, the court does not attempt in that case to declare what proof on the part of the holder shall suffice to sustain this burden; while, on the other hand, this court, in the case of Eames v. Crosier, 101 Cal. 260, 35 Pac. 873, does go to the extent of laying down the correct rule in this regard. That was an action for the recovery of judgment upon two negotiable notes claimed to have been purchased by the plaintiff in good faith and without notice. The court found that the defendants were induced to make and deliver said notes upon false representations, but also found that the plaintiff's assignor had purchased and paid for said notes before maturity in good faith and without notice. In dealing with the measure of proof required to sustain this latter finding, this court said:

> "Upon proof by the defendant of fraud or illegality in the inception of the note, the burden is cast upon the indorsee to show that he is an innocent holder. This the latter may do by showing that he purchased the note before maturity, or from an innocent indorsee for value, in the usual course of business. When this is done, unless the evidence shows that the note was taken by the plaintiff under circumstances creating the presumption that he knew the facts impeaching its validity, the burden is cast upon the defendant to show, if he would defeat the plaintiff in his action, that the latter took the instrument with notice of the defendant's equities."

In support of the rule thus declared the court cited the case of Jordan v. Grover, 99 Cal. 194, 33 Pac. 889, wherein the above rule is also stated. In the cases of Sinkler v. Siljan, 136 Cal. 356, 68 Pac. 1024; Bell v. Pleasant, 145 Cal. 410, 78 Pac. 957, 104 Am. St. Rep. 61; Meyer v. Lovdal, 6 Cal. App. 369, 92 Pac. 322, and Citizens Bank v. Stewart, 22 Cal. App. 91, 133 Pac. 337, the rule above quoted from Eames v. Crosier, supra, is restated and applied. It is to be noted that while the cases of Union Collection Co. v. Buckman and Eames v. Crosier both cite the case of Jordan v. Grover, the case of Eames v. Crosier and the later cases above cited which uphold its doctrine are neither cited nor referred to in the case of Union Collection Co. v. Buckman, and were evidently not called to the attention of the court in the discussion or decision of the latter case. In support of the rule above quoted in the case of Eames v. Crosier we are referred by respondent to a respectable volume of authority supporting said rule. In Daniel on Negotiable Instruments (4th Ed.) § 189, it is stated that:

> "When the holder responds by showing that he did acquire the instrument bona fide for value in the usual course of business while it was current and under circumstances which do not operate as constructive notice of the facts which impeach the original validity, the defendant must then prove that he had actual notice of such facts, otherwise the holder's right to a recovery against him is perfected."

The authorities cited by this learned commentator in support of this statement of the rule and which fully sustain it are these: First National Bank v. Dawson, 78 Ala. 71; Third National Bank v. Tinsley, 11 Mo. App. 498; Henry v. Sneed, 99 Mo. 422, 12 S. W. 663, 17 Am. St. Rep. 580; Canajoharie Nat. Bank v. Diefendorf, 123 N. Y. 191, 25 N. E. 402, 10 L. R. A. 676; Battles v. Laudenslager, 84 Pa. 446; Johnson v. McMurry, 72 Mo. 282; Tod v. Wick, 36 Ohio St. 390; Kellogg v. Curtis, 69 Me. 214, 31 Am. Rep. 273; Hay v. Jaeckle, 90 Hun, 114, 35 N. Y. S. 650; American, etc., Bank v. N. Y. Belting Co., 74 Hun, 446, 26 N. Y. Supp. 822; Bank v. Burgwyn, 110 N. C. 267, 14 S. E. 623. From an examination of these authorities we are satisfied with the correctness of the rule stated in Eames v. Crosier as above set forth. We are further of the opinion that there is no real conflict between the cases of Eames v. Crosier and of Union Collection Co. v. Buckman. The rule requiring bona fides on the part of purchasers of negotiable paper subject to such infirmities as were shown to have existed in the making of the instrument herein sued upon is correctly stated in both of these cases. In the latter case the court contented itself with the general statement of the rule which, it may be noted, it was not required by the facts of that case to do; while in the former case the court went further to the extent of stating just what proof would suffice to sustain the holder's burden of showing his bona fides in the transaction and at what point the burden of proving that the plaintiff or his assignor had actual notice of the original infirmities of the note would be shifted to the defendant.

[2] We are satisfied from a careful examination of the record before us that the uncontradicted evidence before the trial court in this case at the time its order directing the jury to render a verdict in plaintiff's favor was made showed that the plaintiff's assignor had purchased the note in question in good faith, before maturity, in the usual course of business, for full value; and that there was no evidence showing or tending to show that the note was purchased by the plaintiff's assignor or taken under circumstances which would give rise to the presumption that plaintiff knew, or should have known, the facts impeaching its validity. Such being the state of the case we are constrained to hold the trial court committed no error in directing a verdict in plaintiff's favor herein. This view removes from our consideration the questions which the appellants present as to any errors which the trial court may or may not have made in the admission or rejection of evidence touching the infirmities of the original transaction.

No other questions being presented for our consideration, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J; SLOSS, J.

177 Cal. 230

GUINN v. McREYNOLDS et al. (Sac. 2457.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 15, 1918.)

1. AGRICULTURE ⚷9—LIEN—PRIORITIES.

While the burden imposed on the land by Pol. Code, § 2322a, giving a county a lien for eradicating insects, etc., found upon premises, orchards, etc., is analogous to a tax or special assessment, it is not entitled to priority over a pre-existing mortgage, unless the intent to postpone liens appears by reasonable inference from provisions of statute.

2. AGRICULTURE ⚷9—LIEN—PRIORITY.

The lien given a county on premises by Pol. Code, § 2322a, for eradicating insects, where owner's neglect to do so is not superior to the lien of a prior mortgage, the section being silent as to priority and the purpose of the expenditures not being such as to justify a conclusion that the Legislature intended to give priority to such lien.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Action by James P. Guinn against O. O. McReynolds and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and the County of Tulare appeals. Affirmed.

Frank Lemberson and James M. Burke, both of Visalia, and P. D. Nowell, of Tulare, for appellant. Murry & Knupp, of Porterville, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff brought this action to foreclose a mortgage of land in Tulare county. The county of Tulare, one of the defendants, set up a claim of lien under section 2322a of the Political Code. The county's lien arose after the recording of plaintiff's mortgage. The court below held that the mortgage was superior to the lien claimed by the county. The correctness of this conclusion presents the only question for decision.

Section 2322a, as it read at the time of the transactions here involved, provided that the county horticultural commissioner should, if he found premises, orchards, trees, plants, etc., in the county infected with infectious diseases, scale, insects, or other pests, notify the owner or person in charge or in possession of the premises to eradicate or destroy the said insects or pests within a given time. Any places, orchards, or nurseries thus infected were declared to be a public nuisance, and in the event that such nuisance was not abated within a specified time after such notice, it was made the duty of the county horticultural commissioner to cause the nuisance to be abated by eradicating or destroying such diseases, insects, or other pests. The section then proceeded as follows:

> "The expense thereof shall be a county charge, and the board of supervisors shall allow and pay the same out of the general fund of the county. Any and all sum or sums so paid shall be and become a lien on the property and premises from which said nuisance has been removed or abated in pursuance of this chapter. A notice of such lien shall be filed and recorded in the office of the county recorder of the county in which the said property and premises are situated, within thirty days after the right to the said lien has accrued. An action to foreclose such lien shall be commenced within ninety days after the filing and recording of said notice of lien, which action shall be brought in the proper court by the district attorney of the county in the name and for the benefit of the county making such payment or payments, and when the property is sold, enough of the proceeds shall be paid into the county treasury of such county to satisfy the lien and costs; and the overplus, if any there be, shall be paid to the owner of the property, if he be known, and if not, into the court for his use when ascertained."

The section, incorporated in the Political Code in 1907, and amended in 1909, was based upon prior acts of similar purport. Stats. 1881, p. 86; Stats. 1889, p. 413; Stats. 1891, p. 268. Its enactment was, as both parties are agreed, a valid exercise of legislative power. County of Los Angeles v. Spencer, 126 Cal. 670, 59 Pac. 202, 77 Am. St. Rep. 217; County of Riverside v. Butcher, 133 Cal. 324, 65 Pac. 745. It is also conceded that there would be no constitutional objection to a legislative provision making the county's lien superior to pre-existing mortgages or other liens created by private contract. See Provident Institution for Savings v. Jersey City, 113 U. S. 506, 5 Sup. Ct. 612, 28 L. Ed.

1102. The question is whether the statute in fact undertook to give such priority.

[1] The law was passed in the exercise of the police power. County of Los Angeles v. Spencer, supra. For the purposes of the present discussion, the burden imposed on the land bears a certain analogy to a tax or special assessment. A lien for unpaid taxes or assessments is generally held to be superior to all contract liens, whether prior or subsequent in time. But the authorities declare, virtually without dissent, that even a tax lien is not entitled to rank ahead of a pre-existing mortgage, or other contract lien, unless the legislative enactment creating the tax lien has given it priority. 37 Cyc. 1143. The priority need not be declared in express terms. It is enough if the intent to postpone contract liens appears by reasonable inference from the provisions of the act. But the authorization for displacing the earlier lien must, under all the decisions, be found in the statute. Even such cases as Carstens v. Seattle, 84 Wash. 88, 146 Pac. 381, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 1070, and Morey v. Duluth, 75 Minn. 221, 77 N. W. 829, relied on by the appellant, rest their holding that the mortgage lien was postponed upon the ground that the legislative acts in question, properly interpreted, disclosed an intention to make the tax or assessment lien superior.

The general rule for fixing the relative rank of liens is declared by section 2897 of the Civil Code, which declares that:

> "Other things being equal, different liens upon the same property have priority according to the time of their creation, except in cases of bottomry and respondentia."

This rule will govern unless, in any given case, the statute prescribes otherwise. See Mortgage Sec. Co. v. Pfaffmann, 169 Pac. 1033, decided December 31, 1917. In dealing with tax or assessment liens, as with others, our decisions have recognized that the question of priority is one of legislative intent. Where, accordingly, the tax or assessment lien is preferred to an earlier contract lien, the basis of priority is found in the statute. In California Loan & Trust Company v. Weis, 118 Cal. 489, 50 Pac. 697, it was held that the lien for personal property taxes, imposed by our law upon the real property of the person assessed, was superior to pre-existing incumbrances upon the land. The question, said the court, "depends for its determination entirely upon statutory enactment" and the expression of a legislative intent that the tax lien should have priority was found in sections 3716 and 3788 of the Political Code, the former declaring that the lien is not removed until the taxes are paid, or the property sold, and the latter that the tax deed conveys to the grantee the absolute title to the land, free of all incumbrances, excepting liens for subsequent taxes. Similarly, in German Savings & Loan Society v. Ramish, 138 Cal. 120, 69 Pac. 89, 70 Pac. 1067, where the lien of street improvement bonds (Stats. 1893, p. 33) was held to have priority, it was pointed out that the statute expressly provided that the lien should be "a first lien upon the property," and that it made the provisions of the Political Code for the collection of delinquent state and county taxes, including section 3788, applicable to sales under the bond act. The opinion, after referring to these features of the statute, declares that "the intention seems to be clearly manifested that the bond lien shall be prior to all liens." In the decisions holding that the liens of assessments levied by irrigation districts or reclamation districts rank ahead of mortgages earlier in time (Williams v. Cooper, 124 Cal. 666, 57 Pac. 577; Weinreich v. Hensley, 121 Cal. 647, 656, 54 Pac. 254), there is no specific reference to any statutory declaration of such priority. But, on examination of the acts involved, it will be seen that they plainly show the legislative intent. The irrigation district law provides that the deed of the collector conveys to the grantee absolute title, free of all incumbrances, except when the land is owned by the United States or this state. Stats. 1887, p. 41. The Political Code contains similar provisions with respect to reclamation districts. Pol. Code, § 3466.

[2] We find nothing in section 2322a which can be said to indicate an intent to make the county's lien superior to other liens earlier in time. The section is silent on the subject of priority. The purpose of the expenditure for which the lien is given would not, of itself, justify a conclusion that the Legislature must have intended to give it superiority over all other claims, if, indeed, such inference can ever arise from the mere nature of the charge. In the case of assessments for local improvements, it may be said that the improvement confers a benefit on the land itself, and thus enhances the security of the mortgagee. But this is not necessarily true of expenditures made under the law here in question. The destruction of infected or diseased trees may diminish the value of the land, for the benefit, primarily, of adjoining property.

It is provided by the section that when the property is sold on foreclosure of the county's lien, the surplus after satisfying the lien shall be paid to the owner of the property, or into court for his use. The owner of the property is the mortgagor or his successor. Under the law of this state, the mortgagee has no ownership or interest in the property. He has merely a lien, which is an incident of the secured debt. McMillan v. Richards, 9 Cal. 365, 70 Am. Dec. 655; S. & L. Soc. v. McKoon, 120 Cal. 177, 52 Pac. 305. The result, then, of holding the county's lien superior would be to deprive the mortgagee of his lien, and, at the same time, to take from him any right to participate in the proceeds of the sale. This provision for the payment of the surplus therefore furnishes some ground, though perhaps not a controlling one, for saying that the legislative intent, so far as disclosed by the terms of the act, was that pre-existing mortgage liens should not be affected by the county lien, but that the latter should operate only against the interest of the owner. At any rate, we do not find in the act any provision indicating an intention to make the county lien superior to existing mortgages, and it must be held, as was held by the court below, that the mortgagee is not affected by the subsequently attaching lien of the county.

By amendment to section 2322a, adopted in 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 631), the Legislature has removed all doubt on the question, for future cases, by adding an express provision declaring the superiority of the county's lien. But this amendment cannot, of course, affect the present litigation, the rights here involved having vested before the law was changed.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.

---

177 Cal. 235

WILLIAMS v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO. (L. A. 4094.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 17, 1918. Rehearing Denied Feb. 14, 1918.)

1. TRIAL ⚷191(10)—INSTRUCTIONS—INVADING PROVINCE OF JURY.

An instruction, which took the question of fact from the jurors and informed them as a matter of law, if plaintiff, a servant, was forewarned of the accident and attempted with ordinary care to save his property, omitting possible measures for his own personal safety, he would not be guilty of contributory negligence and could recover for his personal injuries, is improper.

2. NEGLIGENCE ⚷136(26) — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

The question of contributory negligence is one of fact for the jury to solve under proper instructions, and not one of law, save in those cases in which, judged in the light of common knowledge and experience, there is a standard of prudence to which all persons similarly situated must conform.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James W. Bartlett, Judge.

Action by W. S. Williams against the Pacific Electric Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Judgment and order reversed.

Frank Karr, R. C. Gortner, and A. W. Ashburn, Jr., all of Los Angeles (W. R. Millar, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant. E. B. Drake, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff sued for and obtained a judgment against the corporation here appellant in the sum of $12,500 as damages for personal injuries. The defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

Plaintiff was a laborer engaged in shoveling gravel from a car on a side track connected with the main line of defendant's railroad. Two other men were working with him in the car which was of the kind known as a "gondola" being open at the top and having a floor sloping toward the sides in both directions from a central board which was 2 feet 2 inches from the upper edge of the car. At its deepest part the distance was 4 feet 3 inches from the floor to the upper edge of the car. Within the body of the car were a number of rods or braces connecting the sides with the sloping floor. The testimony regarding the amount of gravel in the car at the time of the accident given by Bowman, one of the men working with plaintiff, was that the gravel had been unloaded to a point about a foot and a half or two feet from the bottom of the car, and that Williams was standing on the gravel and "not on the V-shaped center of the car." Lopez, the other colaborer of plaintiff, corroborates this statement, adding that the braces were uncovered. When the freight cars were backed down the siding and the gondola was struck, plaintiff was thrown to the ground, and his left arm was so crushed by the car wheels passing over it that amputation was necessary.

Williams had eaten a part of his luncheon early in the day, and had left the remaining portion of it near a corner of that end of the car which was afterwards struck by the oncoming freight car. He had no recollection, as he testified, of the events immediately preceding the accident, but both of his companions agreed that a warning was shouted by Lopez before the collision, and it was the theory of the defendant's counsel that plaintiff had been guilty of contributory negligence by moving from a place of comparative safety to the end of the car for the purpose of preventing his luncheon from being knocked to the ground. Bowman had sufficient knowledge of the approaching cars to brace himself by holding on to the edge of the gondola. He escaped injury. Lopez grasped one of the braces in the car and received only trifling injury. Lopez insisted that he merely cried "Look out!" but Bowman, upon cross-examination, said that the warning may have been "Look out for your lunch!" and that version agreed with the signed statement given by him to defendant's agents immediately after plaintiff was injured. Bowman also stated that plaintiff was working just before the accident at a place where gravel could be thrown conveniently into a wagon which was beside the track near the middle of the gondola. The gondola was 34 feet long, and in his written statement Bowman had estimated that Williams was then 10 feet from the end of the car from which he subsequently fell, and Frank Winton, a witness called by plaintiff (as were Bowman and Lopez) said he saw Williams about the time of the collision. The plaintiff, he said, just before the impact of the moving cars, raised up, turned around, and made a step or two toward the end of the car from which he was precipitated. "Before the collision," said this witness, "he was facing east with his back towards the train of cars."

---

⚷For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

[1] It will be seen from the foregoing that the question of the plaintiff's alleged contributory negligence was a very material one, and the court instructed the jury accordingly, but appellant earnestly insists that one of the instructions was so erroneous that the giving of it was serious error. The instruction assailed by defendant was as follows:

> "Although the jury may believe from the evidence that just at the time of the collision in controversy here the plaintiff may have started to get his lunch or other property which was on the end of the gondola in which he was working, and which he believed was in danger of destruction or harm, by reason of the impending collision, yet I charge you that, if you shall further believe that at that time under the circumstances then and there existing he believed his said property was in danger of destruction, then it was not contributory negligence on his part while in the use of ordinary care to attempt to save his property, and if in doing so the impact of the car caused him to fall out of said car, and he was thereby injured, then he would be entitled to recover herein, and you should find for the plaintiff."

[2] The jurors had been correctly instructed upon various phases of the subject of contributory negligence. For example, they had been told in substance that the existence or absence of contributory negligence is to be determined by a consideration of the surrounding facts and circumstances as they would then appear to an ordinarily prudent man in plaintiff's situation, and not by the facts which, as they may have developed subsequently, might show what would have been best for plaintiff. But the quoted instruction went far beyond this liberal and salutary rule and took the question of fact from the jurors, informing them that as matter of law, if plaintiff was forewarned of the accident and attempted with ordinary care to save his property, omitting possible measures for his own personal safety, he would not be guilty of contributory negligence. That is not the law. The question of contributory negligence is one of fact for the jury to solve under proper instructions, and not one of law save in those cases in which, judged in the light of common knowledge and experience, there is a standard of prudence to which all persons similarly situated must conform. In such cases failure to reach that standard is contributory negligence as matter of law. But this case is of course not of that type. The facts were such that the jury and not the court should have decided whether or not plaintiff was contributorily negligent.

It has been held by this court that in deciding whether or not a plaintiff acted prudently the jury may consider the fact that he attempted to escape from a train at the time of an accident, and was injured while those who made no such attempt were unhurt. Mitchell v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 87 Cal. 62, 25 Pac. 245, 11 L. R. A. 130. The question involved in this case was exactly of the same character, and should have been left, in like manner, to the jury.

There can be no doubt that the instruction as given was injurious to defendant.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: WILBUR, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.

177 Cal. 202

ROBERTSON v. BUCKLER et al.
(L. A. 4111.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 15, 1918.)

1. Trial ⟹72—Reopening Case—Affidavit.

In an action against two vendees by an assignee of the vendor to recover the balance due on the price, only one of the defendants having recognized in writing the assignment, where plaintiff, after trial, but before judgment, moved to reopen the case for further proof of the assignment, and submitted an affidavit showing what affiant and other witnesses would testify to, it was error for the court to treat such affidavit as the testimony of the witnesses, and to render judgment against both defendants.

2. Evidence ⟹461(1)—Showing Intent of Parties—Admissibility.

Evidence of declarations as to the intention of the parties both as to an assignment and as to an alleged contract between the assignor and defendants, both of which instruments were in writing, is inadmissible on that question, but the intent of the parties must be established by showing what actually occurred at the time of the assignment and at the time of the contract.

3. Evidence ⟹265(17) — Admission — By Party to Joint Contract.

Where a contract showing that plaintiff's assignor had an interest in property was signed by only one of the two defendants, a letter of the other defendant, which was merely an admission that plaintiff's assignor then owned an interest in the property, is ineffective to show that the defendant who did not sign was bound by the contract.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by M. S. Robertson against Julius A. Buckler and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Buckler appeals. Reversed.

Rufus V. Bowden, Olin Wellborn, Jr., and Alfred H. McAdoo, all of Los Angeles, for appellants. Robert L. Hubbard, B. Dean Clanton, and Hammack & Hammack, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. Plaintiff sues herein as assignee of Anna E. Steele for the sum of $2,000, balance alleged to be due from defendants upon an oral contract for the purchase price of lot 77 of the Westview tract, sold by plaintiff's assignor to the defendants. Judgment went against both defendants, and defendant Buckler appeals. The assignment under which plaintiff claims is as follows:

Exhibit 6.

"July 9, 1912.

"This is to certify that Mrs. Anna Steele holds a $3,000.00 interest in the house being built in Westview tract and that said money is payable as follows:

"$1,500.00 on or before July 15, 1912.

"$1,500.00 30 days after completion of the house. [Signed] Carlin G. Smith."

Exhibit 2.

"Los Angeles, Cal. Aug. 28, 1912.

"For value received I hereby assign the unpaid balance of the above, amounting to the sum of two thousand dollars, to M. S. Robertson, of Los Angeles, Cal.

"[Signed] Mrs. Anna Steele."

Two questions are presented by the appeal: First, did the foregoing assignment, under the circumstances, transfer to plaintiff the rights of plaintiff's assignor against the said Buckler, if any? and, second, is the evidence sufficient to justify the finding that the defendants jointly purchased said lot and agreed to pay therefor?

[1] When the case was submitted plaintiff agreed to produce the above written assignment, the court stating:

> "When that paper comes in it may be deemed submitted. Of course, if that paper does not come in, you have no case."

The assignment was filed, and thereafter plaintiff moved to reopen the case "for the purpose of introducing additional evidence relating to the assignment of the cause of action herein." The notice of motion was accompanied by an affidavit of W. M. Melton "that he has knowledge of the assignment from Anna E. Steele to the plaintiff herein of the cause of action, and knows of the consideration given therefor; that it was the intention of said assignor to assign to plaintiff herein her claim and demand in the sum of $2,000 against J. A. Buckler and Carlin G. Smith, defendants herein." Affiant also avers that the foregoing documents were delivered to him at that time by Mrs. Steele, together with a letter which was already in evidence, dated August 28, 1912, signed J. A. Buckler, and stating:

> "The proposition I made you yesterday still stands; that is, I will let you trade the house over at $8,000.00, or I will execute a note for $2,000.00 at seven per cent., secured by a trust deed on the house and give it to you to cover the interest you still have in the property."

[2] Affiant avers that said documents "were delivered to the plaintiff with the intention to pass and assign to the plaintiff the claim for $2,000 against both defendants, Buckler and Smith, but by mistake and inadvertence it was not noted that said Exhibit 2 did not specifically refer to the demand against both defendants, other than the general reference of assignment. Said facts can be proven by this affiant and by the assignor, Anna E. Steele, and by one G. W. Hoge, who wrote said Exhibit 6, and will also be shown by all of said witnesses that said Exhibit 2 did not embody, and was not the contract between the parties, but was simply a reference to the transfer of said claim." At the time of the hearing of said motion "said affidavit was taken by the court as if testified to by the said Melton, Anna Steele, and G. W. Hoge. The introduction or acceptance or consideration of the said affidavit or its contents was objected to on the ground that the same was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial." The objection was well taken. The affidavit was incompetent. The court apparently accepted the allegation of the affidavit that the facts could be proven by the affiant, by Anna E. Steele, and by G. W. Hoge, as equivalent to their testimony to the facts as to which it was alleged in the affidavit they would testify. Not only was the affidavit incompetent, but also the intent of the parties, both as to the assignment and as to the alleged contract between Mrs. Steele and the defendants, was not to be proved by mere declaration of what the parties intended, but by showing what actually occurred at the time of the assignment and at the time of the contract.

[3] The only additional proof in said affidavit was the statement that Mrs. Steele intended to assign her claim against Buckler by an instrument which, by reason of mistake and inadvertence, referred only to a claim against Smith, and the fact that Buckler's letter accompanied said assignment. This letter was merely an unaccepted offer, being an admission that Mrs. Steele still owned an interest in the property, which was entirely contrary to her theory that she had parted with all interest in it. Buckler claims that he did not agree to purchase the property; that Smith made the agreement for deeding the property to him as a trustee for all interested in a controversy, which need not be fully stated, concerning the completion of a double house on said lot by a corporation of which Buckler was an officer and in which both Smith and Buckler were stockholders. It is evident that the question of whether the writing, Exhibit 2, was the only agreement for payment, or whether there was some other agreement binding Buckler, is the vital question in the case. Incompetent evidence that "Exhibit 2 did not embody and was not the contract between the parties, but was simply a reference to the transfer of said claim," was clearly erroneous and prejudicial. In view of the necessity of a new trial, additional evidence may be presented both on the question of the original contract and assignment thereof. It is therefore unnecessary to determine whether the evidence in the record sufficiently supports the finding that Mr. Buckler was a party to the agreement to pay for said lot.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge, pro tem.

177 Cal. 249

VALLEJO & N. R. CO. v. REED ORCHARD CO. (Sac. 2509.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 17, 1918.)

1. STATUTES 🔑225¾—STATUTE BY ADOPTION—CONSTRUCTION.
Where a statute by adoption refers, not to a particular statute or provision thereof, but to the law generally which governs the particular subject, the reference is to be construed as applying, not only to the law as it existed at the time of enacting the adopting statute, but to the law as changed from time to time and as it exists when invoked in an action or proceeding.

2. STATUTES 🔑225¾—STATUTE BY ADOPTION—CONSTRUCTION.
When a statute designates and adopts an entire provision contained in a section of the Code by reference to its descriptive number, the statute so adopted by reference is the same as though the provision adopted had been bodily incorporated in the adopting statute.

3. EMINENT DOMAIN 🔑247(4)—INTEREST ON AWARD.
Pol. Code, § 325, provides that where a statute is amended, it is not to be considered as repealed and re-enacted, but the portions not altered are to be deemed as having been the law from the time when first enacted. Code Civ. Proc. § 1249, as to condemnation proceedings, as enacted in 1872, provided, among other things, that if an order be made letting plaintiff into possession "as provided in section twelve hundred and fifty-four" the compensation and damages awarded shall draw lawful interest from the date of such order. In amending section 1249 in 1911 (St. 1911, p. 842) the above provision was not changed, but copied into the section as amended. Section 1254, as enacted with section 1249 in 1872, was declared unconstitutional, and was in 1877 (St. 1877–78, p. 108) repealed and enacted in a different form. Held, that the 1911 amendment of section 1249, in retaining the reference to section 1254, referred to section 1254, not as amended, but as originally enacted, and the provision making such reference was of no force, since the original section 1254 was void, so that, in view of Civ. Code, § 1504, declaring that an offer of payment, duly made, stops the running of interest on the obligation, a condemnor, after judgment of condemnation, paying into court for the landowner the full amount of compensation awarded, and receiving, upon order of court, possession of the property condemned, need not thereafter pay interest on the money so paid pending an unsuccessful appeal from the judgment by the landowner refusing to accept the award.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; W. A. Anderson, Judge.

Condemnation proceedings by the Vallejo & Northern Railroad Company against the Reed Orchard Company. From orders for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 169 Cal. 545, 147 Pac. 238; 32 Cal. App. 347, 162 Pac. 914.

C. P. McLaughlin, of San Francisco, C. E. McLaughlin, of Sacramento, Arthur C. Huston, of Woodland, and White, Miller, Needham & Harber, of Sacramento, for appellant. Garret W. McEnerney and Walter Rothchild, both of San Francisco, for respondent. Harrison & Harrison, Wm. B. Bosley and Goodfellow, Eells, Moore & Orrick, all of San Francisco, and Paul C. Morf, City Atty., of Oakland (Charles A. Beardsley and De Lancey C. Smith, both of Oakland, of counsel), U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Raymond Benjamin, Chief Deputy Atty. Gen., Daniel A. Ryan, of San Francisco, and George Lull, City Atty., of San Francisco, amici curiæ.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. The question involved in this appeal arises out of a proceeding in eminent domain wherein the plaintiff, Vallejo & Northern Railroad Company (whose successors in interest are the Northern Electric Railway Company and John P. Coghlan, receiver thereof), sought to condemn lands of defendant Reed Orchard Company for railroad purposes. Upon trial of the issues a judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff, condemning the land as prayed for, and awarding defendant damages and costs in the sum of $105,735.60, the full amount of which plaintiff, within 30 days thereafter, paid into court for the defendant, whereupon the court, after requiring plaintiff to deposit the sum of $25,000 to cover further damages and costs which might be recovered in the proceeding, duly made its order, authorizing the plaintiff to take possession of and use the property until the final determination of the litigation, all as provided in section 1254, Code of Civil Procedure. Defendant refused to accept the award, but, upon the ground that the same was inadequate, and further that the land should not be condemned at all, prosecuted an appeal upon the hearing of which the judgment was affirmed. 169 Cal. 545, 147 Pac. 238. Thereupon, on going down of the remittitur, defendant applied to the court for an order that the amount of said award so deposited in court by plaintiff for defendant, together with interest thereon from the date of the order letting plaintiff into possession of the property to the date of the filing of the remittitur in the trial court, be delivered and paid to it. Upon this application the court directed that the sum of $105,735.60, deposited by plaintiff, being the amount of the judgment made and entered in said proceeding, be paid to defendant Reed Orchard Company upon filing a satisfaction of said judgment, but denied the application of said defendant Reed Orchard Company for the payment of interest on said sum, and ordered the clerk of the court to pay said sum of $25,000, so deposited to cover further damages, to John P. Coghlan as receiver of the Northern Electric Railway Company, successor in interest to plaintiff. From the order denying the payment of interest to defendant in accordance with its application therefor, and the order directing the payment of said sum of $25,000, so deposited by plaintiff to cover damages and costs, to John P. Coghlan as receiver, defendant appeals.

As stated by respondent, the sole question thus squarely presented is whether a condemnor who, after judgment of condemnation and after paying into court for the landowner the full amount of the compensation awarded, and who upon an order of court receives possession of the property condemned, must thereafter pay interest on the money so paid pending an unsuccessful appeal from the judgment prosecuted by the landowner who refuses to accept the award. In such proceedings the award constitutes a judgment in favor of defendant and against the plaintiff for the amount thereof, payment of which, unless the proceeding within the time be abandoned by plaintiff as provided in section 1255a, Code of Civil Procedure, shall be made within 30 days after final judgment (section 1251, Code Civ. Proc.), and in the absence of such payment of the money awarded or deposit thereof made in court, defendant may have execution to enforce the judgment as in civil cases (section 1252, Code Civ. Proc.). In this respect the rights of defendant are substantially identical with those of a plaintiff recovering a money judgment against a defendant in a civil action. In the instant case the money was paid into court for the benefit of defendant as a judgment creditor, pursuant to the provisions of section 1254, Code of Civil Procedure. A deposit so made for the benefit of one entitled thereto pursuant to a statute is at least equivalent to a tender thereof. Lewis on Eminent Domain, 579, and cases cited. By section 1504, Civil Code, the Legislature has declared that:

> "An offer of payment * * * duly made * * * stops the running of interest on the obligation, and has the same effect upon all its incidents as a performance thereof."

The deposit made constituted a tender of payment, acceptance of which, however, under the provisions of section 1254, did not bar an appeal based upon the ground of inadequacy of compensation. In the absence of some special statute applicable to the case, the effect of the tender was, as declared in Ferrea v. Tubbs, 125 Cal. 687, 58 Pac. 308, and Hancock v. Hunt, 168 Pac. 142, to "stop the running of interest on the obligation," pending the unsuccessful appeal.

[1-3] Counsel for appellant, while not disputing this general rule which governs the obligation to pay interest, insist that it is not applicable to a proceeding in condemnation. They assert that sections 1249 and 1254, Code of Civil Procedure, provide a special rule under which a defendant in such proceedings may refuse to accept the tender of an award made by deposit thereof in court for his benefit, appeal from the whole judgment, and, upon an affirmance thereof, rightfully insist upon the payment of interest pending such appeal. In our opinion, the contention is without merit. As originally enacted on March 11, 1872, section 1249 was as follows:

> "For the purpose of assessing compensation and damages, the right thereto shall be deemed to have accrued at the date of the summons, and its actual value, at that date, shall be the measure of compensation for all property to be actually taken, and the basis of damages to property not actually taken, but injuriously affected, in all cases where such damages are allowed, as provided in section twelve hundred and forty-eight. If an order be made letting the plaintiff into possession, as provided in section twelve hundred and fifty-four, the compensation and damages awarded shall draw lawful interest from the date of such order. No improvements put upon the property, subsequent to the date of the service of summons, shall be included in the assessment of compensation or damages."

In 1911 (St. 1911, p. 842) the Legislature amended the section by inserting, immediately following the first sentence, the following:

> "Provided, that in any case in which the issue is not tried within one year after the date of the commencement of the action, unless the delay is caused by the defendant, the compensation and damages shall be deemed to have accrued at the date of the trial. Nothing in this section contained shall be construed or held to affect pending litigation."

Other than as so amended, the section reads now as originally enacted in 1872. Not so, however, as to section 1254, which appears to have been subjected to many changes. As originally enacted on March 11, 1872, with section 1249, it provided that:

> "At any time after service of summons, the court may authorize the plaintiff, * * * to take possession of and use the property during the pendency and until the final conclusion of such proceedings, * * * but the plaintiff must give security, to be approved by such court or judge, to pay as well the compensation in that behalf, when ascertained, as all damages which may be sustained by the defendant, if for any cause the property shall not be finally taken for public use."

It was the provision then contained in section 1254 to which the Legislature had reference when, in section 1249, it said:

> "If an order be made letting the plaintiff into possession, as provided in section twelve hundred and fifty-four, the compensation and damages awarded shall draw lawful interest from the date of such order."

Otherwise and in the absence of such or a similar provision, since the measure of damage was the value of the property at the date of the issuance of summons, no recovery could be had for the use and occupation of the property prior to the rendition of judgment condemning the same. Hence it was eminently just and proper that the owner of land so taken, prior to the establishment of the right of the condemnor, should, as one element of the damage suffered, receive interest upon the compensation awarded for the deprivation of the use and occupation of the land pending a judgment condemning it, without which plaintiff could have no rights therein. As decided by this court in San Mateo Waterworks v. Sharpstein, 50 Cal. 284, Sanborn v. Belden, 51 Cal. 266, and Vilhac v.

Stockton, etc., R. R. Co., 53 Cal. 208, this provision was void, in that it was obnoxious to the Constitution which, as a condition of the taking, prescribed that just compensation must be simultaneously made with the taking of possession. Thereupon the Legislature, in 1877 (St. 1877–78, p. 108) amended the section. In its present form, which contains no vestige of the original provision, section 1254 was adopted in 1903 (St. 1903, p. 109), and was the law during the proceedings had in the case at bar. As therein provided, possession of the property sought to be condemned cannot be taken until after the rendition of judgment establishing plaintiff's right thereto, and then only upon an order of court upon the payment into court by plaintiff for defendant of the amount of the judgment, together with such further sum as may be required by the court as a fund to pay further damages and costs that may be recovered in the proceeding. Where a statute by adoption refers, not to a particular statute or provision thereof, but to the law generally which governs the particular subject, the reference is to be construed as applying, not only to the law as it existed at the time of enacting the adopting statute, but to the law as changed from time to time, and as it exists when invoked in an action or proceeding. Gaston v. Lamkin, 115 Mo. 20, 21 S. W. 1100; Culver v. People, 161 Ill. 89, 43 N. E. 812. Not so, however, when, as here, it designates and adopts an entire provision contained in a section of the Code by reference to its descriptive number. In such case the statute so adopted by reference is the same as though the provision adopted had been bodily incorporated in the adopting statute. People v. Whipple, 47 Cal. 592; Ex parte Lemon, 143 Cal. 558, 77 Pac. 455, 65 L. R. A. 946. In the absence of express intent to the contrary, and none is apparent here, the reference made in section 1249 as originally enacted must be construed as referring to the provision contained in section 1254 as it existed at the time when section 1249 was passed; and it cannot be interpreted as adopting an entirely new provision designated as section 1254. 26 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 714; Ramish v. Hartwell, 126 Cal. 443, 58 Pac. 920; Crane v. Cummings, 137 Cal. 203, 69 Pac. 984. Appellant seeks to avoid these well-recognized principles by reason of the fact that when the Legislature amended section 1249 in 1911, section 1254 contained the provision under which after judgment the court was empowered to make an order authorizing plaintiff to take possession, upon depositing the amount of the award in court, and argues that the amendment constitutes a new enactment which, since retaining the reference, should be construed as adopting the provision then contained in section 1254. A sufficient answer to this contention is that the proceeding was instituted in 1910, prior to the amendment of section 1249, which expressly exempted pending litigation from the operation of the statute. However, waiving this fact, which seems to be fatal to appellant's contention, the position, in our opinion, is not tenable. Section 325 of the Political Code provides that where a statute is amended it is not to be considered as repealed and re-enacted, but the portions which are not altered are to be deemed as having been the law from the time when first enacted, and the new provisions only considered as having been enacted by the amendment. In consonance with this rule, it is said in People v. Sutter St. Ry. Co., 117 Cal. 604, 49 Pac. 736:

> "The portions of the amended section which are copied without change are not to be considered as repealed and again re-enacted, but to have been the law all along."

To the same effect are Sacramento v. Pfund, 165 Cal. 84, 130 Pac. 1041, Ely v. Holton, 15 N. Y. 596, Santa Cruz Rock Pavement Co. v. Lyons, 133 Cal. 114, 65 Pac. 329, Allison v. Hatton, 46 Or. 370, 80 Pac. 101, and Central Pacific R. R. Co. v. Shackelford, 63 Cal. 261. The intent of the Legislature was to enact the change as indicated without in any wise affecting the portions of the statute merely copied; hence by such copying no new, greater, or different force attached to the reference provision of section 1249 other than that to which it was entitled when originally enacted in 1872, which, upon being held in contravention of the Constitution, was repealed, and a new and entirely different scheme substituted therefor. For that reason there was nothing upon which the language used could operate, and the mere retention of the reference in amending section 1249 in 1911 cannot be construed as referring to and adopting the provision of section 1254, as now existing, between which and the provision contained therein when section 1249 was enacted there is not the slightest analogy.

The orders from which the appeal is prosecuted are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

177 Cal. 223

DENVER STOCKYARDS BANK v. MARTIN et al. (L. A. 4757.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 15, 1918. Rehearing Denied Feb. 14, 1918.)

1. PLEADING ⚷291(4)—ADMISSIONS—EFFECT.

By specific provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 448, where answer, in action on note, averred due execution of mortgage, a purported copy of which was attached to the answer, and there was no affidavit denying the genuineness of the mortgage, the execution was admitted.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⚷443(1)—ACTION ON NOTE — PLEADING—ATTACHING MORTGAGE.

Where a note given in Colorado was secured by mortgage of even date on Colorado land, it was not necessary to set out the mortgage in an action against decedent's estate on the note in California, such a mortgage not being within contemplation of Code Civ. Proc. § 1497, forbidding a separate action on a note secured by a mortgage, and section 726, providing that a claim against an estate when founded on a note must be accompanied by a description of a recorded mortgage supporting it, such sections relating to mortgages on land in California.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by the Denver Stockyards Bank, a corporation, against Mary Martin and another, as executrices of the estate of J. M. Martin, deceased. Judgment for defendants and order denying motion to vacate the judgment and enter judgment for plaintiff, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Jas. W. Bell, of Los Angeles (Ponsford & Carnine, of Denver, Colo., of counsel), for appellant. A. Johnston, of Turlock, and Kendrick & Ardis, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment against it and from an order denying its motion to vacate the judgment and to enter judgment in favor of said plaintiff.

The suit was upon a rejected claim upon a promissory note for $4,000 and interest at 8 per cent. per annum executed by J. M. Martin, defendants' testator, in favor of George D. and Charles W. Woolley, or order, and transferred and delivered to plaintiff before maturity. The note is set out in the pleadings. It is dated Craig, Colo., August 23, 1911, and is made payable "on or before June 21, 1914," at a designated bank in Craig.

The court found the execution of the note; its due transfer to plaintiff before maturity; the presentation of a claim against the estate of J. M. Martin, deceased, based upon said note and the rejection of that claim by the executrices who are respondents herein. But it was found also that the note was secured by mortgage of even date upon certain described property in Moffat county, Colo.; that said mortgage had been duly recorded on the day of its execution; that neither the mortgage deed nor a copy thereof nor any reference thereto appeared as a part of plaintiff's claim as presented against the estate of Martin; and that the mortgage had not been satisfied or discharged. The court's conclusion of law that defendants properly rejected the demand against the estate of their testator was based upon the failure to describe or refer to the mortgage in the claim presented to them.

Appellant contends that defendants failed to prove the mortgage by competent evidence; that even if the existence of the mortgage was sufficiently established the court improperly excluded evidence tending to show that the security had become valueless and thus to excuse reference to the mortgage; that by basing its claim on the note alone plaintiff waived the security of the mortgage, and that the statute upon which respondents rely has no extraterritorial force.

[1] Appellant attacks the finding whereby the existence of the mortgage is declared. Certain oral testimony given and a copy of the alleged mortgage introduced in evidence are subject to appellant's objection, but even if the court's rulings with reference to these matters were erroneous (and we do not decide that they were), the fact remains that the answer averred the due execution of the mortgage and a purported copy was attached to the answer and made a part thereof. The record discloses no affidavit denying the genuineness of the mortgage and its due execution, and we must hold, therefore, that these things were admitted. Section 448, Code Civ. Proc.; Rosenthal v. Merced Bank, 110 Cal. 198, 42 Pac. 640; Moore v. Copp, 119 Cal. 429, 51 Pac. 630; Knight v. Whitmore, 125 Cal. 198, 57 Pac. 891; Cordano v. Wright, 159 Cal. 610, 115 Pac. 227, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1044; McKenzie v. Ray, 168 Cal. 618, 143 Pac. 1018.

[2] Respondent's case rests upon the provisions of sections 726 and 1497, Code of Civil Procedure, the first forbidding a separate action upon a note secured by a mortgage, and the second providing that a claim against an estate when founded on a note must be accompanied by a copy thereof, together with a description of a recorded mortgage or the lien supporting the claim or any part thereof. It is true that in Barbieri v. Ramelli, 84 Cal. 154, 23 Pac. 1086, it was held that a plaintiff may not waive his security and declare on the indebtedness, but must bring his action of foreclosure and the same rule has been stated in Gnarini v. Swiss American Bank, 162 Cal. 181, 121 Pac. 726, National Hardware Co. v. Sherwood, 165 Cal. 1, 6, 130 Pac. 881, and Crescent Lumber Co. v. Larson, 166 Cal. 168, 135 Pac. 502. Respondents cite many authorities to the effect that failure to present the mortgage to the executrices in the manner required by the statute now prevents recovery. Among these are Estate of Turner, 128 Cal. 388, 60 Pac. 967, Pitte v. Shipley, 46 Cal. 154, Bank of Sonoma County v. Charles, 86 Cal. 322, 24 Pac. 1019, and Evans v. Johnston, 115 Cal. 180, 46 Pac. 906. But all of these authorities refer to claims secured by liens on property in California. In Felton v. West, 102 Cal. 266, 36 Pac. 676, the note in suit was secured by a mortgage on property in Oregon. Foreclosure was accomplished in that state in a suit in which substituted service on the defendants had been obtained, and the property was sold for a sum less than the indebtedness. No deficiency judgment was entered. The holder of the note credited upon it the amount of the judgment obtained in Oregon and then sued upon the note in this state. Section 726, Code of Civil Procedure, was invoked by the defendants, but the court held that section inapplicable to cases in which the mortgage security was in another state. Any other construction, it was declared, would result in the gravest injustice to the payee or his representative. In McGue v. Rommel, 148 Cal. 539, 83 Pac. 1000, it was again held that the provision of section 726, Code of Civil Procedure, that there can be but one action for the recovery of a debt secured by mortgage, namely, a suit to foreclose, refers solely to debts secured by mortgages in the state of California. Under the analogy of these authorities it is apparent that the claim founded on the note was not "secured by a mortgage," in contemplation of section 1497, Code of Civil Procedure, and therefore it was unnecessary to attach a copy of the mortgage to the said claim. Such a procedure would be useless because there could be no foreclosure of the mortgage by suit in California, and consequently no necessity for presenting it to the executrices or the probate court.

Our conclusion upon this branch of the case makes it unnecessary to consider the other interesting questions presented by the briefs.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: WILBUR, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.

---

35 Cal. App. 484

CITY OF OAKLAND v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 2348.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 6, 1917.)

MASTER AND SERVANT ⚷375(1)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT.

An indigent applicant, employed as teamster in a municipal woodyard, was, when proceeding to remove household goods of an indigent family, as directed by the superintendent of the yard, whose duties were to administer the woodyard for the "relief of indigent persons," within the scope of his employment, so that the city would be liable for resulting injuries.

Petition before the Industrial Accident Commission of State of California by H. F. Norton against the City of Oakland. Award for petitioner, and the city makes application for a writ of review. Application denied.

Paul C. Morf, City Atty., of Oakland, for petitioner. Chris. M. Bradley, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The application of the city of Oakland, a municipal corporation, for a writ of review herein sets forth that one H. F. Norton had heretofore presented a petition before the Industrial Accident Commission for the adjustment of his claim against the petitioner herein arising out of an accident alleged to have occurred while in the employ of the petitioner on the 14th day of August, 1916. Upon the hearing before the said Commission the evidence showed that the city of Oakland has established and maintained a municipal woodyard under an ordinance of said city, the terms of which ordinance, however, were not presented in evidence; that the nature of the applicant's employment was that of a teamster, whose general duties were those of delivering wood, hauling garbage, and performing such other services as might lawfully be required of him by the superintendent thereof within the scope and purposes and object of the institution. That on the 18th day of August, 1916, the said applicant, as such teamster, was instructed by the superintendent to deliver a load of wood to a certain address, and, after so doing to proceed with his team to the dwelling of an indigent family for the purpose of moving its household goods. While so proceeding to the fulfilment of this latter instruction the applicant's team and wagon came in collision with an electric car on the streets of the city of Oakland, whereby he was thrown from his wagon and injured.

The Industrial Accident Commission made an award in his favor and against the petitioner herein, and upon this proceeding the petitioner contends that said award was beyond the authority and jurisdiction of the Commission, for the reason that the evidence and findings of the Commission showed affirmatively that at the time said applicant received his said injuries he was not engaged in the performance of any service growing out of or incidental to his employment as a teamster for the said municipal woodyard of this petitioner, nor was he acting within the scope of the purposes for which said woodyard was created.

In support of this contention the petitioner herein urged upon the hearing that upon the face of the findings of fact made by said Commission it was entitled to the issuance of this writ for the reason that the findings affirmatively show that the purpose for which said municipal woodyard was established and maintained was that of giving indigent unemployed persons board and lodging in return for labor in said woodyard, and that it was beyond the scope of the purposes of said institution and of the powers of its superintendent to direct the applicant to move an indigent family not in any way connected with said woodyard, and hence that in the performance of such service the said applicant was outside the scope of his employment.

It is true, as contended by said petitioner, that there are certain portions of the findings which are susceptible of such a construction, and that the findings of the Commission might have been made much more definite with references to the scope and purposes of the creation and maintenance of this municipal institution. But, on the other hand, taking the findings of the Commission as a whole, we think it sufficiently appears that the general purpose for which said institution was established and maintained was that of providing employment and relief for indigent persons and families within the city of Oakland, and that the powers and duties of its superintendent of such institution with reference to the particular uses which were to be made of the services of the applicant as a teamster were broader than that of merely directing the delivery of wood, and that, to use the language of sections 4 and 5 of the findings of said Commission:

---

⚷For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

> "(4) The administration of said woodyard was conducted by a superintendent whose duties and powers as such were to generally administer the same for the purposes of its establishment, namely, the relief of indigent persons. (5) That the duties of the said teamster were to perform all such services as were required of him by the said superintendent within the scope of the purposes and objects of said woodyard."

In view of these express findings we are unable to say that the direction given to the teamster to remove the household goods of an indigent family, in the course of performing which he was injured, was one outside of the powers of the superintendent of the institution and beyond the scope of the purposes of its creation. This being so, the evidence must be held to be sufficient to support the award of the Commission. An examination of the evidence taken on the hearing before the Commission also sufficiently shows that it was sufficient to justify the aforesaid finding.

For the foregoing reasons the petition herein is denied.

---

35 Cal. App. 531

PHILLIPS v. HUFFAKER et ux. (Civ. 1788.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 11, 1917.)

1. Bankruptcy 🔑303(1)—Fraudulent Conveyances—Conveyance Without Consideration—Presumption.

That a husband transferred to his wife property recorded in his name within four months of bankruptcy made the transfer presumptively fraudulent as to existing creditors, in view of Civ. Code, § 3442, providing that any transfer of property without a valuable consideration in contemplation of insolvency shall be fraudulent and void as to existing creditors.

2. Bankruptcy 🔑303(1)—Fraudulent Conveyance—Evidence.

The presumption that a conveyance without consideration and in contemplation of insolvency is fraudulent as to creditors held not overcome by the uncontradicted testimony of evasive witnesses; the court not being bound by such testimony, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 2, providing that a decision need not be in conformity with declarations of any number of witnesses which do not produce conviction against a presumption or other evidence satisfying the mind.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; W. H. Thomas, Judge.

Action by Henry Phillips, as trustee of E. Huffaker, bankrupt, against E. Huffaker and wife. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Rodolph Hatfield and E. Huffaker, both of Oakland, for appellants. John L. McVey, of Oakland, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. Defendants appeal from a judgment entered in favor of the plaintiff, as trustee in bankruptcy of the defendant E. Huffaker, to set aside a deed made by said Huffaker to his wife, the defendant Jennie B. Huffaker, on the ground that it was made within four months of the adjudication decreeing the defendant E. Huffaker a bankrupt; that it was without consideration, and made for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding creditors.

Briefly, the facts are these: On January 12, 1915, one Gray secured a judgment against the defendant E. Huffaker in the sum of $1,105. After the rendition of that judgment, but before the entry thereof, the defendant E. Huffaker reconveyed a one-half interest in certain real property to his wife, the defendant Jennie B. Huffaker, which she had previously conveyed to him, and then filed a petition in bankruptcy and was adjudicated a bankrupt.

The Huffakers defended the present action upon the ground that the property in question was held by the husband in trust for the wife, and was therefore rightly reconveyed to her.

The only question raised upon this appeal is as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the trial court's findings:

> That defendants "willfully testified falsely as to material facts in said cause," and "that the deed made, executed, and delivered by E. Huffaker, defendant herein, to Jennie B. Huffaker, * * * was given by said defendant E. Huffaker to said Jennie B. Huffaker, his wife, for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding the creditors of him, the said E. Huffaker."

The only witnesses produced in the case were the defendants, who were called by the plaintiff, and their testimony in terms supports the allegation of their answer that the property was held by E. Huffaker in trust for the benefit of his wife, and therefore it is contended that there is no evidence to support the findings in question, and that the trial court was not justified in rejecting the uncontradicted testimony of the defendants.

The general rule that the uncontradicted testimony of a witness may not be disregarded by the trial court of course has its limitations, and, as is pointed out in Davis v. Judson, 159 Cal. 121, 128, 113 Pac. 147, 150:

> "The most positive testimony of a witness may be contradicted by inherent improbabilities as to its accuracy contained in the witness' own statement of the transaction, or there may be circumstances in evidence in connection with the matter which satisfy the court of its falsity; the manner of the witness in testifying may impress the court with a doubt as to the accuracy of his statement and influence it to disregard his positive testimony as to a particular fact;

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes and as it is within the province of the trial court to determine what credit and weight shall be given to the testimony of any witness, this court cannot control its finding or conclusion denying the testimony credence, unless it appears that there are no matters or circumstances which at all impair its accuracy."

See, also, Clark v. Tulare Lake Dredging Co., 14 Cal. App. 414, 432, 112 Pac. 564.

[1, 2] The fact that the property in suit stood of record in the name of E. Huffaker raises a presumption that title thereto was vested in him, and the fact that he transferred it to his wife without a valuable consideration in contemplation of insolvency made the transaction presumptively fraudulent as to existing creditors. Civ. Code, § 3442. These presumptions, standing alone, are sufficient to support the judgment, for the court was not bound, as has been seen, to accept the uncontradicted statement of the defendants against presumptions satisfying the mind of the court. Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 2; Bellus v. Peters, 165 Cal. 112, 130 Pac. 1186; Prewett v. Dyer, 107 Cal. 154, 159, 40 Pac. 105; Sarraille v. Calmon, 142 Cal. 651, 76 Pac. 497; Clark v. Tulare, etc., Co., supra.

The circumstance that the trial court, having seen and observed the witnesses and their manner of testifying, had an advantage when judging of the character of the testimony not accorded to us, coupled with other significant circumstances shown in the record, readily explains why the court below disregarded their testimony.

First, the excuse given by the Huffakers that the conveyance of the undivided one-half interest in the property was made by Mrs. Huffaker to her husband to better enable him to handle it for her benefit does not commend itself to us as having much weight or credence. We are unable to see how any benefit would inure to the wife from such an arrangement. In one part of his testimony Huffaker avoided as long as possible making an explanation of why he had claimed the property in question as his own when he applied for a bond to a certain bonding company, and his explanation in that regard was unsatisfactory. During the examination of Mrs. Huffaker she was led to believe that, unless there had been an accounting between her and her husband, her case would likely be lost. Accordingly she testified that there had been accountings between her and her husband, but in this connection, while she had testified that at different times each had collected rents of the property and kept them, and that when her husband worked on the property, as he sometimes did, she allowed him for carpenter work the same wages per hour that she would pay an experienced carpenter, nevertheless she was compelled to admit that there had never been a settlement of accounts in writing, and that there never had been an understanding of how much was due from one to the other, nor had any money ever passed between them to square the account.

These witnesses were evasive, and their testimony was equivocal, and therefore we think the court was justified in rejecting their testimony as unworthy of belief.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; RICHARDS, J.

35 Cal. App. 534

In re ALAMEDA COUNTY BAR ASS'N.

(Civ. 2181.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 11, 1917.)

1. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT 🔑53(2)—DISBARMENT—MORAL TURPITUDE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence held insufficient to show moral turpitude that would warrant disbarment of an attorney, although judgment was had against him in a civil action, and he attempted to avoid the judgment by going through bankruptcy.

2. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT 🔑53(2)—DISBARMENT—NATURE OF PROCEEDINGS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

An accusation against an attorney in disbarment proceedings is in the nature of a criminal charge, and all intendments are in favor of the accused, and he should be given the benefit of doubts arising from conflict of evidence.

In the matter of the application of the Alameda County Bar Association for the disbarment of E. Huffaker, an attorney. Application denied.

C. L. Colvin, Phil M. Carey, and Walter J. Burpee, all of Oakland, for Alameda County Bar Ass'n. Rodolph Hatfield and E. Huffaker, both of Oakland, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is a proceeding for the disbarment of E. Huffaker, an attorney at law, upon the application of the Alameda Bar Association. The charge upon which the accusation is founded recites that the accused, while acting as attorney for one John Gray, was guilty of unprofessional conduct involving moral turpitude and dishonesty. The facts as alleged in the accusation may be stated, in substance, as follows:

The accused was employed by Gray as an attorney to represent him in certain litigation in which Gray was involved, and during the course of the employment Gray deeded to the accused certain real property to be held in trust by him for the purpose of disposing of the same and turning the proceeds over to said Gray. Subsequently Gray was convicted of a felony and sentenced to the state penitentiary. That during the time he was serving his term Huffaker fraudulently and unlawfully, and without the knowledge or consent of Gray, mortgaged the property so conveyed to him in trust for the sum of $1,800, and converted the same to his own use.

That thereafter Gray commenced an action for the recovery of this amount, in which action it was determined that Gray was indebted to Huffaker for legal services rendered in the sum of $1,247.15, and that $284 had been paid thereon, leaving a balance due from Gray to Huffaker on account of such services in the sum of $963.15, and judgment was thereupon rendered in favor of Gray for a balance of $832. No motion for a new trial was ever made in this action, and no appeal taken from this judgment. Upon the rendition of the judgment Huffaker deeded all his property to his wife, and filed a petition in bankruptcy, and listed the said judgment in favor of Gray as his only debt, for the purpose, it is alleged, of defeating the same.

It further appears from the accusation that a portion of the sum of $1,800 so obtained by Huffaker was delivered to Jennie B. Huffaker, his wife, which portion was used by her to satisfy a mortgage existing against property owned by her.

Thereafter Gray brought a second action against both Huffaker and his wife, in which action the trial court found that Huffaker had wrongfully received the sum of $836.35 from Gray, and that said sum was used for liquidating an indebtedness upon property belonging to his wife, and rendered judgment against the Huffakers in said amount.

By reason of the above-enumerated facts it is prayed that the license of accused to practice law be revoked, and that he be disbarred as an attorney at law.

By his answer Huffaker admits the receipt of the sum of $1,800, but denies that he ever held the same as trustee for Gray, but, on the contrary, claims the same as attorney's fees due him from Gray.

At the hearing of this application Huffaker testified, in effect, that he had represented Gray in nine actions, criminal and civil, besides rendering him other services of a legal nature, and that after the conviction of Gray upon a felony charge, and during his incarceration in San Quentin, Gray had expressly agreed to pay the sum of $1,750 in full satisfaction of this claim, and had authorized Huffaker to mortgage the property held in trust by him for this amount, and to pay himself out of the funds so received, and to convey the property subject to the mortgage to one Anderson, which was done. On the other hand, Gray, while admitting the demand of Huffaker and of an indebtedness in some amount, denied that he ever agreed to pay the sum of $1,750, or that he had ever authorized an hypothecation of his property. He admitted, however, that he had authorized the conveyance to Anderson. This is the only oral testimony directly upon the subject.

[1] The dispute over the transactions between Gray and the accused has been the subject of extended litigation before the courts; and while it has finally been determined that the amount claimed by Huffaker was in excess of that to which he was entitled, still we cannot say from the evidence presented in the record before us in this particular proceeding that there was moral turpitude or dishonesty practiced on the part of Huffaker. True, the evidence of Gray supports the charge, but it is in direct conflict with that of the accused, and is impaired by reason of the fact that Gray has been convicted of a felony.

[2] An accusation against an attorney in disbarment proceedings is in the nature of a criminal charge, and all intendments are in favor of the accused (In re Haymond, 121 Cal. 385, 53 Pac. 899), and he should be given the benefit of doubts arising from conflict of evidence (In re Stephens, 84 Cal. 81, 24 Pac. 46).

The further act of the accused in deeding his property to his wife and filing his petition in bankruptcy for the purpose of attempting to defeat the original judgment is, in the absence of an explanation, subject to adverse criticism. This is conceded by the accused; but as an excuse for these acts on his part he testified that during the trial of the original action against him and at the time of the acts complained of he was physically and mentally ill, and that his judgment was thereby impaired. In this he is corroborated by his physician, and this evidence is not contradicted. Under these circumstances we are not prepared to say that the respondent should be disbarred.

For the reasons given, the application is denied, and the accusation dismissed.

35 Cal. App. 466

CRANE v. HEINE. (Civ. 2236.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 5, 1917.)

1. PLEADING ⟹214(1) — DEMURRER — ADMISSION.

Demurrer to the complaint admits the truth of its allegations.

2. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT ⟹27—UNAUTHORIZED USE OF ATTORNEY'S NAME—RIGHT OF ACTION—STATUTE.

Where defendant, without an attorney's permission, used the latter's name and well-known standing as attorney in an endeavor to effect collections of over 1,000 accounts by typewriting the attorney's name as signature to that number of collection letters, which he sent to debtors, there was a transgression of the attorney's rights, from which the law will at least presume nominal damages, which may be recovered under Civ. Code, § 3360, providing that, when a breach of duty has caused no appreciable detriment to the party affected, he may yet recover nominal damages.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Mogan, Judge.

Action by Arthur Crane against Gustav O. Heine. From a judgment for defendant on order sustaining demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Judgment reversed.

Arthur Crane, of San Francisco, in pro. per. Charles F. Hanlon, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from a judgment entered after an order sustaining a demurrer to plaintiff's complaint on the ground that it failed to state sufficient facts and after the plaintiff had refused to amend.

The complaint alleges that the plaintiff at all the times therein mentioned was an attorney at law, duly licensed to practice in all the courts of the state of California, and so engaged, and that he was of excellent standing as a lawyer in California; that in the month of July, 1913, the defendant, without the consent or knowledge of plaintiff, caused to be sent out and mailed with plaintiff's name appended thereto as the sender in typewriting over 1,000 letters to defenseless women and others, which forged letters threatened the recipients thereof with legal proceedings unless within three days they called and settled their respective accounts with the Heine Piano Company. The complaint further alleges that as a result of this unauthorized conduct of the defendant the plaintiff's professional reputation and standing as a lawyer was seriously impaired, and that he was damaged in the sum of $125,000, for which sum he demanded judgment.

[1, 2] The complaint contains much immaterial matter, and it would certainly be obnoxious to a special demurrer, but, as against a general demurrer, we think was good; for, assuming, as we must on demurrer, that the allegations of the complaint are true, we learn that the defendant, without the plaintiff's rights, from which the law his alleged well-known standing as an attorney at law to endeavor to effect collections of over 1,000 tardy accounts. This, if true, was certainly a transgression or invasion of the plaintiff's rights, from which the law will at least presume nominal damages, which may be recovered. Civ. Code, § 3360; W. U. T. Co. v. Ferguson, 157 Ind. 64, 66, 60 N. E. 674, 1080, 54 L. R. A. 846; 1 Cooley on Torts, 39, 84, 93; Hearne v. De Young, 132 Cal. 357, 64 Pac. 576.

The judgment is reversed.

---

35 Cal. App. 481

NORTHERN INS. CO. OF NEW YORK v. NATIONAL UNION FIRE INS. CO.

(Civ. 1961.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 5, 1917.)

1. INSURANCE 🔑634(1)—COMPLAINT—CONSTRUING AGAINST PLEADER.

Where the complaint alleged that the fire policy sued on was in the California standard form, an allegation that the company disclaimed liability thereunder will be taken as an allegation that the disclaimer was in writing as required by such policy, in view of the rule that pleadings are to be construed most strongly against the pleader, and the rule that, where a thing is alleged to have been done, it will be presumed to have been done in writing if the law so requires.

2. INSURANCE 🔑629(1)—FIRE INSURANCE—PLEADINGS—LIMITATIONS.

A complaint filed September 23d, alleging that the fire policy sued on was the California standard form, that the fire occurred July 24th, that proofs of loss were made August 8th, and that insurer disclaims liability, was demurrable, as it showed that the clause of such policy, which postponed the time of commencing suit to 90 days, had been put in operation.

3. STATUTES 🔑279—PLEADING—MATTERS JUDICIALLY KNOWN.

An allegation that the policy was of the California standard form fire insurance policy made the form of the policy prescribed by St. 1909, p. 404, a part of the complaint; it not being necessary to plead public statutes or matters of which the court takes judicial notice.

4. EVIDENCE 🔑29—JUDICIAL NOTICE—STATUTES.

As the California standard fire insurance policy is prescribed by St. 1909, p. 404, the court will take judicial notice of its terms, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1875, subd. 2, providing that the court will take judicial notice of whatever is established by law.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by the Northern Insurance Company of New York against the National Union Fire Insurance Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

John R. Layng, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Tyrrell, Abrahams & Brown, A. L. Abrahams, and Chas. W. Fricke, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, Judge pro tem. This is an action to recover upon an insurance policy for a loss by fire suffered by plaintiff's assignor. Judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff, and it is from that judgment that the defendant appeals.

The amended complaint alleges that the policy was the California standard form fire insurance policy, that the fire occurred on July 26, 1914, and that proofs of loss were presented to the appellant on August 8th. It is then alleged, "That the defendant did disclaim any liability whatsoever under its said policy for and on account of the loss incurred" by respondent's assignor. It is also alleged that respondent's assignor demanded payment from appellant of the amount stated to be due from it, and that appellant failed and refused to pay. The action was commenced September 23, 1914.

The appellant objects that the amended complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, for the reason that the litigation was prematurely commenced. The California standard fire policy provides (Stats. 1909, p. 408, Deering's Gen. Laws, Act 1670, p. 630):

> "This company shall be deemed to have assented to the amount of the loss claimed by the insured * * * unless within twenty days after the receipt thereof * * * the company shall notify the insured in writing of its partial or total disagreement with the amount of loss claimed by him. * * *"

Then follow certain provisions for the appointment of appraisers to estimate and appraise the loss, under certain conditions, and also for the manner in which they shall perform their work and for their compensation. The form then proceeds:

> "If for any reason not attributable to the insured, or to the appraiser appointed by him, an appraisement is not had and completed within ninety days after said preliminary proof of loss is received by this company, the insured is not to be prejudiced by the failure to make an appraisement, and may prove the amount of his loss in an action brought without such appraisement."

[1-4] The allegation of the amended complaint to the effect that appellant disclaimed liability under the policy will be taken as an allegation that the disclaimer was in writing, as the terms of the policy above quoted require that it should have been in that form. Such a construction is required under the rule that pleadings are to be construed most strongly against the pleader, as well as under the rule that where a thing is alleged to have been done, it will be presumed to have been done in writing if the law requires it so to have been done. Alaska Salmon Co. v. Standard Box Co., 158 Cal. 567, 112 Pac. 454. The principle last stated operates in favor of a pleader. It naturally operates with added force, under the principle first stated, against a pleader. It would seem, therefore, without the citation of authority, that the clause of the policy which in effect postpones the time for commencing suit to 90 days appears from the face of the amended complaint to have been put into operation, and that suit on the policy could not have been commenced, properly, until after November 6, 1914. However, questions kindred to the one here presented have already been before the courts. In Borger v. Connecticut Fire Insurance Co., 24 Cal. App. 696, 142 Pac. 115, a copy of the policy sued on was made part of the complaint, and the court said, after quoting from the instrument provisions similar to those above mentioned:

> "The foregoing conditions and provisions of the insurance policy upon which the plaintiff seeks to recover, having been expressly made a part of his complaint, it was incumbent upon the pleader to show upon the face of his complaint that the loss had ripened into a chose in action at the time the suit was begun."

It is true that in this case the policy is not set forth as a part of the pleading, but that can make no difference. As we have already stated, the amended complaint alleges that:

> "Said policy of insurance was what is known and denominated 'California Standard Form Fire Insurance Policy.'"

As that form is prescribed by the Legislature in a general statute (Stats. 1909, p. 404, Deering's Gen. Laws, Act 1670), the courts take judicial notice of its terms (Code Civ. Proc. § 1875, subds. 2, 3). The form of policy was a part of the amended complaint without being specifically pleaded, for two reasons. The first of these is that it is not necessary to plead public statutes. The second is that matters of which courts take judicial notice need not be pleaded. French v. Senate of California, 146 Cal. 604, 80 Pac. 1031, 69 L. R. A. 556, 2 Ann. Cas. 756.

The case of Borger v. Connecticut Fire Insurance Co., supra, was before the District Court of Appeal, First District, a second time. On that occasion it appeared that, on a retrial, the trial court had permitted an amendment of the complaint, which amendment set forth that the defendant, upon the filing with it by the plaintiff of his proofs of loss, had denied liability upon its policy for such loss. It will be observed that the amendment made the pleading like the amended complaint in the present action. The court again held the plaintiff's pleading insufficient. Borger v. Connecticut Fire Insurance Co., 29 Cal. App. 476, 156 Pac. 70.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to sustain the demurrer.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

35 Cal. App. 487

MADSEN v. MADSEN et al. (Civ. 2237, 2267.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 7, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 5, 1918.)

1. TRUSTS ⟹86—RESULTING TRUSTS—PRESUMPTIONS.

From the fact that plaintiff furnished money to defendant to buy and improve lots upon the assurance, belief, and understanding that he and defendant would occupy the premises jointly and the money would be applied as intended, and the money was not intended as a loan, gift, or advancement or compensation for support of plaintiff, and no consideration was given by defendant, the legal inference of a resulting trust arose, and warranted the legal conclusion without a separate finding of fact that there was a trust.

2. TRUSTS ⟹86 — RESULTING TRUSTS — PRESUMPTIONS.

In view of Civ. Code, § 853, providing that when a transfer of real property is made to one person and the consideration therefor is paid by another a trust is presumed to result in his favor, the presumption of a resulting trust is indulged, even when a transaction is one between parent and child.

Appeals from Superior Court, Marin County; Edgar T. Zook, Judge.

Suit by Mads C. Madsen against Martin Madsen and others. From the decree in part for plaintiff, defendants appeal; and from that portion of the decree favorable to defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed upon both appeals.

⟹For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

H. L. Hagan, of Oakland, for plaintiff. Martinelli & Greer, of San Rafael, for defendants.

RICHARDS, J. These two appeals have been taken in the same case and from different parts of the same judgment, and it has been stipulated between the parties that the same transcript shall suffice for both appeals.

The facts of the case upon which both appeals depend for their determination are substantially these: The plaintiff, Mads C. Madsen, was a native of Denmark, where he lived until he was about 55 years old, when he came with his wife to California. Five grown children had preceded him to this state. Shortly after his arrival he and Hans Madsen, one of his sons, bought a ranch near Santa Rosa, where he lived with his said son for a while. In November, 1899, this ranch was sold, and the plaintiff herein received his share of the proceeds of such sale. Not long thereafter he received an invitation from the defendants herein to come and live with them at their home in San Rafael. The family of the defendants consisted of themselves and four children, and they were living in a small four-roomed cottage for which they were trying to pay. This was apparently inadequate for the two families. The defendant Martin Madsen had been for some time desirous of acquiring a larger lot and building another house, but was unable financially to do so. It was presently arranged that the plaintiff should furnish the sum of $1,200 which his said son Martin was to put into the purchase of two lots and the building of a house thereon large enough to accommodate both families. This was done; the lots were purchased for $750, the conveyance being taken in the name of the son, who contracted for a house to be erected thereon at a cost of $1,950. He borrowed the sum of $1,000 from a lumberman which went into the cost of the house, and when it was about completed he found that he still needed the sum of $500, which upon application his father supplied. The two families moved into the house upon its completion in the year 1900. The plaintiff's wife died the following year, and the plaintiff continued to live with the defendants until the year 1914, when, difficulties having arisen, the plaintiff was forced to leave the house and go and live at the home of one of his daughters in San Leandro. In the month of November, 1914, he commenced this action to have a resulting trust declared in the San Rafael property to the extent of the two sums of $1,200 and $500 which he claimed to have contributed to its purchase price.

Upon the trial the court found in plaintiff's favor as to the fact that a resulting trust had arisen in so far as the plaintiff's first contribution of the sum of $1,200 to the original purchase price of the property was concerned; but the court found in the defendants' favor as to the latter sum of $500 advanced by the plaintiff upon the theory that the advance of said later sum was in the nature of a loan to the defendants which they agreed to repay, and hence as to it no resulting trust in the property arose. From that portion of the judgment which declares a resulting trust to have been created as to the said sum of $1,200 invested in the purchase and improvement of the property in question the defendants have appealed; while as to the latter portion of the judgment declaring that as to the later advance of $500 no resulting trust arose the plaintiff has appealed, and both appeals have been transferred to this court for review.

The defendants upon the first of these appeals make two contentions: First, that the findings do not support the judgment; and second, that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the findings.

[1] As to the first of these points we find no merit in the defendants' contention. It is true that the court did not expressly find as a fact that a resulting trust arose from the payment by the plaintiff of the sum of $1,200 to his son, and by the latter's investment of this sum in the purchase price and improvement of the property in question. But, on the other hand, the court did find that the plaintiff furnished the said sum to his son with the understanding that he was to buy and improve the lots, and that he did so upon the assurance, belief, and understanding that the two families would occupy the premises jointly, and that the said money, when so received by his said son, would be so applied. The court further found "that the said sum of $1,200, or any part thereof, was not intended by the said parties, or either of them, to be a loan, gift, or advancement or compensation to the defendants Martin Madsen and Frieda Madsen, or either of them, for the support of said plaintiff or the family of said plaintiff, and that no consideration whatever was given by said defendants Martin Madsen and Frieda Madsen, or either of them, for the said sum of $1,200." From these findings the legal inference of a resulting trust arose, and accordingly the court found as a legal conclusion that the plaintiff was entitled to an equitable ownership in the said property amounting to $^{12}/_{27}$ thereof. We think these findings fully support that portion of the judgment which so decrees.

The second contention of the appellants upon their appeal is that the evidence does not sustain the findings of the court in the respect above stated. The testimony of the father and son is in sharp conflict as to the understanding between them at the time the father paid over the $1,200 to his son. The father did not understand or speak the English language, and testified through an interpreter. Doubtless his testimony lost something of its directness in the process of translation, but we think that it sufficiently shows, if believed by the court, that the plaintiff was led to understand and believe, and did so understand and believe, that he was to have an interest in the property and a home thereon as long as he lived, and that the payment by him of the sum of $1,200 to his son for investment in the property in question was made upon this understanding and belief, and that the same was not entitled to be a gift or advancement or loan.

[2] Some space is devoted in the briefs of counsel for the defendants upon this first appeal to the proposition that the presumption of a resulting trust will not be indulged in when the transaction in question is one between parent and child or husband and wife, or between members of the same family. But such is not the rule in this state under the broad terms of section 853 of the Civil Code and the decisions construing and applying the same. Faylor v. Faylor, 136 Cal. 95, 68 Pac. 482; Rothenbusch v. Hebel, 11 Cal. App. 692, 106 Pac. 119; Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 527, 17 Pac. 689, 7 Am. St. Rep. 189; Becker v. Schwerdtle, 141 Cal. 386, 74 Pac. 1029. Upon a review of the entire testimony in the case we are satisfied that it sufficiently sustains the findings and judgment of the trial court. This portion of the judgment appealed from by the defendants will therefore be affirmed.

The plaintiff herein has also prosecuted an appeal from that portion of the judgment which decrees that as to the subsequent payment of $500 made by the plaintiff to his son Martin Madsen no resulting trust arose. It is sufficient upon this appeal to say that in respect of this payment also the evidence is conflicting, and that the trial court was entitled to resolve such conflict in the defendants' favor, and, having done so, we shall not interfere with the discretion which it clearly has not abused.

As to the second appeal the judgment is also affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

---

35 Cal. App. 473

DAVIS v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR SAN JOAQUIN COUNTY et al.

(Civ. 1754.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 5, 1917.)

1. MANDAMUS 🔑42—COMPELLING COURT TO DETERMINE MOTION ON MERITS.

Writ of mandate will issue to compel the superior court to hear and determine upon its merits a motion asking relief which the court has jurisdiction to grant.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS 🔑227(5) — ALLOWANCE OF CLAIMS — AMENDMENT — STATUTE—"PROCEEDING."

Code Civ. Proc. § 473, providing that the court in furtherance of justice on proper terms may allow a party to amend any pleading or proceeding by adding or striking out the name of any party, or by correcting a mistake in the name of a party, or a mistake in any other respect, if the relief is sought within six months, applies to proceedings in probate, more particularly to presentation of a claim for allowance by the administrator or executor of a decedent's estate; since the word "proceeding" as used does not refer exclusively to an action at law.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Proceeding.]

Petition for writ of mandate by Ellis A. Davis against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of San Joaquin and J. A. Plummer, Judge thereof. Writ ordered to issue.

Faulkner & Faulkner, for petitioner. John A. Wilson, of Stockton, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is a petition for a writ of mandate. It appears from the petition that on the 15th day of June, 1917, there was pending in the superior court of the county of San Joaquin the matter of the estate of Thomas E. Ketcham, deceased, on which date the petitioner presented to said court a duly verified petition praying for leave to amend a claim theretofore filed by petitioner in the matter of said estate; that a copy of said petition is attached to the petition here, made a part thereof, and designated Exhibit A; that the said superior court and the judge thereof refused to hear or entertain said petition and refused to grant the petitioner any relief in the matter on the ground, as alleged in the petition herein, "that the superior court, sitting in probate, is without authority or jurisdiction to grant leave to amend a claim in the matter of the estate of a deceased person, in any particular, after the expiration of the time fixed by law for the presentation of claims against such estate."

It appeared from the said petition, Exhibit A, hereinbefore referred to, that Thomas E. Ketcham died testate January 25, 1916, leaving an estate within the jurisdiction of said court; that after due proceedings Anna A. Israel was on February 14, 1916, duly appointed executrix of the last will of said Thomas E. Ketcham, deceased; that thereupon she duly qualified as such executrix and ever since has been and now is the duly appointed, qualified, and acting executrix of the last will of said decedent; that thereafter and pursuant to the order of court, the said executrix duly published notice to creditors to present their claims within 10 months from the date of the first publication of said notice, to wit, November 16, 1916; "that said executrix has not filed a final account in the matter of the said estate, nor any petition for the distribution thereof, but that the administration of said estate is at the present time and for some time to come will be pending in this court." It is then set forth that during his lifetime decedent entered into an agreement in writing whereby petitioner agreed to publish a biography of said decedent in the Davis Commercial Encyclopedia of the Pacific Southwest and to deliver to decedent twelve copies thereof; that your petitioner "inserted in said publication the biography of said decedent, published the same, delivered one copy thereof to the decedent, and offered to deliver to him the remaining eleven copies upon demand; that for and in consideration of the publication and delivery of said copies the said decedent agreed to pay to your petitioner the sum of $570 upon demand; that said sum was not paid by decedent during his lifetime."

It is then set forth:

"That within the time allowed by law for the presentation of claims against the said estate your petitioner prepared and presented to the executrix thereof a claim for the amount due under said agreement; that a true, full, and correct copy of said claim is hereunto attached, marked Exhibit A, and made part hereof; that prior to the preparation of said claim your petitioner delivered to Faulkner & Faulkner, Esqs., his attorneys, the original agreement in writing for the purpose of having a statement of said claim properly prepared and presented in the manner provided by law; that petitioner's said attorneys properly prepared a statement of said claim, duly verified, and instructed their stenographer to attach thereto a copy of said agreement in writing; that the said stenographer inadvertently neglected to attach to the said claim a true copy of the said agreement in writing, but inclosed the said copy in an envelope addressed to said executrix, which said envelope also contained a letter written by the said attorneys to the effect that the said claim had attached to it a copy of the said agreement; that the said envelope was thereafter mailed to the said executrix, and received by her; that the said executrix retained the said claim for a period of several months thereafter, to wit, until the 27th day of February, 1917, at which time the said executrix notified your petitioner that said claim had been wholly rejected by the executrix without indicating to your petitioner her reasons for or the grounds upon which such rejection was made; that on the said 27th day of February, 1917, the time for presentation of claims against the estate of said deceased had expired and your petitioner did not, therefore, have time within which to properly prepare his said claim and present the same to said executrix; that your petitioner did not discover the mistake until the said claim was returned to him rejected, as aforesaid; that by reason of the failure of petitioner to attach the said copy properly to the said claim, which was due to the mistake and inadvertence of the said stenographer, your petitioner will be unable to prosecute an action at law for the recovery of the money due under said agreement; that your petitioner has a good and just cause of action, based upon the said instrument in writing, and has exercised due and proper diligence in the preparation and presentation of his claim against said estate, except that he failed to attach thereto a copy of said agreement in writing, which said failure was due to the mistake and inadvertence of the stenographer of said attorneys. Wherefore, your petitioner prays that this court issue its order directing the said executrix to appear and show cause why an order by this court should not be made, granting leave to your petitioner to file in the matter of said estate an amendment to the said claim, said amendment to be effected by attaching to the said claim a true copy of said agreement in writing; that upon the hearing of said matter this court grant this petitioner the relief herein sought; and that such other and further relief be granted to your petitioner as may be meet and proper."

In the opinion rendered at the hearing by his honor, J. A. Plummer, the point in the case is thus stated:

"It is claimed in this case that under the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure the court has power to grant amendments to claims the same as in any ordinary case, but the question that immediately arises is: Supposing the court should exercise the power and grant permission to amend the claim that has already been acted upon by the executrix? When acted upon by the executrix, this claim was not presented in the manner provided by law; the time has gone by for the presentation of claims. If the court were to grant permission, it would simply, in effect, be amending a claim, which, when acted upon by the executrix, was not according to law, and allowing a claimant to present a claim after the time had expired as specified in the notice given by the executrix. There is no provision of the Code, so far as I have been able to ascertain, which gives the court any jurisdiction or authority. The provision of the Code in relation to the presentation of claims, and the allowance of presentation of claims by the court after the 10 months have expired, relates only to those who have not had notice by reason of absence. No other power is given to the court to make any change from the 10 months' notice. * * * Unless there is something in the Code which authorizes the court to set aside the action of the executrix, reopen the allowance, and direct her to do that which the law says must be done within 10 months, then the court would be acting beyond its jurisdiction. Being of the opinion that the court has no right or authority under the Code relating to the administration of estates, or under any of the equity powers given to the court sitting as a probate court to reach back and say to the executrix to do that which she has not done, and make a claim valid which was invalid, apparently, when presented, and especially after the time has expired when claims may be lawfully presented, the petition must be denied for want of jurisdiction."

[1] It is quite apparent that the learned trial judge did not consider the matter on its merits—that is, it did not consider nor decide the question whether or not petitioner was entitled to relief under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but held that it has no power or authority; in other words, had not jurisdiction to grant any relief and hence denied the petition. The situation was such as appeared in Estate of Simmons, 168 Cal. 390, 143 Pac. 697, wherein, on the authority of Cahill v. Superior Court, 145 Cal. 42, 78 Pac. 467, the court said: "The order denying the contestant's motion for relief must therefore be regarded as 'a dismissal of the motion for lack of jurisdiction' "—and, as was held in the Cahill Case, as a dismissal of the motion for lack of jurisdiction to act upon the motion. We understand the Cahill Case to have decided that the law especially enjoins upon the superior court the duty of hearing and determining all matters which are within its jurisdiction and which come properly before it; and the writ of mandate may issue to compel the court to hear and determine the motion upon its merits. We think petitioner entitled to the writ.

[2] The more important question is: Does section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, apply to proceedings in probate, and particularly to such a case or proceeding as is here presented? Upon the facts alleged, there would seem to be no good reason for withholding from petitioner the opportunity of having the judgment of the court upon the merits. He prepared his claim in due form and verified it as required by law; he stated in his claim that a copy of the contract on which his claim rested was attached thereon "marked Exhibit A"; the attorneys who prepared the claim directed their clerk to attach a copy of the contract to the claim and mail the claim to the executrix; the clerk, believing that he had complied with these directions, mailed the claim to the executrix and the envelope, with its contents, was received; through the mistake and inadvertence of the clerk, he failed to attach the said copy; the executrix retained the claim in her hands several months without acting upon it, and, after the time for the presentation of claims had elapsed, she returned it to the attorneys disallowed, and then for the first time the petitioner was made aware of the mistake; he promptly sought relief by application to the court, but was denied it for the reasons shown. There has been no final account rendered and no distribution, and the estate is still open and in process of settlement. Concededly, however, petitioner has no means of relief unless it can be afforded under section 473. This section provides that:

> "The court may in furtherance of justice, and on such terms as may be proper, allow a party to amend any pleading or proceeding by adding or striking out the name of any party, or by correcting a mistake in the name of a party, or a mistake in any other respect; * * * and may, also, * * * relieve a party or his legal representative from a judgment, order, or other proceeding taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect," if the relief is sought within six months.

In Levy v. Superior Court, 139 Cal. 590, 73 Pac. 417, a homestead had been set apart to the widow in the matter of the estate of Henry Levy, deceased. Motions were made to set aside the homestead order "on the grounds, among others, that the order was obtained through the 'inadvertence, surprise, and excusable neglect' of said moving parties." It was held that section 473 "is a statutory grant covering the matter here involved." Said the court:

> "In Estate of Hudson, 63 Cal. 454, it is assumed that a court could set aside a decree of distribution under section 473. In De Pedrorena v. Superior Court, 80 Cal. 144 [22 Pac. 71], it was expressly held that a court, at any time within six months, can set aside a decree of distribution on motion, upon proper showing. And in Estate of Hickey, 129 Cal. 14 [61 Pac. 475], it was expressly held that the probate court, under section 473, had power to set aside an order settling the final account of an administrator, and also an order setting apart the residue of an estate to minor heirs."

In the Estate of Simmons, 168 Cal. 390, 395, 143 Pac. 697, 699, it was said:

> "We think it must be held that the court has power, under section 473, to relieve a contestant, whose petition for revocation, duly filed, has not been dismissed, from the failure to have citation issued and served within the year."

In support of the statement that "the court has given a very liberal interpretation to the provisions of this section," a number of cases are cited. Section 473 was held applicable where a father has been deprived of the custody of his child by an order in an adoption proceeding, and that he could obtain relief under this section. Bell v. Krauss, 169 Cal. 387, 146 Pac. 874.

It seems to us that the presentation of a claim for allowance by the administrator or executor of the estate of a deceased person is a proceeding within the meaning of that term as used in section 473. The statute makes provision for the enforcement of claims against such an estate. The holder of the claim is required to prepare his claim in such form as will show a substantial cause of action; it must be verified, and, if founded on a written contract, a copy of the contract must be attached to the claim; it must be filed or presented within the time limited in the notice to creditors or it is barred; when a claim has been presented to the executor or administrator before filing (as was done here), the executor or administrator must indorse thereon his allowance or rejection, with the day and date thereof; "if he allow the claim so presented, it must be presented to the judge for his approval, who must in the same manner indorse upon it his allowance or rejection, and, if allowed, it must, within 30 days thereafter, be filed with the clerk." * * * "Every claim allowed by the executor or administrator and approved by the judge shall be ranked among the acknowledged debts of the estate, to be paid in due course of administration." Section 1496, Code Civ. Proc. If the claim is rejected, written notice must be given to the holder of the claim who must bring suit within a specified time "or the claim shall be forever barred." Section 1498. No holder of any claim shall maintain an action thereon unless the claim is first filed with the clerk, or presented to the executor or administrator, except in the case of a mortgage. Section 1500. When a judgment in favor of a claimant is obtained in an action on a rejected claim, such judgment operates precisely as does the approval of a claim by the judge. In both cases payment is to be made in due course of administration. There is no method provided for the collection of claims against estates of deceased persons except by these provisions, and it is essential that the claimant take the steps first above pointed out as a part of the method provided for his relief.

The presentation of the claim was not the initial step of an independent proceeding. There was already a pending proceeding entitled, "In the matter of the estate," etc., the object of which was to collect the assets of the estate, pay debts incurred by the deceased, and to do many other things as might be required in the settlement of the affairs of the decedent. Jurisdiction to do all these things had its origin in the letters testamentary granted on petition of the executrix. The presentation of the claim was but a step in the course of a pending proceeding, to which latter we have seen section 473 applies.

We do not think that the word "proceeding," as used in section 473, refers exclusively to an action at law. We have seen that the Supreme Court holds that it does not. A motion to set aside a homestead on which an order was made granting the petition does not constitute an action at law. It was, as we have seen, held in Levy v. Superior Court, supra, that the court had jurisdiction within six months to vacate an order setting apart a homestead, on motion of the executor and an heir, under section 473. See, also, Estate of Simmons, supra; Bell v. Krauss, 169 Cal. 387, 146 Pac. 874. We can see no embarrassment likely to arise should the learned trial judge decide that the showing is sufficient to justify his making an order allowing the amendment of the claim prayed for. The amendment should, if allowed, be made to take effect as of the date the claim was presented to the executrix. As thus amended, it may be allowed or rejected, at the discretion of the executrix, and the holder of the claim, if rejected, has his action as provided by the statute in which the merits of the claim may be fully passed upon. The statute does not limit the time within which the executrix must act upon the claim.

It need hardly to be stated that a different question would arise if the proposed amendment introduced a new or substantially different claim. Here, however, the facts constituting the claim as presented are fully and completely shown on its face, and reference is made to the particular contract which is identified. The contract is but the evidence by which the claim is to be established. Attaching a copy to the claim would in no sense change the substance of the claim.

It is ordered that a writ of mandate issue in said matter, directing the judge of the said superior court to hear and determine the petition, a copy of which is attached to the petition herein as Exhibit A, and to grant the petitioner therein such relief as the facts and the law may warrant.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

---

35 Cal. App. 460

BAR ASS'N OF SAN FRANCISCO v. PHILBROOK. (Civ. 2286.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 4, 1917.)

ATTORNEY AND CLIENT ⚷43—DISBARMENT—DISRESPECT.

The making and filing of an affidavit by an attorney in a pending action using in respect to the several judges the terms "criminal, corrupt, and wicked conspiracies," "criminal confederates," "colossal and confident insolence," "criminal prosecution," "calculated brutality," "a corrupt deadfall," and similar phrases, constituted a violation of Code Civ. Proc. § 282, relating to misconduct of an attorney, and the attorney will be disbarred, especially when neither justification, withdrawal, mitigation, or excuse for the making and filing of such document has been proffered.

In the matter of the accusation of the Bar Association of San Francisco against Horace W. Philbrook, an attorney. Disbarred.

Lloyd S. Ackerman, of San Francisco, for petitioner. Horace W. Philbrook, of San Francisco, in pro. per.

PER CURIAM. On September 24, 1917, an accusation in writing was filed in this court, verified by Lloyd S. Ackerman, Esq., acting on behalf of the Bar Association of San Francisco, wherein it was charged that Horace W. Philbrook had violated his duties as an attorney and counselor at law as defined by section 282 of the Code of Civil Procedure, by the making and filing of a certain affidavit in an action then pending in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, numbered 73516, and entitled "Florence E. Philbrook, Administratrix with the Will Annexed of the Estate of Humphrey A. Randall, Deceased, Plaintiff, v. William J. McGee, Defendant," wherein said Philbrook had specifically charged that several of the present judges of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco and of several other counties of the state, together with certain specified members of the bar and other designated persons, had confederated in a wicked and criminal conspiracy against the plaintiff in said action, with the design and purpose of having rendered a false and corrupt judgment in said action against said plaintiff and in favor of the defendant therein, which said affidavit, as set forth in said accusation, was couched in language replete with offensive personalities, wherein and by the use of which the said Horace W. Philbrook is averred to have violated his duty to maintain the respect due to courts of justice and the judges thereof, and to abstain from offensive personalities toward the courts and the counsel for opposing parties, and to have been thereby guilty of unprofessional conduct, for which the said accusation prayed that he be disbarred or subjected to such other penalties as to the court should seem proper.

⚷For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

Upon the filing of said application and upon the date thereof this court made and entered an order requiring the said Horace W. Philbrook to appear and answer said accusation before it on Monday, October 22, 1917, at 10 o'clock a. m., or as soon thereafter as the matter could be heard, and that a copy of such accusation and order be served upon him at least five days before the time appointed for the hearing thereon. On October 22, 1917, and at the time appointed for the hearing upon said accusation, and upon the calling of said case for hearing, said Horace W. Philbrook was present in court, and thereupon made and tendered several successive special appearances in writing for the purpose of presenting and supporting several motions then made by him to strike said accusation from the files of this court and to dismiss the same, and also to quash the said order upon the several and specified grounds set forth in each of said motions, but each of his said motions, being presented and argued before the court and submitted to it for decision, was denied; whereupon the said Horace W. Philbrook was required by this court to then and there make such further appearance and present such other answer or defense to such accusation as he might be advised, whereupon said Horace W. Philbrook refused to make any further motion, answer, or defense to said accusation at that time; whereupon the matter was ordered submitted to this court for decision.

The affidavit of the respondent which the accusation herein charges to have been made and filed and to embrace matters in violation of section 282 of the Code of Civil Procedure was attached as an exhibit to the accusation herein and made a part thereof. It has been examined by us, and found to be couched in intemperate and abusive language directly and repeatedly applied to a number of the superior judges of the city and county of San Francisco and other counties in this state, and wherein these judicial officers, designated by name and with much of detail and circumstance, are charged with having entered into a criminal conspiracy among themselves and with other persons for the purpose of causing to be made and entered a false and corrupt judgment against the plaintiff in the action wherein said affidavit was filed.

The charges which the respondent thus makes and reiterates against the judicial officers named in his affidavit are of such a serious, and in fact criminal, character as to fully justify, if proven, the impeachment and removal from office of these persons. The law has provided a forum for the presentation, hearing, trial, and judgment of charges of this character when they are to be directed against judicial officers of this state. That forum is the court of impeachment provided for in article 4, § 18, of the state Constitution, wherein judges of the superior court are expressly made liable to impeachment for misdemeanors in office, and also in sections 33 to 39, inclusive, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and sections 737 to 753, inclusive, of the Penal Code, wherein a procedure is given for carrying into effect the aforesaid constitutional provision. It would be clearly the duty of any citizen, and particularly of any member of the legal profession, having knowledge of such matters as are adverted to in the affidavit of the respondent herein, to seek this forum for the purpose of removing from office by their impeachment those judicial officers whom this respondent assails; but it is equally clear that it would be against public policy and in the highest degree unprofessional and improper to permit assaults of the character of that indulged in by the respondent herein to be made upon the courts and judicial officers of the state in the ordinary course of the trial of causes, and by the means which this respondent has employed; for to do so would be to suffer the judicial respect, integrity, honor, and reputation of courts and judges to be attacked and overthrown with no opportunity for either defense, justification, or redress on the part of those assailed.

The case of In re Murray, 58 Hun, 604, 11 N. Y. Supp. 336, is instructive upon this phase of the present proceeding. The respondent in that case, in an affidavit made by him and filed in the surrogate court in a matter then pending before that court, charged the surrogate with corrupt practices, and also and in open court publicly repeated such charge, asserting such surrogate to be an infamous, foresworn, and corrupt judge. In a proceeding for his disbarment he reiterated the charges in an affidavit filed by him, in which he insisted upon the truth of his assertions.

> "This conduct," says the court, "is unprecedented and unprofessional. The charges are most serious in character, and would be attended with the gravest results if established. They should not therefore be entertained for a moment except upon the most impressive evidence at least, and then only in the manner provided by law for the investigation of kindred accusations against judicial officers. These results impose the greatest and most scrupulous care even in an attempted impeachment of a judicial officer; and if a counselor of this court, disregarding that mode of procedure, makes the charge of corruption against an officer in his own court while sitting in a cause which he is investigating, his conduct is in the highest degree unprofessional and improper. If such a course should be tolerated when every presumption of law is against the truth of the accusation, the honor of judicial officers would be exposed to the malice or rage of disappointed attorneys, whose evil inclinations, anger, or passion would thus seek gratification. It was said in Bradley v. Fisher, 13 Wall. 335, 20 L. Ed. 646, that the obligations which attorneys impliedly assume, if they do not by express declaration take them upon themselves, when they are admitted to the bar, are not merely to be obedient to the Constitution and laws, but to maintain at all times the respect due to courts of justice and judicial officers."

In addition to the remedy suggested by the foregoing considerations, there was another and more immediate remedy at all times open to the respondent. He charges the existence of a criminal conspiracy in which the judicial officers he designates and other specified persons are involved. Section 182 of the Penal Code defines and provides for the punishment of criminal conspiracies; while section 753 of the Penal Code provides that a conviction on impeachment of any offense which is also the subject of indictment or information shall not be a bar to such indictment or information. These ordinary courses of the law have at all times been open to the respondent if he is in fact in possession of any information as to the actual existence of the criminal conspiracies which he charges in his affidavit; and it would be his clear duty to betake himself to one or other of the foregoing courses rather than to indulge in a manifest violation of section 282 of the Code of Civil Procedure in making a disrespectful assault upon the dignity of the courts and the integrity of the judicial officers in a manner which affords those who are thus assailed no opportunity for defense, vindication or protection.

But in addition to these considerations the language of the affidavit which forms the basis of the present proceeding is of the most disrespectful and intemperate character, abounding, as it does, in such phrases as "criminal, corrupt, and wicked conspiracies," "criminal confederates," "colossal and confident insolence," "criminal prosecution," "calculated brutality," and similar phrases ofttimes repeated and applied to the judicial officers in question, and containing also the reiterated characterization of certain proceedings in the courts over which such judicial officers presided as "a corrupt deadfall." The making and filing of such a document in which such expressions are repeatedly and offensively employed, and which is surcharged with other intemperate utterances and innuendoes, constitutes a clear violation of the spirit, intent, and terms of section 282 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and when such a document has been personally and willfully prepared, verified, and filed by an attorney and counselor at law in a cause pending in the courts, and before the judicial officers to which its intemperate, offensive, and highly disrespectful expressions directly refer, it affords ample ground for the permanent disbarment of such a person, especially when neither justification, withdrawal, mitigation, or excuse for the making and filing of such a document has been proffered by the respondent in the proceedings now pending before us.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that Horace W. Philbrook, an attorney and counselor at law of the state of California, is guilty of violating his duty as such attorney and counselor at law, in that he has failed to maintain the respect due to courts of justice and judicial officers, and has failed to abstain from offensive personalities, and that therefore the name of Horace W. Philbrook shall be stricken from the roll of attorneys and counselors at law, and that he be, and he is hereby, permanently precluded from practicing as such attorney and counselor at law in all of the courts of this state.

---

35 Cal. App. 492

In re SHEPARD. (Civ. 2324.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 7, 1917.)

1. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT 🔑39 — DISBARMENT—OFFENSES INVOLVING "MORAL TURPITUDE."

The offense of conspiring to smuggle opium into the United States in violation of federal law is ground for disbarment as involving "moral turpitude" within Code Civ. Proc. § 287, subd. 1, providing for disbarment upon conviction of a felony involving moral turpitude.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Moral Turpitude.]

2. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT 🔑48 — DISBARMENT—NOTICE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 287, subd. 1, providing that, where an attorney is sought to be removed for conviction of a felony involving moral turpitude, the record of conviction shall be conclusive evidence, and section 289, providing that proceedings to remove an attorney must be taken by the court on receipt of a certified copy of the record of conviction, and in spite of section 292, providing that upon receiving the accusation the court shall make an order requiring accused to appear, and shall cause a copy thereof and of the accusation to be served upon the accused at least five days before the hearing, no notice is required to be given the attorney of a proceeding for disbarment for conviction of an offense involving moral turpitude.

3. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT 🔑61 — DISBARMENT—SCOPE OF REVIEW.

Where an attorney, having been disbarred, applied for reinstatement for alleged errors in the order for disbarment, the sole question was whether the order of disbarment was right in substance, and the objection that no hearing was granted was of no avail, where on the application for reinstatement there was a hearing, and the order was sustained.

4. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT 🔑39 — DISBARMENT—OFFENSES—PLACE OF COMMISSION.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 287, subd. 1, providing for disbarment of attorneys for conviction of offenses involving moral turpitude, and in spite of section 288, which requires the clerk of court in which the conviction is had to transmit the record to the Supreme Court, an attorney may be disbarred for an offense against the federal laws for which he is convicted in the federal courts.

5. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT 🔑61 — DISBARMENT—REINSTATEMENT—WHEN PROPER.

An attorney, having been disbarred, could not be reinstated because of good moral character within three years of the commission of his crime, two years and a half after his sentence, one year after his conviction became final by decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, seven months after his disbarment, six months after he began his imprisonment, and three months after he concluded it; the offense causing the disbarment being conspiracy to smuggle opium into the United States in violation of federal law.

6. Attorney and Client ⚷39 — Disbarment—Nature of Penalty.

Disbarment of an attorney for conviction of an offense involving moral turpitude is for the protection of the bar and the public, and not punitive in character.

Application by Frederic M. Shepard for reinstatement as a member of the bar of the state of California. Application denied.

D. M. Hammack, of Los Angeles, for petitioner. Frank C. Collier, of Los Angeles, for respondent Los Angeles Bar Ass'n.

WORKS, Judge pro tem. In July, 1914, petitioner and one A. C. Brown committed the crime of conspiracy to import into the United States from Mexico 80 cans of smoking opium, and to receive, conceal, buy, sell, and facilitate the transportation, concealment, and sale of such opium, in violation of the act of Congress of January 17, 1914. Shepard and Brown were indicted for the offense by the federal grand jury, were tried, and were convicted. By judgment and sentence entered April 28, 1915, they were each condemned, by the District Court of the United States in and for the Southern District of California, to imprisonment for a year and a day in the state penitentiary at San Quentin. Shepard sued out a writ of error to the United States Circuit Court, Ninth Circuit, but his conviction was affirmed by that tribunal on October 4, 1916. He then sought a pardon at the hands of the national executive, but it was refused, although the President, after granting Shepard a respite expiring April 11, 1917, did commute the sentence to imprisonment in the jail of Los Angeles county for 90 days. Shepard entered upon the service of the sentence at the conclusion of the respite, and was discharged July 9, 1917. Meanwhile, on March 5, 1917, a certified copy of the record of conviction was presented to this court in open session, and Shepard was, on that day and without notice to him, disbarred. His admission to the bar of California was on December 6, 1909. This proceeding was instituted October 15, 1917.

[1] The disbarment was ordered under the provisions of subdivison 1 of section 287 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to the effect that an attorney and counselor may be removed or suspended upon his "conviction of a felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude." It is contended that the disbarment was unjustified for the reason that the crime of which Shepard was convicted does not involve moral turpitude, and that therefore his reinstatement should follow. We shall make no attempt to define the term upon which this question hinges, leaving it to be understood that the phrase itself has, without the aid of specific definition, a sufficiently clear meaning to enable us to determine whether the offense of Shepard comes within it. Counsel for the bar association characterizes a smuggler as one who makes endeavor to defraud the government out of the revenue derivable from the entry into the country of dutiable goods, and contends that the commission of such a fraud, or the formation of a conspiracy to commit it, is immoral and wrong to the extent that it necessarily involves moral turpitude. Counsel for the petitioner responds that smoking opium is not a dutiable article, and that it is denied admission to the United States, duty or no duty (and so it is), as if that fact lessens or wipes out any immorality which may fasten to the smuggler of dutiable articles. This question we will discuss later, as we now deal with the question of smuggling in general, as respects the matter of its turpitude or the lack of it. We anticipate our later discussion, however, to the extent of remarking that we shall now assume that the smuggling of opium into the country for smoking purposes is on at least as low a moral plane as the smuggling of dutiable articles with intent to defraud the government out of the revenue which would otherwise arise from importation. Returning to the question as to how we shall regard the smuggler, we may appeal to the popular feeling on the subject; for whether any act involves moral turpitude may with a great degree of safety be left to the estimation of a healthy minded public concerning the act, unless, indeed, there be something like an equal division of opinion on the subject. Can there be any doubt as to the manner in which the smuggler is regarded by a vast majority of the public? It is not in fiction alone that smuggling is classed with piracy; for in the public mind the two are more or less closely associated. Certainly we may say with confidence that in the popular estimation, and in truth, smuggling is a highly immoral crime against society and government. There is, of course, no difference, favorable to the petitioner, at least, between one guilty of smuggling and one guilty of conspiracy to smuggle.

How, now, is the smuggling of smoking opium to be regarded? The effects of the opium habit on the human system are generally understood, certainly in their salient features, but let us attend to a graphic description of the thralldom under which the victim of the habit rests. We quote from the Americana, title "Opium":

> "Indispensable as opium is in certain affections, in the hands of the thoughtless and weak it is too often a curse. It is the most seductive of all the narcotics. 'By its soothing and exhilarating influences it gains such a hold on the moral and physical nature that the strongest will is unable to emancipate the victim from its enchantment, and moral degradation results.' * * * Victims of the opium habit frequently become so demoralized as to need care in an asylum. They lie, steal, lose self-respect and ambition, are forgetful, may be subject to delusion, fear, and superstition, and are careless as to clothing and necessary habits, while still thinking highly of themselves. The great nerve centers tolerate stimulation to a certain point. When the limit is reached, the time varying in different persons, the action of the various organs and tracts is disordered. The victim of opium suffers from imperfect digestion, faulty appetite and assimilation, and consequent malnutrition. * * * Primarily there is functional derangement of the brain, then permanent deterioration. He becomes a slave to his depraved appetite. When the time draws near for his alloted dose he is nervous, yawns, may have neuralgia, is weak, breaks out into a perspiration, and is miserable. He takes his dose, and is himself again; but after a time the dose has to be increased, and if relief from his craving is not obtained, he sinks lower and lower, and dies a wretched death."

What would be the popular opinion concerning Shepard if it became generally known that he had delivered opium to innocents whose lives, through his acts, might become such as are here depicted? And yet in the commission of the crime of which he stands convicted he evinced the possession of the will, and even of the intent, in effect, to do that very thing; for the result of the carrying out of such a conspiracy as that in which he engaged would make it possible for others directly to make distribution of the poison. Truly it seems a travesty to insist that acts such as these are to be differentiated, in a way favorable to the petitioner, from the mere maiming and stabbing of the body with deliberately formed purpose and intent to wreak harm and injury upon it. We conclude that among the elements of Shephard's crime was a high degree of moral turpitude.

[2] It is insisted that this court had no jurisdiction to remove Shepard's name from the roll of attorneys without notice. Section 287 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that, where an attorney is sought to be removed for conviction of a felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, "the record of conviction shall be conclusive evidence" upon the question before the court. This provision is contained in the first subdivision of the section; the other subdivisions referring to removals or suspensions for other causes. Section 289 provides that:

> "The proceedings to remove or suspend an attorney and counselor, under the first subdivision of section two hundred and eighty-seven, must be taken by the court on the receipt of a certified copy of the record of conviction."

It is also to the effect:

> That proceedings under some of the other subdivisions, naming them, "may be taken by the court for the matters within its knowledge, or may be taken upon the information of another."

Section 290 provides:

> "If the proceedings are upon the information of another, the accusation must be in writing."

Section 292 is, in part:

> "Upon receiving the accusation, the court shall make an order requiring the accused to appear and answer it at a specified time, and shall cause a copy of the order and of the accusation to be served upon the accused at least five days before the day appointed in the order."

Under these sections proceedings for removal or suspension are divided into two classes. The first of these includes, alone, proceedings based upon convictions of felonies or misdemeanors, involving moral turpitude. The second class includes two subclasses: First, those proceedings to be taken for matters within the knowledge of the court; and, second, those which may be taken upon the information of another. Certainly it appears to us, whether notice is required in proceedings under both subclasses of the second class, or whether it is not, it is clear that no notice is required in proceedings of the first class. The provision as to proceedings of that class, to the effect that the record of conviction shall be conclusive evidence, is strongly persuasive of the question alone; and when we look to section 292, which provides with particularity for notice in certain cases, all doubt vanishes. That section does not require notice in a case such as we now have before us. In every case, under section 292, a copy of the accusation must be served on the accused, and there can be no copy of an accusation not in writing. There is nothing in any of the sections which calls for a written accusation where an attorney is sought to be removed for conviction of a felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; and neither written accusation nor notice would seem to be necessary, looking at the question in the abstract, because of the proviso that the record of conviction is conclusive evidence in such cases. In a proceeding of that class there is but one question to be determined by the court: Was moral turpitude involved in the crime as to which the conviction resulted? That is purely a legal question, one which the Legislature evidently determined to leave to the courts without the aid of argument, and one which it might very properly, so far as we can perceive, leave to be settled in that manner.

[3] There is another reason why the objection that petitioner had no notice of his impending disbarment is without weight here. He concedes that the only point as to which notice would have availed him anything, or as to which he could have been heard, was the question whether the crime he committed involves moral turpitude. He has now had a hearing upon that question and we have resolved it against him. Therefore our determination, arrived at when the order for disbarment was made, was correct. It would be idle now to set that action aside, even if our view upon the question of the necessity for notice were different from that which we have above set forth. This proceeding, to the extent that it is an assault upon the validity of the order for disbarment, calls for a review of that order, it is true; but it is not a review of, or an appeal from, an order of a lower tribunal, for technical error in the making of which a reversal will result. We are passing upon an order of our own, and our only duty, so far as this branch of the present proceeding is concerned, is to determine whether that order was right in substance.

[4] The next objection made to the validity of the disbarment order is that petitioner could not have been removed legally upon a conviction in the United States court. To state it more broadly, the position of petitioner is that a removal or suspension under subdivision 1 of section 287 of the Code can only result where the conviction mentioned in the subdivision arises from a prosecution in a California court. This contention is based upon the language of section 288, which is as follows:

> "In case of the conviction of an attorney or counselor of a felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, the clerk of the court in which such conviction is had shall, within thirty days thereafter, transmit to the Supreme Court a certified copy of the record of conviction."

It is asserted that the record mentioned in this section is the only record which can be used in a proceeding under subdivision 1 of section 287; and in stating his argument on the point counsel for petitioner says that the California Legislature has no power to order a record of conviction to be sent to the Supreme Court except from a California court. This latter statement is perfectly sound, and its truth is a conclusive reason for the Legislature not having attempted to order records of conviction from federal courts or from the courts of other states. But the fact that the Legislature could not compel the production of such records from other jurisdictions has no bearing upon the right, the power, the duty, of the lawmaking body to authorize the courts to consider outside records of conviction if produced in any other way than through obedience to legislative enactment. Subdivision 1 of section 287 is general in its terms, and that would seem to be sufficient. It makes "records of conviction," without limitation as to the place of their origin, conclusive evidence of the question before the court, and it provides for disbarment or suspension for conviction of a felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude in the most general terms and without any limitation whatever as to the jurisdiction in which the conviction is secured. Not only is the section apparently all-inclusive in the respects mentioned, but there is convincing reason behind its existence in that form. A crime committed by a California lawyer in Nevada or Massachusetts is just as bad, involves as high a degree of moral turpitude, affects as greatly the desirability of his retention in the legal profession, as if the same crime were committed in California. Imaginery lines on the surface of the globe do not affect the character of acts done to the north or south or to the east or west of them. We have not considered the question whether subdivision 1 of section 287 would be unconstitutional if we were forced to construe it as petitioner insists we should, for such a labor is unnecessary, and the question is not argued; but there is something essentially unequal, unfair, and unjust in the idea that a California lawyer committing a crime within the state may be put beyond the pale of the profession by summary proceeding, while one of his brethren committing the same or a worse crime immediately beyond the Nevada border or on a vessel at sea immediately outside the three-mile limit, on the California coast, may not be removed in like manner. These considerations throw light upon the intention of the Legislature, although its intention, indeed, seems to be shown plainly by the very language of subdivision 1. By the adoption of section 288 the Legislature evinced its purpose to aid in the enforcement of subdivision 1 of section 287 to the extent that its authority permitted, leaving the production of records of conviction from other jurisdictions to be procured in some other manner. In announcing this position we are not overlooking the fact that section 288 has been slightly changed in phraseology since its original adoption in 1872. There has been no alteration in the section which aids the question of construction here presented.

We have now made disposition of all questions involving the validity of the order of disbarment. There is but one other point left to us. Petitioner asks for a reinstatement in the profession because of his good moral character, and affidavits and petitions from lawyers and judges are presented in that behalf. It will be noted that the petition was filed a little over three years after the commission of Shepard's crime, two years and a half after his sentence, one year after his conviction became final by decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, seven months after his disbarment, six months after he began his imprisonment, and three months after he concluded it. The affidavits presented in support of the application for reinstatement cover generally, in the main, his conduct since the commission of the crime. There is in them no particular attempt to make a segregation of the question as between times before and times since his disbarment.

In considering this question it may be well to state more fully the nature of Shepard's offense, as the facts naturally do not appear upon the record of conviction. We quote from the opinion of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, rendered in disposing of his writ of error to that tribunal (Shepard v. United States, 236 Feb. 73, 75, 149 C. C. A. 283, 285):

> "In July, 1914, plaintiff in error was retained as attorney at law to represent and to obtain bail for certain persons who were lodged in the county jail in Los Angeles, charged with the crime of conspiracy to import opium into the United States from Mexico in violation of the laws of the United States. One A. C. Brown was also employed by the same persons for the purpose of obtaining such bail. In connection with their efforts to secure bail, and at the instance of their clients, plaintiff in error and Brown proceeded to Tia Juana, just over the boundary line in the republic of Mexico, where they found 40 five-tael cans of smoking opium which had been concealed by their clients. This opium Brown proceeded to dispose of in Tia Juana for either $32 or $34 per can, making a total sum of either $1,280 or $1,360, and, after deducting his proportion of the proceeds in accordance with a previous understanding with their clients, Brown delivered the balance of $1,000 to plaintiff in error. A second lot of 53 or 54 cans, concealed in the same vicinity, was searched for, but not found by the plaintiff in error. It appears, however, that a quantity of opium was found in that neighborhood by the defendant Brown and sold. A third lot was found by the plaintiff in error and the defendant Brown, concealed near Jacumba, in Mexico, about 76 miles east of San Diego, near the boundary line. The defendant Brown subsequently brought this lot to or near Los Angeles, in California, where it was concealed for a time."

[5] It will be noted from this quotation that the petitioner's offense was committed in connection with opium which his clients had concealed near the Mexican border, and that those clients were at the time in jail, charged with the very offense which Shepard also committed in and about their affairs. We cite these circumstances to show the petitioner's familiarity with the nature of his acts and with the danger he incurred in performing them. It is also to be noted that his offense was committed in connection with the practice of his profession, and did not relate to matters distinct from his work as a lawyer. What reputable member of the profession can see himself going from Los Angeles to the Mexican border upon the quest on which Shepard went and doing what he did? Under such circumstances as these, Shepard should not be restored to the right to practice law until he has lived, for some considerable time, a life of exemplary conduct in all that pertains to his relations with his fellow men. It is too early for his request for reinstatement to be favorably considered, even assuming that at some time it might be so considered.

[6] In one or two of the affidavits in the record the statement is made that the petitioner has been punished enough, as if a disbarment were punitive in character. It is not. The removal of an attorney's name from the rolls of the profession is a measure protective in character, in a certain sense protective of the profession, but in a higher sense protective of the public which finds it necessary to resort to the services of lawyers. No one not a lawyer can fully realize the opportunities for undiscovered peculation, graft, and embezzlement which are afforded the practitioner at the bar. No one not a lawyer can so well understand the degree to which the public is entitled to protection from dishonesty in the profession. When a member of the profession has been found lacking in the requisites which go to make him a helper to his clients and has been discovered to possess aims, views, and purposes which indicate a moral obliquity in him, and which might make his clients his victims, it is well that he were removed from the possibility of doing them harm. When he has been once disbarred, a mistaken charity should not restore him to his position. That restoration should only come when he has lived long enough after his disbarment in honorable intercourse with his fellow citizens to demonstrate that he is both tried and true.

The petitioner's application for a reinstatement is denied.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

---

35 Cal. App. 439

CARR v. SACRAMENTO CLAY PRODUCTS CO. (Civ. 1723.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 3, 1917. Rehearing Denied Jan. 2, 1918. Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 31, 1918.)

1. CONTRACTS 🔑92—PERSONS NOT ADJUDGED INSANE—STATUTES.

Under Civ. Code, § 39, providing that a conveyance or other contract of a person of unsound mind, but not entirely without understanding, made before his incapacity had been judicially determined, is subject to rescission as provided in the chapter on rescission, to rescind a contract, it is not necessary for a person to be incompetent to make any kind of a contract or to transact any business, however simple, but the test is: Was the party mentally competent to deal with the subject before him with a full understanding of his rights? Did he actually understand the nature, purpose, and effect of the contract?

2. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1009(2)—REVIEW—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

In determining whether a trial court was justified in finding that a servant seeking to rescind a release for injuries was mentally incompetent under Civ. Code, § 39, the evidence must be regarded in the light most favorable to such conclusion.

3. RELEASE 🔑57(1)—RESCISSION — MENTAL CAPACITY.

Evidence held to sustain a finding that a servant executing a release for injuries was not mentally competent under Civ. Code, § 39, and that the release should be canceled.

4. RELEASE 🔑17(2)—"ACTUAL FRAUD."

An agent obtaining a release from a servant by figuring the amount under the Employers' Liability Act (St. 1911, p. 796) when the master had elected not to accept the act, and telling him that the amount he so figured was all he could get, and the servant believed him, there was actual fraud, defined by Civ. Code, § 1572, warranting rescission.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Actual Fraud.]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1009(2)—REVIEW OF EVIDENCE—WEIGHT—FRAUD.

The rule that the evidence to warrant impeachment of a release of damages for personal injuries should be clear and convincing is for the guidance of the trial court and jury, and not for an appellate court, which only considers the sufficiency of the evidence as in other cases.

6. Release 🔑17(2)—Fraud—Statement of Fact—Opinion of Law.

A statement by a master that under the Employers' Liability Act the servant was entitled only to a certain amount was in effect a statement that the master had accepted the compensatory provision, and, if false, was fraud based on statement of fact, and not opinion of law.

7. Release 🔑16—Validity — "Mistake of Law."

Where a master obtaining a release from an injured servant knew the law, and knew that a servant erroneously believed he was only entitled to a certain amount under the Employers' Liability Act, there was a mistake of law entitling the servant to rescission of the release, under Civ. Code, § 1578, providing that where there is a misapprehension of the law by one party of which the others are aware, which they do not rectify, there may be ground for setting aside a contract; especially where the servant was mentally weak.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Mistake of Law.]

8. Release 🔑19—Validity—Undue Influence.

Where a servant is rendered mentally weak by injury, and is deeply in debt, has no credit, and cannot work, and is notified to move his family from his dwelling, a release obtained from him at an inadequate amount, there being withholding of facts and misrepresentation, will not be regarded with favor in equity, and it is immaterial whether the master knew of the mental condition, under Civ. Code, § 1575, relating to undue influence.

9. Cancellation of Instruments 🔑34(3)—"Laches"—Advice of Attorney.

A servant who delayed bringing action to rescind a release of damages for some months by reason of advice of a reputable attorney that he had no case cannot be held guilty of laches, where the master's position was not changed, and action was brought within three weeks after advice by another attorney that he had a case; laches in legal significance not being mere delay, but delay that works a disadvantage to another, depending on the peculiar circumstances of each case.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Laches.]

10. Appeal and Error 🔑1009(1)—Review—Laches.

The question of laches in bringing an action is primarily a question of fact for the trial court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Martin I. Welsh, Judge.

Action by E. G. Carr against the Sacramento Clay Products Company, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Myrick & Deering and James Walter Scott, all of San Francisco, for appellant. Downey, Pullen & Downey and Donald McKisick, all of Sacramento, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was for damages resulting from an injury suffered by plaintiff through the negligence of defendant. The cause was tried before the court without a jury, and the plaintiff was awarded the sum of $7,500, and the appeal is from the judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial. It is not disputed that the evidence was sufficient to justify a finding that the defendant was negligent as charged in the complaint. In fact the court found that it was a case of gross negligence, and this finding is not attacked. There is no claim that plaintiff was chargeable with contributory negligence, nor is there any contention that the amount awarded is excessive. The only points insisted upon by appellant are that it has been released from all liability for the accident by virtue of the payment of a certain sum of money to plaintiff in accordance with an agreement executed by the parties hereto, and that plaintiff was guilty of laches in rescinding said release. It will be necessary, therefore, to set out the facts only in so far as they bear upon these defenses. As to the alleged release the court found:

> "That plaintiff signed said alleged release on August 29, 1913, at the request of defendant; that said defendant at said time for the purpose of inducing plaintiff to execute said alleged release, and in order to obtain from plaintiff a release of all liability to plaintiff on account of injuries sustained by plaintiff through the negligence of defendant on or about the 19th day of July, 1913, willfully, falsely, and fraudulently represented to plaintiff that defendant's liability to plaintiff was limited by law to 65 per cent. of plaintiff's wages for a period of 12 weeks and $100 hospital, medical, and surgical bills, and that there was in existence in California a law limiting defendant's liability to plaintiff to $217. The court finds that plaintiff did rely upon said representations and each of them, and did believe said representations and each of them to be true, and by reason of believing and relying upon said representations and each of them did sign said alleged release; that said representations and each of them so made as aforesaid were false, fraudulent, and untrue, and were known to defendant to be false, fraudulent, and untrue when made; that the consideration, to wit, $217, paid to plaintiff by defendant for said alleged release, was grossly inadequate consideration; that on the date of the signing of said alleged release by plaintiff and for some time prior thereto, and continuously subsequent thereto, to wit, until about the 1st day of May, 1914, plaintiff was by reason of bodily injuries and because of surgical operations and of sickness, worries, and troubles, of great weakness of mind, and was so enfeebled and weakened mentally and physically that he did not have sufficient mental capacity or sufficient physical energy to transact the business of negotiating said alleged release, and he did not have sufficient mental capacity to understand the nature, purpose, and effect of said alleged contract of release or of the rights arising in his favor because of said personal injury by him sustained on July 19, 1913; that defendant well knew on said 29th day of August, 1913, of said weak mental and physical condition of plaintiff, but nevertheless induced plaintiff to sign said alleged release, and insisted that plaintiff sign said alleged release; that on or about the 1st of April, 1914, plaintiff first became aware of the facts which entitled him to rescind said alleged release, and first became aware of his right to rescind said alleged release."

Then follows a finding that within a reasonable time thereafter plaintiff rescinded said release and offered to return the $217, together with interest thereon. The foregoing constitute the only findings that are seriously contested herein by appellant. It is claimed by respondent, in the first place, that by reason of weakened mentality and of his inability to understand the nature, purpose, and effect of said release Carr, by virtue of the provisions of section 39 of the Civil Code and in harmony with the decisions construing said section, was authorized and permitted to rescind the release and to be restored to his former status. Said section provides:

> "A conveyance or other contract of a person of unsound mind but not entirely without understanding, made before his incapacity has been judicially determined, is subject to rescission, as provided in the chapter on rescission of this Code."

[1, 2] It is contended—and rightly so—that to avail himself of this statutory remedy, it is not necessary for a person to be incompetent to make any kind of a contract or to transact any business, however simple, but the test is: Was the party mentally competent to deal with the subject before him with a full understanding of his rights? U. P. Ry. Co. v. Harris, 158 U. S. 326, 15 Sup. Ct. 843, 39 L. Ed. 1003. Did he actually understand the nature, purpose, and effect of the contract? Jacks v. Deering, 150 Cal. 272, 88 Pac. 909; Perkins v. Sunset Tel. & Tel. Co., 155 Cal. 712, 103 Pac. 190; Edmunds v. Southern Pacific Co., 18 Cal. App. 532, 123 Pac. 811. Such is the question to be determined by the court or jury, and if there is found in the evidence any rational ground for holding that the person executing the release was thus mentally deficient his contract may be avoided. In determining whether the court was justified in so finding as to Carr, we must, of course, regard the evidence in the light most favorable to such conclusion.

His physician, Dr. Charles B. McKee, testified that plaintiff was suffering from traumatic hysteria, bordering on melancholia; that he complained of disorders in digestion, did not sleep well, did not care for social intercourse with friends or relatives, was depressed, had financial worries, did not seem to carry on conversation to any extent, "on account of his injury which resulted in more or less depression—traumatic hysteria; for that reason I do not think that the man was in a position to judge the result of the form of this contract"; his nervous condition had some effect upon his will power; "his mental condition was certainly abnormal" from August 15, 1913, to May, 1914. An expert witness for the defendant, Dr. Dargitz, in answer to a hypothetical question based upon facts as testified to by plaintiff's witnesses, declared that such condition might result in traumatic neurosis, and that in his opinion "a person afflicted with traumatic neurosis would not be competent to transact business if the affliction was very well defined." Mrs. Carr, plaintiff's wife, testified that normally her husband was a jolly, healthy, sociable man, but predisposed to nervous disorder; "at times he was almost bordering on insanity"; just before the accident his mental condition was good; shortly after leaving the hospital the first time and before the release was given he became depressed and declined to converse with her. He would shun his neighbors, whom he had previously been glad to see; he took no interest in home matters, and neglected his personal appearance; "he was nervous, forgetful, stupid, and dull, and would hardly sleep. At the time the release was executed he was morbid and melancholy, and did not seem to be in a fit condition to transact business of any importance." She further testified that this condition continued until a short time before the trial. Carr himself testified to certain facts along the same line.

[3] It is true that certain circumstances were elicited by appellant tending strongly to a contrary conclusion, but we think the evidence is such that we are precluded from disturbing the finding of the trial court. No doubt the complexity of the situation involving serious legal propositions, such as the doctrine of actionable negligence and the interpretation of certain provisions of the Employers' Liability Act of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 796), was carefully considered by the trial judge in determining the competency of Carr's impaired intelligence to understand the nature and effect of the release.

[4] Again there is reason for the contention of respondent that the release was fraudulent under section 1572 of the Civil Code, as virtually found by the court. The plaintiff testified in reference to the transaction as follows:

> "Mr. Ayre went and figured out and said I was entitled to 12 weeks, 65 per cent. of my wages for 12 weeks, and wanted to know what I thought in regard to it. I told him that I was not satisfied. Mr. Walton spoke up; he says: 'Don't you think you will get well in that time?' I told him I hadn't any information of my being well; I had no authority on it; and he went to work and cited a case which was either his grandson or his own son that had a fracture of the forearm and went back to work in 12 weeks. Mr. Ayre said in addition to the 65 per cent. of my wages they would pay the hospital bill which was $96.40, and he says in no event do we allow more than $100 for hospital and medical fees, and said that I was getting all that I was entitled to under the act, which was 12 weeks; he said, 65 per cent. of my wages for 12 weeks was all I was entitled to under the act. He said—he took out his watch and looked at it, he said he would have to catch the train for San Francisco at 3:30; he says to hurry, 'Do you want to take that, or do you want to sue the company?' 'Now,' he says, 'if you sue the company, it will be a long drawn out proposition, aside from that we have a signed statement from the foreman that it was entirely your own fault you got hurt.' I did not see any use in my beginning suit against the company when I was only entitled to 12 weeks' pay at 65 per cent., so therefore I, under those conditions, why, I did not see where I had any advantage in bringing a suit, and settled. I certainly believed the statement Mr. Ayre made to me."

Mr. Ayre was familiar with said Employers' Liability Law, and he knew that appellant had not elected to accept the compensatory provision of that act, and that neither party was subject to that portion of the law. He knew that plaintiff was not restricted for his damages to 65 per cent. of his wages during a period of 12 weeks, and he was acquainted with the laws relating to personal injury and the right of plaintiff to damages as it existed in this state at that time. On the other hand, plaintiff testified that he was entirely ignorant of all these matters. We must therefore accept this as the situation: The representations, as found by the court, were made by appellant, as to the compensation to which respondent was entitled said representations were false and known by appellant to be false, and they were made for the purpose of deceiving respondent, plaintiff relied upon said representations, and he was induced thereby to execute the release in question. Thus is the case brought within the provisions of said section 1572.

[5] Against this conclusion the point is made that "a contract of settlement, like any other written contract, can only be impeached for fraud by clear and convincing evidence." No doubt such is the case, but the rule is for the guidance of the jury or trial judge, and it has no place in the consideration of an appellate court. Therein no difference between this class of cases and others is recognized as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding. Mattson v. Eureka Cedar Lumber & Shingle Co., 79 Wash. 266, 140 Pac. 377.

[6] It is contended also that if any misrepresentation was made it merely related to a question of law, which cannot be regarded as fraudulent. But as pointed out by respondent, the representations may be considered as involving a matter of fact because they implied that defendant had accepted the optional compensatory features of said Employers' Liability Act, and therefore the statement that said law limited the liability of defendant—which under some circumstances might be the expression of a mere opinion not constituting the basis for an action—was herein a false and fraudulent statement of a condition that did not exist. The representations of appellant were in effect, therefore, the same as though it had positively stated to respondent that the former had accepted said compensatory provisions, and therefore its liability was limited as provided in said act, and hence it cannot be said that we are dealing with a mere matter of opinion or question of law. Neither can it be doubted that the representations were such that respondent was justified in relying upon them. The matter was peculiarly within the knowledge of appellant, and the circumstances surrounding the transaction did not exact of respondent the duty of making an independent investigation. In some cases, of course, a party relies upon false representations at his peril, but we are not confronted with that situation. Our attention has been called to a long number of cases supporting respondent's position, but it is sufficient probably to cite Brandt v. Krogh, 14 Cal. App. 39, 111 Pac. 275; Browne v. San Gabriel River Rock Co., 22 Cal. App. 682, 136 Pac. 542, 544; Henry v. Continental Bldg., etc., Ass'n, 156 Cal. 667, 105 Pac. 960; Barron Estate Co. v. Woodruff Co., 163 Cal. 561, 126 Pac. 351, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 125; MacDonald v. De Fremery, 168 Cal. 189, 142 Pac. 73; Woods v. Wikstrom, 67 Or. 581, 135 Pac. 192.

In the Henry Case, supra, it is said:

> "A party inducing another to contract in reliance upon estimates or opinions professedly based upon alleged facts known to the party stating them to be nonexistent will not be permitted to escape responsibility by the plea that he was merely declaring his opinion."

In the Barron Estate Co. Case the following from Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence is quoted with approval:

> "Whenever a party states a matter which might otherwise be only an opinion, and does not state it as the mere expression of his own opinion, but offers it as an existing fact material to the transaction so that the other party may reasonably treat it as a fact and rely and act upon it as such, then the statement clearly becomes an affirmation of fact within the meaning of the general rule, and may be a fraudulent misrepresentation."

So it is true, as held in many cases, that the affirmation of belief is an affirmation of a fact, that is, of the fact of belief, and if it is "fraudulently made to mislead or cheat another to abuse his confidence, or to blind his judgment, it is in law and morals just as reprehensible as if any other fact were affirmed for the same purpose."

[7] Furthermore, under section 1578 of the Civil Code, "mistake of law" may be a ground for setting aside a contract. The right may exist where there is a "misapprehension of the law by one party, of which the others are aware at the time of contracting, but which they do not rectify." There was ground for the trial court to conclude that Carr was ignorant of the law as already indicated, and that appellant had the information furnished by the statute, and the latter made no effort to rectify the former's mistake and misapprehension. The situation was emphasized, furthermore, by the circumstance that Carr was of impaired mentality, and appellant not only failed to inform him of his rights, but intentionally deceived him as to the remedies available to him. As to this legal proposition, a host of witnesses might be summoned, but it can hardly be disputed. The matter is pretty fully covered by the quotation from Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, vol. 2, § 847:

> "The scope and limitations of this doctrine may be summed up in the proposition that a misapprehension of the law by one party of which the others are aware at the time of the entering into the transaction, but which they do not rectify, is a sufficient ground for equitable relief. A court of equity will not permit one party to take advantage and enjoy the benefit of an ignorance or mistake of a law by the other, which he knew of and did not correct. While equity interposes under such circumstances it follows a fortiori that when the mistake of law by one party is induced, aided or accompanied by conduct of the other more positively inequitable, and containing elements of wrongful intent, such as misrepresentation, imposition, concealment, undue influence, breach of confidence reposed, mental weakness, or surprise, a court of equity will lend its aid and relieve from the consequences of the error."

[8] Another consideration, suggested, indeed, by what has gone before, is sufficient to justify the court's action in setting aside said contract. It is embraced within the provisions of section 1575 of the Civil Code, and is denominated "undue influence." Such reason for relieving a party of his apparent contract may be found where one takes "an unfair advantage of another's weakness of mind" or "a grossly oppressive and unfair advantage of another's necessities or distress."

That plaintiff was enfeebled mentally and physically is a rational conclusion from the evidence. It further appears that he was in great financial distress. He was unable to work, and had no financial resources. His wife was trying to keep the family alive by baking bread for the neighbors. Notice had been given him that he would be ejected from his home. He had no credit, and on the day the release was executed he had less than a dollar in the house. It appears that his hospital bill was $96.40, and the physicians' charge was $447. These things and others show, indeed, beyond question, not only that he was financially embarrassed, but that he was in the "very depths of despair." And it may be said with equal propriety that there was ground for holding that appellant took an unfair advantage of his necessities. The method employed in securing the release, the misrepresentations that were made, the concealment of certain facts, the withholding of information as to the legal rights of plaintiff, and the inadequacy of the consideration are all circumstances, among others, pointing to the conclusion that the conduct of appellant was unconscionable, and it could not be regarded with favor by a court of equity.

It is true that the law does not discourage settlements of controversies by agreement, and is disposed as far as possible to uphold them, but it is equally ready to relieve parties from fraud and imposition through which they have been induced to barter away their rights. In cases like this especially, where the opportunity for overreaching is so great the law demands good faith on the part of the releasee and a full understanding on the part of the person injured as to his legal rights. Kansas City R. Co. v. Chiles, 86 Miss. 361, 38 South. 498; Mattson v. Shingle Co., 79 Wash. 266, 140 Pac. 377; McGrail v. Jersey Central Traction Co., 84 N. J. Eq. 261, 94 Atl. 81; Edmunds v. Southern Pacific Co., 18 Cal. App. 532, 123 Pac. 811; Russell v. Dayton Coal & Iron Co., 109 Tenn. 43, 70 S. W. 1. In passing from this consideration we may state that it is manifestly immaterial whether plaintiff was actually physically incapable of transacting said business as found by the court. The important inquiry was as to his mental condition. Nor to support the judgment is it necessary to hold that appellant had actual knowledge of respondent's mental condition when the release was executed.

[9] As to the defense of laches, neither can it be said that the court's finding is unsupported. Attention is called by respondent to these facts: Some time in November or December, 1913, Carr and his wife read a newspaper article concerning the Employers' Liability Act of 1911. This article stated that an employer was obliged to pay 65 per cent. of the average weekly wages of an injured employé for a period depending on the length of disability. Carr thereupon consulted with an attorney, one W. T. Phipps, and the deputy labor commissioner, Mr. Blair. Mr. Phipps investigated the situation, found out that appellant had not elected to become subject to the compensatory provisions of said act, and that respondent had executed the release, and he advised Carr that he had no case; that he had better not "throw good money after bad." Respondent in following the advice of an attorney of the standing of Mr. Phipps can hardly be said to be guilty of inexcusable neglect. In his condition of ignorance of the law, he was justified, therefore, in doing nothing further until at least he had reason to doubt the soundness of Mr. Phipps' opinion. But in the last of February, 1914, Mrs. Carr again read the clippings and consulted another attorney, Donald McKisick, who seems to have encouraged her in the matter, and after a consultation with Mr. Downey, the two attorneys reached the conclusion, and so advised Mr. Carr about the 1st of April, that he had a right to rescind the release. On the 3d of April following Mr. Downey wrote a letter to defendant repudiating on behalf of Mr. Carr the release, and asking that the matter be adjusted. On the 10th of April a letter containing a definite refusal to do anything further in the matter and an avowal to stand upon said release and to defend any action that might be brought by plaintiff was received from defendant. Notice of rescission was served on defendant April 23d following. Subsequently it developed that the full amount of the consideration for the release was not stated in the notice, and another notice stating the correct amount was served May 16, 1914, and suit was brought June 10, 1914.

[10] In view of the foregoing, it cannot be said that plaintiff's delay was unreasonable. He acted promptly after ascertaining that he had a right to rescind. According to the testimony of Mr. Downey it was about the 1st of April when he informed Mr. Carr that he had a right to rescind, and there was, therefore, a delay of only about three weeks in giving the notice of rescission. This was certainly a case of acting with reasonable expedition after he was actually aware of his right to rescind. Hannah v. Steinman, 159 Cal. 142, 112 Pac. 1094. Whether or not a reasonable time has elapsed is a question of fact primarily to be determined by the trial court, and the solution of the question depends upon the particular circumstances of each case. Suhr v. Lauterbach, 164 Cal. 591, 130 Pac. 2. One important feature to be regarded is the consideration whether any damage has been suffered by reason of the delay. Cahill v. Superior Court, 145 Cal. 42, 78 Pac. 467. A delay of a short period may bar the right to rescind by reason of the prejudice caused thereby, but on the other hand relief may be granted after several years. 16 Cyc. 156. Laches in legal significance is not mere delay, but delay that works a disadvantage to another. Chase v. Chase, 20 R. I. 202, 37 Atl. 804. It is manifest that in the case at bar the defendant was not prejudiced in any manner by the delay. It did not change its status. Indeed, no circumstance was disclosed that would make it inequitable to set aside said release upon the grounds hereinbefore stated.

It would certainly be an unusual thing for this court to hold that under the circumstances as detailed by the witnesses for respondent his delay constituted such laches as to bar him from the right to bring an action or to rescind said release.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

(177 Cal. 278)

SICKLES et al. v. MT. WHITNEY POWER & ELECTRIC CO. et al. (Sac. 2468.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 23, 1918.)

1. ELECTRICITY ⊂⇒16(4) — COMPLIANCE WITH STATUTE—NEGLIGENCE.

That an electric company operating a power line and a telephone line constructed them as far apart as required by St. 1911, p. 1037, does not necessarily render it free from negligence in maintaining them at such distance.

2. TRIAL ⊂⇒260(2) — INSTRUCTIONS COVERED BY OTHER INSTRUCTIONS.

It was not error to refuse instructions as to an issue amply covered by instructions given.

3. ELECTRICITY ⊂⇒16(4)—NEGLIGENCE—ACTS OF ANOTHER—NOTICE—CONSENT.

Where an electric company operating a telephone line and a power line knew of and consented to another company moving its telephone line to a position near its power line, it is liable for damage done by reason of their subsequently coming in contact with each other and burning a house.

4. TRIAL ⊂⇒328—JOINT TORT-FEASORS—VERDICT FAVORING ONE.

Where two electric companies are equally liable for damages done by wires coming in contact, one cannot complain that verdict was returned against it alone, because each was independently liable and the jury can find for one defendant and against the other.

5. DAMAGES ⊂⇒111—MEASURE OF DAMAGES—TORTS.

Where by reason of negligence of an electric company, plaintiff's house was burnt, the measure of damages under Civ. Code, § 3333, was the value of the property destroyed.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Action by Harry E. Sickles and others against the Mt. Whitney Power & Electric Company, a corporation, and the San Joaquin Light & Power Corporation, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiffs against the first defendant, and it appeals. Affirmed.

Farnsworth & McClure and Power & McFadzean, all of Visalia, for appellant. Murry & Knapp, of Porterville, Goodfellow, Eells, Moore & Orrick, of San Francisco, and Short & Sutherland, of Fresno, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. This is an appeal by the Mt. Whitney Power & Electric Company from a judgment, after verdict against it and in favor of the respondents, plaintiffs, and defendant San Joaquin Light & Power Corporation.

The appellant was operating a power line carrying an electrical current of 33,000 volts and also a telephone line using 100 volts. For some distance these lines were parallel. The high voltage electric line came in contact with the telephone line, the electricity passed along the telephone line and into a private line owned by the plaintiff Sickles, then to his house, causing it to catch fire and be destroyed. Plaintiffs claim that the appellant was negligent in maintaining its two lines so close together that they came in contact. The appellant claims that the plaintiff Sickles was guilty of contributory negligence in maintaining his private telephone wire so close to the appellant's telephone wire that they came into contact. The damages claimed are for the destruction of the house and its contents. The question of negligence and of contributory negligence were submitted to the jury under proper instructions.

[1, 2] The appellant contends that, inasmuch as the power line and the telephone line owned by it were constructed four feet apart, as required by statute (Stats. 1911, p. 1037), it was not guilty of negligence in the construction thereof, and that as they were maintained at the same distance apart there was no negligence in the maintenance thereof. This assumption is erroneous, for the reason that while it is true that a violation of a statute is negligence per se, it does not follow that one who has complied with the statute is therefore not guilty of negligence. The most familiar illustration of this rule is the matter of the violation of speed laws. It is held that, although one is driving at a speed less than the statutory limit, it does not follow that he is not guilty of negligence. The question is whether under all the circumstances the speed at which the person is traveling is negligence, and that is a question for the jury. Cook v. Miller, 166 Pac. 316. There was evidence justifying the finding of the jury that there was negligence, both on the theory that the said statute was violated in the construction and maintenance of said lines nearer than four feet, and also in permitting the wires to be maintained sufficiently close together so that they came in contact. The question whether the injury was caused by an act of God, or was contributed to by the negligence of the plaintiff, was submitted to the jury, and the decision thereon was adverse to the defendant and is conclusive here. The subject of contributory negligence was amply covered by the instructions given. It was not error, therefore, to refuse appellant's instruction B on that subject.

[3, 4] It is claimed by appellant that the defendant San Joaquin Light & Power Company was equally responsible with the appellant, by reason of the fact that it moved the telephone line of the appellant from its location on the opposite side of the road to its position near and parallel to the power line of the appellant, but appellant had notice of its removal and consented thereto; and, even if the jury erroneously decided in favor of the San Joaquin Light & Power Company, or the court erred in refusing to grant its motion for nonsuit, appellant cannot complain of that fact, nor of instruction 18 favoring said defendant, for its liability was entirely independent. Fowden v. Pacific Coast Steamship Co., 149 Cal. 151, 86 Pac. 178; Fearon v. Fodera, 169 Cal. 370, 148 Pac. 200, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 312. It is proper for a jury to find for one defendant and against the other defendant. Section 578, Code Civ. Proc.; Fowden v. Pacific Coast Steamship Co., supra.

[5] It was not error for the court to instruct the jury that the measure of damages was the "value" of the property destroyed. Section 3333, Civ. Code; Sutherland, Damages (4th Ed.) par. 105.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.

---

177 Cal. 264

MOHR v. NORTH RAWHIDE MINING & DEVELOPMENT CO. et al. (Sac. 2469.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 19, 1918.)

1. Appeal and Error ⚿704(2)—Failure to Make Finding—Reversible Error.

Upon an appeal on the judgment roll alone, the contention that the court erred in not making findings as to affirmative defense set up in defendants' answer cannot be sustained, in the absence of a showing that evidence was offered in support thereof.

2. Mines and Minerals ⚿38(24) — Findings—Sufficiency.

Although the court made a finding outside of the issues to the effect that plaintiff agreed to transfer his interest to defendant for a specified sum, where the court also found that there had been no payment or tender of such sum, or any part thereof, it cannot be said that the findings did not support a judgment declaring plaintiff to be the owner of an undivided interest in the mining claim.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Action by A. C. Mohr against the North Rawhide Mining & Development Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff and certain defendants appeal. Affirmed.

E. W. Holland, of Sonora, for appellants. Wm. M. Sims, of San Francisco, and Rowan Hardin, of Sonora, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The defendants the North Rawhide Mining & Development Company and Richard Chute appeal from a judgment declaring that the plaintiff is the owner of an undivided interest in a certain mining claim. The theory of the complaint was that the claim, which was originally owned by the Coast Development Company, was sold on execution; that the sheriff's deed was made to Chute, who took title in trust for the plaintiff and other execution creditors of said Coast Development Company; and that the appellant corporation took a conveyance of the claim from Chute with notice of plaintiff's equitable interest. The findings followed the averments of the complaint.

The appeal is on the judgment roll alone. The appellants seek a reversal on two grounds:

[1] 1. It is claimed that the court should have made findings with respect to an affirmative defense set up in the answer. This point cannot be raised on the record before us. In the absence of a showing that evidence was offered in support of an issue tendered by the defendant, failure to find thereon will not be held ground for reversing a judgment which is supported by the findings made. Himmelman v. Henry, 84 Cal. 104, 23 Pac. 1098; Winslow v. Gohransen, 88 Cal. 450, 26 Pac. 504; Roberts v. Hall, 147 Cal. 434, 82 Pac. 66; Schoonover v. Birnbaum, 150 Cal. 734, 89 Pac. 1108; Coats v. Coats, 160 Cal. 671, 679, 118 Pac. 441, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 844.

[2] 2. But, say the appellants, the findings actually made do not support the judgment. The court found that the plaintiff and Chute had made a written agreement regarding plaintiff's interest in the property, and it is claimed that this agreement destroyed plaintiff's right to assert ownership. If the finding, which is entirely outside the issues, may be considered at all (Hall v. Arnott, 80 Cal. 348, 22 Pac. 200; Griffith v. Happersberger, 86 Cal. 605, 25 Pac. 137, 487; Rudel v. L. A. County, 118 Cal. 281, 50 Pac. 400), it was in no way inconsistent with the conclusions of law and judgment. By the writing in question the plaintiff simply agreed to transfer his interest in the mine to Chute, on payment of some $4,300. The court found further, however, that no payment or tender of this amount, or any part thereof, had ever been made to the plaintiff. The transaction did not, therefore, deprive the plaintiff of his interest in the claim.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.

(177 Cal. 266)

In re FRASER'S ESTATE.

FRASER et al. v. LUMBARD et al.

(Sac. 2689.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 22, 1918.)

WILLS ⚿55(1) — MENTAL INCAPACITY—PROOF.

Evidence held so insufficient to show testamentary incapacity as to warrant a nonsuit in an action to set aside the probate of a will.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Daniel Fraser, deceased. Proceedings by James Alexander Fraser, Tillie Fraser, Adeline Gunnarson, and Jessie Burston against William Lumbard, executor of the last will and testament of deceased, Lulu Watt, Bessie Baum Marshall, and Pauline Baum Wolfe, to revoke the probate of a will. Judgment for defendants, and contestants appeal. Affirmed.

J. H. Morris and Walter H. Duane, both of San Francisco, for appellants. W. P. Rich and W. H. Carlin, both of Marysville, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. The appellants, nephews and nieces of Daniel Fraser, deceased, instituted this proceeding to revoke the probate of Fraser's will. When the contestants had closed their case, the respondents moved for a nonsuit, which was granted. The appeal is from the ensuing judgment.

The appellants contend—and this is the only point made—that their evidence would have warranted a finding that the decedent was not mentally competent to make a will. If they are right in so claiming, the nonsuit should not, of course, have been granted. Burr v. United Railroads, 163 Cal. 663, 665, 126 Pac. 873; Estate of Ross, 173 Cal. 178, 159 Pac. 603. But our reading of the record satisfies us that the evidence in this case, even though it be viewed most favorably to the appellants, was entirely insufficient to show that Fraser did not possess testamentary capacity.

The document in question was executed on February 1, 1910. Daniel Fraser was then about 80 years of age. Until a few years before he had been a farmer, and he had always conducted his business affairs, which were of considerable extent, with prudence and ability. There was no attempt whatever to show his mental condition at the precise time of executing the will. The contestants produced a few witnesses who stated that they considered Fraser mentally weak. The reasons given were, however, so unsatisfactory as to leave the opinions themselves without weight or value. The effect of this testimony was that Fraser had, for many years, been in the habit of drinking intoxicants to excess. When he was under the influence of liquor, his mental operations were not entirely normal. But there was nothing to indicate that his mental soundness was impaired when he was not intoxicated, and contestants made no effort to prove that he was not sober at the time when he executed the will.

With the exception of the testator's intemperate habits, the circumstances relied on to support the claim of incapacity are trivial. One of the contestants based his opinion of the testator's want of mental soundness on the grounds that Fraser spoke with apparent appreciation, of the physical characteristics of women, that he told the witness that he did not drink, and requested the witness not to tell any one that he did. This witness also stated that Fraser sometimes would tell a story, and would repeat it at a later time. The time of these occurrences, relative to the date of the will, was not fixed with any clearness, and the facts themselves were insignificant. A second witness could not specify any reason for doubting Fraser's sanity beyond the circumstance that the testator had disputed his word. The instances of peculiar conduct testified to by the other witnesses were equally unimportant. Besides, they all seem, on a fair consideration of the testimony, to have occurred when the deceased was in his cups.

This court has so frequently defined the measure of mental competency requisite to the making of a will that it is unnecessary to do more than refer to a few of the cases. Estate of Motz, 136 Cal. 558, 562, 69 Pac. 294; Estate of Morey, 147 Cal. 495, 503, 82 Pac. 57; Estate of Huston, 163 Cal. 166, 124 Pac. 852; Estate of Purcell, 164 Cal. 300, 128 Pac. 932. The evidence which we have outlined was entirely inadequate to show that Fraser did not fully understand and carry in mind "the nature and situation of his property and his relations to his relatives and those around him," or that he was not "capable of understanding the act he was doing, and the relation in which he stood to the objects of his bounty," or that he was subject to any delusion "which might lead him to dispose of his property otherwise than he would if he knew and understood what he was doing." Estate of Motz, supra. The court would have been bound to set aside a verdict in favor of the contestants. It was therefore warranted in granting a nonsuit.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.

⚿For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

177 Cal. 284

PEDLEY v. DOYLE. (L. A. 4116.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 23, 1918.)

1. ACCOUNT, ACTION ON 🔑3—OPEN AND MUTUAL ACCOUNT.

That the amount due plaintiff consisted of the reasonable value of the use and occupation of land, so that the balance could not be struck until the value of such use was determined, would not make the existence of an open, mutual, and current account impossible.

2. ASSIGNMENTS 🔑71—MUTUALITY—ASSIGNMENTS.

An assignment does not destroy the mutuality of an account.

3. WITNESSES 🔑287(3)—REDIRECT EXAMINATION—EXTENT.

It was proper for plaintiff on redirect examination to bring out testimony tending to show how much dependence the witness in reaching his estimate of reasonable rental value had placed upon the knowledge he had obtained of prices paid by a certain class of renters; that subject having been introduced on cross-examination.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Frank F. Oster, Judge.

Action by W. E. Pedley against James J. Doyle. Judgment for plaintiff. From an order denying motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Daley & Byrne and Fred A. Wilson, all of San Bernardino, for appellant. Geo. H. Johnson, R. E. Bledsoe, and Curtis & McNabb, all of San Bernardino, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. This is an appeal by defendant from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

There is no great difference in the contentions of the litigants regarding the essential facts, but there is a wide diversity of opinion upon questions of law. That defendant entered into possession of a tract of land then belonging to the Corona Water Company on February 1, 1902, and remained in occupancy of said property until May 13, 1913, is undisputed, and there is no doubt that during that time defendant made payments of money, furnished lumber for a building on the land, paid for capping a well, paid taxes, and expended money otherwise on behalf of the landlord.

The amended complaint was originally in two counts, but the cause was finally tried upon that which charged the primary indebtedness of defendant to plaintiff to be based upon the reasonable value of the premises for the years during which James J. Doyle occupied the land. Plaintiff sued as the alleged assignee and successor of the Corona Water Company. By the complaint the reasonable worth of the right of occupancy which the defendant had enjoyed was alleged to be $6,795, and it was further alleged that at various times during his tenancy defendant had furnished lumber and building materials and pasturage, had performed certain services, and had paid various sums of money for and at the request of plaintiff or his assignor, for all of which the Corona Water Company and the plaintiff as its assignee had agreed to allow defendant "what the same were reasonably worth as matters of set-off against the reasonable value of the use and occupation of said real property." The reasonable value of these credits was alleged to be $2,720, leaving a balance of $4,075, which, as plaintiff averred, was "a balance due under an open, mutual, and current account." In traversing these allegations defendant denied that he furnished services, paid money, etc., to the Corona Water Company, or to plaintiff as its assignee, but admitted that at various times between the 1st day of February, 1902, and the 13th day of May, 1913, he "furnished lumber, building materials, and pasturage, performed certain services, and paid various sums of money, and rented and hired horses, mules, and other animals to plaintiff, at the request of, for and on behalf of, and to said plaintiff." He also admitted "that the said plaintiff agreed to pay and allow defendant what all of said last-mentioned payments, services, and acts of the defendant were reasonably worth as matters of set-off against the reasonable value of the use and occupation of said property," but fixed the value of these items at $2,823, and denied that the amount set forth in the complaint, or any other sum of money, was a balance due under an open, mutual, or current account. The answer contained these further allegations:

> "The reasonable value of the use and occupation of said real property during the time between the 1st day of February, 1902, and the 13th day of May, 1913, is the sum of $2,823, and no more. That the said sum of $3,417.72, being the reasonable value of the lumber, building materials, and pasturage furnished, services performed, rent and hire of horses, mules, or other animals furnished to plaintiff by defendant, and money paid out by defendant at the request of, and for and on behalf of, and to said plaintiff as aforesaid, exceeds the reasonable value of the use and occupation of said real property by the sum of $594.72, and for which excess of $594.72 the plaintiff is indebted to the defendant over and above the reasonable value of the use and occupation of said premises by said defendant as aforesaid."

The prayer of the answer was that plaintiff take nothing, but that defendant have judgment for costs and for other appropriate relief. Defendant also averred that any cause of action was barred by the provisions of sections 337 and 339, Code of Civil Procedure.

[1] We have thus described the pleadings perhaps at unnecessary length because appellant insists that a mutual account was neither pleaded nor established by evidence. He asserts that there can be no open, mutual and current account where all of the averred indebtedness of one of the litigants to the other is based upon quantum meruit. But we find no force in his contention on this point. The reasonable value of the use of the premises was only one of the items in the mutual account. It is true that the balance due to one from the other of the parties to the action could not be struck until the value of such use was determined, but that fact does not make the existence of an open, mutual, and current account impossible. Where rental of a chattel is set up as an item of such an account, plaintiff demanding the reasonable value of the use of the personal property, it has been held that in the absence of evidence showing an express agreement as to rental the court must fix the proper amount to be charged. Culver v. Newhart, 18 Cal. App. 614–623, 123 Pac. 975. We see no reason why the same rule should not be applied to rental of real property under like circumstances. Plaintiff and defendant each demanded a bill of particulars, and each in his bill enumerated items covering virtually the entire period of tenancy and sought to support his schedule by testimony. In view of these facts and the pleadings it cannot justly be asserted that an "open, mutual, and current account" was not pleaded. But appellant makes the further assertion that no mutual agreement of set-off is shown. But the complaint, in effect, avers such mutual agreement by pleading an open account, and defendant, although denying the existence of such an account, admits a certain amount as being the reasonable value of the use of the premises, and that plaintiff agreed to allow him the reasonable value of his payments, his services, and the commodities furnished by him as a set-off to the rent. If there was an "agreement" it could scarcely be without mutuality, and under the pleadings the only dispute which the court could settle would seem to have been that with reference to the amounts properly to be charged against the items in the bills of particulars and the resulting balance, if any.

[2] Appellant cites authorities from other states to the effect that assignment destroys the mutuality of accounts. We are of the opinion, however, that the better and more just rule is that stated by Mr. Justice Hart in the opinion in Culver v. Newhart, supra, as follows:

> "No one will dispute the proposition that a mutual, open and current account, like an ordinary account, is property—that is, a chose in action—and that, therefore, the plaintiff, as the original owner of the account in question, had the undoubted right to sell and transfer the same to his wife or to any other person (Civ. Code, §§ 1458, 953, and 954), subject, of course, to any equities which might have existed as to said account in favor of the debtor."

[3] The court properly admitted testimony of qualified persons regarding the rental value of the property, but appellant specifies error in the ruling permitting one of these witnesses, Mr. Whitlock, to testify how much rent Chinese gardeners had paid and were paying for the use of land in the neighborhood of that occupied by appellant. This testimony was not given, however, upon the direct examination of the witness. He had testified that from his knowledge of values and conditions he would fix $15 per acre, per year, as a fair rental value of the land in question. On cross-examination he said:

> "It is a fact that I base my statement of $15 an acre rental value largely from the theory and from the thought possibly that land has been renting in that neighborhood to Chinamen for vegetable purposes, at $15 an acre, or possibly more. I don't know whether land there could be rented for $15 an acre in the open market."

On redirect examination it developed that according to the personal knowledge and the information gathered by the witness even higher rental than $15 an acre had been obtained from some of the Chinese gardeners. The subject was introduced by defendant himself, and it was perfectly proper for plaintiff to bring out on redirect examination testimony tending to demonstrate how much dependence the witness, in reaching his estimate of reasonable rental value of this particular tract, had placed upon the knowledge he had obtained of prices paid by a certain class of renters, namely, Chinese gardeners.

No other specifications of alleged errors require analysis or discussion.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: WILBUR, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.

---

177 Cal. 268

DAWSON v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO.

(L. A. 4122.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 22, 1918.)

1. Master and Servant 🔑278(12) — Actions for Injuries—Sufficiency of Evidence.

In an employé's action for injury sustained while bundles of shakes were being hoisted from a wharf upon flat cars, evidence held to warrant the jury in finding that the sling used was not strong enough for the purpose for which it was used.

2. Master and Servant 🔑286(18) — Actions for Injuries—Questions for Jury.

Testimony of defendant's witnesses showing that the sling was strong enough for such purpose raised a conflict to be resolved by the jury.

3. Master and Servant 🔑286(24) — Actions for Injuries—Questions for Jury.

Where shakes were being unloaded from a vessel lying at a wharf, and were then being hoisted by plaintiff's employer from the wharf upon flat cars, if the employer saw fit for its own convenience to use the ship's slings in connection with its own, it was open to the jury to find that due care required it to make some inspection of the ropes furnished by the vessel before employing them in its work.

4. Master and Servant 🔑286(24) — Actions for Injuries—Questions for Jury.

Whether the fact that a greater strain was put on the rope while the load was being hoisted from the ship to the wharf than during the subsequent transfer to the cars justified the employer in assuming that, because it had not broken when used to lift the load to the wharf, it could be used again without danger, and rendered any further test or examination unnecessary, was a question for the jury.

5. Trial 🔑63(2)—Reception of Evidence—Rebuttal—Discretion.

In an action for injuries caused by the breaking of a rope used in hoisting shakes, where plaintiff's testimony in chief tended to show that the load being hoisted weighed 1,500 pounds, but, while defendant was putting in its case, plaintiff's counsel suggested that he might have more definite testimony than that already given about the weight of the load, and in rebuttal offered testimony that the load contained about 115 bundles, weighing 40 pounds each, stating that he had just learned the facts which he desired to present, the court did not abuse its discretion in admitting such evidence, as it is ordinarily within the discretion of the court to allow in rebuttal testimony which should have been offered as a part of the case in chief, and the testimony was relevant to the claim that the rope was unsound and defective.

6. Trial 🔑64—Reply to Evidence in Rebuttal—Necessity of Request.

If defendant was surprised by the new testimony offered in rebuttal, it should have asked an opportunity to meet it.

7. Trial 🔑252(11)—Instructions—Conformity to Evidence.

In an action for injury caused by the breaking of a rope used in hoisting a load of shakes, where the evidence suggested no issue in regard to defendant's negligence, in respect to the size or weight of the load being hoisted at the time of the accident, there was no occasion for a negative charge that the jury could not find defendant negligent in respect to the size or weight of the load.

8. Trial 🔑191(10)—Invading Province of Jury—Assumption of Facts.

In an employé's action for injuries, the court, after referring to certain acts as alleged by plaintiff to have been negligent, told the jury that if they believed from the evidence that defendant was guilty of both or either of "said negligent acts," and that they or either of them contributed directly or proximately to cause the accident, then plaintiff might recover. Held, that this did not invade the province of the jury by assuming that the acts in question were negligent, as the court was merely referring to its preceding description of acts alleged to have been negligent.

9. Trial 🔑296(9)—Instructions—Cure by Other Instructions.

There was no room for believing that the jury could have been misled by such instruction where in other instructions the court specifically directed the jury that the burden of proof was on plaintiff to establish a want of ordinary care.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by Louis B. Dawson against the Pacific Electric Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank Karr, R. C. Gortner, and A. W. Ashburn, all of Los Angeles (W. R. Millar, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant. E. B. Drake, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the defendant's negligence. A verdict was returned and judgment entered in favor of the plaintiff. The defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

The defendant, an electric railway company, was engaged in loading bundles of shakes upon two of its flat cars, on a wharf at Redondo Beach, in Los Angeles county. The shakes were unloaded from a vessel lying at the wharf. They were first hoisted to the wharf. For this part of the work, use was made of the machinery of the vessel, which was not under the control or operation of the defendant. From the wharf, the shakes were lifted and swung to the cars by means of an electric derrick belonging to the defendant, and operated by its servants. A rope sling was put around a load composed of a number of bundles of shakes, and the load was moved from the ship to the wharf, and again from the wharf to the cars, by hooking the cable of the hoisting machinery or the derrick to a loop in the sling. The plaintiff was in the defendant's employ. His work was to arrange and place the shakes on one of the flat cars. While one of the loads was being hoisted from the wharf to the cars, and was passing over the plaintiff, the sling broke, causing the shakes to fall upon plaintiff.

The complaint charged negligence on the part of the defendant in two particulars, first, in carrying the bundles from the wharf to the flat car by means of a rotten, unsound, or defective rope or sling, and, second, by negligently failing to warn the plaintiff that the load was about to pass, and was passing, over him. The answer denied any negligence on the part of the defendant, and set up negligence on the part of the plaintiff himself.

[1-3] By its verdict the jury found in favor of the plaintiff on these issues. It is urged by the appellant that the evidence is insufficient to show that it had been guilty of any negligence. The rules of law respecting the duty of the employer in cases like the present were fully and clearly stated to the jury. The court charged that the defendant's obligation to furnish safe appliances and a safe place to work was not absolute, but that it extended only to the exercise of ordinary care. Under the instructions, the plaintiff was required to establish, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the sling was, in fact, defective, and that the defendant either knew of the defective condition, or would, by the exercise of ordinary care, have discovered it. It cannot be doubted that the evidence was sufficient to warrant the jury in finding that the sling was not, in fact, strong enough for the purpose for which it was used. One of plaintiff's witnesses, who had had many years' experience as a sailor in examining and using ropes, testified that he had examined the sling just after the accident, and that it was "black and old looking. * * * It was too old; shouldn't have been used. * * * If I had been there on the ground and examined it, * * * I could have seen that it was an old rope that shouldn't have been used." Another witness testified that he had seen the rope, and that "it was very old;" another that "it was pretty black looking. It didn't look anything extra good." The testimony of contrary import, given by defendant's witnesses, could, of course, do no more than raise a conflict of evidence, and this conflict was to be resolved by the jury. There was, too, ample evidence to justify a finding that defendant had not exercised ordinary care in inspecting the rope to ascertain its condition. Much is made of the fact that the sling in question belonged to the owners of the ship, and that, in the course of the work, the slings were used as they came from the hold without any further inspection. But the evidence shows that the defendant had a number of slings of its own, and that these were used interchangeably with the slings belonging to the vessel. It appears that neither defendant's foreman, nor any other of its servants, made any inspection of the slings belonging to the ship. While the foreman testified, in general terms, that he had examined the slings, his further examination developed the fact that his inspection had been limited to the slings of the appellant. If the defendant saw fit, for its own convenience, to use the ship's slings in connection with its own, it was certainly open to the jury to find that the obligation of due care required it to make some inspection of the ropes furnished by the vessel, before employing them in its work.

[4] In this connection, the appellant directs our attention to certain testimony indicating that a greater strain was put on the rope while a load was being hoisted from the ship to the wharf than during the subsequent transfer to the cars. From this it is sought to be argued that the hoist from the vessel was a sufficient test of the strength of the rope, and that no further test or examination was necessary. The view of some of the witnesses was that, because the rope had not broken when used to lift a load to the wharf, they would assume that it could be used again without danger. But the soundness of this assumption was a question for the jury. To give it the force of a rule of law would dispense with the necessity of ever inspecting any appliance except just before it was used for the first time. The time is bound to come when the accumulated results of wear, strain, and age may cause the appliance to give way. As was aptly suggested at the trial, the case is like that of the proverbial pitcher that goes once too often to the well.

McCall v. Pacific Mail Steamship Co., 123 Cal. 42, 55 Pac. 706, relied on by the appellant, dealt with a situation entirely different from that presented by the record before us. The facts in the McCall Case, as stated by the court in its opinion, were that the rope had been properly inspected before use, and that its breaking was due to "a latent defect not discernible under an examination conducted with ordinary care." The consequent holding that no negligence was shown can therefore not apply to a case in which the evidence authorizes a finding that there was no inspection, and that such inspection would have disclosed the defect.

[5-7] The testimony offered by plaintiff in his case in chief tended to show that the load of shakes weighed 1,500 pounds. After the defendant had offered evidence indicating that the rope in question would carry a considerably greater weight, the plaintiff, on rebuttal, was allowed to offer testimony that the load contained about 115 bundles, weighing 40 pounds each, and consequently weighed over 4,000 pounds. It is ordinarily within the discretion of the trial court to allow, in rebuttal, testimony which should have been offered as a part of the case in chief. We think the ruling here made did not constitute an abuse of discretion. While the defendant was putting in its case, plaintiff's counsel suggested that he might have more definite testimony than that already given about the weight of the load, and when he offered his testimony in rebuttal, he stated to the court that he had just learned the facts which he desired to then present. If defendant was surprised by the new testimony, it should have asked an opportunity to meet it. No such request was made. The testimony was relevant to the charge of negligence made in the complaint, viz. that the sling was unsound and defective. A rope may be sufficiently strong to lift a load of 1,500 pounds, and entirely too weak to support a weight of 4,000 pounds. The question of the sufficiency of the rope was relative to the work which the rope had to do, and the weight of the load was therefore a proper subject of inquiry. At this point we may notice defendant's claim that the court erred in refusing to charge the jury, in effect, that they could not find the defendant negligent in respect to the size or weight of the load of shakes being carried at the time of the accident. No such issue was suggested by the evidence we have been discussing, or otherwise, and there was no occasion to give this negative charge. Furthermore, the jury was expressly told that the plaintiff could not recover unless he established one or the other of the charges of negligence set out in his complaint.

The court sustained an objection to a question asked on cross-examination of plaintiff's witness Wennaberg. We need not discuss the propriety of this ruling, since it appears that virtually the same question was put to the witness, and answered, at a later stage.

[8, 9] The court gave an instruction in which, after defining the two elements of negligence charged by the complaint, it told the jury that:

"If you believe from the evidence that defendant was guilty of both or either of said negligent acts, and that the same or either contributed directly or proximately to cause the accident, then the plaintiff may recover in this case. * * *"

The criticism is made that the use of the italicized words assumes that the acts in question were negligent, and thus invades the province of the jury. We think, however, that the court was merely referring to its preceding description of acts alleged by the plaintiff to have been negligent. Furthermore, in view of other instructions which specifically directed the jury that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff to establish a want of ordinary care, there is no room for the belief that the jury could have been misled. The real purpose of the charge in question was to direct the attention of the jury to the point that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to establish every act of negligence asserted by him, but that it was sufficient for him to make out either ground alleged. We have no doubt that the instruction was thus understood.

The judgment and the order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.

177 Cal. 308

WESSEL v. SUPERIOR COURT OF IMPERIAL COUNTY et al. (L. A. 5424.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 25, 1918. Rehearing Denied Feb. 21, 1918.)

PROHIBITION ⚿27—TRANSFER OF CAUSES—PRESUMPTION.

Where a superior court on its own motion transfers a cause of action to another county, on application for prohibition against the latter court, it must be presumed that the judges of the transferring court were disqualified and the transfer proper, and it is immaterial that the parties had stipulated to try the case in the transferring court, and had transferred it from the court to which it was retransferred.

In Bank. Application by William Wessel for writ of prohibition against the Superior Court of the County of Imperial and Hon. Franklin J. Cole, judge thereof. An alternative writ was issued by the District Court of Appeal of the Second Appellate District. Such court being unable to agree on a verdict, the proceeding is transferred to this court. Proceeding dismissed, and alternative writ discharged.

Leo V. Youngworth, Frank P. Doherty, and Percy V. Hammon, all of Los Angeles, for plaintiff. Galen Nichols, of El Centro, and H. N. Dyke, of Imperial, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. Plaintiff made application to the District Court of Appeal of the Second Appellate District for a writ of prohibition restraining defendants from proceeding further in the action of said Wessel against Waite et al., instituted in the superior court of Imperial county on or about June 27, 1917, on the ground that said court was without jurisdiction of said cause. An alternative writ of prohibition was issued, and, a return being made, the matter was heard by the District Court of Appeal. The justices of that court were unable to agree upon a judgment, and the proceeding was transferred to this court.

The action of Wessel v. Waite et al., which was one to prevent the enforcement of what was substantially alleged to be an invalid ordinance of the city of Imperial, was commenced in the superior court of Imperial county. We shall assume that it was transferred, under stipulation of the parties, to the superior court of Los Angeles county, although it must be confessed that the proceedings looking to that end were somewhat informal. The superior court of Los Angeles county assumed jurisdiction, passed upon the demurrer to the complaint, and issued a temporary injunction, restraining the enforcement of the ordinance. Subsequently, as its minutes for August 27, 1917, show, it allowed a motion for judgment on the pleadings to be withdrawn, and denied a motion to vacate the injunction. The minutes then proceed as follows:

"Thereupon the court, of its own motion, with the consent of the defendants and over the objection of the plaintiff, ordered the cause herein transferred from this court to the superior court of Imperial county, Cal., for further proceedings."

It is on this order of transfer that defendants base their claim of present jurisdiction of the action. Plaintiff claims that this order is a nullity, with the result that the action is still pending in the superior court of Los Angeles county.

The attack thus made by plaintiff on the order of transfer is a collateral attack on an order of a court of general jurisdiction. Unless, therefore, the order is void on the face of the record, it is clear that, in view of well-settled principles, it must be held, in so far at least as this proceeding is concerned, to fully vest jurisdiction of the cause in the superior court of Imperial county. That the order cannot be held void on its face is, we think, settled by decisions made by this court.

Of course, it is not disputed that the superior court may lawfully make such an order in a proper case. Ordinarily, unless there be a stipulation of the parties, an application of one of the parties, based on some ground prescribed by statute, is essential. Section 397, Code of Civil Procedure, prescribes the grounds on which such an application may be based. Where such an application is made by a party and granted by the court, the order granting is not a nullity, no matter how defective was the showing of the applicant. This was decided many years ago in People ex rel. Meminger v. Sexton, Judge, 24 Cal. 78, a mandamus proceeding to compel the judge to proceed with the trial of a cause, notwithstanding an order transferring the cause to another county. As here, it was claimed that the order was a nullity. In the well-considered opinion, it was conceded, for the purposes of the decision, that the affidavit filed in support of the application for a change of place of trial did not show any sufficient cause, as indeed was held by the judge in passing on the application, and it was said that it does not result that the court had not the power to grant the change. The court said:

> "In making the order changing the venue, the court acted judicially upon a matter within its cognizance. By this order, the place of the trial of the action became changed from Butte to Yuba county. If, thereby, error intervened, to the petitioner's injury, it cannot be corrected by means of the writ of mandamus."

It was further said that if the court should grant the writ, it would be in effect a reversal of the order, or the expunging of the order, as a judicial proceeding, from the records where it is entered, which, for the reasons stated, the court could not do, and also that the remedy of the aggrieved party on account of any error was by appeal from the final judgment. Our law now gives the remedy in an appeal from the order.

The order here involved does show that it was not made on the application of either party, but was made over the objection of plaintiff and by the court "on its own motion." But we think it is clear that a judge who is disqualified to act in a cause may transfer it without application from either party. The decision in Broder v. Conklin, 98 Cal. 360, 33 Pac. 211, is in point, and absolutely controlling here. On appeal from an order made by the superior court of Mono county, the court to which the action had been transferred by the superior court of Inyo county, the judge of Inyo county deeming himself disqualified, it was sought to question the validity of the order of transfer. This court, in bank, said:

> "Upon this appeal the regularity of the proceedings in transferring the cause to Mono county cannot be considered. If any condition of facts could exist under which the transfer would be authorized, the action of the court in making the transfer will be upheld whenever collaterally attacked. Section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure prohibits a judge from sitting or acting in any action in which he may be disqualified, except that he may transfer the action to some other court; and section 398 of the same Code provides that, if an action is 'pending' in a court, and the judge thereof is disqualified from acting, it must be transferred to the nearest court where the like objection does not exist. We may assume upon this appeal, not only that the judge of Inyo county was disqualified from acting in the cause, but also that the superior court of Mono county was the nearest court in which the like objection did not exist. If for any reason the order of transfer was erroneous, it could have been reviewed by a direct appeal therefrom." (The italics are ours.)

In principle there is no distinction whatever between that case and the one at bar. Section 398, Code of Civil Procedure, now provides that in such a case, in the absence of a stipulation of the parties as to the court to which the transfer shall be made, it shall be "to the nearest or most accessible court, where the like objection or cause for making the order does not exist."

We have in mind the requirement that the action must not be transferred from the superior court of any county on the ground of disqualification of the judge unless all of the judges thereof are deemed disqualified. Code Civ. Proc. subd. 4, § 170; subdivision 4, § 397, Code Civ. Proc.; Petition of Los Angeles Trust Co., 158 Cal. 603, 112 Pac. 56. But, in view of what has been said, we must assume that such was the condition as it was made to appear to the Los Angeles superior court, and that the superior court of Imperial county was the nearest or most accessible court where a like objection did not exist. It may be conceded that all this appears very improbable in point of fact, but it is a condition of facts that could exist consistently with anything stated in the order, and on any collateral attack on the order must be conclusively assumed to have existed. If the Los Angeles county superior court erred in making the order, plaintiff had a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy by appeal therefrom.

Some reliance appears to be placed by plaintiff on the fact that on the original transfer from Imperial county to Los Angeles county on stipulation of the parties, it was stipulated that jurisdiction of the action be given to the superior court of Los Angeles county. Manifestly the stipulation filed was not a waiver of any disqualification of any judge or judges. Subdivision 2, § 170, Code Civ. Proc. Regardless of this, however, it is plain from what we have said that it is not available for any purpose on a collateral attack on the order of transfer.

The alternative writ of prohibition is discharged, and the proceeding dismissed.

We concur: VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.; SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

177 Cal. 281

DE KAHN v. CHASE. (L. A. 4089.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 23, 1918. Rehearing Denied Feb. 21, 1918.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ⚷121(9) — EVIDENCE REQUIRED.

Under Civ. Code, § 3390, subd. 6, providing that an agreement, the terms of which are not sufficiently certain to make the precise act which is to be done clearly ascertainable, cannot be specifically enforced, when all the evidence tending to establish a contract leaves the terms in doubt, it cannot be specifically enforced.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚷931(1) — MATTERS REVIEWABLE—PREPONDERANCE OF EVIDENCE —SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

On appeal from a judgment specifically enforcing a contract, only that evidence favoring the agreement can be considered in determining whether the terms of the contract are clearly ascertainable, under Civ. Code, § 3390, subd. 6, relating to proof of contracts in such cases.

3. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ⚷121(9)—VERBAL AGREEMENT FOR LIFE LEASE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence held sufficiently clear as to the terms of a verbal agreement to give a life lease to support a judgment of specific performance.

4. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ⚷121(3)—CLARITY OF TERMS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for specific performance of verbal agreement to give a life lease, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that defendant's son was not to occupy a room as part consideration for the lease, although he had occupied a room for some years after such agreement.

5. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ⚷117—ISSUES.

In an action for specific performance of an agreement to give plaintiff a life lease in return for a deed of certain property, plaintiff having lived in house for number of years under the agreement, the amount of taxes paid by defendant during such time is not an issue, and it was not error to exclude evidence thereof.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; Samuel E. Crow, Judge.

Action for specific performance of a contract by Carolina J. De Kahn against Ida M. Stewart Chase. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Canfield & Starbuck, of Santa Barbara, for appellant. Richards & Carrier and George H. Gould, all of Santa Barbara, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. This is an action for specific performance to compel the execution by the defendant of a lease for a life term to the plaintiff upon a lot occupied by her as a residence from 1905 to 1913, in pursuance of a verbal agreement whereby plaintiff alleges that she conveyed an adjoining lot by deed to the defendant, in consideration of an agreement upon the part of the defendant to erect upon the before-mentioned lot a cottage and give to her a life estate thereon. The deeding of the lot by plaintiff to defendant and the occupancy by plaintiff for eight years of the premises claimed by her are admitted. The lot in question was bounded by fences and hedges. The principal item of the contract in litigation is the length of plaintiff's term. On this subject she testifies:

> "Mrs. Chase said that she was going to build a little cottage for me for life, as long as I lived, and that I could have it for the exchange of the lot on Spring street at that time. That was the agreement. She said that I would never have to pay rent in the little house as long as I lived, ever. I gave the deed before the house was built. I lived in the house till September 21, 1913. I paid no rent, but attended to the repairs of the house. I was to keep the house in repair at my own expense. We would always speak about the little house as mine. She always said I had it for life."

The testimony of the defendant and her witnesses as to the terms under which the plaintiff was allowed to occupy the house were in conflict with such testimony, and appellant insists that this court should review the finding of the trial court in the light of the rule, as she claims, that the plaintiff must have established her case by more than a preponderance of the evidence. The Civil Code provides that an agreement, the terms of which are not sufficiently certain, to make the precise act which is to be done clearly ascertainable, cannot be specifically enforced. Civ. Code, § 3390, subd. 6.

[1, 2] No doubt, therefore, when all the evidence tending to establish such contract, leaves the terms thereof in doubt, it cannot be specifically enforced, and where, on appeal, giving full credit and weight to all evidence affirmatively tending to establish such agreement, disregarding all conflicting evidence, it appears that the terms of such agreement are not clearly ascertainable, then the action of the trial court enforcing such uncertain agreement may be reversed. See Sheehan v. Sullivan, 126 Cal. 189, 193, 58 Pac. 543; Wadleigh v. Phelps, 149 Cal. 637, 87 Pac. 93. The cases in this state relied upon by appellant are not in conflict with this rule. The case of Hall v. Hall, 164 Pac. 390, is cited to the effect that in some classes of civil cases a higher degree of proof than a preponderance must be shown, but an examination of the record discloses that the jury in that case has been instructed at the instance of both parties that a preponderance of the evidence was sufficient to establish plaintiff's case, and the propriety of that rule was not before this court. The question here was the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the finding of the jury. In the case of Monsen v. Monsen, 162 Pac. 90, the question was as to the definiteness and "clearness" of the evidence rather than its weight. In the case of Wadleigh v. Phelps, supra, the court was considering what character of evidence was sufficient to overcome the presumption that a deed is what it purports to be, an absolute conveyance, and establish it to be a mortgage, and, although holding that such evidence must be "entirely plain and convincing," said:

"This, however, does not mean that the evidence in the record on appeal must be entirely plain and convincing to the appellate court. * * * All questions as to preponderance and conflict of evidence are for the trial court."

[3] It is enough, for the purposes of this case, to say that there is sufficient evidence, if believed by the trial court, to justify its finding as to the nature and terms of the contract.

[4] Appellant contends that the judgment is erroneous for the reason that it appears that, as a portion of the agreement of exchange, it was arranged that defendant's son occupy a room in said cottage. That he did so for some years is undisputed, but that there was an agreement therefor at the time the parties entered into said contract of exchange is denied by plaintiff in her testimony, and for that reason the finding of the court on that subject cannot be disturbed.

[5] Appellant offered evidence as to the amount of taxes paid by her on said property, but it was properly ruled out, as there was no issue thereon. The judgment provided:

"That plaintiff is not required to pay any rent for said premises nor any taxes or insurance thereon."

Appellant contends and respondent concedes that this is erroneous as to taxes and insurance, and should be modified by striking therefrom the words "nor any taxes or insurance thereon."

For the foregoing reasons, it is ordered that the decree herein be modified by striking therefrom the words above quoted "nor any taxes or insurance thereon," and as so modified the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.

(177 Cal. 300)

In re PLUMB'S ESTATE.

PLUMB et al. v. WOODS et al.

(S. F. 8226.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 25, 1918.)

1. Wills 🔑358—Revocation of Probate—Review—"Order Refusing to Revoke Probate of Will."

An order dismissing a proceeding to revoke the probate of a will was appealable under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, as amended in 1901, as an "order refusing to revoke the probate of a will."

2. Wills 🔑370—Revocation of Probate—Review—Record.

Where no bill of exceptions or reporter's transcript is included in the record, the appeal must be considered on the judgment roll or on the papers which, in a probate proceeding, correspond to the judgment roll, which, in a proceeding to revoke probate, include at least the petition or contest, the answer, and the judgment or order.

3. Wills 🔑384—Revocation of Probate—Review—Presumptions.

An order dismissing a proceeding to revoke the probate of a will contained a finding that no citation had been issued to the administrator and to all the legatees and devisees mentioned in the will and residing in the state, and particularly that no citation had ever been issued to a named administrator with the will annexed or to W., one of the legatees and devisees. Held that, assuming that the failure to issue a citation to the administrator or to W. was obviated by their voluntary appearance, still the order contained a finding that no citation had been issued to all the legatees and devisees named, and the subsequent specification of the administrator and W. as persons to whom particularly no citation had been issued did not limit this general finding, and, as every intendment is in favor of the judgment or order, the finding would be interpreted, if necessary, as a finding that there had been a failure to issue the citation to legatees and devisees other than W.; the will not being a part of the record, and the record not otherwise showing that there were not other legatees and devisees.

4. Wills 🔑278—Revocation of Probate—Pleading—Effect of Admissions.

Where the petition for revocation alleged that W. and her husband were the sole legatees and devisees, and this allegation was not denied by the answer filed by the administrator in conjunction with W. and her husband, other legatees and devisees, if any, were not bound by the admission of this allegation.

5. Wills 🔑270—Revocation of Probate—Process—Failure to Serve.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1328, providing relative to the revocation of probate that a citation must be issued to the executor or administrator with the will annexed, and to all the legatees and devisees mentioned in the will and heirs residing in the state, the failure to issue a citation to certain legatees and devisees and serve it on them justified the dismissal of the contest.

6. Wills 🔑384—Revocation of Probate—Review—Burden of Showing Error.

On appeal from an order dismissing a proceeding to revoke the probate of a will, it is incumbent upon appellants to show, by bill of exceptions or other proper record, such a condition of affairs as would make it appear affirmatively that the court erred in dismissing the contest.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Proceeding by Alonzo T. Plumb and others against Loyal Earl Woods and others, to revoke the probate of the will of Orrin Henry Plumb, deceased. From an order dismissing the proceeding, the contestants appeal. Affirmed.

Daniel A. Ryan, of San Francisco, for appellants. Keith C. Eversole and Charles M. Mannon, both of Ukiah, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. A proceeding for the revocation of probate of the will of Orrin Henry Plumb was dismissed by the court. The contestants appeal from the order of dismissal.

[1] The respondents insist that no appeal lies from such order. But the contrary has been decided in Mahoney v. Superior Court, 140 Cal. 513, 74 Pac. 13, where the court held that the order was, in effect, "one refusing to revoke the probate of a will," and thus appealable under the amendment of 1901 to section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The ruling was followed in Estate of Baker, 170 Cal. 578, 583, 150 Pac. 989. It may be added that a motion heretofore made by these respondents to dismiss this very appeal on the ground now urged was denied by this court.

[2-4] No bill of exceptions or reporter's transcript is included in the record. The appeal must therefore be considered on the judgment roll, or on the papers which, in a probate proceeding, correspond to the judgment roll. See In re Ryer, 110 Cal. 556, 42 Pac. 1082; Estate of Gamble, 166 Cal. 253, 135 Pac. 970; Estate of Broome, 169 Cal. 604, 147 Pac. 270. In a proceeding to revoke probate, such papers include, at least, the petition or contest, the answer, and the judgment or order, all of which, properly authenticated, are incorporated in the record before us. The order of dismissal contains various recitals and findings. In it the court finds, among other things, that more than one year had elapsed since the admission of the will to probate, and that no citation had been issued to the administrator and "to all the legatees and devisees" mentioned in the will and residing in the state, "and particularly that no citation has ever been issued to Robert R. Patton as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Orrin Henry Plumb, deceased, or to Sarah L. Woods, one of the legatees and devisees mentioned in said will." (We assume, for present purposes, that "Sarah L. Woods" is identical with the respondent "Sarah F. Woods.")

If this order were to be construed as showing that the only ground for dismissing the contest was the failure to issue a citation to the administrator or to Sarah L. Woods, there might be much force in the appellants' contention that the necessity of a citation to these parties was obviated by their voluntary appearance. Estate of Ricks, 160 Cal. 467, 117 Pac. 539; Estate of Simmons, 168 Cal. 390, 143 Pac. 697. But the finding in the order is that no citation had been issued to all the legatees and devisees named in the will. The ensuing words specifying the administrator and one of the legatees as persons to whom "particularly" no citation had been issued, do not necessarily limit the general statement that citation had not been issued to all of the legatees and devisees. Every intendment is in favor of the correctness of a judgment or order assailed on appeal, and we must, if such interpretation will support the order, read the finding as declaring that there had been a failure to issue citation to legatees and devisees other than Sarah L. Woods. The record does not show that such finding was contrary to the fact. The will is not a part of the record on appeal, and we cannot say that it did not make provision for various beneficiaries not cited. Appellants argue that the petition for revocation contains an allegation that the sole legatees and devisees were Sarah F. Woods and Loyal Earl Woods, her husband, and that this averment is not denied by the answer filed by the administrator in conjunction with Sarah F. and Loyal Earl Woods. But the allegation (which, by the way, is made inferentially only), may have been contrary to the terms of the will itself, which was before the trial court. Other legatees and devisees who may have been named in the will could not, of course, be bound by any admission contained in an answer in which they did not join. We need not decide whether the citation itself is properly a part of the record. Assuming that it is, it does not show that it was issued to all of the legatees and devisees named in the will.

[5, 6] It is entirely consistent with the record, therefore, that the will may have given devises and bequests to various persons in addition to Sarah F. and Loyal Earl Woods, and that no citation was issued to, or served upon, some of such persons. If this were so, the court was warranted in dismissing the contest. Code Civ. Proc. § 1328. It was incumbent upon the appellants, who attack the order made, to show by bill of exceptions, or other proper record, such a condition of affairs as would make it appear affirmatively that the court below erred in dismissing the contest. This they have failed to do.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.

(177 Cal. 274)

In re WRIGHT'S ESTATE. (S. F. 8330.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 22, 1918.)

1. Time 🔑9(4)—Computation—Days.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1373, requiring that notice of the hearing on a petition for letters of administration be given at least 10 days before the hearing, where the hearing on a petition for letters of administration with the will annexed was fixed for January 15th, notice issued and posted on January 5th complied with the statute.

2. Executors and Administrators 🔑18 — Qualifications of Administrator — Advanced Age.

That a petitioner for letters of administration was 92 years old did not disqualify him, where he was a man of considerable physical activity and of quite remarkable clearness of memory and perception in attending to his own business, and in relation to his knowledge of the decedent's affairs and estate.

3. Executors and Administrators 🔑18 — Qualifications of Administrator—Prejudices.

That a petitioner for letters of administration entertained some prejudices against some of the heirs or devisees did not disqualify him.

4. Executors and Administrators 🔑21(1) — Proceedings for Appointment — Harmless Error.

While, on a petition for letters of administration with the will annexed, the court might

---

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

well have admitted evidence of the petitioner's declarations that he was too old to qualify, and did not feel able to do so, the exclusion of such evidence was not prejudicial, where the petitioner was before the court, and was fully examined and cross-examined as to his physical and mental capabilities to perform the functions of administrator.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thos. C. Denny, Judge.

Proceeding for the appointment of an administrator of the estate of Jarena D. Wright, deceased, with the will annexed. From an order and decree appointing William B. Brown, C. M. Long appeals. Affirmed.

R. L. Thompson, of Santa Rosa, for appellant. Geary & Geary, of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from an order and decree appointing William B. Brown administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Jarena D. Wright, deceased. The facts of the case are these:

Jarena D. Wright died testate in the county of Sonoma in November, 1916, leaving an estate consisting of real and personal property in said county, and also leaving a will disposing of the same, wherein Robert A. Forsyth was named as executor. The latter having died prior to the death of the testatrix, it became necessary to have letters of administration with the will annexed issued to some competent and qualified person. Such letters were issued to Virginia S. Blake, a sister of the deceased, who, however, died shortly after the issuance of such letters to her. Thereupon, and on January 4, 1917, one C. M. Long filed his application for the issuance to him of letters of administration with the will annexed, alleging himself to be a nephew of the deceased, Wright. Notice of the hearing of said application was issued and posted upon said last-named day, wherein the hearing of the petition on said application was fixed as January 15, 1917. On January 5, 1917, William B. Brown filed his petition for the issuance to himself of letters of administration with the will annexed, alleging himself to be the sole surviving brother of the decedent, and on said day notice was issued and posted, which also fixed the date of hearing upon said petition for January 15, 1917. Both of these petitions came on for hearing before the court on January 22, 1917, at which time said C. M. Long presented and filed his answer and opposition to the petition of said William B. Brown, based upon two grounds:

"1. That said court is without jurisdiction to hear or determine said petition of William B. Brown, upon the ground that said petition was not duly noticed for hearing according to the provisions of section 1373, Code of Civil Procedure.

"2. That said petitioner William B. Brown is not competent to qualify or act as such administrator with the will annexed of said estate, under the provisions of section 1369, Code of Civil Procedure, for want of understanding and integrity, in this: That said petitioner is old and infirm physically and mentally, being of the age of 91 years; that his memory is defective; that he resides at a distance of more than 50 miles from Santa Rosa where the greater portion of said estate exists and where said estate is in process of probating; that petitioner C. M. Long is informed and believes that said estate includes a large amount of real and personal property exceeding the value of $100,000, and that a vast amount of labor, investigating, research, and litigation will be required to bring said property into said estate; that owing to the age and infirmity of the said petitioner William B. Brown, he is not his own free agent, but is dominated and influenced in his action by others; and that he is not impartial and unbiased as to the parties interested in said estate, but is biased and prejudiced, and has expressed and avowed his prejudices against the interest of certain heirs and legatees of said estate."

Upon the hearing William B. Brown offered himself as a witness in support of his petition for letters, and was examined and cross-examined quite fully as to his age, residence, habits of life, relations with his deceased sister, knowledge of the amount, condition, and value of her estate, and also as to his feelings and prejudices affecting certain of her heirs and devisees. From such examination it appeared that William B. Brown was of the age of 92 years, a widower living with his daughter in Berkeley, having retired from active business several years before, and occupying his time chiefly in doing the chores in and about his daughter's home, going to the market or bank, buying provisions, paying bills, and the like. He testified quite at length respecting his occasional visits to his sister, and as to the condition and value of her estate. From such examination, as well as from his appearance and conduct upon the hearing, the court determined that he was both competent and qualified to have letters of administration issued to him, and made its order and decree accordingly appointing him administrator with the will annexed of his deceased sister's estate. From such order and decree, the petitioner C. M. Long prosecutes this appeal.

[1] The first contention of the appellant is that the court did not acquire jurisdiction to hear and determine the petition of Brown, because the notice of hearing thereon was not given for the period required by section 1373 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There is no merit in this contention. The petition of Brown was filed on January 5, 1917, and the notice of hearing thereon was issued and posted on that day. The time fixed for the hearing was January 15, 1917. This constituted sufficient notice to satisfy the requirement of section 1373 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Bates v. Howard, 105 Cal. 173, 38 Pac. 715.

[2] The next contention of the appellant, that the evidence touching the competency of William B. Brown to receive the appointment as administrator and to act and serve as such was insufficient to establish the same, is equally unmeritorious. It is true that the petitioner Brown was of the age of 92 years, but this fact alone would not constitute a disqualification, since the statute fixes no time above the age of majority when advanced age will of itself amount to a disqualification for the office and duties of administrator of an estate. Discussing a similar contention in the Estate of Pacheco, 23 Cal. 476, this court said:

> "The fact of her great age, and that she cannot read or write, and cannot speak English, do not show any want of understanding within the statute. It is true, they may render it difficult for her to perform some of her duties properly, yet they do not render it impossible."

In the instant case, in spite of the advanced age of the petitioner Brown the evidence sufficiently showed him to be a man of considerable physical activity and of quite remarkable clearness of memory and perception, for one of his years, in attending to his own business, and in relation to his knowledge of his deceased sister's affairs and estate. The court had, therefore, ample proofs before it to sustain its order.

[3] Nor would the fact that the petitioner Brown entertained some prejudices against some of the decedent's heirs or devisees suffice to disqualify him to serve as administrator of her estate, and for that reason the action of the court in sustaining objections to questions propounded by appellant along that line of inquiry, and also in refusing to permit in evidence a letter of the petitioner wherein expression was given to these prejudices, would not be erroneous. Estate of Bauquier, 88 Cal. 478, 26 Pac. 373.

[4] It is finally contended by the appellant that the court erred in sustaining the objection to certain questions put by him to the witness Brown as to whether he had not at some time prior to the filing of his petition for letters of administration stated to several persons that he was "too old to qualify, and did not feel able to do so," and in refusing to allow appellant to call and examine witnesses to prove these previous statements of the petitioner in that regard. The court might well have permitted this evidence to go in, although at most it would only have shown a change of opinion on the part of the petitioner Brown as to his ability to perform the duties of administration. But the error of the court, conceding it to be such, was not sufficiently prejudicial to justify the reversal of this case, in view of the fact that the petitioner Brown was before the court upon his own application for letters, and was fully examined and cross-examined as to his physical and mental capabilities to perform the functions of administrator; and the court having thus had an abundant opportunity to observe and determine for itself the present fitness of the petitioner Brown, it became quite immaterial what the latter might have thought or said as to his own qualifications at some earlier point of time.

This disposes of the several contentions that the appellant urged upon this appeal. Order and decree affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.

177 Cal. 295

HAZARD, GOULD & CO. et al. v. ROSENBERG et al. (L. A. 4074.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 24, 1918.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑208(6), 276, 299—MECHANICS' LIENS 🔑3 — LIABILITY OF CONTRACTOR'S SURETIES — DUE PROCESS — CLASS LEGISLATION.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, as amended in 1911, gives a lien to mechanics, materialmen, etc., and provides that such liens shall not be limited to the contract price agreed upon between the contractor and the owner except as therein provided, that in case the contract shall be filed before the work is commenced with a bond of the contractor with good and sufficient sureties, conditioned for the payment of laborers and materialmen, and by its terms inuring to their benefit and giving them a right of action thereon, then the court must, where it would be equitable so to do, restrict the recovery under the liens, to an aggregate amount equal to that due from the owner to the contractor, and render judgment against the contractor and his sureties on the bond for any deficiency or difference. Held, that this is not unconstitutional as impairing the right of contract and thereby depriving one of property without due process of law, as an attempt to enact prohibited class legislation, or as depriving the surety of property without due process by placing upon it a legal obligation for which it never contracted, and by taking from owners and the surety inherent and inalienable rights.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1071(5)—HARMLESS ERROR—FINDINGS BY COURT.

In a suit to enforce mechanics' liens and to recover against the surety on the contractor's bond, if it was error to find that the contractor was a copartnership composed of certain persons, because the partnership was not a party and there was no allegation that the contractor was a partnership, the error was not material, especially as to a claimant who was not looking to the sureties for satisfaction, but only to the premises and to the owners; the contractor not being a necessary party.

3. MECHANICS' LIENS 🔑263(9) — ENFORCEMENT—PARTIES—CONTRACTOR.

The contractor is not a necessary party in a suit by materialmen to foreclose a mechanic's lien.

4. EVIDENCE 🔑338—CERTIFIED COPIES—NECESSITY.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1918, subd. 6, providing that documents of classes other than those specified in preceding subdivisions may be proved by the original or by a copy certified by the legal keeper thereof, the fact that a so-called company was a partnership and the names of the partners could be proved by producing the original certificate from the files of the county clerk's office, instead of by a certified copy.

5. EVIDENCE 🔑161(1)—BEST AND SECONDARY EVIDENCE—CONTENTS OF WRITINGS.

Where offered testimony regarding the personnel of a partnership was based upon a writing which was not offered in evidence, the witness' oral declarations regarding its contents were not the best evidence.

6. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT 🔑23(3) — EVIDENCE OF AGENCY—SUFFICIENCY.

In a suit to foreclose mechanics' liens, the testimony of one of the owners of the building that C., as manager of the firm of contractors, signed the contract for the construction of the building, and that he dealt with him as such manager, the testimony of a representative of one of the claimants that he contracted with the firm transacting the business with C., and testimony that C. signed the checks for the payment of the men employed by the firm and managed the business and ordered all the material for use on the building, sufficiently showed his agency for the firm, as such agency might be proved by circumstances.

7. TRIAL 🔑98—OBJECTIONS TO EVIDENCE—NECESSITY OF RULINGS.

Where in an action to enforce mechanics' liens a witness testified to certain items of materials, and on objection being made to some of the items the court reserved its ruling, subsequent testimony of the witness that some of such items were credited back at the time of filing the lien neutralized the former statement regarding the charges for those items, and rendered any ruling on the objection unnecessary, so far as the items credited back were concerned.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1047(2)—HARMLESS ERROR—FAILURE TO RULE.

The failure to rule favorably to defendants on objections to such items was without injury to defendants.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑206(1) — RESERVATION OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW — RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE.

Where a witness testified by reference to certain slips and defendants did not object to the omission to read the slips into the record, it could not complain of such omission on appeal.

10. MECHANICS' LIENS 🔑157(1) — CLAIM OF LIEN—MISNOMER OF CONTRACTOR.

That the findings in a suit to enforce a mechanic's lien described one member of the firm of contractors as N. M. P., while in the claim of lien his name was given as M. N. P., was immaterial, as the misnomer of the contractor in the claim of lien is harmless, unless some one is misled to his injury.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Suit by Hazard, Gould & Co. and others against R. Rosenberg, H. W. Calkins, the National Surety Company, and others. From the judgment and from an order denying a new trial, the defendants named appeal. Affirmed.

Sam Ferry Smith, of San Diego, for appellants. Johnson & Ryan, M. H. Fleming, A. H. Sweet, Hamilton & Lindley, and Luce & Luce, all of San Diego, J. H. Shankland, of Los Angeles, and Chas. H. Forward, of San Diego, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Actions to enforce six several mechanics' liens were consolidated. The property against which the liens were sought was owned by appellants Rosenberg and Calkins. The National Surety Company was sued upon a contractor's bond given by the Chaffey Concrete Construction Company under the provisions of section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure, to protect Rosenberg and Calkins against liens for labor or materials. One of the lien claimants was nonsuited, and is not a party to this appeal. The others were given judgments against the property owners and a personal judgment against the surety upon the contractor's bond. After the appeal was perfected and the bill of exceptions was settled, but before the transcript was printed, a new trial was granted as to the entire claim of the Chas. R. McCormick Lumber Company, as to the claim of Hazard, Gould & Co., as to that of the California Portland Cement Company, and as to the judgment against appellant National Surety Company. The motion was denied as to all other claimants. From the judgment and from the order denying the motion for a new trial Rosenberg and Calkins and the National Surety Company have appealed.

[1] Appellants rely upon nine specified alleged errors, the first six of which, they assert, are applicable to all of the lien claims, and the others to particular ones. The first four of these allegations of error are attacks upon section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure as amended in 1911, upon the grounds: (1) That it is unconstitutional and void; (2) that it impairs the right of contract, and consequently deprives one of property without due process of law; (3) that the section is an instance of an attempt to enact prohibited class legislation; and (4) that it deprives the surety of property without due process by placing upon it a legal obligation for which it never contracted, and if enforced would take from both owners and surety inherent and inalienable rights upon which the Legislature has no right to encroach. All of these objections have been considered and decided adversely to the contention of appellants in the recent case of Roystone Co. v. Darling, 171 Cal. 526, 154 Pac. 15, which was followed in the very late case of Hollenbeck-Bush Planing Mill Co. v. Amweg, 170 Pac. 148 (Sac. Nos. 2470 and 2503, opinion filed December 31, 1917). Upon the authority of those two decisions the objections to the section in question are found to be of no force.

[2-4] In one of the findings attacked the court declared that during all of the times mentioned in all of the complaints and cross-complaints the Chaffey Concrete Construction Company was a copartnership composed of E. C. Chaffey and N. M. Parker. Appellants say that Chaffey Concrete Construction Company was not a defendant in the complaints of Hazard, Gould & Co. and San Diego Lumber Company, but Chaffey and Parker were named individually in those pleadings, although some attempt was made to state a cause of action against some sort of copartnership, but the Chaffey Construction Company as such partnership or entity was not made a party to the action. In the amended cross-complaint of J. S. Schirm reference is made to "said defendant to cross-complaint Chaffey Concrete Construction Company" as a copartnership composed of M. N. Parker and E. C. Chaffey, but the difficulty is, according to appellant, that the concrete company was not a defendant in the action. Moreover, say counsel for appellants, this cross-complaint names an entirely new partner, i. e., M. N. Parker. The contention is that as the Chaffey Concrete Construction Company as an entity was not a party to the action, and as there was no allegation of such copartnership as a fact, the finding is without the issues, and is prejudicially erroneous. The error, if it be one, is not material, so far as respondent Hazard, Gould & Co. is concerned. That respondent is not looking to the sureties for satisfaction of the judgment, but to the premises and to the owners. But it is not material in any aspect of the case. A contractor is not a necessary party in a suit to foreclose a mechanic's lien. Green v. Clifford, 94 Cal. 49, 29 Pac. 331; Yancy v. Morton, 94 Cal. 558, 29 Pac. 1111. It has also been held in this state that a mistake in naming the contractor in a claim of lien is immaterial, unless the misnomer misled the owner to his prejudice. Tibbetts v. Moore, 23 Cal. 208; First Presbyterian Church of Hutchinson v. Santry & Co., 52 Kan. 462, 34 Pac. 974. It appears that the owners dealt only with the Chaffey Concrete Construction Company as the contractor erecting the building, and that was the entity named in the contract. The original certificate that the so-called "company" was a partnership, and giving the names of the copartners, was produced from the files of the county clerk's office and read into the record. This was proper (subdivision 6, § 1918, Code Civ. Proc.), and there is no merit in the contention that a certified copy would have been the only admissible evidence upon the subject. It is obvious from the record that the owners and the surety company were not, nor was any one of them, misled by any error or informality in the finding which is attacked. It sufficiently appears that, to whomsoever the lien claimants furnished materials and labor, that was the person or entity who was acting with the knowledge and consent of the owners.

[5] Appellant National Surety Company makes the assertion by its counsel that it offered to show by the testimony of Earl A. Garretson, its agent in San Diego, that the Chaffey Concrete Construction Company, for which the bond was issued, was a copartnership composed of A. E. and E. C. Chaffey, but that the proffered testimony was rejected by the court. The proffered testimony was purely hearsay, and was properly excluded from the record. Besides, the statement regarding the personnel of the copartnership which the witness was not allowed to make was based, he said, upon a writing which was not offered in evidence. If he had such writing (and it appears from his own statement that it had been filed with his company) his oral declarations regarding its contents were clearly not the best evidence.

[6] The finding that certain of the plaintiffs furnished materials to the copartnership acting by A. E. Chaffey, as agent, meets with objection on the part of appellants on the ground that the evidence did not even tend to support the court's conclusion respecting agency. It is asserted in the brief of appellants that all of the testimony regarding agency was made up of declarations of the alleged agent himself regarding his asserted authority to bind the copartnership. But Mr. Rosenberg, one of the owners of the real property, testified that A. E. Chaffey, as manager of the Chaffey Concrete Construction Company, signed the contract for the construction of the building, and that witness dealt with Mr. Chaffey as such manager. Mr. A. E. Chaffey according to the witness always acted as manager. The representative of Hazard, Gould & Co., testified that he entered into a contract with the Chaffey Company, transacting the business with Mr. A. E. Chaffey. There was further testimony to the effect that A. E. Chaffey signed the checks for the payment of the men employed by the copartnership, and there was a further statement of a witness that Mr. A. E. Chaffey managed the business and ordered all of the material for use on the building of Rosenberg and Calkins. There was abundant evidence of circumstances showing agency—a fact that may be proved in this manner. Puget Sound Lumber Co. v. Krug, 89 Cal. 237, 26 Pac. 902; Bergtholdt v. Porter Bros. Co., 114 Cal. 681, 46 Pac. 738; Reid v. Clay, 134 Cal. 207, 66 Pac. 262.

[7, 8] Certain items in the claim of lien of Hazard, Gould & Co. met with objections, and the court reserved its rulings upon said objections, and never did rule upon them. Appellants say that they were injured by the court's neglect to pass upon the objections so interposed by them, but this is denied by respondents, who invoke section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution of California. The items were one-third of a dozen long-handled square point Imperial shovels, six No. 54 concrete wheelbarrows, 6 feet of 3-foot half-inch mesh hardware cloth, and 3,835 square feet, 4x12, three-eighths Clinton fabric. It appears from the record that while witness Warren Miller was testifying he enumerated certain matters which, according to the theory of Hazard, Gould & Co., were properly charged to the owners of the property. Objections were made to some of these charges upon the ground that they represented material not used in the construction of the building. After discussion by counsel, indicated but not reproduced in the transcript, counsel for defendants himself proposed that the court reserve its ruling "until," as he said, "we get through the entire bill of particulars." Later Mr. Miller testified that "there is a large amount of this stuff that was credited back at the time of filing the lien," and among the commodities so credited were, as he testified, the one-third dozen Imperial shovels and the six No. 54 concrete barrows. There was no contradiction of this testimony, and it completely neutralized the former statement regarding the charges for these articles in the books of the lien claimant. No ruling on the objection was necessary. The other items, namely, the "6 feet of 3 foot ½ inch mesh hardware cloth" and "3,835 square feet of 4x12, three-eighths Clinton Fabric" went into the construction of the reinforced concrete building. The failure to rule favorably to defendants upon the objections to these items was without injury to them.

[9] The court did not err in finding in favor of San Diego Lumber Company. Popenoe, one of the men employed by the Chaffey Company, was asked regarding a list of materials contained in a writing called "San Diego Lumber Company's Exhibits 1 and 2." He testified that all of the lumber there specified was actually received and used on the building. Appellants now complain that these slips were not read into the record, but they did not object, at the time to that omission. Other witnesses told of the value of the lumber, and that there were two loads, their testimony giving substantial support to the finding now attacked.

[10] And, finally, the court is charged with error in finding in favor of respondent J. S. Schirm. This specification is based upon the fact that in the finding one of the copartnership the Chaffey Concrete Construction Company is described as "N. M. Parker," while in J. S. Schirm's claim of lien the name of one of the said copartners appears as "M. N. Parker." This objection is utterly destitute of merit, and is completely answered by the authorities cited herein, to the effect that misnomer of the contractor in the claim of lien is harmless, unless some one is misled thereby to his injury.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.; WILBUR, J.

---

177 Cal. 262

McSWEENEY v. HYNES et al. (L. A. 4055.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 19, 1918. Rehearing Denied Feb. 18, 1918.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT 🔑83(5) — FINDINGS—RESPONSIVENESS TO ISSUES.

A finding that there was a renewal lease for one year at $750 a year was a sufficient finding upon the issue, whether there was a renewal lease for a year at $300.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT 🔑83(5)—RENEWAL LEASE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action to compel specific performance of a verbal agreement to give a three-year lease at an annual rental of $1,000, evidence held sufficient to support a finding that there was a lease for one year only at $750 a year.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Wellborn, Judge.

Action by E. D. McSweeney against Mary Josie Hynes and others. From a judgment for defendants, and from an order denying new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. E. Hannon, of Los Angeles, for appellant. M. J. McGarry, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. Appeal from a judgment in favor of defendants, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for new trial.

[1, 2] Plaintiff states his cause of action in two counts, the first an action to compel the specific performance of a verbal agreement to give a three-year lease of certain land known and designated as lot 4 of tract 1812, at an annual rental of $1,000. The second count is based upon the renewal of a previous verbal lease for one year, which expired December 1, 1913; it being alleged that "the said lease was renewed for the term ending December 1, 1914, on the same terms and rental as the said lease ending December 1, 1913," namely, at a yearly rental of $300, payable in advance. It is admitted that the plaintiff was in possession for the year ending December 1, 1913, and has ever since remained in possession of the premises. It is admitted that he has paid rental therefor amounting to $1,000, $250 of which the defendants have offered to return. The court found that there was no agreement to give a lease for three years at $1,000 per annum, but that there was an agreement to lease the premises for one year at a rental of $750. Appellant complains that no finding was made upon the issue as to whether or not there was a renewal lease for a year at $300 per annum, but the finding of the court that there was a renewal lease for one year at a rental of $750 per annum is a sufficient finding on that subject. The next point raised is that the evidence is insufficient to justify the finding that there was an agreement to rent the premises for one year at $750 per year. The evidence shows that from December 16, 1913, to April 11, 1914, negotiations were in progress between the parties. Plaintiff testifies that an agreement was made to lease him the premises at $1,000 per year for three years on December 16th. This is denied by the defendant, who immediately and repeatedly refused to sign a three-year lease. It is clearly shown that negotiations were in progress for a lease until April 11th, at which time the defendant Mary Josie Hynes, having received an account from the plaintiff showing that he claimed to have paid on her account the sum of $500, as final payment of the $1,000 due on the first year of the three-year lease, replied that she would not accept such payment, but would repay to him the sum of $250 as shown in his account, and retain the balance as final payment on a one-year lease at $750 per annum. In pursuance of the negotiations and before a final agreement had been made, the defendant erected a pumping plant on the premises for pumping irrigation water, which during said negotiations she agreed to furnish to the plaintiff. This fact accounts for the increased rental. Under all the circumstances, which need not be set forth in detail, we are satisfied that the trial court was justified in its findings.

Judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.

175 Cal. 95

MACDERMOT et al. v. HAYES et al.

(S. F. 7126, 7298.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 9, 1917. Opinion Corrected and Rehearing Denied June 8, 1917.)

1. TRUSTS 🔑101 — INVOLUNTARY TRUSTS—LIABILITY FOR PROFITS — "INVOLUNTARY TRUSTEE."

Civ. Code, § 2224, provides that one who gains a thing by fraud or other wrongful act is an involuntary trustee for the benefit of the person who would otherwise have had it. Sections 2229, 2230, 2233, 2234, 2237, prohibit trustees from acquiring adverse interests in the trust property, or being personally interested in transactions relating thereto. Section 2243 provides that any one to whom property is transferred in violation of a trust holds the same as an involuntary trustee, unless a purchaser in good faith, for a valuable consideration. The agent of plaintiff's ancestor purchased bonds from a corporation through his son, who was an employé thereof, with the money of plaintiff's ancestor, and concealed the fact that a bonus of stock was given with the purchase and kept such stock for himself. Held, that he was a trustee for his principal, as to the stock.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Involuntary Trustee.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1008(1)—REVIEW—FINDINGS OF FACT.

In a suit to recover corporation stock as trust property, a finding that a corporation employé, selling bonds to one who bought as agent, was disposing of his own property, rightfully acquired from the corporation, and that he was entitled to retain a stock bonus without disclosing such fact to the purchaser, would not be disturbed; since, where the facts established may reasonably authorize opposite inferences, the adoption of one of such inferences by the court is binding on appeal.

3. TRUSTS 🔑103(2) — CONFIDENTIAL RELATION—"INVOLUNTARY TRUSTEE."

Where a father bought from his son, who was a corporation employé, certain bonds with trust funds, the parental relation did not of itself operate to create such a confidential relation between the son and the father's principal as to charge him as "involuntary trustee" for the principal as to corporation stock given as a bonus with the bonds but retained by him.

4. TRUSTS 🔑375(1)—INVOLUNTARY TRUSTS—DESCENT OF TRUST PROPERTY.

In a suit to recover corporation stock as trust property, a finding that the stock was not bought with the money of the buyer's principal prevents the entry of a judgment transferring the property to the principal on the theory that the property which the trustee wrongfully allowed his vendor to retain subsequently devolved to him through inheritance, and became chargeable with a trust in favor of the principal on account of the previous bad faith on the agent's part.

5. LIS PENDENS 🔑4—PERSONAL PROPERTY—COMMON-LAW RULE.

Since Code Civ. Proc. § 1908, subd. 2, making a judgment conclusive only in those cases where the parties had notice, actual or constructive, of the pendency of the action or proceeding, abolishes the common-law rule as to lis pendens, except as preserved by section 409, which is applicable only to actions concerning real property, the common-law doctrine that a purchaser pendente lite of the subject of the suit takes as a volunteer in subordination to the judgment does not apply to a purchaser of corporation stock, pending action in equity to recover it as trust property.

6. ESTOPPEL 🔑75 — CLOTHING ANOTHER WITH APPARENT TITLE—CORPORATE STOCK.

Where one placed his money in control of another, permitted him to buy stock therewith, and to hold himself out to third persons as to absolute ownership thereof, he is estopped to claim title thereunder, as to one who purchased from the apparent owner in good faith.

7. TRUSTS 🔑371(1) — ACTION TO RECOVER TRUST FUNDS—IDENTITY OF PROPERTY.

In a suit to recover corporation stock as trust funds, a judgment transferring to plaintiff certain shares belonging to trustee's estate, similar to trust shares sold by him to an innocent purchaser, cannot be entered in the absence of an allegation that defendant is in a position to make such delivery.

8. TRUSTS 🔑371(8) — RECOVERY OF TRUST PROPERTY—PLEADING—EVIDENCE.

In a suit to recover corporation stock as trust funds, evidence that the purchaser by pledging his principal's bonds obtained money wherewith to purchase certain other bonds, possession of which is sought, was properly rejected as not corresponding to the allegations of the complaint.

9. PLEADING 🔑236(2) — AMENDMENT—DILIGENCE.

In a suit to recover corporation stock as property of an involuntary trust, refusal of an amendment raising new issues not asked until the second trial seven years after the decision of the first appeal, and after two amendments in regard to the same matter had been granted, was within the court's discretion.

10. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑877(1)—RIGHT TO APPEAL—PERSONS INTERESTED.

In a suit to recover corporation stock as property of an involuntary trust, a naked trustee cannot object that the judgment, requiring him to surrender the property, is erroneous; he having no beneficial interest therein.

11. TRUSTS 🔑366(3) — ENFORCEMENT — DEFENDANTS—TRANSFER OF INTEREST.

Where a corporation which was the successor of a previously existing company received certain stock belonging to the company, for the sole purpose of transferring the stock, in a suit to recover the stock as trust property, it is not necessary to make the corporation a party, where the former company has been joined; since Code Civ. Proc. § 1908, provides that title obtained by persons not parties to the action subsequent to the commencement thereof shall be subject to the judgment if such purchasers have actual or constructive notice of the suit.

12. Appeal and Error ⚿882(4)—Right to Allege Error—Failure to Bring in Parties.

In a suit to recover corporation stock as trust funds, the defendant cannot object that the judgment is erroneous, because a corporation which was defendant's successor in interest was not made a party to the suit, where an order was entered by the trial court directing defendant to bring in all parties interested.

13. Limitation of Actions ⚿66(7) — Recovery of Trust Funds—Demand.

In a suit to recover dividends on corporation stock as trust funds, the statute of limitations does not begin to run until a demand for such dividends was made, unless demand was unreasonably delayed.

14. Limitation of Actions ⚿195(3)—Laches—Recovery of Trust Funds.

In a suit to recover dividends in corporation stock as trust funds, the burden was upon defendants to prove that plaintiffs unreasonably delayed making demand therefor; the plaintiffs not being required to make a demand unless they knew or had good reason to believe that dividends had been declared.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by Louis M. MacDermot and others against Mary E. Hayes, executrix, and others. From the judgment, plaintiffs and defendant Standard Portland Cement Company and cross-defendant L. F. Young, brought in by order of the court, appeal. Judgment and denial of new trial affirmed.

Geo. W. Towle, Grant & Zimdars, and William H. Bryan, all of San Francisco, for appellants MacDermot and others. Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck, W. H. Smith, Jr., Charles W. Slack, and J. R. Pringle, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The plaintiffs appeal from the judgment so far as it is against their claim set forth in the complaint, and the defendants Standard Portland Cement Company and cross-defendant L. F. Young each appeal from the judgment and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. By stipulation, all the appeals are presented on one transcript of the record. The plaintiffs' appeal is numbered 7126, and those of said defendants are numbered 7298 on the register of this court.

The action was begun on March 29, 1904, Charles Main being the original plaintiff and Thomas R. Hayes, individually and as executor of the estate of C. E. Hayes, deceased, and Standard Portland Cement Company the original defendants. Main afterwards died, and his estate was distributed to Flora B. MacDermot, who was substituted as plaintiff. She also died, and her estate was then distributed to the present plaintiffs, who have been duly substituted as plaintiffs in her stead. Thomas R. Hayes subsequently died, and Mary E. Hayes, as his executrix and as administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of C. E. Hayes, deceased, has been duly substituted as defendant. The case was tried prior to April, 1906, and the resulting judgment for the defendants was reversed on appeal. Bone v. Hayes, 154 Cal. 759, 99 Pac. 172. Afterward, by order of the court, the cement company, in October, 1911, filed a cross-complaint, bringing in James B. Smith, F. A. Losh, and L. F. Young as parties to the action. The judgment now under review was the result of the second trial. The respective appeals will be considered together.

The object of the action as set forth in the prayer of the original complaint was to have 600 shares of stock of the Standard Portland Cement Company, evidenced by certificates 78, 79, 80, 84, 85, and 170, declared to be the property of the original plaintiff, Charles Main. The ground of the claim is that said shares of stock were purchased by Thomas R. Hayes with moneys of Main held in trust by Hayes, that Thomas R. Hayes took 300 of said shares in his own name, being certificates 78, 79, and 84, and that C. E. Hayes took the remaining 300 shares in his name, being certificates 80, 85, and 170, with knowledge of the fact that they had been paid for by Thomas R. Hayes with the moneys of Main. Certain undisputed facts showing the conditions existing when the alleged cause of action arose will be first stated.

In 1902, William J. Dingee and William G. Henshaw owned a large tract of land on which they proposed to establish a cement factory. They organized a company, called it Standard Portland Cement Company, and conveyed to it the land in exchange for all of its capital stock, which was nominally $2,000,000, divided into 20,000 shares of the face value of $100 each. The company then created a bond issue of $500,000, consisting of 500 bonds of $1,000 each. These bonds were then sold and delivered to Dingee and Henshaw, who were to pay for them at par as tendered to them by the company. The object was to raise the money in this manner wherewith to build the cement works. The plan was that they should sell the bonds to others for cash and take up the bonds, as sold, until sufficient money was obtained. To induce purchases, they offered to sell 20 shares of the company stock and one bond to any purchaser, at the price of $1,000 for both bond and stock. The stock was called a bonus, but the transaction, when complete, was, in its legal aspect, as much a sale of the stock as of the bonds. We deem it unnecessary to discuss the distinction sought to be made by the defendants on this point further than to say that it has no substantial existence. Thomas R. Hayes was the father of C. E. Hayes. The latter was an employé of Dingee and Henshaw and a personal friend of Henshaw. He was on a fixed salary, but there was an understanding that he would have an opportunity to make some additional money if from their operations it should become available and seem advisable. By his will, C. E. Hayes gave all his property, including his right, title, and interest in the 300 shares of stock so issued to him, to his father. Thomas R. Hayes was and long had been the confidential agent and trustee of Charles Main, the original plaintiff, in control of Main's money and empowered as such agent to invest it at his own discretion. This was fully known to C. E. Hayes at the time of the transactions in question.

The complaint is in three counts. It states the causes of action with great detail. In substance, the charge is that Thomas R. Hayes, as agent of Main and with Main's money, purchased for Main from Dingee and Henshaw 25 of these bonds and 600 shares of the stock for $25,000; that C. E. Hayes assisted his father in making the purchases and was fully aware of all the facts; that Thomas R. Hayes accounted for and delivered to Main all of the bonds and did not deliver to him any of the stock, but that he and his son caused 300 shares thereof, certificates Nos. 78, 79, and 84, to be issued to Thomas R. Hayes, and the remaining 300 shares, certificates Nos. 80, 85, and 170, to be issued to C. E. Hayes; that said stock was issued solely in consideration of the purchase of said bonds and the payment of said sum of money. The first count relates to 15 of these bonds and 300 shares of the stock, being certificates 78, 79, and 80, which were purchased on September 29, 1902; the second count to 5 of the bonds and 200 shares of stock, being certificates Nos. 84 and 85, which were purchased on October 4, 1902; and the third count to the remaining 5 bonds and 100 shares of stock, being certificate 170, which were purchased on January 8, 1903. It is alleged in the original complaint that on October 4, 1902, Thomas R. Hayes bought five bonds, in consideration of which 200 shares of stock were issued as a bonus; one certificate, No. 84, being taken in his own name and the other certificate, No. 85, being taken in the name of C. E. Hayes, each for 100 shares. By amendments filed in 1913, it is alleged that only 100 shares of stock were issued in consideration of the purchase of these five bonds on October 4, 1902, to wit, either certificate 84 in the name of Thomas R. Hayes, or certificate No. 85 in the name of C. E. Hayes, and further that on that day Thomas R. Hayes, through and by C. E. Hayes, purchased ten of said bonds, five with Main's money, and the other five partly with his own money, in consideration of which purchase the said two certificates were issued. It is not alleged that any of Main's money was used to pay for the second five of this block of ten bonds. Consequently, as the pleadings stood at the time of the trial, the claim was for 500 shares of stock instead of the 600 originally claimed, and it was left uncertain whether the plaintiff claimed certificate 84 or 85 in consideration of the purchase of five of the bonds on October 4, 1902. It will be observed that the charge, in effect, is that these 25 bonds and the accompanying stock were purchased by Thomas R. Hayes, with the assistance of his son C. E. Hayes, from Dingee and Henshaw.

The findings of the court were not entirely in accordance with these allegations. The findings are that Dingee and Henshaw gave to C. E. Hayes the option of purchasing from them 100 of said bonds with the accompanying stock of 20 shares per bond, at the rate of $1,000 for each bond and the accompanying shares, and of reselling the bonds and stock, separately or together, for his own account, on such terms as he saw fit, and that at the time of the purchases aforesaid C. E. Hayes bought the bonds and stock of Dingee and Henshaw and resold the bonds to Thomas R. Hayes at the price of $1,000 for each bond, the same being paid for with money of Main, that upon the said purchases, at the direction of C. E. Hayes, certificates Nos. 78, 79, and 84, aforesaid, were issued to Thomas R. Hayes, and certificates Nos. 80, 85, and 170, aforesaid, were issued to C. E. Hayes, and that the certificates so issued to Thomas R. Hayes were delivered by Dingee and Henshaw to C. E. Hayes. It is further found that Thomas R. Hayes used the moneys of Main in purchasing the bonds from C. E. Hayes but did not use Main's money in purchasing or paying for any of the shares of stock, except that the said certificates for such stock were issued at the direction of C. E. Hayes upon the purchase of the bonds by C. E. Hayes from Dingee and Henshaw, that Thomas R. Hayes, in purchasing the bonds, did not use the services of C. E. Hayes otherwise than as above stated. This, it must be conceded, is rather obscure. But as a finding must be construed so as to support the judgment, if reasonably possible, the meaning, in effect, is that C. E. Hayes bought the bonds and stock for his own account from Dingee and Henshaw, that he resold them to Thomas R. Hayes for Main, giving as a bonus therefor only 300 shares of stock instead of the 600 shares as claimed in the complaint. There is no evidence other than the bare record of the transactions to show any knowledge on the part of C. E. Hayes of the failure of Thomas R. Hayes to inform Main of the stock bonus, or that he knew that Main had not directed Thomas R. Hayes to buy the bonds alone and refuse to accept the stock. It may be added that there is no allegation that C. E. Hayes had knowledge of these two matters. Fair dealing is presumed in the absence of knowledge or notice to the contrary, and C. E. Hayes therefore had the right to proceed on the assumption that Main did not want to take the stock, and on that theory he had the right to offer all or a part of such stock to his father. The court also found that Main had no previous knowledge whatever of the purchase of any of these bonds except the last lot of five, and that he had no knowledge at all of the fact that there was a stock bonus offered or given with the bonds. As to certificate 78 issued to Thomas R. Hayes, the court found that after this action was begun it was sold and transferred to said James B. Smith, and that he paid a valuable consideration and took said 100 shares without notice of the rights of Main therein, or of the facts above stated.

The judgment of the court below was in favor of the plaintiffs with regard to the certificates Nos. 79 and 84, aforesaid, and in favor of the defendants for the other shares of stock in controversy. The Standard Portland Cement Company was directed to issue to the plaintiffs out of the stock in question a new certificate for 200 shares of its stock. The court was of the opinion that the sale of 100 shares represented by Thomas R. Hayes to James B. Smith, a cross-defendant, after the suit was begun, put that stock out of its power and beyond the reach of the plaintiffs because of the fact that Smith was a purchaser for value without notice of the plaintiff's equities. It therefore refused to give plaintiff any relief on account of those shares. As to the three certificates for 300 shares issued to C. E. Hayes as aforesaid, the theory, as we understand it, is that said Hayes was not chargeable with any trust in favor of the plaintiffs with respect thereto, but held the same as his own property in virtue of the transactions by which he acquired them.

[1] We are satisfied that the court was correct in its conclusion that Thomas R. Hayes was chargeable as an involuntary trustee for the benefit of Main of the 300 shares of stock issued to him. He could not use or deal with Main's money for his own profit, nor, without the consent of Main made after full disclosure by him to Main of all the facts affecting the transaction, take part therein in order to obtain an interest beneficial to himself, or without immediately informing Main of that fact. His conduct constituted a fraud against Main, and he was accountable in equity for everything gained by himself in the transactions. Civ. Code, §§ 2224, 2229, 2230, 2233, 2234, 2237, 2243. In view of the findings with respect to these 300 shares, we must assume that the court believed that Thomas R. Hayes obtained the stock by purchasing the bonds, that he concealed that fact from Main and availed himself of the opportunity of buying the bonds with the purpose of benefiting himself by taking the stock in his own name. It is immaterial whether they were given to him by his son or obtained through the form of a purchase with the bonds. In either case he was bound to give the benefit to his principal, and he cannot be allowed to hold such property against the demand of his principal for a restitution. The rights of Smith as an innocent purchaser of 100 shares will be considered later.

[2] The main contention of the plaintiffs upon their appeal is that the court erred in holding that C. E. Hayes took the stock issued to him free from any charge as involuntary trustee thereof in favor of Main. It is also claimed that the court should have held that Thomas R. Hayes, as successor in interest of his son, and because he was the original wrongdoer, took the same by the bequest from his son subject to the claims of Main, which thereupon reattached to the stock.

The theory of the plaintiffs is that C. E. Hayes was buying these bonds from Dingee and Henshaw for Main at the request of Thomas R. Hayes and that in so doing he was the agent of the latter and, of course, a subagent for Main; in which case he also would be chargeable as trustee and would be obliged to account for and render up to Main, or his successors, all benefits received by him in the transaction. Civ. Code, §§ 2229, 2230, 2237, and 2243. The evidence which it is claimed establishes such subagency on the part of C. E. Hayes is altogether circumstantial, consisting of inferences from the facts shown and admitted to be true and which are claimed to be necessary inferences therefrom. The rule is too well settled to require citation of authority that, where the facts established may reasonably authorize opposite inferences and the trial court has adopted one and rejected the other, its decision is binding upon this court upon appeal; the case being in substance the same as that where it decides upon the weight of contradictory evidence. We are not disposed to say that, if the trial court had found from the facts established that C. E. Hayes was merely acting as intermediary of Thomas R. Hayes for the purpose of buying for Main from the cement company, or from Dingee and Henshaw, the bonds in question, such decision would not be supported by the reasonable inferences deducible from the facts proven. But the facts also authorize the opposite inference; that is to say, that C. E. Hayes was disposing of his own property and rights and was acting wholly on his own account and for his own advantage in making the sale of the bonds to Thomas R. Hayes, and that no trust relation, either express or implied, existed between him and Thomas R. Hayes or Charles Main. Dingee and Henshaw had given him the option or privilege of selling the bonds and stock of the company for his own account, the sole condition being that he must pay the full price of $1,000 for each bond and the corresponding stock sold as a bonus therewith. Whether a binding contract or not, the effect is the same, for they recognized its obligation and carried it out. Under this arrangement, he was himself, in legal contemplation, the owner of the stock and bonds which he undertook to sell. He was under no obligation to disclose either to his father or to Charles Main the conditions upon which he was authorized to sell the bonds, nor the benefits which could be derived therefrom, or, if he did disclose to his father the fact that he was to receive a stock bonus with each bond, he was under no obligation, in equity and good conscience, to offer both to his father for Main, even if he did have knowledge that his father was investing the money of Main. He was at liberty to offer his father the bonds at the par value and at the same time state his intention to keep the stock for himself. If his father was content with the price, C. E. Hayes was under no obligation to object or to call attention to the fact that it was his father's duty to insist upon receiving the stock also. The offer and acceptance created no trust relation between C. E. Hayes and his father and would not make the former the agent of the latter or of Main. There is no evidence that C. E. Hayes was aware of the fact that his father had not fully informed Main of the conditions upon which the bonds were sold and had not received from Main instructions to buy the bonds without the stock. The relation of C. E. Hayes to the parties did not make it his duty to inquire concerning these facts. He had the right to rely upon the presumption that his father was acting honestly and in good faith toward his principal. The enterprise of the Standard Portland Cement Company was at that time in its beginning. The value of the stock was then largely prospective, and it was not unreasonable to suppose that it had no appreciable value. Neither the evidence nor the allegations show that it then had any value. It is not unusual for such stock to become more of a liability than as asset to the holder. Under such circumstances, it was not unreasonable for C. E. Hayes to suppose, if the question had been suggested to him, that Main preferred to take the bonds without any stock. All these inferences might have been made by the court below from the facts with as much reason as the opposite inferences contended for by the plaintiffs. Under these circumstances, we are not disposed to disturb the finding of the court that C. E. Hayes took this stock as his own without any obligation to account therefor as either a voluntary or involuntary trustee for Main.

[3] There is no merit in the claim that the relation of father and son, of itself, operated to create a confidential relation between the son and Main, so as to charge the son as an involuntary trustee for Main of the stock issued to himself. The relation of father and son is, by the rules of equity jurisprudence, deemed confidential. So also is the relation of principal and agent, and each party to one of these relations is bound to the utmost good faith with the other party in that relation. But we are unaware of any principle of law or equity to the effect that in one such relation the duty of one party to the other extends to a third person dealing with one of them as to whom he occupies a different relation, as, for example, that where a father is agent for a stranger his parental relation makes all his children fiduciaries to the stranger. No authority is cited for the proposition, and we are unable to discover any principle or sound reason on which to found such an extension of the law of confidential relations, or on which to hold that the duty of a father as agent of a stranger is obligatory upon each of his children. On the contrary, we think it must be admitted that his children, in dealing with him concerning the subject of his trust, occupy the same independent position as other third persons and are no more required to insist upon a faithful performance of his fiduciary obligations by the father, or to inquire as to the fact of such faithful performance, than would any other person having such dealings. If it was a fact, as the court may have inferred, that C. E. Hayes sold the bonds to Main, through the agency of his father, in the belief that Main desired the bonds alone without the stock, C. E. Hayes was not chargeable with any trust in regard to the stock toward Main and could dispose of it as he saw fit when the transaction was made. If thereupon he chose to keep some of the shares for himself and have others issued to his father, no involuntary trust would arise as to him with regard to the shares which he thus kept. If the son, upon selling the bonds, occupied a position which would authorize him justly to retain the stock as his own, as we must assume the court below believed, he was at liberty, upon making such sale, to give a part of the stock to his father, if he chose, and the fact that he did so does not of necessity, raise an inference that he had knowledge of bad faith on the part of his father in accepting the offer of the bonds alone for Main. Perhaps the court below might better have made such inference from the bare facts shown; but we cannot say as matter of law, it was bound to do so, or that the contrary inference was beyond the limits of reason. The argument for the plaintiffs in some of its aspects appears to assume that C. E. Hayes was making a general offer to all persons to sell the stock with the bonds for a fixed price per bond, and that he was under some obligation to hold out this opportunity to purchasers from him. This, however, as we have seen, was not a necessary inference, and we must assume that the court did not so hold.

[4] The plaintiffs, in their reply brief, claim that, while it may be true that C. E. Hayes had a perfect title to the stock free from any charge in favor of Main, nevertheless, when the property devolved upon Thomas R. Hayes in virtue of the bequest to him from C. E. Hayes, it immediately became charged with a trust in favor of Main because of the previous bad faith of Thomas R. Hayes in purchasing the bonds without the stock and allowing his son to take the same in his own name. There is authority for this proposition, although none is cited by the plaintiffs. Mr. Perry, on this subject, says:

> "But if the property comes back into the hands of the original trustee, or into the hands of any one affected with the guilt of the original sale, he will be a trustee for the defrauded party, although the property may have passed through several innocent hands." 1 Perry on Trusts, § 222; Id. § 830.

See, also, 20 Cyc. 654; Church v. Ruland, 64 Pa. 444; Kennedy v. Daly, 1 Sch. & Lefroy [Irish Ch.] 379; Bourquin v. Bourquin, 120 Ga. 115, 47 S. E. 639; Ely v. Wilcox, 26 Wis. 91; Williams v. Williams, 118 Mich. 477, 76 N. W. 1039; Bovey v. Smith, 2 Ch. Cas. 124, 1 Vern. 60, 85.

The difficulty with the proposition is that the only foundation which is laid for it in the pleadings is destroyed by the findings, which, as we have seen, are supported by sufficient evidence. The sole theory upon which the complaint charges an involuntary trust with respect to the 300 shares issued to C. E. Hayes is that they were purchased with the bonds by Thomas R. Hayes, through the medium of C. E. Hayes, that is, with his assistance as subagent, from Dingee and Henshaw and paid for with the money of Main, of which latter fact C. E. Hayes had knowledge. The court found that the bonds and stock were not purchased by Thomas R. Hayes from Dingee and Henshaw, but that the bonds were purchased by Thomas R. Hayes from C. E. Hayes with, at most, only 300 shares of stock as a bonus. It is not alleged that Thomas R. Hayes knew that Dingee and Henshaw were offering bonds with a 20-share bonus, or knew that they had bonds or stock for sale at all, or that he had information to the effect that he could have procured for Main twenty shares of stock for each bond he bought, or any greater number of shares than the 300 which he took in his own name, or that with reasonable diligence he would have discovered these facts, or that by his negligence he failed to make such discovery. Consequently, no fraud or involuntary trust based on these facts, or any of them, can be adjudged against the defendants under this complaint. The involuntary trust alleged as to these shares is predicated wholly on the use of Main's money to buy them, and this charge is disposed of by the findings to the effect that this stock was not bought with Main's money, that only the other 300 shares were offered to or bought by Thomas R. Hayes, and that these 300 shares were rightfully and properly retained by C. E. Hayes as his own profit upon his resale. As to them, under the pleadings and findings, there was no trust in favor of Main.

[5] James B. Smith had purchased the 100 shares of stock represented by certificate 78 before he was made a party to the action. He paid full value and took the stock without actual notice of the facts upon which the plaintiffs base their claim, or of the pendency of the action. It is claimed by the plaintiffs that a purchaser of such property pending an action in equity to recover it as the subject of a trust in the hands of a defendant is charged with constructive notice of the facts asserted in the complaint and takes subject to the judgment finally rendered in the action. The general rule has been said to be that:

> "Every man is presumed to be attentive to what passes in the courts of justice of the state or sovereignty where he resides, and therefore a purchase made of property actually in litigation pendente lite for a valuable consideration, and without any express or implied notice in point of fact, affects the purchaser in the same manner as if he had such notice; he will accordingly be bound by the judgment or decree in the suit." 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 405, quoted with approval in Sampson v. Ohleyer, 22 Cal. 210.

The case cited was an action for the possession of land. At that time the Practice Act (section 27), providing for the filing of a lis pendens notice, applied only in actions affecting the title to real property and was not applicable in cases for the mere possession. Wattson v. Dowling, 26 Cal. 124. It was said that this statute did not otherwise change the law on the subject and that the purchaser pending an action for possession, only, might be bound, although no lis pendens notice had been filed. But the case was decided on the ground that the purchaser had actual notice. The statute has since been changed so that the right to file a notice of the pendency of an action extends to actions for possession of real property as well as to those affecting the title thereto. Code Civ. Proc. § 409. The question whether or not the doctrine of lis pendens applies to actions to reach specific personal property has not heretofore been decided or considered by this court, so far as we are advised. Section 409 is limited in its application to cases affecting real property. It appears to be the established rule that, where a lis pendens statute has no negative words or repealing clause, it is to be "regarded as supplemental to the common law and not as repealing it, so that the common law will govern in all cases not covered by the statute." 25 Cyc. 1453. On the question whether or not the common-law doctrine of lis pendens applies to actions involving specific personal property the authorities are in conflict. 21 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 626. In England, in Wigram v. Buckley, L. R. 1894, 3 Ch. Div. 483, the court, after careful consideration, decided that it did not apply to purchases of personal property pendente lite from a party to the action. In Cyclopedia of Law and Procedure (25 Cyc. 1453), it is stated that the prevailing rule is that it does apply in purchases of personal property. But an examination of the cases cited shows that few of them are well considered and several have been questioned in subsequent cases. We think it has been generally supposed that in this state the doctrine applies only to real property. It is said in Sampson v. Ohleyer, supra, that even in cases of suits affecting real property, prior to the enactment of any law for the recording of any lis pendens notice, the rule sometimes operated as a hardship upon parties who had no actual notice. The provision for the recording of notice was doubtless intended to prevent such injustice. It is apparent that the injustice would be much greater and of more frequent occurrence if the doctrine were extended to specific personal property, the possession or evidence of title whereof may be passed from hand to hand without public or written evidence of its transfer. In Page v. Chase Co., 145 Cal. 581, 79 Pac. 279, the court said:

> "The rule of the common law that a purchaser pendente lite of the subject of the controversy took as a volunteer or intruder and in subordination to the judgment thereafter rendered in the action is not in force in this state. * * * The provision, in section 1908 (subd. 2) of the Code of Civil Procedure, that a judgment is conclusive with respect to the matter directly adjudged between the parties and their successors in interest by title subsequent to the commencement of the action, is by the concluding clause of the section applicable only to those cases where the parties have had 'notice, actual or constructive, of the pendency of the action'" or proceeding.

This, of course, cannot refer to the constructive notice which at common law was imputed to all persons from the fact that an action was begun, for if that was its meaning the proviso would be without any force whatever as to actual notice, since the action would always be constructive notice and all persons would be concluded whether they had actual notice or not. It must refer to constructive notice arising from some other fact than that of the pendency of the action. The provision applies to all classes of actions other than those described in subdivision 1 of the section. It therefore excludes the common-law doctrine that the pendency of an action is, itself, constructive notice to all. This is the basis of the rule that purchasers pendente lite are charged with notice and take subject to the judgment. The effect of this section, therefore, is to abolish the common-law rule, except in so far as it is preserved by section 409, Code of Civil Procedure. That section applies only to actions concerning real property. The result is that in this state the doctrine does not apply to personal property in actions of this character.

[6] The plaintiffs invoke the doctrine that the vendor of personal property can transfer no better title than he himself possesses, as against the true owner, unless an estoppel exists against such owner. Here, however, the facts show an estoppel against Main. He placed his money in the possession and control of Hayes, who thereupon used it to buy these bonds, and so was enabled to procure the stock in his own name without anything on the face of the certificate to identify it as the property of Main. Main in this manner permitted Hayes to clothe himself with all the evidences of ownership of the stock and enabled him to represent to third persons that he was the absolute owner thereof. He is therefore estopped to claim title against one who has purchased and paid for the stock in good faith relying upon the apparent ownership which the conduct of Main thus made possible. The case comes within the principle stated in Fowles v. National Bank, 167 Cal. 656, 140 Pac. 271, and Thompson v. Toland, 48 Cal. 112.

[7] The plaintiffs further urge that inasmuch as it appears that there is other stock of the cement company belonging to the estate of Hayes, sufficient to replace the shares sold to Smith, and of like kind, the court should have directed a transfer to plaintiffs of 100 shares thereof. The argument is that the identity of the shares, in such a case, is immaterial if substantial restitution can be made out of other property of the same kind belonging to the wrongdoer. Bell v. Bank, 153 Cal. 239, 94 Pac. 889; Atkins v. Gamble, 42 Cal. 101, 10 Am. Rep. 282; Krouse v. Woodward, 110 Cal. 643, 42 Pac. 1084. The answer to the argument is found in the cases cited in support of it. Bell v. Bank; Krouse v. Woodward, supra. The court, in Bell v. Bank, says that, where one is seeking to enforce an involuntary trust of this character by a transfer from the trustee to him of similar property in lieu of that which has passed out of the control of the trustee, he "must allege and show that the defendant is in a position to make such delivery." The complaint contains no allegation of this character, and no such issue is embraced in the pleadings. It is true that the findings do show that the 300 shares issued to C. E. Hayes belong to the estate of Thomas R. Hayes. But the point that 100 of those shares might be substituted for those sold to Smith was not made in the court below, nor in this court except in the reply brief. It may be that if the point had been presented in the lower court the defendant Hayes could have shown good cause for denying the relief. Under these circumstances, we will not change the judgment in this particular.

[8, 9] The refusal of the court to allow evidence that Thomas R. Hayes, by pledging the bonds of Main in his possession, obtained the money wherewith he purchased five of the ten bonds sold him on October 4, 1902, resulting in the issuance of certificate 85, or to allow an amendment of the complaint alleging that fact, is assigned as error. The evidence did not correspond to the allegations of the complaint at that time and it was properly rejected for that reason. The true question, therefore, is whether or not the court erred in refusing leave to amend. Such an amendment would have raised new issues. It was not sought until the second trial, seven years after the first appeal was decided, a decision containing a suggestion that the complaint be amended, and after at least two amendments thereto had been made relating to the stock. The lack of diligence in offering to amend is obvious. Nothing was shown in excuse. It was a matter within the discretion of the court, and we perceive no abuse of discretion.

The appeals of Young and the Standard Portland Cement Company are presented together. The points urged in support thereof are: (1) That it was error to direct Young to surrender for cancellation and transfer to the plaintiffs his certificate of stock in the cement company, representing the 200 shares adjudged to plaintiffs by the the judgment; and (2) that it was error to give judgment against the cement company for the dividends declared on the stock up to April 15, 1907. In explanation it will be necessary to state some additional facts.

After the action was begun the stockholders of the cement company, not including plaintiffs, organized a new corporation named Standard Portland Cement Corporation with a capital stock of $4,000,000 divided into 40,000 shares of $100 each. It was arranged that the capital stock of the "corporation" should be issued to L. F. Young, that the "company" should transfer all of its property and business to said "corporation," that the stockholders of the "company" should then surrender their shares in the "company" to Young in exchange for stock in the "corporation," at the rate of one share in the "company" for two shares in the "corporation." In this manner the "corporation" would take over the property and business of the "company" and the stockholders of the latter would receive in exchange for each share of that stock double the number of shares in the stock of the "corporation." This arrangement was carried out on April 19, 1907, and thereupon the "corporation" succeeded to the property and business of the "company." Plaintiffs did not consent to the arrangement, and there was no consideration for the respective exchanges of property and stock except as above stated. The defendant Hayes surrendered the two certificates 79 and 84, and new certificates for the 200 shares were issued, one to Frank A. Losh and the other to L. F. Young. Neither paid value for the transfer. Losh had notice of plaintiffs' claims at the time, but Young did not. According to the findings, by various surrenders and transfers of the stock represented by the aforesaid certificates 79 and 84, it came about that the shares represented thereby were all transferred on the books of the company to L. F. Young in pursuance of the arrangement for the exchange of stock aforesaid and he still holds the same in his name. In lieu thereof there were transferred by him to Frank A. Losh and Mary E. Hayes, respectively, 200 shares each of stock in the said "corporation." This was done in the carrying out of the arrangement above mentioned. Young was not a bona fide holder or purchaser for a valuable consideration of any of said shares. They were transferred to him for the purpose of effecting the exchange of stock mentioned. All the other parties except Young had full notice of the claims of the plaintiffs and of Charles Main, against the said stock.

At the time the action was begun, May 29, 1904, no dividends on the stock had been declared. The plaintiffs, in addition to the specific prayer, asked for general relief, but did not mention dividends. On October 27, 1909, a supplemental complaint was filed alleging that up to April 15, 1907, the cement company had declared dividends on its stock amounting to the sum of $16.75 upon each share, and that after that time, the property and business of the company having been in the meantime transferred to the new corporation under the name of the Standard Portland Cement Corporation, additional dividends had been declared up to October 15, 1907, on account whereof plaintiffs would be entitled to $7,200 in respect of the 200 shares of the company decreed to them by the judgment; that on August 31, 1909, plaintiffs had demanded payment of said dividends, which was refused, and praying judgment for the amount thereof against the defendant company. The court gave judgment in favor of the plaintiffs for $4,474.30 against the company on account of the dividends up to April 15, 1907, and accrued interest. It refused to allow judgment for the dividends declared by said "corporation."

A corporation is created and given a legal existence in order that it may, in its legal capacity, hold and manage the property transferred and business committed to it by its stockholders. They are the beneficial owners of the corporate property. The corporation is their agency and holds the property for their benefit and in trust for them. The interest of each stockholder in the property is the proportion which his shares of stock bear to all the stock outstanding. The certificates are not property in the real sense, but are merely evidences of the undivided interests of the several stockholders in the corporate assets and business. The transactions above set forth, being without valuable consideration and with full notice to all the parties concerned of the claims of the plaintiffs and of the pendency of the action, did not change the relative rights of the parties, so far as the plaintiffs are concerned, nor in any manner affect their rights or the power of the court, by its judgment, to give the plaintiffs all relief appropriate to the form of the action and to enforce its judgment by suitable legal process against all the parties. The titles so obtained by third persons not parties to the action, being taken subsequent to the commencement of the action, are subject to any judgment regularly given therein. Code Civ. Proc. § 1908, subd. 2. Notwithstanding the subsequent dealings mentioned, these parties each stand charged with notice of plaintiffs' claims and hold the shares and property received by them, respectively, charged with the trust alleged and found to exist in favor of the plaintiffs and with the same liability and obligation to account to plaintiffs for said shares and the proceeds thereof as did the original parties to the action. Civ. Code, § 2243. With respect to making transfers of its stock, as between opposing claimants thereof, the corporation occupies the position of an agent or trustee of both and is bound to the exercise of good faith. Upon the beginning of the action, the defendant corporation was bound at its peril to preserve the property in statu quo, so far as should be necessary to protect the rights claimed by plaintiffs and to keep the stock subject to the power of the court. Cooper v. Spring V. W. Co., 171 Cal. 162, 153 Pac. 936; 26 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. 888; Civ. Code, § 2237. It was not authorized to transfer the shares on its books to a new party, or in any manner hinder or delay the plaintiffs, unless by their consent, or under permission of the court. Civ. Code, §§ 2230, 2232, 2237. The fact that it was not enjoined from so doing by an interlocutory order would exempt it from a charge of contempt of court therefor, but would not affect its liability to the plaintiffs on account thereof nor the power of the court to give relief against it in the final judgment.

[10] So far as the defendant Young is concerned, he holds the stock as a naked trustee, having no beneficial interest therein, and his claim that the judgment is erroneous, in so far as it requires him to surrender the same and permit the issuance of the proper number of shares to plaintiffs, is wholly without merit.

In their briefs, counsel for the defendant say that the defendant company could not determine which of the contending claimants to the stock was entitled to the dividends. This is true, but it does not follow that it was therefore free to pay the dividends to the record holders of the stock, or to transfer such stock upon the order of such record holders, without regard to or responsibility for the rights of plaintiffs therein. The troubles of the defendant company arise from the fact that it did assume the power which its counsel say it did not possess, the power to decide between the contenders. Its dividends were owing to the true owners of the shares. In paying them to the record holders of the stock claimed by plaintiffs, it decided that such holders were the true owners and that plaintiffs had no interest therein. It made a like decision when it transferred the stock on the orders of such record holders. It cannot be allowed to obtain any benefit or advantage from these erroneous and unauthorized decisions. The transferees with notice stand in like position and must respond to the judgment of the court, so far as it applies to them.

[11] It is urged on behalf of the defendant company that the transfer of these shares in the manner directed by the judgment cannot be allowed, unless the aforesaid "corporation" is brought in so that it can be bound by the judgment. It is pointed out that 400 of the shares of said "corporation" have been exchanged for the plaintiffs' 200 shares in the cement company, standing in the names of Losh and Hayes, that this constitutes a valuable consideration given by the "corporation," that the 200 shares so received and exchanged for the 400 "corporation" shares are the property of the "corporation" and are held by Young as its agent and trustee, wherefore it would be erroneous to compel the "company" to issue new certificates to the plaintiffs, unless the "corporation" is made a party so as to be bound to make the same good to the "company" out of the shares so held by Young. There are two answers to this contention. In the first place, the entire transaction and exchange was a mere form. The "corporation," without consideration, received the property belonging to the "company," the property in which the plaintiffs had an equitable interest to the extent of the 200 shares.

[12] Upon this property it issued its capital stock and offered the same to the persons holding stock in the "company" at the rate of two for one, they being the persons owning the beneficial interest in the property. All this was done with notice by the officers of the "corporation" of the pendency of the action and of the rights of the plaintiffs. Under section 1908 of the Code of Civil Procedure the judgment is conclusive against the "corporation," upon the facts found by the court, whether it is a party to the judgment or not. The "company," having brought about the formation of this "corporation" and the exchange of shares, must look out for itself with respect to the consequences which may ensue because of the complications thereby caused. It cannot throw that burden on the plaintiffs. In the second place, the court below, during the pendency of the action and before the trial was closed, made an order directing the defendant company to file a cross-complaint bringing in as parties "all persons and corporations who are now holders of any certificate or certificates, or any shares of stock in said Standard Portland Cement Company, the title to which is derived from Thomas R. Hayes under and by means of the transfer of certificates 78, 79, and 84, of said Standard Portland Cement Company, subsequent to the commencement of this action." Long before that time the aforesaid arrangement for the transfer of property and exchange of stock had been made and carried out and the said "corporation" had acquired whatever interest it now has in the stock of the defendant company. In partial compliance with this order, the defendant company filed a cross-complaint naming as additional parties to the action James B. Smith, Frank A. Losh, and L. F. Young, but failing to name the said "corporation" as a party, or to state anything whatever concerning the issuance of shares by the "corporation," the transfer of property and business to said "corporation," or the fact that it had an interest in the stock in question. Under these circumstances, it does not lie in the mouth of the defendant company to say that the judgment is erroneous because of the fact that the "corporation" was not made a party to the action.

It may be true, as argued by defendants, that 400 shares of the stock of said "corporation" in equity belongs to plaintiffs and that the court, upon the facts found, might have given judgment accordingly. The plaintiffs did not ask such relief, so far as appears. They were not bound to follow the property that far. It is true that the 200 shares in defendant company, adjudged to plaintiffs, are held by Young in trust for said "corporation," so far as their rights as between themselves are concerned; said 200 shares having been received by him in exchange for 400 shares of stock in the "corporation" which have been transferred and certificates therefor delivered to Losh and Mary E. Hayes, respectively. This is no cause for reversal in favor of defendants. The said "corporation," being in fact a volunteer with notice of the pendency of the action, is bound by the judgment as rendered. Neither it nor the defendants are wronged thereby. It might have been cause for a modification of the judgment in favor of plaintiffs by a direction that said Losh and Hayes, respectively, deliver to plaintiffs said shares in the "corporation," had they asked it. But they are apparently content to allow the judgment to remain as it is on that point.

[13, 14] The cause of action for dividends is not barred by the statute of limitations. It did not begin to run until a demand was made therefor. Bills v. Silver King M. Co., 106 Cal. 21, 39 Pac. 43; Ralston v. Bank, 112 Cal. 215, 44 Pac. 476. To the claim that the demand was unreasonably delayed, the answer is that plaintiffs were not required to make a demand unless they knew, or had good reason to believe, that dividends had been declared. We are not cited to anything in the record indicating that there was any unreasonable delay in making the demand, and therefore we cannot hold the conclusion of the trial court on this subject to be without sufficient support in the evidence.

There are no other points that require discussion.

The judgment and orders denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; LAWLOR, J.

---

177 Cal. 289

GEORGIA CASUALTY CO. et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION
(two cases). (L. A. 4847, 4929.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 24, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑405(2)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION PROCEEDINGS—EVIDENCE—RELATION OF PARTIES.

A contractor agreed to grade and complete the roadbed for a railway and to furnish all tools and appliances, and in the work used a steam locomotive in charge of a train crew employed by it of which deceased was a member. Its contract did not require it to lay the track, but there was evidence that the track for which such crew was hauling materials at the time deceased was injured was laid at the contractor's request, and was necessary to use a steam shovel to complete the roadbed, though when laid it would be a part of the permanent equipment of the railway. Deceased was engaged and paid by the contractor. Held, that the evidence warranted the Industrial Accident Commission in finding that deceased was in the contractor's employ at the time of the injury.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑419—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION PROCEEDINGS—INCREASE OF COMPENSATION—JURISDICTION OF COMMISSION.

Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 279) § 81, provides that persons aggrieved by any award may apply for a rehearing. Section 82 requires that applications for rehearings be made within 20 days, but further provides that nothing therein shall be construed to limit the right of the Commission at any time within 245 weeks from the date of the award to review, diminish, or increase any compensation awarded upon the grounds that the disability of the person in whose favor it was made has either increased, diminished, or terminated. Section 25 provides that the Commission shall have continuing jurisdiction over all its orders, decisions, and awards, and may at any time, upon notice, rescind, alter, or amend any such order, decision or award. Held, that these sections must be read together, and so construed, if possible, as to present a harmonious system for the re-examination of matters decided by the Commission, and when so read and construed, section 82 so limits the more general terms of section 25 as to permit the Commission to retain jurisdiction over its orders, decisions, and awards during a period of 245 weeks for the sole purpose of making such changes as may be required by the occurrence of new facts arising after the date of its original decision, and where no such new facts had occurred, the Commission had no authority to increase its award after denying a rehearing more than two months after the date of the award.

In Bank. Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Laura Sims, to obtain compensation for the death of Lewis Hicks, opposed by Robert Sherer & Co., alleged employer, and the Georgia Casualty Company, insurer. Compensation was awarded which was subsequently increased, and the employer and the insurer bring writs of review. Original award affirmed. Increased award annulled.

George H. Moore, of Los Angeles (Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, of counsel), for petitioners. Christopher M. Bradley, of San Francisco (Daniel W. Burbank, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. The facts of these two applications, so far as they are necessary to a decision of the questions presented thereby, are fully and correctly set forth in the former opinion filed herein, and are as follows:

"Two proceedings in certiorari were brought to review successive awards made by the Industrial Accident Commission.

"The application for compensation was made by Laura Sims, claiming to be the dependent sister of Lewis Hicks, who died in consequence of injuries received by him in December, 1915. The Commission found that at the time of his injury Hicks was in the employ of Robert Sherer & Co., and made an award against said Robert Sherer & Co. as employer, and Georgia Casualty Company as insurance carrier. The award, which was made May 5, 1916, was for $1,872. A petition for rehearing addressed to the Commission having been denied, Sherer & Co. and the Casualty Company applied to this court for a writ of review, and such writ was issued on July 20, 1916. It is proceeding No. 4847.

"In the meanwhile, on June 19, 1916, two days after the denial of the petition for rehearing, to which we have referred, the Commission had given notice to Sherer & Co. and the insurance carrier to show cause why the findings and award theretofore made should not be amended, and the award increased to $3,461.25. On July 12, 1916, the Commission filed amended findings, and made a new award increasing the amount to $3,461.25. The second proceeding, No. 4929, is a writ of certiorari to review this increased award.

"The two cases are presented on a single set of briefs."

[1] Upon the writ involving the validity of the first award the single question is whether there was evidence before the Commission to justify its findings that Hicks, at the time of his injury, was in the employ of Robert Sherer & Co. The claim of the petitioners is that the evidence shows conclusively that the employer of Hicks was the Pacific Electric Railway Company.

Robert Sherer & Co., as contractor, had entered into, and was engaged in performing, a written agreement with the Pacific Electric Railway Company, by which said contractor agreed to perform "all the labor of constructing * * * the grading and other work required to complete the roadbed for a railway," said railway, when constructed, to be a part of the system of the Pacific Electric Railway Company. The contractor agreed also to furnish all tools and appliances required in the work. Among other appliances, Sherer & Co. used in the work a steam locomotive. For the operation of this locomotive, and the cars which it hauled, the contractor employed a train crew, and the deceased, Hicks, was a member of this crew, acting as conductor. He had been engaged by Sherer & Co. for a monthly compensation of $75. All that the contract of Sherer & Co. required them to do was to grade the roadbed. They were not called upon to lay the track. On the day on which Hicks met his injuries, the train crew was operating a train made up of the locomotive and two cars (the cars belonging to the Pacific Electric Railway Company). The work in which the crew was engaged during that day was the hauling of materials for the laying of track upon a portion of the grade which had been completed. The contention of the petitioners is that because the work of laying track, then under way, was not a part of the grading, which the contractor had undertaken to perform, the railway company is to be regarded as the employer, for the time being, of the men composing the train crew. But there is evidence in the record tending to show that this track was laid at the request of the contractor, and that its laying was, as stated in a supplementary contract signed by Sherer & Co., "necessary to use the steam shovel to complete the roadbed in our contract with your company." While the track, when completed, would be a part of the permanent equipment of the railway, the laying of it was incidental to the work of grading, upon which the contractor was engaged. It appears, then, that Hicks was engaged and paid by the contractor, and that he met his injuries while he was doing work which was necessary to enable said contractor to carry out the stipulations of the contract for grading. Without going into other considerations suggested by counsel, we have here ample evidence to warrant the Commission in finding that Hicks was in the employ of Robert Sherer & Co.

[2] As to the second writ the sole contention is that when the Commission had once made an award and had denied a rehearing, its jurisdiction to alter or annul its award was exhausted, unless based upon the ground that the disability had increased, diminished, or terminated, and that when any later attempted exercise of jurisdiction was sought to be based upon this ground, it could only arise out of the proof of facts occurring after the date of its original award. The determination of this question depends upon the construction to be placed upon the several sections of the Workmen's Compensation Act relating to the power of the Commission over its awards, and the time within which these powers are to be exercised. Sections 81 and 82 of said act relate to the matter of rehearings before the Commission. Section 81 provides that persons aggrieved by any award of the Commission may apply to the Commission for a rehearing in respect to the matters determined by it of which they complain, and provides the procedure for the making, service, and hearing of said application. Section 82 provides that applications for rehearings must be made within 20 days after service of the decision of the Commission upon those claiming to be aggrieved thereby, and further proceeds to specify the grounds upon which the rehearing must be applied for within said limited time. Subdivision (b) of said section 82 reads as follows:

"Nothing contained in this section shall, however, be construed to limit the right of the Commission, at any time within two hundred forty-five weeks from the date of its award, and from time to time, after due notice and upon the application of any party interested, to review, diminish or increase, within the limits provided by this act, any compensation awarded upon the grounds that the disability of the person in whose favor such award was made has either increased or diminished or terminated."

In addition to these two sections of the act thus providing for rehearings before the Commission, section 25 of the act is in the following words:

> "(d) The Commission shall have continuing jurisdiction over all its orders, decisions and awards made and entered under the provisions of sections twelve to thirty-five, inclusive, of this act and may at any time, upon notice, and after opportunity to be heard is given to the parties in interest, rescind, alter or amend any such order, decision or award made by it upon good cause appearing therefor. * * *"

It is the contention of the respondent to this writ that by the terms of the section last above quoted the commission is given unlimited power over its orders, decisions, and awards during the period of 245 weeks to rescind, alter, or amend the same, and that the Commission, in the instant case, having concluded to amend its findings and increase its original award during such period, its power to do so cannot be questioned upon this writ. We do not so construe the powers of the Commission under the several sections of the Workmen's Compensation Act above referred to. These several sections, all referring to the powers of the Commission over its orders, decisions, and awards, must be read together, and must be so construed, if possible, as to present a harmonious system for the re-examination of matters decided by the Commission, and for the determination of the finality of such decisions. When these several sections are so read and construed together, it seems quite obvious that the provisions of subdivision (b) of section 82, which permit the Commission within the period of 245 weeks after its award to rescind, diminish, or increase the same "upon grounds that the disability of the person in whose favor such award was made has either increased or diminished or terminated," contemplates a change in conditions arising after the making of the original award, and by which the disability of the person in whose favor such award was made has been either increased, diminished, or terminated, and that under this subdivision of section 82 of the act the power of the Commission thus extended over the period of 245 weeks after the date of its original award is limited in its exercise to the consideration of such facts only as have arisen since the making of such award, and that it is only upon the proof of such facts that the Commission has jurisdiction to review, diminish, or increase such award. When subdivision (b) of section 82 of the act is thus construed, it operates to so limit the more general terms of subdivision (d) of section 25 of said act as to permit the Commission to retain jurisdiction over its orders, decisions, and awards during the period of 245 weeks thereafter for the sole purpose of making such changes therein as may be required by the occurrence of new facts arising after the date of its original decision.

In the instant case the second award of the Commission was not predicated upon any new facts occurring since its original award, but was based solely upon a reconsideration of the facts upon which such former award was made. We are satisfied that upon a proper construction of the foregoing sections of the Workmen's Compensation Act the jurisdiction of the Commission to alter or amend its original award expired when it denied the application for a rehearing thereon, except as these sections give to the Commission a continuing jurisdiction during a period of 245 weeks after the date of its award to alter or amend the same upon proof of facts occurring during such period, and upon such proof alone, and that no such proof having been presented as a basis for the second award of the Commission, for the annulment of which this writ was sought, it follows that in making such second award the Commission acted in excess of its jurisdiction.

The judgment of this court will therefore be as follows: As to the first writ, L. A. No. 4847, the award is affirmed. As to the second writ, L. A. No. 4929, the award is annulled.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; WILBUR, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.

---

35 Cal. App. 501

PEOPLE v. KESELING. (Cr. 690.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 8, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 7, 1918.)

1. Criminal Law 🔑507(4)—Testimony of "Accomplices"—Detectives and Informers.

Witnesses one of whom employed by the state for that purpose, was treated by defendant and the other of whom paid for such treatment, were not "accomplices" to the crime of practicing dentistry without a license under Pen. Code, § 1111, as amended by St. 1915, p. 760, defining an accomplice as one who is liable to prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendant, since when the commission of a crime by one person involves the co-operation of another person, the latter becomes an accomplice only in the event that his co-operation in the commission of the crime is corrupt.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Accomplice.]

2. Criminal Law 🔑510—Testimony of Accomplices—Necessity of Corroboration.

Even though such witnesses were feigned accomplices, still their testimony needed no corroboration as the uncorroborated testimony of one who under the direction of officers of the law feigns complicity in the commission of a crime merely for the purpose of detecting and prosecuting the perpetrators thereof will support a conviction.

3. STATUTES 🔑250—TIME OF TAKING EFFECT—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.

Dental Act 1901 (St. 1901, p. 571) § 25, provided that it should take effect September 1, 1901, and that all prior laws were thereby repealed. Pol. Code, § 323, provides that every statute, unless a different time is prescribed therein, takes effect on the sixtieth day after its passage. Held, that the entire act for all purposes went into effect September 1, 1901, and the repeal of prior acts did not, as claimed, take effect 60 days after the passage of the act, and therefore there was no interregnum in the law between the repeal of the prior acts and the taking effect of the new act in which it was lawful to practice dentistry without a license.

4. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION 🔑111(1)—NECESSITY OF NEGATIVING EXCEPTIONS.

It was not necessary that an information for practicing dentistry without a license should traverse the exceptions contained in the statute.

5. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS 🔑6(2)—PRACTICING WITHOUT AUTHORITY—DENTISTS—"PRACTICING DENTISTRY."

Under St. 1915, p. 698, making it an offense to practice dentistry without a license, and providing that a person shall be understood to practice dentistry within the meaning of that act who shall, for a fee, salary, or reward, paid directly or indirectly to himself or some other person, perform an operation on the human teeth or jaws, etc., it is not necessary that the fee be paid by the person upon whom the work is performed.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Practice of Dentistry.]

6. STATUTES 🔑98(1)—SPECIAL AND LOCAL LAWS—JURISDICTION OF COURTS.

St. 1915, p. 698, does not violate Const. art. 4, § 25, prohibiting the enactment of local or special laws in the cases therein enumerated in view of article 6, § 5, providing that the superior court shall have original jurisdiction in cases of misdemeanor not otherwise provided for.

7. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑230(2)—PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS 🔑2—LICENSES—DISCRIMINATION.

St. 1915, p. 701, § 6, prescribing who shall be eligible to take an examination before the board of dental examiners, is not unconstitutional as discriminatory, since, while it is discriminatory in a certain sense, it discriminates only between those who have the necessary degree of learning and skill and those who have not.

8. STATUTES 🔑87—SPECIAL AND LOCAL LAWS—REGULATION OF CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS—"PRACTICING DENTISTRY."

St. 1915, p. 705, § 11, providing that any person shall be understood to be practicing dentistry within the meaning of that act who shall do the things therein specified, such as advertising as a dentist, performing operations, etc., does not render the statute violative of Const. art. 4, § 25, subd. 3, prohibiting special or local laws, regulating the practice of courts of justice, as the statute does not specify what shall constitute sufficient evidence, but specifies the acts that shall constitute the practice of dentistry.

9. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS 🔑6(10)—PRACTICING WITHOUT AUTHORITY—EVIDENCE.

On a trial for practicing dentistry without a license, evidence as to the character of work performed by defendant, offered for the purpose of showing that he was a good dentist, was properly excluded as not responsive to any issue in the case.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Frank Keseling was convicted of practicing dentistry without a license, and he appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. H. Hart and T. John Butler, both of San Francisco, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen. (John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Oliver Dibble, of San Francisco, of counsel), for the People.

LENNON, P. J. The defendant herein was charged in an information filed in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco with the crime of misdemeanor, namely: Practicing dentistry without a license in violation of the provisions of an act of the Legislature regulating the practice of dentistry in the state of California. Stats. 1915, p. 698. The defendant pleaded not guilty, waived a trial by jury, and after a trial by the court was adjudged guilty and sentenced to pay the minimum fine provided by the statute, namely, $100. The appeal is from the judgment and from an order denying the defendant a new trial.

[1] The testimony of Edith McDonnell and Louise St. John, witnesses for the people, did not require corroboration. Although employed by the state to seek and submit to the services of the defendant, they were not accomplices of the defendant in the perpetration of the crime charged within the meaning of section 1111 of the Penal Code, as amended in 1915 (Stats. 1915, p. 760), which defines an accomplice "as one who is liable to prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendant on trial in the cause in which the testimony of the accomplice is given."

Whenever the commission of a crime by one person involves the co-operation of another person, the latter becomes an accomplice only in the event that his co-operation in the commission of the crime is corrupt. The participation by the two witnesses in question in the dental practice of the defendant, one as the subject of treatment, and the other paying for the same, was not by the law denounced as a crime, and clearly, therefore, it was lacking in the criminal intent necessary to the corrupt co-operation that would make them liable to prosecution and conviction for the identical offense charged against the defendant.

[2] Even though they were feigned accomplices, still their testimony needed no corroboration, for it is the settled law that the uncorroborated testimony of one who, under the direction of officers of the law, feigns complicity in the commission of a crime merely for the purpose of detecting and prosecuting the perpetrators thereof will support a conviction. People v. Farrell, 30 Cal. 316; People v. Bolanger, 71 Cal. 17, 11 Pac. 799;

People v. Barric, 49 Cal. 342; People v. Fong Ching, 78 Cal. 169, 20 Pac. 396.

[3] The defendant claims that the evidence shows that he was practicing dentistry at and prior to the time the act of 1901 was passed and took effect, and that inasmuch as that act expressly repealed all preceding acts governing and controlling the same subject-matter as does the act of 1915, under which the defendant was prosecuted, and exempted from its provisions those persons who had "the lawful right" to practice dentistry at the time of its passage, he could not be charged with and convicted of the crime of practicing dentistry without a license. More precisely stated, the contention of the defendant in this behalf is that he was actually practicing dentistry between March 23, 1901, and September 1, 1901; that section 25 of the Dental Act of 1901 should be construed to mean that all prior acts regulating the practice of dentistry in the state of California were repealed 60 days after March 23, 1901; and that inasmuch as the act of 1901 did not by its terms go into effect until September 1, 1901, there was between May 23d (60 days after the passage of the act of 1901) and September 1st (the time when the act was by its terms to go into effect), an interregnum in the law during which time it was not unlawful for him to practice dentistry without a license.

We are not satisfied that the evidence shows that the defendant was actually practicing dentistry between March 23, 1901, and September 1, 1901. But, however that may be, the contention just stated is untenable. Section 323 of the Political Code provides that "every statute, unless a different time is prescribed therein, takes effect on the 60th day after its passage." This section was in effect at the time of the passage of the Dental Act of 1901 and if no provisions to the contrary were contained in said dental act it would therefore have taken effect 60 days after March 23, 1901. But section 25 of that act declared that it should "take effect September 1, 1901"; that is to say, the entire act should take effect September 1, 1901, and not that one portion thereof should take effect on that date and another part thereof on some other day. The entire act for all purposes went into effect September 1, 1901, and on that date, and not before, the prior acts regulating the practice of dentistry became absolutely and finally repealed. In this construction of the statutory situation there was no interregnum in the law, and the defendant, as the record shows, never having been licensed as a dentist, did not have the lawful right to practice dentistry at the time charged in the information.

[4, 5] The defendant's demurrer to the information was properly disallowed. It was not necessary that the information should traverse the exceptions contained in the act. Ex parte Hornef, 154 Cal. 355, 97 Pac. 891. Neither was it necessary that the information should have charged that the fee paid for the work performed by the defendant was paid by the person upon whom the work was performed. The statute provides that a person shall be understood to practice dentistry within the meaning of this act who shall have a fee, salary, or reward paid, directly or indirectly either to himself or to some other person performing an operation, etc. St. 1915, p. 705, § 11.

[6] The objection presented by the demurrer that the Dental Act of 1915 contravened section 25 of article 4 of the state Constitution is answered by the provisions of article 6, § 5, of the Constitution, which provide that the superior court shall have original jurisdiction in cases of misdemeanor not otherwise provided. See, also, People v. Fortch, 13 Cal. App. 770, 110 Pac. 823, where it is held that the Legislature has the right to prescribe the punishment for this character of misdemeanor.

[7] The provisions of section 6 of the Dental Act of 1915, prescribing who shall be eligible to take an examination before the board of dental examiners, is not unconstitutional upon the ground that it is discriminatory. In disposing of precisely the same objections as the defendant makes here to section 12 of the act of 1901, which also prescribed the conditions upon which a person might take examination for a license, the Supreme Court of the state in the case of Ex parte Whitley, 144 Cal. 167, 77 Pac. 879, 1 Ann. Cas. 13, said:

> "It is entirely within the power of a legislature to fix any reasonable standard for determining the competency of an applicant for admission to the practice of dentistry. * * * The law, no doubt, is discriminatory, but not in any constitutional sense. It does not discriminate between classes. The discrimination goes to the degree of learning and skill which all applicants for examination must possess. It discriminates between those who have the necessary degree of learning and skill and those who have not; between those who are able and those who are unable to acquire it. It is not an unreasonable or capricious discrimination applying to classes as such, or members of a class, but is based solely upon professional qualification. It is a discrimination which, in the interest of the public welfare, it is the duty of the Legislature to make, and the necessity for which, and its nature and extent—whether an examination and right to practice shall depend on the possession by the applicant of a diploma of a dental college only, or be extended to others, and how far—depend primarily upon the judgment of the Legislature, which, when reasonably exercised, the courts cannot control. These principles will be found fully discussed and sustained in State v. Vandersluis, 42 Minn. 129 [43 N. W. 789, 6 L. R. A. 119]; Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 122 [9 Sup. Ct. 231, 32 L. Ed. 623]; also Ex parte Gerino, 143 Cal. 412 [77 Pac. 166, 66 L. R. A. 249]."

The defendant does not point out in his brief how or in what manner the information fails to substantially conform to sections 950, 951, and 952 of the Penal Code, nor in what respect the information fails to contain in ordinary and concise language a statement of the acts constituting the offense, etc. Our reading of the information satisfies us that it meets with all of the requirements of the rules of criminal pleading.

[8] There is no merit to the contention that section 11 of the Dental Act of 1915 renders the entire act unconstitutional because, as it is alleged, that section violates subdivision 3 of section 25 of article 4 of the Constitution of the state of California, in that it specifies what shall constitute sufficient evidence to convict a person under the law, and therefore is special legislation. That section does no more than define what shall constitute the practice of dentistry in the state of California and "the Legislature had the power to thus define what is meant by the term 'practicing dentistry,' and to thus make clear what acts it intended to make unlawful." People v. Fortch, 13 Cal. App. 770, 775, 110 Pac. 823, 825.

[9] Nor is there any merit in appellant's contention that the court erred in sustaining certain objections made by the people to questions propounded by defendant's counsel to Albert Meyer, the purpose of which was to show by the character of the work performed by defendant that he was a good dentist, etc. This evidence was not responsive to any issues in the case. The defendant was not being prosecuted for being a bad dentist, but for practicing dentistry—good, bad, or indifferent—without first having obtained a license to do so.

What we have thus far said disposes of every point made in support of the appeal which are worthy of discussion.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; RICHARDS, J.

---

35 Cal. App. 652

SANTA ANA SUGAR CO. OF SANTA ANA et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (Civ. 2441.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 19, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 14, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑405(4) — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—FINDINGS OF INDUSTRIAL BOARD—EVIDENCE TO SUPPORT.

Finding of Accident Commission that cancer resulted from fall of workman, held supported by evidence.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑405(1) — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—FINDINGS OF INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION.

The Accident Commission is not bound to take the greater quantity of the evidence as against the lesser; the principal embodied in Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 2, providing that juries are to be instructed that they are not bound to decide in conformity with the declarations of any number of witnesses which do not produce conviction against a less number satisfying their minds, operating as strongly upon the commission as instructions under it do upon juries.

Proceedings before the Industrial Accident Commission by Candelario Villa for compensation, opposed by the Santa Ana Sugar Company of Santa Ana, Cal., and another. Award for claimant, and defendants make application for a writ of review. Award affirmed.

Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, for petitioners. Christopher M. Bradley, of San Francisco, for respondents.

WORKS, Judge pro tem. Candelario Villa suffered a fall while engaged as a workman at the plant of the petitioner, Santa Ana Sugar Company. He made claim for compensation for a sarcoma or cancer on his left clavicle, which he contends resulted from the fall. The respondent Accident Commission found that it did so result, and the finding is assailed as being without the support of any evidence.

[1] The testimony of the physicians who were called as witnesses before the commission was in accord upon the point that the lump or swelling indicating the presence of a sarcoma, if it is caused by a fall or a blow, will not make itself manifest upon a bone on the day of the injury, nor on the next day, but only after a "few days," at the earliest; and the evidence appears to show that a sarcoma once appearing will remain apparent to palpation. Villa, his wife, and a friend of his family all testified to the presence three or four hours after the accident of a lump at the place on the clavicle at which, according to the testimony of nearly all of the experts, there was, at the time of the hearing before the commission, a sarcoma. The petitioner contends that the evidence of Villa, his wife, and their friend as to the presence of the lump immediately after the accident is uncontradicted, and that therefore the sarcoma could not have resulted from the fall. The cases of Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 180, 149 Pac. 35, and Employers' Assurance Corporation v. Industrial Accident Commission, 170 Cal. 800, 151 Pac. 423, are cited to the point that where all the evidence before the commission upon a particular question tends in one direction, and the commission makes a finding contrary to it, the finding must be set aside. But the record presented here is not a one-sided record. The physician who attended Villa immediately after the accident, and on the same day it occurred, says that he then discovered no injury to Villa except a scalp wound. He saw the patient the next morning, however, and at the request of his wife made a special examination of his left shoulder, stripping it down and going over it carefully. He says: "It was sensitive, also tender. I don't recall that it was swollen." The accident had occurred on September 5, 1916, and on the 8th the physician took an X-ray picture of the region he had thus examined. He says: "It showed a normal condition of the clavicle." There is other testimony to the same effect from the same physician.

[2] There is thus a substantial conflict between the testimony of the physician and the testimony of the three other witnesses, although there is no doubt that the greater quantity of the evidence, looking at quantity alone, was to the effect that there was an elevation on the clavicle soon after the accident and on the same day. But the commission was not bound to take the greater quantity of the evidence as against the lesser. Its members may have seen ample reason to accept the testimony of the physician as against that of the other witnesses. In this state juries are to be instructed that:

> "They are not bound to decide in conformity with the declarations of any number of witnesses, which do not produce conviction in their minds, against a less number, * * * satisfying their minds." Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 2.

The principle behind this rule operates as strongly upon the Industrial Accident Commission as instructions under it do upon juries.

The award is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

35 Cal. App. 509

BELLINGHAM BAY LUMBER CO. v. WESTERN AMUSEMENT CO. et al.

(Civ. 2240.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 10, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 7, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑151(6) — PERSONS ENTITLED TO APPEAL—"AGGRIEVED PARTY."

In a suit to foreclose a materialman's lien, a defendant who owned the property when the materials were furnished and the claim of lien filed, but who subsequently conveyed the premises, and against whom no judgment for costs was rendered, was not entitled to appeal from a judgment for plaintiff under Code Civ. Proc. § 938, authorizing appeals by any "aggrieved party."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Aggrieved Party.]

2. MECHANICS' LIENS 🔑310(1) — ENFORCEMENT—COSTS—PERSONS ENTITLED.

In an action to foreclose a materialman's lien, where plaintiff alleged that the defendant S. was the owner in fee of the premises, and S. filed an answer denying that he was the owner of the premises subsequent to a specified date, and alleging that on that date he conveyed all of his right, title, and interest to another party, and the court rendered a judgment adjudging that the claims and interests of all of the defendants were subject and subordinate to plaintiff's lien, S. was not entitled to costs, though the court found, as alleged by him, that he had conveyed all of his interest in the property subject to the furnishing of the materials and the filing of the claim of lien, since, notwithstanding this fact, he was a proper party, and plaintiff was entitled to a judgment against him establishing the validity and superiority of his lien.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John L. Childs, Judge.

Action by the Bellingham Bay Lumber Company against the Western Amusement Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, the defendant Rudolph Spreckels appeals. Affirmed.

Charles S. Wheeler, John F. Bowie, and Nathan Moran, all of San Francisco, for appellant. William M. Cannon, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an action to foreclose a materialman's lien. Rudolph Spreckels was the owner of the property sought to be impressed with the plaintiff's lien at the time of the erection of the building for which the plaintiff's materials were supplied to the Western Amusement Company, a sublessee of said Spreckels, by whom the building was being erected. On March 30, 1908, the plaintiff filed its claim of lien against the building and premises for material furnished by it. On April 13, 1908, Rudolph Spreckels conveyed the property affected by said lien to the Realty & Rebuilding Company, a corporation, the deed evidencing such conveyance being recorded on May 11, 1908. On June 27, 1908, this action was commenced for the foreclosure of said lien. In the complaint then filed Rudolph Spreckels was made one of the parties defendant, and was alleged to be the owner in fee of the premises subject to the plaintiff's lien. On February 15, 1909, an amended complaint was filed in which the same averments appear. The Realty & Rebuilding Company was not made a party by name in either of these complaints, but several fictitious names were given as defendants, with the usual averment and prayer that as the true names of said defendants were discovered they might be inserted with proper averments in the complaint. On April 30, 1909, the defendant Spreckels filed his answer to the amended complaint, wherein, after denying practically all of its other averments, he also denied that he was the owner of the premises in question subsequent to the 23d day of April, 1908, upon which date he alleged that he conveyed all of his right, title, and interest in the said premises to the Realty & Rebuilding Company. On June 19, 1911, the Realty & Rebuilding Company was served with summons in the city and county of San Francisco under the name of "First Doe," one of the fictitious defendants. On July 10, 1911, the cause came on for trial, Rudolph Spreckels and certain other defendants appearing, but the Realty & Rebuilding Company not appearing, the time for its appearance having expired and its default having been entered, and the cause was tried upon all of the issues raised by the answers of the several defendants who had appeared, including Rudolph Spreckels. At the conclusion of the trial the court filed its findings, wherein it found that the plaintiff was entitled to the foreclosure of its lien against all of the defendants, but also specifically found that the defendant Rudolph Spreckels had conveyed all of his interest in the property to the Realty & Rebuilding Company on April 23, 1908. In its judgment following said findings the court rendered no judgment against Rudolph Spreckels, except in so far as he might be affected by the general statement in said judgment that the claims and interests of all of the defendants in said property were subject and subordinate to the plaintiff's lien. No judgment for costs was awarded against said Spreckels; neither did the court award him costs against the plaintiff. From this judgment the defendant Spreckels prosecutes this appeal.

[1, 2] We are unable to perceive how the appellant herein is a party aggrieved by the judgment in this case so as to entitle him to prosecute this appeal. As to the issues tendered by his answer with respect to the validity of the plaintiff's lien and to a right to its foreclosure of the same, the defendant Spreckels has no interest in these injuriously affected by the judgment in view of his averment and of the court's finding that he had conveyed away all of his interest in the property prior to the commencement of the action. The appellant's right, if any, to prosecute this appeal, is thus reduced to the single contention that the trial court should have awarded him his costs, and that not having done so he is a party aggrieved to that extent, and hence entitled to appeal.

This contention is based upon the claim that the judgment was in his favor as to his nonownership of the property at the time of the commencement of the action. But this was not a material issue in the case, except as it might possibly have affected the right of the plaintiff to recover his costs against this particular defendant. The action was one for the impressment of a materialman's lien upon the property, regardless of its ownership, and for a judgment declaring such lien to be superior to the claims or interests of each and all of the defendants. Upon these issues the court found fully in the plaintiff's favor, and such finding and the judgment which followed it can in no sense be deemed a judgment in favor of the appellant herein. The case of Martin v. Porter, 84 Cal. 476, 24 Pac. 109, cited by the appellant in support of his contention, is not analogous to the case at bar, for in that case the ownership of the property was the only issue involved in the action, and the defendant having filed a disclaimer as to such ownership, and the facts showing that he was not the owner thereof at any time, and hence should not have been made a defendant at all, the court on appeal rightly held that the defendant should have been awarded his costs by the trial court. But in the instant case, the defendant Spreckels was admittedly the owner of the property at the time the plaintiff's materials were furnished, and at the time its claim of lien was filed. He was therefore a proper party to the action, even though subsequent to the filing of the plaintiff's claim of lien he had undertaken to convey to another his interest in the premises; for as to him as well as to his transferee the plaintiff was entitled to a judgment establishing the validity and superiority of his lien. The judgment herein did this, and hence was not in the defendant Spreckels' favor, except in so far as it did not award costs against him, which it might well have done in view of the fact that the defendant Spreckels was not content to file or rest upon a disclaimer, but put in issue in his answer and actively contested at the trial the right of the plaintiff to his lien upon the premises and to any judgment in its favor for its foreclosure. Under such conditions he was clearly not entitled to a judgment in his favor even for his costs. We find, therefore, no merit in this appeal, nor any right in the appellant, as an aggrieved party, under the terms of section 938 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to take or to prosecute the same.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

35 Cal. App. 515

BELLINGHAM BAY LUMBER CO. v. WESTERN AMUSEMENT CO. et al.

(Civ. 2274.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 10, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 7, 1918.)

1. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⚷57—Delay in Service or Return of Process.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 581a, providing that all actions must be dismissed on the court's own motion or on motion of any party interested unless the summons shall be served and return thereon made within three years after the commencement of the action, where the summons was served on a defendant before, but returned after, the expiration of the three-year period, the court erred in refusing to dismiss the action as to such defendant on its motion.

2. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⚷57—Delay in Service or Return of Process.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 581a, providing for the dismissal of actions where the summons is not served and return thereon made within three years after the commencement of the action, but further providing that such actions may be prosecuted if appearance has been made by defendant within such three years, defendant's appearance after the expiration of three years did not defeat its right to a dismissal of the action.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John L. Childs, Judge.

Action by the Bellingham Bay Lumber Company against the Western Amusement Company and others. From orders and judgment against it, the defendant Realty & Rebuilding Company appeals. Reversed, with instructions.

Charles S. Wheeler, John F. Bowie, and Nathan Moran, all of San Francisco, for appellant. William M. Cannon, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an action to foreclose a materialman's lien. Rudolph Spreckels was the owner of the property sought to be impressed with the plaintiff's lien at the time of the erection of the building for which the plaintiff's materials were supplied to the Western Amusement Company, a sublessee of said Spreckels, by whom the building was being erected. On March 30, 1908, the plaintiff filed its claim of lien against the building and premises for material furnished by it. On April 13, 1908, Rudolph Spreckels conveyed the property affected by said lien to the Realty & Rebuilding Company, a corporation, the deed evidencing such conveyance being recorded on May 11, 1908. On June 27, 1908, this action was commenced for the foreclosure of said lien. In the complaint then filed Rudolph Spreckles was made one of the defendants, and was alleged to be the owner in fee of the premises subject to the plaintiff's lien. On February 15, 1909, an amended complaint was filed in which the same averments appear. The Realty & Rebuilding Company was not made a party by name in either of these complaints, but several fictitious names were given as defendants with the usual averment and prayer that as the true names of said defendants were discovered they might be inserted with proper averments in the complaint. On April 30, 1909, the defendant Spreckels filed his answer to the amended complaint, wherein, after denying practically all of its other averments, he also denied that he was the owner of the premises in question subsequent to the 23d day of April, 1908, upon which date he alleged that he conveyed all of his right, title, and interest in the said premises to the Realty & Rebuilding Company. On June 19, 1911, the Realty & Rebuilding Company was served with summons in the city and county of San Francisco under the name of "First Doe," one of the fictitious defendants. On July 10, 1911, the case came on for trial. The time of the Realty & Rebuilding Company within which to appear after service of summons had expired, but as yet its default had not been entered. On July 22, 1911, the default of the Realty & Rebuilding Company was entered by the court upon plaintiff's motion. The plaintiff, however, did not at any time formally amend its complaint by the insertion of the name of the Realty & Rebuilding Company therein in place of one of the fictitious defendants. On July 24, 1911, the Realty & Rebuilding Company filed and served separate notices of two motions to be heard on the following day. One of these was a notice of motion to dismiss the action as to said Realty & Rebuilding Company upon the ground that the summons had not been served and a return thereon made within three years after the commencement of the action. The other notice was of a motion for an order relieving said Realty & Rebuilding Company from its default upon the ground of its mistake, inadvertence, surprise, and excusable neglect. Upon the hearing of these two motions on the following day the attorney for the Realty & Rebuilding Company stated in open court that it made no point on the motion for an order relieving it from its default but stood solely upon its motion to dismiss the action. This latter motion was then argued and submitted to the court for decision. On July 31, 1911, the court made an order denying the motion for relief from the default upon the ground of want of prosecution and abandonment of the same; and also made an order denying the motion to dismiss the action. Thereafter and on August 1, 1911, the court filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law in the case, and ordered judgment in favor of the plaintiff therein, which judgment was duly entered upon the following day. From the foregoing orders and judgment the Realty & Rebuilding Company prosecutes this appeal.

The appellant herein contends that the refusal of the trial court to dismiss this action as to it upon its motion and upon the ground that the summons had not been returned within three years after the commencement of the action was error. In urging this contention the appellant relies upon the express and mandatory terms of section 581a of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section reads as follows:

> "No action heretofore or hereafter commenced shall be further prosecuted, and no further proceedings shall be had therein, and all actions heretofore or hereafter commenced must be dismissed by the court in which the same shall have been commenced, on its own motion, or on motion of any party interested therein, whether named in the complaint as a party or not, unless summons shall have been issued within one year, and all such actions must be in like manner dismissed unless the summons shall be served and return thereon made within three years after the commencement of said action. But all such actions may be prosecuted, if appearance has been made by the defendant or defendants, within said three years in the same manner as if summons had been issued and served; provided, that, except in actions to partition or to recover possession of, or to enforce a lien upon, or to determine conflicting claims to, real or personal property, no dismissal shall be had under this section as to any defendant because of the failure to serve summons on him during his absence from the state, or while he has secreted himself within the state to prevent the service of summons upon him."

This section of the Code in substantially its present form was formerly embraced in section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure under subdivision 7 thereof, but was made a separate section in 1907. It has been the subject of frequent interpretation by the Supreme Court by which its terms have uniformly been held to be mandatory and to impose a compulsion upon trial courts to order the dismissal of an action wherein the summons has not been served and returned within 3 years from the date of the commencement of the action, some of these cases going so far as to hold that after the expiration of the three-year period prescribed by this section the court has no jurisdiction to do other than dismiss the action. Vrooman v. Li Po Tai, 113 Cal. 305, 45 Pac. 470; Davis v. Hart, 123 Cal. 385, 55 Pac. 1060; White v. Superior Court, 126 Cal. 247, 58 Pac. 450; Modoc Land Co. v. Superior Court, 128 Cal. 255, 60 Pac. 848; Sharpstein v. Eells, 132 Cal. 508, 64 Pac. 1080; Grant v. McArthur, 137 Cal. 271, 70 Pac. 88; Swortfiguer v. White, 141 Cal. 576, 75 Pac. 172.

[1] The case of Modoc L. Co. v. Superior Court, supra, presents a state of facts practically identical with those of the case at bar in the respect that the summons had been served before but returned after the expiration of the three-year period prescribed by the section of the Code under review. The Supreme Court issued a peremptory writ of prohibition, forbidding further proceedings in that case, and in so doing said:

> "The statute imposes the penalty of dismissal in all cases where the return is made more than three years after the commencement of the action. The court is deprived of jurisdiction to take any other action than to dismiss the cause, whether one day or many years elapse before its attention is called to the subject. The declaration that "no further proceedings shall be had therein" is a statutory prohibition against any further proceedings; and, if the court should assume to act in disregard of this prohibition, * * * it would be acting without any jurisdiction."

[2] The only answer which the respondent has to make to this contention of the appellant and to the authorities which support it is that the said defendant made a general appearance in the case by its motion for relief from its default, and that this general appearance on its part obviated the necessity of either a service or return of the summons, and constituted a waiver of its right to move to dismiss the action upon the ground stated. No authorities are cited in support of this position; and it would seem that none could be in the face of the express terms of section 581a of the Code of Civil Procedure, which make it a condition precedent to the further prosecution of the action that any appearance which the defendant might make must have been made within the three-year period prescribed in the section; and this is the construction which has been placed upon the portion of the section which so declares. Grant v. McArthur, supra; Swortfiguer v. White, supra.

In the presence of this uniform line of decisions construing section 581a, Code of Civil Procedure, to be mandatory, and in some instances prohibiting the trial courts from further proceeding with causes coming within its provisions, we are constrained to hold that the court was in error in its refusal to dismiss this action against the Realty & Rebuilding Company upon its motion, and that as to it the action must be dismissed.

It is unnecessary to consider any other of the points made by the appellants upon this appeal.

Judgment reversed, with instructions to the trial court to enter its order dismissing this action as to the appellant herein.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

35 Cal. App. 508

GAZETT v. EPPERLY et al. (Civ. 2260.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 8, 1917.)

Trial ⟹395(7)—Finding of Fact—Sufficiency—Conclusion of Law.

In an action by an incompetent's guardian for rescission of his contract involving exchange of his realty, valued by him at $6,000, actually worth $4,500, for $2,000 cash and 46 shares of stock, of a par value of $100 each, the finding that the stock had value was not insufficient, as based on conclusion of law, because containing a statement that there was not sufficient proof to sustain the averments in an allegation of the complaint; the entire finding that the stock had value not being predicated on the statement, a mere conclusion of law, the finding further containing facts affirmatively showing the stock had value, while other findings fully covered the issue and established the fact.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Waste, Judge.

Action by Agnes W. Gazett, as guardian of the estate and person of Jacob B. Gazett, an incompetent person, against Mary J. Epperly and the C. L. Decker Company, a corporation. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Judgment affirmed.

Milton S. Hamilton, of San Francisco, for appellant. Robinson & Robinson, of Oakland, for respondent Epperly. Peck, Bunker & Cole, of San Francisco, for respondent C. L. Decker Co.

KERRIGAN, J. This appeal is from a judgment rendered in favor of defendants in an action brought by plaintiff for a rescission of a contract involving the exchange of property. The appeal is upon the judgment roll alone, and the sole point presented for a reversal is that a portion of the particular finding involving the issue of value of certain stock which constituted part of the exchanged property is insufficient to sustain the judgment.

It appears from the complaint and the findings that one Jacob B. Gazett, who, subsequent to the transaction here involved, was declared an incompetent, owned certain real property in the city of Oakland, which he exchanged with the defendant Epperly for the sum of $2,000 in cash and 46 shares of the capital stock of the Madera Electric Water Company, of the par value of $100 per share. In making the exchange, Gazett valued the real property at the sum of $6,000, the actual value of which, however, was found by the trial court to be but $4,500. The finding that the stock had value is claimed to be insufficient, for the reason that it contains a statement that "there is not sufficient proof to sustain the averments in allegation X of the complaint." It is the claim of the appellant that the entire finding that the stock had value is predicated upon this statement, which it is asserted is but mere conclusion of law, and for that reason insufficient.

There is no force or merit in the objection. Assuming the portion of the finding complained of to be defective in form, the finding further contains facts affirmatively showing that the stock had value, besides which other findings fully and sufficiently cover the issue and conclusively establish this fact. In addition to this, it appears from the findings that the relative values of the exchanged properties were not made the basis of the agreement. It further appears that the defendants made no representations which were false, that Gazett was himself familiar with the stock and had made independent investigation regarding the same, that plaintiff was not entitled to a rescission, and that judgment was rightfully given for defendants.

For the reasons stated the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

---

35 Cal. App. 560

RONCONI v. NORTHWESTERN PAC. R. CO. (Civ. 2250.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 13, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 11, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑293(1)—TRIAL 🔑243—INJURIES TO SERVANT — INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for injuries to a railroad employé while operating a hand car, where there was testimony that the foreman of the hand car crew had his attention directed to the defective condition of the handle, which broke under plaintiff's manipulation, and said, "It is all right; go ahead," an instruction that the law does not permit an employer to take any chances as to the safety of its employés, in view of the evidence, was not an incorrect statement of the law, or inconsistent with other full and correct instructions on the duty of the employer.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑293(16)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—INSTRUCTIONS.

In such action, read in the light of the evidence, and in respect of the particular appliance which plaintiff was required to use, an instruction that a visual or ocular inspection of external conditions does not satisfy the employer's obligation, where the servant's safety depends on the soundness of the material or the firmness of attachment of several parts, correctly stated the law, particularly in view of the fullness and correctness of the main body of the instructions on such phase of the case.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑124(6)—INJURY TO SERVANT—INSPECTION BY EMPLOYER — "SIMPLE TOOL."

The handle of a hand car to be used by one standing in such a position that, if it should suddenly give way, the user would be precipitated in front of the moving car, is not a simple tool, such as a hammer, crowbar, pick, or shovel, of which a mere visual or external inspection by the employer might ordinarily suffice to satisfy its duty to inspect.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Simple Tool.]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑265(5)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—RES IPSA LOQUITUR.

The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies to cases of master and servant.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Wm. D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by Egidio Ronconi against the Northwestern Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying new trial, defendant appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

Stanley Moore, of San Francisco, for appellant. James A. Bacigalupi and Edmund Nelson, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and also from an order denying a new trial in an action for damages arising out of injuries sustained by the plaintiff as one of the defendant's employés while engaged in the operation of a hand car upon its railroad line. The hand car in question was one of regular standard make, equipped with wooden handles, which were used by the men in propelling the car. At the time of the accident which caused his injuries the plaintiff was standing on the front end of the car facing backward, and was engaged in "pumping" or pulling upon one of the handles used in operating the car, when said handle broke, and he fell backward in front of the car, which ran over him and seriously and permanently injured him. The evidence is strongly conflicting as to the condition of the handle at the time of the accident. The appellant does not question its sufficiency, but rests his appeal upon certain alleged errors in the instructions of the court to the jury.

[1] The first instruction assailed in the briefs of counsel for appellant is one which reads as follows:

"You are further instructed that the law does not permit an employer to take any chances as to the safety of his employés."

The appellant insists that this instruction constitutes an erroneous statement of the law, and also that it is contradictory to other instructions given by the court. The appellant, however, concedes that the court quite fully instructed the jury upon every phase of the case, and that, with the exception of the particular instructions it criticizes, the court correctly laid down the law as to the degree of care which an employer should exercise in relation to his employés and to the appliances with which they were expected to work. The instruction above quoted appears to have been taken from the language of the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Brown v. Sharp-Hauser Contracting Co., 159 Cal. 89, 94, 112 Pac. 874. Its precise words were used in that case as applying to a state of facts where a foreman, representing the employer in relation to its employés, in the presence of a known danger concluded to "take a chance." The evidence in the case before us discloses a similar situation, for there is testimony to the effect that the foreman of the hand car crew had his attention directed to the defective condition of the handle which broke under the plaintiff's manipulation, and that he said, "It is all right; go ahead." From this testimony the jury might well have arrived at the conclusion that the foreman of the defendant, in the presence of the known defect in the handle, concluded to "take a chance." The instruction complained of, when read and construed in the light of this evidence, is, we think, not subject to the appellant's criticism as either an incorrect statement of the law, or as inconsistent with the other very full and quite correct instructions of the court bearing upon the duty of the employer toward its employés.

[2, 3] The next criticism of the appellant is aimed at an instruction which reads as follows:

> "You are instructed that a merely visual or ocular inspection of external conditions does not satisfy the measure of the employer's obligation where the servant's safety depends upon the soundness of the material of which an instrumentality is composed, or upon the firmness with which the separate parts of such instrumentality are attached to each other."

The extent of the appellant's criticism of this instruction is that it is misleading; but as to this objection it also is to be read in the light of the evidence in the case and in respect of the particular appliance which the plaintiff was required to use at the moment of his injuries. So regarded we think this instruction very correctly stated the law applicable to the instant case. The handle of a hand car which is to be used in its propulsion by one standing in such a position that, if it should suddenly give way, its user would be precipitated in front of the moving car, cannot be classed in the category of those simple tools such as a hammer, a crowbar, a pick, or a shovel, for which a mere visual or external inspection might ordinarily suffice. Where the employé's safety essentially depends upon the soundness of the material of which the handle bar of a hand car is composed, or upon the firmness with which it is held in its place in view of the strain to which it is subjected in the operation of the car, it becomes one of those appliances for which a mere visual or external inspection on the employer's part would not ordinarily be sufficient. 1 Labatt on Master and Servant, § 161; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Webster, 99 Ark. 265, 137 S. W. 1103, 1199, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 141. We are of the opinion that the above instruction correctly stated the law applicable to the facts of this case, and that the jury could have been in no way misled thereby, especially in view of the fullness and conceded correctness of the main body of the court's instructions bearing upon this particular phase of the case.

[4] The final contention of the appellant is that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, as embodied in one of the instructions given to the jury, has no application to cases of master and servant; but as to this contention the contrary has been recently and quite uniformly held to be the rule. O'Connor v. Mennie, 169 Cal. 217, 146 Pac. 674; Van Horn v. Pacific Refining Co., 27 Cal. App. 105, 148 Pac. 951; Nolen v. Engstrum Co. (Sup.) 166 Pac. 346; Lippert v. Pacific Sugar Corp., 33 Cal. App. 198, 164 Pac. 810.

This disposes of the contentions of the appellant on this appeal. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

---

35 Cal. App. 593

McCARTER et al. v. ZELLER. (Civ. 2244.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 14, 1917.)

1. CONTRACTS 🔑94(7) — RESCISSION — MISREPRESENTATIONS—OPINIONS OF LAW.

An alleged misrepresentation, consisting of a mere opinion on a question of law, made by defendant to plaintiff, toward whom he occupied no confidential relationship, does not justify plaintiff in relying thereon, and furnishes no ground for rescission.

2. CONTRACTS 🔑94(5) — RESCISSION — GROUNDS — RELIANCE ON MISREPRESENTATION.

Plaintiff cannot rescind for misrepresentation by defendant, when before making the agreement she sought the advice of an attorney and acted thereon.

3. ELECTION OF REMEDIES 🔑3(2) — INCONSISTENCY.

In suit to rescind option contract for alleged misrepresentation that plaintiff's rights under prior contract had been lost, where plaintiff's recovery depended on establishing the validity of the original contract, the court properly excluded evidence offered by plaintiff of failure of consideration for notes given pursuant to the original agreement.

4. NOVATION 🔑1—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Where plaintiffs bought personalty and leased hotel, giving notes therefor which provided that, on default in payment of any one of them, the entire sum should fall due immediately, and they defaulted, a new agreement giving to one plaintiff an option to lease the premises at a higher monthly rental and to buy the personalty at a higher price, and a second similar option at still higher prices, was not a novation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Suit by Ida McCarter and another against

John A. Zeller. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

A. S. Schapp, for appellants. John T. York, of Napa, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. On February 4, 1912, the defendant, John A. Zeller, sold and delivered to the plaintiffs all the furniture, household goods, and personal property, stock of liquors, etc., then situate in the Palace Hotel in the city of Napa, for the purchase price of $8,000. Four thousand dollars was paid in cash, and the balance was evidenced by a series of eleven joint and several promissory notes, all bearing interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from February 4, 1913, executed and delivered by the defendants to the plaintiff, each for the sum of $200, and one joint and several note for the sum of $1,800. All of these notes were secured by a chattel mortgage, dated February 4, 1913, whereby the personal property so sold and delivered by defendant to the plaintiffs, together with all furniture, household goods, provisions, supplies, and all personal property of every nature, which should thereafter be purchased, acquired, or owned by the mortgagees for use in the hotel business, was thereby mortgaged to secure the payment of the said notes, with interest, and the performance of the covenants of the chattel mortgage. The mortgage provided that, if default should be made in the payment of any of these notes, the mortgagee, without commencing an action for foreclosure, could take possession of the mortgaged property and sell it in the manner provided by law.

On February 4, 1913, the defendant executed a lease to the plaintiffs of the premises known as the Palace Hotel in the city of Napa, for the term of five years, commencing February 1, 1913, for a monthly rental of $250, payable on the 1st day of each month in advance. This lease, executed with all the formalities of a chattel mortgage, provided that the personal property so sold was mortgaged to secure all rent due or to become due under the terms of the lease, and the performance of all the covenants and conditions therein contained, and also contained a provision that, upon the breach of any covenant or condition of the lease, it should be lawful for the lessor, when the breach continued for 10 days after written notice to remedy the same, to enter upon the premises or any part thereof and to repossess the same as of his former estate. The plaintiffs entered into the possession of the property under this lease, and paid, as they severally became due, eight of the promissory notes, and in the meantime purchased additional personal property of the value of about $300, which they installed in the hotel.

On November 4, 1913, the plaintiff George A. McCarter left Napa, and the court found as a fact that he then and there intended to desert and abandon his wife, the plaintiff Ida McCarter, and then and there intended to cease to conduct or manage said hotel. On the day he left one of the series of notes for $200 matured, and there also remained unpaid two additional $200 notes and one for the sum of $1,800, all with interest from February 1, 1913, and, according to the express provisions of the chattel mortgage, these four notes, aggregating $2,400, by reason of the default in the payment of the note maturing November 4, 1913, at the option of the payee, all became immediately due and payable.

On December 1, 1913, defendant requested Ida McCarter, who was still conducting the business, to pay the rent for December, 1913, but she stated that she was unable to pay the same, whereupon the defendant served upon her the 10 days' notice provided for in the lease, and later took possession. But, just before the defendant took possession under the provisions of the lease, Mrs. McCarter, accompanied by one King, whom she had employed as counsel, had a conference with the defendant Zeller, at which time they entered into another agreement, which bears date December 12, 1913, and which in substance gave to Ida McCarter, personally, an option for 30 days to lease the hotel premises for the term of 5 years at a monthly rental of $260, and to purchase the personal property, with good will of the hotel business, for the sum of $2,737, and a further additional sum, which would consist of any additional personal property which the respondent might purchase during the existence of the option. There was also a second similar option given extending over a period of 60 days which would be exercised upon the payment of $2,850 plus the value of personal property purchased before its exercise. It was also agreed in the case of the exercise of either option that $2,000 of the purchase price would be accepted in secured notes.

This action was commenced for the purpose of rescinding and annulling the latter agreement. The defendant answered, and also filed a cross-complaint, asking for a foreclosure of the chattel moregage given to secure the lease and the promissory notes. The court gave judgment in favor of defendant in a certain sum, and directed the sale of an undivided one-half interest of all the personal property which was the subject-matter of the sale made by defendant to the plaintiffs on February 4, 1913. This is an appeal from the judgment.

It was the theory of the plaintiffs' case that Ida McCarter was induced to enter into the agreement in question by misrepresentations of the defendant, and in this behalf the complaint alleged that the defendant represented to plaintiff that she and her husband had lost all right and title to the personal property sold to them and had also lost all right to the possession of the leased premises; that she believed said misrepresentation, and was induced thereby to execute the agreement in question.

[1] The court expressly found that the defendant did not make the alleged representation, and counsel for plaintiffs fails to point out any testimony contradictory to this finding. But, even if the facts did support the allegation of the complaint as to the misrepresentation, nevertheless the alleged representation was a mere opinion on a question of law made by the defendant to the plaintiff toward whom he occupied no confidential relationship, and therefore it cannot justify the plaintiff in relying upon it, and does not furnish ground for rescission. Champion v. Woods, 79 Cal. 17, 21 Pac. 534, 12 Am. St. Rep. 126; Rheingans v. Smith, 161 Cal. 362, 119 Pac. 494, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1140.

[2] Furthermore it affirmatively appears that the plaintiff did not rely upon any representations of the defendant. The record shows that Mrs. McCarter, before making the agreement in suit, sought the advice of an attorney and acted throughout the transaction on his advice. This fact also tends to condemn the contention that Ida McCarter was not in a condition of mind to realize and appreciate the nature and character of the agreement.

[3] It is claimed that the court erred in refusing to allow the plaintiffs to prove that there was a failure of consideration for the promissory notes, given pursuant to the original agreement. The very object of the action was to obtain the rescission of the last agreement of December 12, 1913, and the plaintiffs' complaint prayed the return to them of the property which was the subject-matter of the original agreement, and therefore plaintiffs must stand squarely upon and affirm the original transaction. Surely the plaintiffs will not be permitted to insist upon a failure of consideration of a contract, under the terms of which they were seeking the relief sued for.

[4] It is contended that the trial court found in effect that the last agreement, dated December 12, 1913, constituted a novation, and that a novation to be effective must be as to all of the parties to the original contract. Therefore it is argued that the findings to this extent are erroneous, and will not suffice to support the judgment of foreclosure rendered and entered pursuant to the issues raised by the cross-complaint. The findings do not, either expressly or impliedly, proceed upon the theory of a novation, and, so far as we have been able to ascertain, the agreement in question possessed none of the elements of a novation in so far as the security held by the defendant was concerned.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

---

35 Cal. App. 612

DOZIER v. NATIONAL BORAX CO. et al.

(Civ. 2246.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 17, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 14, 1918.)

1. Exchange of Property 🔑10 — Corporate Stock—Demand.

Under Civ. Code, § 1448, providing that if an obligation requires performance of one of two acts, in the alternative, the obligor has the right of selection, unless otherwise agreed, where defendants contracted to deliver to plaintiff within a certain time on demand either corporate stock or a named sum upon plaintiff's surrender of certain other stock, plaintiff's demand for the named sum only was insufficient, it being incumbent on him to make demand in the alternative for either the stock or cash, since section 1449, providing that if the party having the right of selection between alternative acts does not give notice of his selection to the other party within the time fixed, etc., the right of selection passes to the other party, did not apply, because until plaintiff made proper demand there was no right of selection by defendants.

2. Alteration of Instruments 🔑12—Authority to "Fill in" Blanks in Contract.

Authority to a co-obligor to "fill in" an executed agreement for exchange of corporate stock in which were left blank the obligee's name and the numbers of shares of the respective stocks did not authorize such co-obligor to interlineate "or $2,700," creating an alternative obligation to deliver that sum or the stock; such interlineation being a most material alteration in the terms of the agreement.

3. Alteration of Instruments 🔑27(3)—Evidence of Agency—Altering Executed Contract.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1982, as to explaining alteration in writing produced in evidence, the burden of proving authority from the obligor to his co-obligor to make an interlineation making a material change in an executed contract for exchange of property is upon plaintiff obligee producing such contract and relying upon it as genuine.

4. Alteration of Instruments 🔑29—Proof of Agency—Altering Executed Contract.

In such case, proof that the alteration in the body and terms of the instrument was authorized by the obligor must be clear and conclusive to bind the obligee.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by M. R. Dozier against the National Borax Company and others. From judgment for plaintiff and order denying new trial, defendant L. W. Dake appeals. Reversed.

Duryea & Bantel, of San Francisco, for appellant. Thomas B. Dozier, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $2,700 and costs in an action to recover said sum upon an alleged written contract upon which the appellant Dake was a surety.

The facts of the case, in so far as they are undisputed, are as follows: The appellant L. W. Dake and one Max P. Fries were interested together as stockholders and directors in the National Borax Company, a corporation of which the said Max P. Fries was president and manager. In the month of February, 1913, a transaction was pending between Max P. Fries, as president of the National Borax Company, and M. R. Dozier, the plaintiff and respondent herein, involving an exchange of certain corporate stock, in which transaction, when the terms thereof were reduced to writing, the plaintiff had insisted that the said L. W. Dake should sign such writing as a surety for the performance of the agreement which was to be contained therein. On February 13, 1913, Max P. Fries requested said Dake to sign and acknowledge, and the latter did sign and acknowledge, the following document:

....

One year after date upon demand, we or either of us, hereby agree to deliver to ......, ... shares of the capital stock of the California State Life Insurance Company, upon surrender to the undersigned or either of them, of his certificate of ...... shares of the capital stock of the National Borax Company.
[Corporate Seal] National Borax Company,
Max P. Fries, Pre. & Gen'l Mgr.,
L. W. Dake.
(Acknowledgment of L. W. Dake.)

This agreement in blank, when so signed by Dake, was delivered by him to Fries, who took the same to Woodland, the home of the plaintiff, and there the transaction was consummated between himself, acting on behalf of the National Borax Company, and the plaintiff, the said Fries, writing into the above document as executed by Dake words which caused it to read as follows:

Woodland, Cal., February 25, 1913.

One year after date upon demand, we or either of us, hereby agree to deliver to M. R. Dozier $200 cash and 140 shares of the capital stock of the California State Life Insurance Company, or $2,700.00 cash upon surrender to the undersigned or either of them, of his certificate of 250 shares of the capital stock of the National Borax Company.
[Corporate Seal.] National Borax Company,
Max P. Fries, Pres. & Gen'l Mgr.
L. W. Dake.

The words "or $2,700.00 cash" in the foregoing form of the completed document were not written into any blank space therein, but were interlined at the place in which they appear in the handwriting of Fries.

A year later and on February 25, 1914, the said plaintiff demanded of the National Borax Company and also of the said L. W. Dake the payment of the $2,700 mentioned in said agreement, and at the same time offered to deliver and surrender to each or both of them the certificate for 250 shares of the National Borax Company as provided for therein. This demand not being complied with, the plaintiff instituted this action for the recovery of said sum. The defendant National Borax Company was never served with process in the action and never appeared therein, but the defendant L. W. Dake, being served, appeared with a demurrer to the sufficiency of the complaint, which demurrer being overruled he answered, denying the execution of the instrument sued on in so far as the insertion of the words "or $2,700.00 cash" was concerned, and affirmatively alleging that in the insertion thereof in said document said Max P. Fries acted without the authority of said defendant Dake and without his knowledge and consent.

Upon the trial of the cause the court rendered its findings and judgment in plaintiff's favor, and from said judgment and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial the said defendant L. W. Dake prosecutes this appeal.

The first point made by the appellant involves the sufficiency of the complaint. The plaintiff in his said complaint set forth in hæc verba the instrument upon which he depended for a recovery. He then averred that on the 25th day of February, 1914, he demanded from each and both of said defendants, the signers of the same, the sum of $2,700 cash, at the same time offering to deliver the 250 shares of the capital stock of the National Borax Company duly indorsed. The appellant insists that this averment of the plaintiff's demand is insufficient to form a basis for the present action, for the reason that by the terms of the writing as set forth in the complaint the defendants were given an option to deliver to the plaintiff upon his demand either the sum of $2,700 in cash, or $200 in cash and 140 shares of the California State Life Insurance Company; and hence that the plaintiff's demand should have been as broad as the defendants' said option. The respondent, on the other hand, contends that under the terms of the said writing the option and election was his to determine which of the two alternatives stated in the agreement he would require to be performed; and that he had elected to require and demand the cash payment of $2,700.

[1] We do not think the writing in question will bear the construction for which the respondent contends. Section 1448 of the Civil Code provides as follows:

"If an obligation requires the performance of one of two acts, in the alternative, the party required to perform has the right of selection, unless it is otherwise provided by the terms of the obligation."

In view of this section of the Code, and under the clear terms of the writing itself, we are constrained to hold that the defendants and not the plaintiff had the option to determine which one of the two alternatives of their agreement they would elect to perform. The only election which this writing gives the plaintiff is that of determining whether he will insist upon its terms at all, for it will be noted that the agreement is unilateral in the respect that the plaintiff is not required to surrender to the defendants the 250 shares of the stock of the National Borax Company unless at the expiration of one year from the date of the writing he shall elect so to do, and shall manifest his election by making the alternative demand for which the writing expressly provides. It was therefore incumbent upon the plaintiff to make and aver his demand as broadly as the writing requires, and hence to have alleged a demand upon the defendants for the performance in the alternative by them and each of them of their agreement. The complaint does not allege that the plaintiff ever made this demand.

The respondent, however, contends that at the time of the commencement of his action the right of election under the agreement in question had passed to him by virtue of section 1449 of the Civil Code, which section reads as follows:

> "If the party having the right of selection between alternative acts does not give notice of his selection to the other party within the time, if any, fixed by the obligation for that purpose, or if none is so fixed, before the time at which the obligation ought to be performed, the right of selection passes to the other party."

The answer to this contention, however, is that according to the terms of the agreement there was no obligation, right, or duty reposed in the defendants herein to do anything in the way of an offer of performance of either one of the alternative conditions of said agreement to be by them performed until the plaintiff, by making a proper demand therefor, had set in motion both the duty of the defendants to offer to perform one or other of the said alternatives, and the right of said defendants to a surrender by plaintiff of his certificate of 250 shares of the capital stock of the National Borax Company. It was therefore first incumbent upon the plaintiff to make a proper and sufficient demand, and this, as we have seen, he is not alleged in the complaint to have done.

It follows that the complaint herein was insufficient in this respect to state a cause of action, and hence that the trial court was in error in overruling the defendants' demurrer upon that ground.

[2-4] The second point urged by the appellant herein is that there was no sufficient evidence to sustain the findings of the trial court to the effect that the appellant, L. W. Dake, authorized Max P. Fries, as his agent, to complete a pending negotiation with the plaintiff to the extent of binding the former to the alternative of paying the sum of $2,700, or of inserting in the agreement which he had already executed the words "or $2,700 cash." We have scrutinized this record carefully for the purpose of discovering such evidence if it exists sufficient to sustain the finding of the trial court in this regard, and have been unable to do so. The plaintiff and the defendant Dake never met prior to the execution of the writing in question, nor in fact thereafter until the time of the trial of the case. The plaintiff himself expressly deposes that the terms and conditions of the agreement between himself and Max P. Fries, acting for the National Borax Company, had been fully understood and agreed to prior to February 24, 1913, the date when Dake executed the writing in the form in which it was at the time he signed the same and prior to the filling in of its blank spaces and to the interlineation of the words "or $2,700 cash." The only witness who testified on the trial to the understanding between Dake and Fries respecting what the agreement was or was to be when fully filled in is the appellant Dake himself, who swears that there never was any understanding or agreement on his part to pay the sum of $2,700 to the plaintiff, nor did Fries have any authority from him to insert the words "or $2,700 cash" in the body of the written agreement. The only evidence to which our attention has been directed which countervails this showing is that of plaintiff's counsel and of one or two of his other witnesses respecting conversations had with the defendant Dake after the date of the maturity of said agreement and shortly before the institution of this action. By reference to these conversations the utmost extent to which the alleged admissions of the defendant go is his admission that he had authorized Fries to "fill in the agreement." Such an admission is clearly nothing more than an admission that Fries had authority from Dake to fill in the blank spaces in the agreement, but not to interlineate therein such material matter as the phrase "or $2,700 cash," for the insertion of which not only was there no blank space in the document, but clearly such an addition was not contemplated by its phraseology or form. The interlineation of these words in this writing obviously was an afterthought to its creation, and also obviously works a most material alteration in its terms; and, having been confessedly inserted after the execution of the writing by Dake, the burden of accounting for it was cast upon the plaintiff producing the writing and relying upon it as genuine under the express terms of section 1982 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In such case the proof that the alteration in the body and terms of the instrument was authorized by the party affected by it must be clear and conclusive in order that such party may be bound thereby. Walsh v. Hunt, 120 Cal. 46, 52 Pac. 115, 39 L. R. A. 697. The evidence in this case upon which the plaintiff relies to hold the appellant liable upon this altered writing falls far short of this measure, and is clearly insufficient in our opinion to sustain the foregoing finding of the trial court.

It follows that for this reason also the contention of the appellant Dake upon this appeal must be sustained.

It is unnecessary to discuss the other points presented upon the appeal from the order denying a new trial.

Judgment and order reversed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

35 Cal. App. 563

GINTJEE v. KNIELING et al. (Civ. 2269.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 13, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 11, 1918.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY ⟹149—CONTRACTOR'S BOND—TIME FOR SUIT.

Contractor's bond, providing that any suit brought thereon to recover any claims thereunder must be instituted within the time allowed by law for instituting a suit to enforce a lien claim, did not require the building owner to bring his suit on the bond on account of the contractor's default, within such time, since he could not within such time have been apprised of the extent of his damages when mechanics' lien and other claims could have been sued on after it would have been necessary for him to bring his action.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟹1011(1)—SCOPE—FINDINGS OF FACT.

The finding of the trial court upon an issue as to which the evidence is substantially conflicting will not be disturbed on appeal.

3. EVIDENCE ⟹358—BUILDING SPECIFICATIONS—ADMISSIBILITY.

In an action on a contractor's bond securing the performance of a contract of which the specifications for the building were expressly made a part, the specifications were admissible in evidence on the issue whether the architect's certificate of partial completion was correct and binding on both parties.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟹1051(1)—HARMLESS ERROR.

In action on contractor's bond, where there was sufficient evidence to justify finding that architect's certificate of partial completion was correct, admission of other evidence consisting of specifications for the building if error, was harmless.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. E. Crothers, Judge.

Action by T. J. Gintjee against A. Knieling and the Guardian Casualty & Guaranty Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and order denying new trial, and the Guaranty Company appeals. Affirmed.

S. Laz. Lansburgh, of San Francisco, for appellant. Brittain & Kuhl, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff and from an order denying a new trial in an action upon a building contractor's bond.

The plaintiff and the defendant Knieling entered into a written contract for the erection by the latter of a building upon the plaintiff's lot. The Guardian Casualty & Guaranty Company, appellant herein, became the surety upon the said contractor's bond. The first payment of $2,850 under the terms of the contract was to be made when the second floor joists were in place. The contractor proceeded with the erection of the building until November 28, 1913, upon which date, the architect having given his certificate that the second floor joists were in place, the plaintiff made said first payment of $2,850 to the contractor as provided in the contract. The contractor immediately thereafter abandoned the contract. On January 14, 1914, the owner filed in the record's office notice of the contractor's cessation of labor and abandonment of the contract. On June 2, 1914, the plaintiff commenced this action to recover upon the contractor's bond.

Two defenses were urged at the trial and are insisted upon on this appeal. These are: First, that the action was not commenced in time; and, second, that the plaintiff's said payment of $2,850 to the contractor was premature for the reason that the second floor joists were in fact not in place at the time such payment was made. The first of these defenses depends for its validity upon a construction of the terms of the bond upon which this suit is brought. This bond was given in compliance with the provisions of the mechanics' lien laws in force at the time of the making and execution of the contract in question, and, while it ran primarily in favor of the plaintiff as the owner of the premises, it also expressly stated, as the law required, that it should inure to the benefit of any and all persons performing labor upon or furnishing materials to be used in the work to be done under the contract so as to give such persons a right of action on the bond, in any suit to foreclose their liens for such materials or labor, or in a separate action brought upon the bond. It then proceeds to use the following language:

> "That any suit brought on this bond to recover any claims hereunder must be instituted within the time allowed by law for instituting a suit to enforce a lien claim."

It is the contention of the appellant that the provision of the bond last above quoted applies to every action to be brought on this bond whether by the owner or by lien claimants for materials or labor, and that as to all such actions they must have been commenced within the time for instituting suits to enforce lien claims, and hence, according to the appellant's said contention, this action by the owner, having admittedly been commenced after the statutory period for instituting actions upon lien claims against the plaintiffs' property had expired, it cannot be maintained. The respondent, on the other hand, insists that the clause in the bond above quoted cannot be held to apply to an action by the owner to enforce the obligation of the bond, but that it is only to be given application to actions upon the claims of materialmen and laborers; that otherwise the phrase "to recover any claims hereunder" in said clause of the bond would be superfluous and meaningless; and that in any event such a clause in the contractor's bond would be impossible and unreasonable in its application to the owner's right of action, for the reason chiefly that the extent of his right of recovery upon the bond could not be ascertainable until after the time for the commencement of actions by lien claimants had expired, by which time, according to the appellant's contention, the owner's action would be too late.

---

⟹For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

[1] We are of the opinion that the respondent's contention in both the foregoing respects must be sustained.

The condition of the bond in question, in so far as it refers to the obligation of its surety to the owner, is that its principal, the contractor, shall faithfully perform his contract, and shall also pay in full the claims of all persons performing labor upon or furnishing materials to be used in the required work. It is obvious that no limitation of the time within which the owner must begin his action would be reasonable which should attempt to limit the owner's right of action to the same time within which lien claimants must begin their suits, for the sufficient reason that the owner could not know the extent of his detriment until either such actions had been commenced, or until the statutory time within which they were required to be commenced had fully expired. The construction of the clause of the bond in question for which the appellant contends would therefore, in our opinion, render it, as applied to the owner, unreasonable and therefore void. Fitger Brewing Co. v. American Bonding Co., 127 Minn. 330, 149 N. W. 539; Pac. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Adams, 27 Okl. 496, 112 Pac. 1026.

We do not feel, however, that we are required to give the clause in this bond under review such a construction, but rather to construe it by its own express terms as limited to actions to recover such claims thereunder as might be brought by lien claimants, and which would thus properly confine such litigants to the statutory limit for commencing suits for the enforcement of their lien claims.

[2] As to the second contention of the appellant, to the effect that the first payment by the owner to the contractor was prematurely made, we find it to be without merit for the reason that upon the issue as to whether or not the second floor joists were in place at the time such payment was made the evidence is substantially conflicting, and hence the finding of the trial court in plaintiff's favor upon that issue will not be disturbed upon appeal.

[3, 4] We also find no merit in the appellant's contention that the court erred in admitting in evidence the specifications for the purpose of showing that the architect's certificate as to the second floor joists being in position was binding upon the contractor, and hence upon the appellant, for the twofold reason that the specifications were expressly made a part of the contract, and for that reason were admissible for all purposes; and also that, there being sufficient evidence otherwise to justify the trial court in its finding that the second floor joists were actually in position at the time said first payment was made, the error, had the court made any, in its admission of the specifications in evidence, would have been harmless.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

(35 Cal. App. 628)

EASTMAN v. SUNSET PARK LAND CO. et al. (Civ. 1970.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 17, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 14, 1918.)

1. Bills and Notes 🔑162—Negotiability—Note Payable in United States Gold Coin—"Payable in Money Only."

A note payable "in United States gold coin" is a note payable in money only, within Civ. Code, § 3088, requiring a negotiable instrument to be "made payable in money only," and hence is a negotiable instrument.

2. Bills and Notes 🔑160—Negotiability—Sum Certain—Attorney's Fees—"Negotiable Instrument."

Since, although Civ. Code, § 3087, defining a "negotiable instrument" as a promise to pay a certain sum, is not in direct terms amended by section 3088, making the exception that a note may provide for the payment of attorney's fees and costs in case of suit to collect it, it is necessarily modified thereby, a note providing for such attorney's fees as the court may adjudge reasonable in case of suit to collect is a negotiable instrument, although not for a sum certain.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Negotiable Instrument.]

3. Damages 🔑71—Attorney's Fees.

Expenditures made for attorney fees in an action based upon a contract containing a stipulation for such fees are in the nature of special damages incidental to the breach of the contract and which, according to the terms of the contract, are to be compensated for in addition to recovery of the principal sum due.

4. Bills and Notes 🔑160—Negotiability—Attorney's Fees.

Since it would not be impracticable or extremely difficult for the court, in action on a note, to fix the actual damage in the way of necessary attorney's fees suffered by the noteholder, an agreement attempting to fix the amount of such damage in anticipation of a breach of the obligation to pay the note is not enforceable, under Civ. Code, §§ 1670, 1671, as to contracts providing for damages for their breach.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by George L. Eastman against the Sunset Park Land Company and another. From judgment for plaintiff, the named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John E. Biby, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Emmet H. Wilson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The plaintiff, being the owner of a promissory note made by the defendant Sunset Park Land Company in favor of defendant T. G. Rickman, brought this action and obtained judgment, from which the Sunset Park Land Company appeals. It is admitted that the judgment should be sustained if the note was a negotiable instrument. Appellant contends that the note was not a negotiable instrument because by its terms it was made payable "in United States gold coin," and because it contains an agreement that:

> "In case suit is instituted to collect this note or any portion thereof, we promise to pay such additional sum as the court may adjudge reasonable as attorney's fees in said suit."

Section 3088 of the Civil Code, as it was when said note was made, read as follows:

> "A negotiable instrument must be made payable in money only and without any condition not certain of fulfillment, except that it may provide for the payment of attorney's fees and costs of suit, in case suit be brought thereon to compel the payment thereof."

According to section 3087, Civil Code:

> "A negotiable instrument is a written promise or request for the payment of a certain sum of money to order or bearer, in conformity to the provisions of this article."

[1-4] We are of the opinion that a note which is made payable in United States gold coin is a note payable in money only, notwithstanding the fact that the note prescribes a particular kind of money. Appellant claims that the negotiable character of the note is destroyed in that by its terms it does not provide for the payment of a sum certain. Conceding that the sum is not certain, it is none the less our duty to give full effect to the exception stated in section 3088, notwithstanding that the amendment which enacted that exception did not in direct terms amend section 3087. In legal effect, it necessarily modifies the definition of a negotiable instrument by leaving the amount of the attorney's fees uncertain. Even if the note had provided for attorney's fees in a stated sum, the amount would remain uncertain, since that would be only the maximum sum, and the court might allow only a smaller amount, if the sum stated in the note exceeded reasonable limits. This conclusion results from the fact that expenditures made for attorney fees in an action based upon a contract containing a stipulation for such fees are in the nature of special damages incidental to the breach of the contract and which, according to the terms of the contract, are to be compensated for in addition to recovery of the principal sum due. Prescott v. Grady, 91 Cal. 518, 27 Pac. 755. It cannot be said that from the nature of the case it would be impracticable or extremely difficult for the court, in the event of a breach of the contract and an action thereon, to fix the actual damage thus suffered by the holder of the note. Therefore an agreement attempting to determine the amount of such damage in anticipation of a breach of the obligation is not enforceable. Civ. Code, §§ 1670, 1671. The maximum sum to be thus recovered might be limited in the contract, only for the reason that in the absence of an agreement for attorney fees no such fees could be recovered at all.

We think that the note in question was a negotiable instrument, and therefore the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; WORKS, Judge pro tem.

---

35 Cal. App. 643

CREELY v. COHEN. (Civ. 2256.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 18, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 14, 1918.)

1. Attorney and Client ⚷130—Acting in Different Capacities—Attorney in Fact.
   Compensation for services as attorney in fact may be recovered although plaintiff also acted as attorney for defendant.
2. Appeal and Error ⚷222—Reserving Grounds for Review—Reducing Judgment.
   A defendant, failing to be represented at the time for hearing a new trial motion, cannot complain of an order then made reducing plaintiff's judgment.
3. Damages ⚷228—Verdict—Reduction.
   A trial court may reduce a verdict to an amount justified by the evidence.
4. Appeal and Error ⚷1033(10)—Harmless Error—Reducing Verdict.
   A defendant cannot complain that the trial court reduced a verdict against him.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by James H. Creely against E. G. Cohen. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jordan & Brann, of San Francisco, for appellant. George E. De Golia, of Oakland, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This is an action in which the plaintiff sought to recover from the defendant $10,569.66 for personal services alleged to have been rendered by him to said defendant in several capacities during a series of years. The complaint is in three counts, the first count averring an indebtedness amounting to $7,190 for the plaintiff's professional services as an attorney at law; the second count averring an indebtedness of $3,325.66 as a balance due for services in the nature of those performed by an attorney in fact in connection with the management, superintendence, and conduct of several properties of the defendant during the years from 1910 to 1914, inclusive; the third account for services and fees as a notary public aggregating the sum of $54. The answer put in issue all of the averments of the complaint, and also presented a plea of the statute of limitations as a bar to each and every item in the plaintiff's several counts. The trial was had before a jury, which returned a general verdict in the plaintiff's favor for the sum of $8,900, for which sum judgment was entered. The defendant moved for a new trial, which came on regularly to be heard, and upon the hearing of which the court made an order determining that the amount of the verdict and judgment should be reduced to $8,130, and providing that if the plaintiff should consent to reduction the motion for a new trial would be denied. The plaintiff duly filed his consent to such reduction of his judgment, and from such modified judgment and from the order denying her motion for a new trial the defendant prosecutes this appeal.

Upon the trial of the cause and upon this appeal the defendant has not disputed the reasonableness of the several charges for professional services alleged and proven to have been rendered by the plaintiff to the defendant under the first count in the complaint, but denies that such professional services were rendered to or on behalf of the plaintiff in a number of the cases and legal matters for which the plaintiff seeks to hold the defendant liable. And the defendant also at the trial sought and upon this appeal seeks to have the aggregate amount of the plaintiff's recovery upon his first alleged cause of action reduced by showing that as to all professional services rendered prior to the 11th day of November, 1910, the bar of the statute of limitations applies; second, that as to a number of specified cases the plaintiff at the trial waived any claim for fees; and, third, that in certain other cases the services for which the plaintiff claimed fees were not rendered to or on behalf of the defendant. As to the second count, the defendant contends that the plaintiff is seeking to recover as an attorney at law for services which are not in the nature of professional services, which it is urged he cannot do; and further contends that the plaintiff was never employed to perform any of the services for which he seeks to recover in his second count, and that if any such services were performed they were either for other persons than the defendant or were voluntary and without expectation or agreement as to compensation. As to the third count for notarial services and fees, the defendant merely seeks to minimize their amount. Finally the appellant claims that the action of the trial court in reducing the amount of the plaintiff's judgment on motion for a new trial was an unauthorized action on its part, undertaken in the absence of the defendant and for which no cause is shown, or basis of computation given, and which was therefore prejudicial.

[1] Taking up these several contentions of the appellant in their order, we find that it is true that as to the plaintiff's alleged legal services rendered prior to November 11, 1910, the plea of the statute of limitations applies; but we also find from an examination of the record that the plaintiff at the trial and in open court and in the presence of the jury expressly waived all compensation for services in lawsuits which were completed prior to November 11, 1910; and we further find that the plaintiff at the same time and place also expressly waived all claim for compensation for legal services rendered in certain specified cases aggregating the sum of $460, and that the plaintiff also then and there waived all compensation for services other than as an attorney at law rendered prior to November 11, 1910, and embraced in his second alleged cause of action; and that he also waived in the same manner all notary fees in excess of $21. But after taking into account these express admissions and waivers on the plaintiff's part, and deducting their aggregate from the plaintiff's claim under his several causes of action, we find from a somewhat careful and detailed review of the evidence that the plaintiff sufficiently made out a case for the recovery of an amount totaling $6,355 upon his first cause of action; as to the first objection which the appellant aims at the plaintiff's right to recover any sum at all upon his second cause of action we find no merit in it, for the reason that it is apparent upon the face of the plaintiff's complaint and from his testimony in support thereof that he is not seeking to recover by his second account for services rendered in the capacity of an attorney at law, but rather as an attorney in fact; and, since he has sufficiently shown that he rendered the services in question, it cannot be successfully maintained that the fact that the plaintiff is an attorney at law would debar him from a recovery for the reasonable value of services of the character of those detailed in his testimony.

The only contention of appellant having any semblance of merit with regard to the plaintiff's second alleged cause of action is that as to much of said services they were unauthorized by the defendant, and in a number of instances were performed for the apparent benefit of other persons than the defendant; but in this regard we think the evidence sufficiently shows that these services were performed in the main at the instance and request of W. G. Cohen, a son of the defendant, who was acting throughout the entire period of plaintiff's alleged service as her general agent and attorney in fact, having full authority to engage and direct the plaintiff in the performance of the services in question; and that whatever was done from time to time by the plaintiff under the said W. G. Cohen's direction was done for and on behalf of the defendant and for which she would be responsible to the extent of their reasonable value under such direction. The plaintiff and his witnesses testified that these miscellaneous services were reasonably worth the sum of $4,000. In his complaint and upon the trial the plaintiff admitted credits aggregating $2,186, leaving a balance due upon his second cause of action of $1,814; and this sum, with $21 testified as due for notary fees, added to the sum of $6,355 due upon the plaintiff's first cause of action, would amount to a total of $8,190, for which sum we think upon a fair review of the evidence he would have been entitled to a verdict. The jury actually rendered its verdict in plaintiff's favor for the sum of $8,900; and it was this verdict which the court upon motion for a new trial undertook to reduce to the proper amount by requiring the plaintiff to remit from his judgment all in excess of $8,130. The defendant complains that this action was taken by the trial court in the absence of her counsel, and further contends that the court had no power to thus reduce the amount of the original award.

[2-4] Neither of these contentions has any merit. The court's order reducing the amount of the plaintiff's judgment was made upon the day and hour to which the matter of the motion for a new trial had been regularly continued and set for decision; and if the defendant's counsel did not see fit to be present she cannot be heard to complain of the court's action in their absence. As to the power of the judge of the trial court over the verdict of the jury in the way of reducing such verdict to an amount justified by the evidence, such power is too well established in this state to require even the citation of authority. Besides, the defendant cannot complain of the action of the trial court in reducing the amount of its liability.

The defendant urges certain alleged errors of law committed by the court during the trial of the cause. Some of these are covered by what has heretofore been said; and as to the others we deem them of insufficient merit to warrant their separate consideration or to justify a reversal of the case.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; RICHARDS, J.

---

35 Cal. App. 642

EDWARDS et al. v. GEAR et al. (Civ. 2279.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 15, 1917.)

Compromise and Settlement ⚿23(3)—Suit to Set Aside—Evidence.

In a suit to set aside a settlement of an action on a promissory note in favor of an indorsee for collection merely and for an injunction, evidence held to sustain a finding that defendant in the suit on the note knew that plaintiff therein was not the true owner.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Suit by Le Roy M. Edwards and others against Lewis S. Gear and others, to set aside a settlement and for an injunction. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Edward R. Eliassen and De Lancey C. Smith, both of Oakland, for appellants. Le Roy M. Edwards, of Los Angeles, and L. R. Weinmann, of Alameda, for respondents.

LENNON, P. J. Lewis S. Gear, the defendant, gave his note on May 13, 1909, to Wilkie L. Edwards, who transferred the note to his sister, Lulu E. Chase, and his brother, Le Roy M. Edwards. Le Roy Edwards sent the note to the firm of Weinmann, Wood & Cunha of San Francisco for collection, and it was assigned to William F. Herron, a clerk in their office, solely for the purpose of collection. Suit was commenced in 1910 in the name of William F. Herron against Gear. Judgment went against Gear for the full amount of the note. Gear appealed, and pending the appeal offers of settlement by Gear were referred to Edwards and by him refused.

While the appeal was pending Gear and Herron met and entered into an agreement of settlement of the case on April 30, 1914, without the knowledge or consent of Edwards, Lulu Chase, or the counsel on either side. At the time of the settlement the judgment of the lower court, together with interest and costs, had grown to a sum in excess of $3,000. Gear settled with Herron for $1,000, but did not report the settlement or pay any of the proceeds thereof to Edwards and Chase, the owners of the note. The agreement of settlement was not placed of record. Herron appeared on November 20, 1914, before this court, and argued the case of Herron v. Gear, which seven months before had been settled. Gear appeared at the same time by his attorney, but no intimation was given that the case had been previously settled. The judgment was affirmed. On March 12, 1915, Chase and Edwards, having learned of the settlement, commenced an action to set aside the same upon the ground that it was procured and executed through the joint fraud of Herron and Gear. Injunctive relief was also sought by the complaint in the action to enjoin the satisfaction of the judgment in the case. The court below rendered and entered judgment for the plaintiffs, from which the defendant Lewis S. Gear and the defendants Ada P. Gear and Anna P. Linnell, who were sureties on the appeal bond in the original case, have appealed.

The only point made in support of the appeal worthy of discussion is the insufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment. In this behalf it is conceded that if the evidence shows that Gear knew, prior to his attempted settlement with Herron, of the judgment that the plaintiffs were the actual owners of the note, and that Herron held it only for the purpose of collection, then Gear's settlement with Herron was a fraud upon the plaintiffs and the judgment was proper.

A first reading of the transcript satisfies

⚿For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

us that there was ample evidence adduced at the trial of the case to support the finding of the lower court that Gear knew that Chase and Edwards were the real owners of the note, and that Herron held the note for collection only.

A circumstance showing such knowledge by Gear was the deposition of Herron, taken and offered in evidence in the presence of Gear in the suit of Herron v. Gear on behalf of Gear, and before the settlement, in which Herron stated that Mrs. Chase was one of the parties in interest in the matter, and that the note had been assigned to him (Herron) merely for collection. It appears also from Herron's testimony that he in effect told Gear that Edwards was the owner of the note, and Edwards' testimony shows that Gear dealt with him as owner. It further appeared in evidence upon the trial of the present case that Gear himself, prior to the settlement in suit and to the trial of the case of Herron v. Gear, discussed with the attorney for Herron the latter's interest in the note, and that during that discussion Gear would not admit "that Herron was the owner of the note * * * except for collection."

It is true that Gear testified that he did not know that Herron was not the owner of the note, but this merely presents a conflict in the evidence. The lower court resolved that conflict against the defendant Gear, and therefore, under the well-settled rule, we will not interfere with the finding of the lower court.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; RICHARDS, J.

(35 Cal. App. 810)

HERRON v. GEAR. (Civ. 1767.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 15, 1917.)

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by William F. Herron against Lewis S. Gear. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Edward R. Eliassen and De Lancey C. Smith, both of Oakland, for appellant. Leroy M. Edwards, of Los Angeles, and L. R. Weinmann, of Alameda, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from an order denying the defendant's motion to compel the plaintiff to enter a satisfaction of the judgment originally entered in the court below and subsequently affirmed upon appeal to this court. Herron v. Gear, 26 Cal. App. 18, 145 Pac. 731.

The motion in question was made after the remittitur in the case of Herron v. Gear went down from this court and during the trial of the case of Le Roy M. Edwards et al. v. Lewis S. Gear et al., 170 Pac. 645, wherein judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiffs and this day affirmed by this court. The trial of the latter case and the hearing of the motion now under consideration were heard jointly by the court below, and the motion was submitted upon the evidence adduced at the trial of that case.

It is now insisted that the evidence thus adduced not only warranted, but should have compelled, the granting of the motion. In this behalf the argument of counsel for the defendant and appellant is identical with the argument made against the sufficiency of the evidence to warrant and support the judgment in the case above referred to.

Our conclusion in that case was that the evidence amply supports the judgment, and, that being so, the court below was justified upon the same evidence in denying the motion to compel the plaintiff to satisfy the judgment.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

(35 Cal. App. 619)

STRECKER v. GAUL. (Civ. 1719.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 17, 1917.)

1. DAMAGES 🔑40(1) — TORTS—PROSPECTIVE PROFITS.

Under Civ. Code, § 3333, as to damages from noncontractual breach of obligation, prospective profits are allowable as damages for tort, but they must be clear, proximate, and the natural results of the wrong, and must be confined to the principal thing complained of and to its naturally attendant consequences.

2. DAMAGES 🔑112 — MEASURE OF DAMAGES TO HAY CROP BY FLOODING.

In action for damages to hay crop by flooding, damages were the market value of the crop at plaintiff's river landing at harvest time, less the cost of cutting, baling and hauling the hay to the landing.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1178(6)—DISPOSITION ON APPEAL.

On plaintiff's appeal from that part of judgment in his favor allowing only nominal damages because of insufficiency of evidence as to damages, the appellate court, determining there was sufficient evidence and uncontradicted, will not order new trial, but the judgment will be affirmed as to all except the part appealed from, and that part reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to make findings on the issue of damages and to amend the judgment in accordance with such findings.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; Frank H. Smith and J. A. Plummer, Judges.

Action by Herman F. Strecker against A. Gaul. Judgment for plaintiff, and from order denying new trial plaintiff appeals. Judgment affirmed in part and reversed in part, and cause remanded with directions.

A. H. Ashley, of Stockton, for appellant. S. M. Spurrier, of Stockton, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This action is brought by plaintiff for the abatement of a nuisance and judgment for damages caused by the erection of said nuisance. The court found that the obstruction complained of constituted a nuisance, and entered judgment for its abatement, but denied other than nominal damages of $1. Plaintiff appeals from the order denying his motion for a new trial, and brings the record here upon bill of exceptions.

It appears that plaintiff was, at the commencement of the action, the owner of certain farming lands situated on Roberts Island, San Joaquin county, and that Johanna F. Krenz was the owner of adjacent lands which she had leased to defendant Gaul, who was, prior to and at the time of the action in possession and under full control thereof, and defendant admitted at the trial that he was solely and exclusively responsible for all the acts complained of in the complaint.

The course of the proceedings in this action was somewhat unusual, and should be here stated. The complaint was filed March 21, 1908, and the answer June 3, 1908, and the action came on for trial October 19, 1909, before the Hon. C. W. Norton, as judge, and the testimony was completed November 22, 1909. It was thereafter ordered to be submitted on briefs. Frank D. Nicol, Esq., was the attorney for defendant, in sole charge of the action for him, and the intervening death of Mr. Nicol halted further proceedings until January 6, 1913, when the condition of the case was brought to the attention of the court, and Messrs. Nutter & Orr, successors to Nicol & Orr, disclaimed any further employment in the case, and the cause was set for retrial on February 6, 1913. On February 11, 1913, A. L. Levinsky, Esq., was substituted as attorney for defendant, and Hon. C. W. Norton, who presided as trial judge, being incapacitated by illness, on February 21, 1913—

> "a written stipulation for the submission of this cause for decision, signed by the attorneys for the plaintiff and the defendant, A. Gaul, was filed herein. Thereby it was stipulated that this action be submitted for decision to the undersigned judges, Frank H. Smith and J. A. Plummer, upon the pleadings, the record and files herein, and the evidence (including exhibits and stipulations) contained in, or identified by, the 239-page transcript of the evidence taken at said trial and thereafter transcribed by Court Reporter Edgar W. Butters (each party reserving and preserving all rights, objections, and exceptions as shown by said reporter's transcript); and upon briefs in behalf of the respective parties. Said stipulation further provided that said judges might go upon and view the lands and premises involved, in such manner and with such aid, as they deemed advisable, helpful, and just; and that said action should be dismissed as to the defendants sued herein by the fictitious names of Mary Moe and John Doe. The said two judges having gone upon and viewed said lands and premises, and considered the pleadings, records, and files herein, the reporter's transcript of said trial, the exhibits and the briefs of the counsel for the respective parties, and the cause being submitted, the court now makes, upon the issues presented by the pleadings, the following findings of facts."

The court found that at the times mentioned in the complaint there has been a natural way for seepage water and rainwater to pass through the lands of the plaintiff and through the lands of Johanna Krenz, mentioned in the complaint, in a general northwesterly direction and through the lands controlled by the defendant, Gaul; that said natural way of said seepage and rainwater so passing through the said lands of plaintiff and said lands controlled by defendant, Gaul, "was, in its natural condition, sufficient to conduct and carry away nearly all of the seepage waters and rainwaters that accumulated upon the lands of" certain owners (mentioning lands of various owners as stated in the complaint), "and the lands of plaintiff"; that by said natural way and depression, all of the said waters which so accumulated on said lands were naturally conducted and carried away from the lands of plaintiff except a small amount estimated at 34 acres, and was also conducted across a portion of the lands of said Johanna F. Krenz "and there remained until absorbed by the earth or evaporated"; that by means of said natural way, said seepage and rainwaters were prevented from accumulating and remaining on, and from flooding, said lands of the plaintiff other than said 34 acres; "that on March 22, 1907, and before the construction of the obstruction hereinafter mentioned, the San Joaquin river had so risen, and rainwater had so fallen, that seepage and rainwaters naturally accumulated in, and were flowing through, said natural waterway (and were thereby being drained upon the lands of plaintiff into said natural way), and from said lands of plaintiff were naturally flowing and naturally being drained to and upon said land of said Johanna F. Krenz controlled by said Gaul"; that on said day last mentioned, defendant constructed and ever since has kept maintained upon the lands of said Johanna F. Krenz "a dam or embankment across the bed and channel of said natural waterway, of sufficient height to stop and obstruct the natural or any flow of said seepage or rainwater in or through said natural waterway, and by the said embankment and dam, so constructed, kept, and maintained by said Gaul, the natural flow from said lands of plaintiff of said seepage and rainwater, in and through said natural waterway was stopped and obstructed," and was thereby "backed up, accumulated upon, and made to overflow and cover portions of plaintiff's lands in addition to and other than said 34 acres which was naturally, usually, and ordinarily overflowed and submerged by surface waters; that on the said portions of plaintiff's lands (shown by the evidence to be about 60 acres), other than said 34 acres, there was growing at such time, and there was, a valuable stand of clean-growing oats and clean-growing wheat; that by the said overflow, the said portions of plaintiff's lands, other than said 34 acres usually submerged, was so overflowed and kept wet for such a time and to such an extent that the said crop of oats and wheat growing on said portions of land were destroyed and damaged; that such damage to said growing crops was the direct and natural result of the said acts of said defendant, Gaul; * * * that thereby the plaintiff's said growing crop was damaged and thereby plaintiff sustained and sustains loss and damage; that the amount of plaintiff's said damage is (from a practical standpoint) unascertainable from the evidence—that is to say, it is absolutely impossible for this court to determine from the evidence the amount of such damages suffered by the plaintiff—that this court can only guess at the amount of such damage; that, while the plaintiff has been damaged, since the exact amount of the damages sustained by him is not definitely shown by the evidence, his damages must be found to be nominal." Further describing the situation at that time through the acts of the defendant, it was further found "that thereby the plaintiff was caused additional expense in harvesting on his own land his said crops of hay west of said natural waterway, and he was thereby prevented from handling said crops of hay west of said natural waterway with expedition, and thereby plaintiff sustained inconvenience, damage, and discomfort; that the evidence does not show, and the court from the evidence is unable to find, the amount of such expense or damage."

Finding X is as follows:

> "That the keeping and maintenance of each of said two dams or embankments by the defendant, Gaul, across said natural waterway was and is a nuisance and obstruction to the free use by the plaintiff of, and interferes with, his said lands, and with his comfortable and profitable use and enjoyment thereof; that such obstruction and interference have been, are, and will be, continuous, continuing, and against the will of the plaintiff, and will cause the plaintiff irreparable damage and irreparable injury, unless such nuisance be abated, or modified; that it is impossible from the evidence for the court to determine what was the height of the said two dams or embankments at the time of said trial, or at the time of the submission of this said cause; that in the view by the court of said dams, the same had apparently been washed down since the trial of this action in October and November, 1909; that the map (and the levels thereon) made by Engineer Henry B. Budd (a witness herein), satisfy the court that if said dams be so cut down that their height will be less than an elevation of 24 feet on said map, a sufficient waterway will be afforded for such waters, and that said dams so reduced in height will not hold back upon the lands of plaintiff any waters which would, without the existence of said dams, find their way off over the lands of the defendant."

As conclusions of law, the court found that plaintiff was entitled to judgment that the said two dams mentioned in his complaint be abated to the extent that they be cut down below an altitude of not exceeding 24 feet above the datum plane used by the surveyor in drawing said map, to wit, defendant's Exhibit No. 8; that plaintiff is entitled to recover from the defendant nominal damages in the sum of $1 and his costs of suit, including the cost of the view of said lands by the court; that plaintiff is entitled to no other or further judgment herein. Judgment was accordingly entered

Quoting from plaintiff's reply brief, we find:

> "The appellant attacks solely: (1) That portion of finding 6 * * * reading as follows: 'That the amount of plaintiff's said damage is (from a practical standpoint) unascertainable from the evidence—that is to say, it is absolutely impossible for this court to determine from the evidence, the amount of such damages suffered by the plaintiff—that this court can only guess at the amount of such damage; that, while the plaintiff has been damaged, since the exact amount of the damages sustained by him is not definitely shown by the evidence, his damages must be found to be nominal.' (2) The last sentence of finding 7 * * * reading as follows: 'That the evidence does not show, and the court from the evidence is unable to find, the amount of such expense or damage.' (3) The implied finding that plaintiff was not (shown by the evidence to be) damaged as to 64.74 acres of hay crop and in the sum of $2,209.25."

As the defendant does not appeal, and as the foregoing presents the only objection to the findings, the controversy is reduced to the single question whether there is sufficient evidence in the record to have justified the court in making a definite finding as to the damages suffered by the plaintiff. We have carefully examined the transcript with the view of ascertaining the evidence therein found upon this point. The plaintiff testified that the dam erected by defendant caused the water to overflow about 60 acres of his land, and which "drowned and killed this grain of mine. I cut and baled the remainder of the crop from that field on each side of the road," referring to the lands adjacent to the overflowed land. He further testified:

> "From this crop that was not drowned, I obtained an average of 3½ tons per acre, or a little better. I consider the crop that was drowned was on the best land I have. It was better soil than that where the crop was not drowned for these same character of crops. That drowned, was sown and cultivated by me in the same way as the other that I harvested. It was plowed, drilled in, harrowed—best attention given—like any farmer 'putting in' grain in good shape, just the same as the other. Prior to the time this water came upon it, it looked at least 34 per cent. better to me than the balance that was not drowned. In May, if this hay had been cut and baled and hauled to the landing, it would have brought $12 to $13 a ton. To bale and cut it would probably cost about $3 a ton; hauling it from the field to the landing would have cost about two bits a ton (a quarter of a dollar)."

Again, he testified:

> "Speaking of my particular crop in 1907, that which was drowned out, was drowned out after Gaul's first dam was put in. My grain was drowned, and I got nothing from the grain that was drowned on the land. * * *"

A. C. Feck, a witness for defendant, testified:

> "We cut hay commencing in May and harvest grain later on. We never harvest in the month of March or April. I had no oat hay in 1907, and do not know the price of oat hay. Good wheat hay was worth from $10 to $12 a ton in 1907."

Defendant Gaul testified:

> "I am familiar with the average production of lands of the quality and character of plaintiff's in that neighborhood in hay. A good crop on the average under most favorable conditions is from 2½ to 3 tons per acre. We harvest hay generally in the middle of May or the latter part. The market price of hay during the market season of 1907 in that neighborhood was from $10 to $12 after it was baled."

There was no evidence of the value of the growing crop as it stood March 22, 1907. There was evidence that the land adjoining the overflowed land produced from 3 to 3½ tons of oat and wheat hay per acre; that the overflowed land was, in fact, more productive than the adjacent land; that the crop had been put in by plaintiff in a proper way and by the same method in both the overflowed land and the land adjacent. Plaintiff testified that if the hay from this overflowed land had been cut in May, and baled and hauled to the landing, it would have brought $12 per ton, less $3 for cutting and baling and 25 cents for hauling to the landing. There was no evidence as to any intervening cause between March 22d and May to affect the maturing of the crop except as caused by the further overflowing. The court found that the crop was destroyed through the acts of defendant. It also found that he was materially damaged thereby, but that the court could find no evidence in the record upon which the value of the crop destroyed could be definitely ascertained. The measure of damages in cases of this character is found in section 3333, Civil Code, reading:

> "For the breach of an obligation not arising from contract, the measure of damages, except where otherwise expressly provided by this Code, is the amount which will compensate for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, whether it could have been anticipated or not."

It was held in Smith v. Los Angeles & Pacific Railway Co., 98 Cal. 210–214, 33 Pac. 53, 54:

> "The detriment must be 'proximately caused' by the breach; that is, it must be the efficient cause, the one that necessarily sets the other causes in operation."

See Shoemaker v. Acker, 116 Cal. 239–244, 48 Pac. 62.

The findings leave no doubt that the detriment here shown was proximately caused by defendant's acts complained of.

[1] Prospective profits are allowable as damages for tort, but they must be clear, proximate, and the natural results of the wrong, and must be confined to the principal thing complained of and to its naturally attendant consequences. Martin v. Deetz, 102 Cal. 55–68, 36 Pac. 368, 41 Am. St. Rep. 151.

> "That which is the actual cause of the loss, whether operating directly, or by putting intervening agencies, the operation of which could not be reasonably avoided, in motion, by which the loss is produced, is the cause to which such loss should be attributed." Hawthorne v. Siegel, 88 Cal. 159–167, 25 Pac. 1114, 1115, (22 Am. St. Rep. 291).

The question of the measure of damages in cases of this class arose in Teller v. Bay & River Dredging Co., 151 Cal. 209, 212, 90 Pac. 942, 943 (12 L. R. A. [N. S.] 267, 12 Ann. Cas. 779). It was there stated:

> "The true measure of damage for the total destruction of a growing or standing crop is the value of the crop in the condition it was at the time and place of destruction."

While the court states that this is the unquestioned rule, the court further stated:

> "The question thus turns upon the mode of ascertaining the value of a growing crop at the time of its destruction. * * * The true rule in arriving at the value at the time of destruction is that laid down by the trial court and abundantly supported by authority"—citing Lester v. Highland Boy Gold Min. Co., 27 Utah, 470, 76 Pac. 341, 101 Am. St. Rep. 988, 1 Ann. Cas. 761, and in approval of the rule there laid down, the following is quoted from that case: 'In cases of destruction of growing crops it is proper and important to introduce and admit evidence showing the kind of crops the land is capable of producing, the kind of crops destroyed, the average yield per acre of each kind on the land not destroyed and on other similar lands in the immediate neighborhood, cultivated in like manner, the stage of growth of the crops, at the time of injury or destruction, the expense of cultivating, harvesting, and marketing the crops, and the market value at the time of maturity, or within a reasonable time after the injury or destruction of the crops. And' * * * while all such evidence may be considered by the jury in determining the amount of damages, if any, still the true measure of compensation is the value of the crops in the condition they were in at the time of their injury or destruction."

The court then cites Shoemaker v. Acker, supra, and other authorities, stating that:

> "The introduction of such evidence as the means of arriving at value is distinctly approved, and the same proposition is recognized as containing the true element for determining damage in Ellis v. Tone, 58 Cal. 289."

This question was considered to a considerable extent in this court in an opinion written by Justice Hart in Dennis v. Crocker-Huffman Land & Water Co., 6 Cal. App. 58–65, 91 Pac. 425.

[2] The detriment proximately caused by the tort in this case under the rule above stated is to be measured by the market value at plaintiff's landing on the San Joaquin river at harvest time. From the evidence already quoted, it appears without conflict that plaintiff properly seeded the land, and that the crop had reached a stage justifying the attorney for defendant to state: "We will admit that the grain was in a fine condition." There remained, therefore, to determine the cost of cutting, baling, and hauling the hay to plaintiff's landing. These items should be deducted from the market value of the hay at the landing, and the balance, after such deduction, would constitute the damages to which plaintiff was entitled.

We think there is ample evidence to have justified the court in finding as to the quantity of hay that would have been produced on the flooded land and its value at the plaintiff's landing, the market place.

We think, therefore, that the finding "that the amount of plaintiff's said damage is (from a practical standpoint) unascertainable from the evidence—that is to say, it is absolutely impossible for this court to determine from the evidence the amount of such damages suffered by the plaintiff"—is not sustained, nor is the further finding "since the exact amount of the damages sustained by him is not definitely shown by the evidence, his damages must be found to be nominal."

[3] We do not think it necessary that a new trial be ordered, as the evidence is sufficient and is uncontradicted from which findings may be made upon the question of plaintiff's damages. Riverton Ferry Co. v. Bridge Co., 179 Pa. 466-470, 36 Atl. 186.

The judgment is affirmed in all respects except that portion adjudging the plaintiff to be entitled to nominal damages only, as to which the judgment is reversed. The cause is remanded, with directions to the court to make findings on the issue of damages in accordance with the rule in this opinion stated, and upon the evidence found in the record, and to amend the judgment in accordance with such findings.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

---

35 Cal. App. 537

ALAMEDA COUNTY v. CHAMBERS, State Controller. (Civ. 1756.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 11, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 7, 1918.)

1. STATES 🔑119—APPROPRIATIONS—PUBLIC PURPOSES.

St. 1917, p. 1668, appropriating $30,000 to pay claims of various persons and counties against the state for losses sustained by fire in the state agricultural society's pavilion, is not an appropriation for public purpose.

2. AGRICULTURE 🔑5—FAIRS—AID BY STATE.

In view of St. 1880, p. 49, § 5, providing that in no event shall the state be liable for premiums awarded or debt created by the board of agriculture for the state fair, the state could have made no valid contract for an exhibit by a county at the state fair, and therefore St. 1917, p. 1668, appropriating money to compensate persons and counties for exhibits lost by fire at the fair, was invalid.

3. STATES 🔑193—TORTS—LIABILITY.

In the discharge of governmental functions, no claim arises against the state in favor of an individual by reason of misfeasance, laches, or unauthorized exercise of powers by its officers or agents.

4. STATES 🔑119—APPROPRIATIONS—GIFTS.

St. 1917, p. 1668, appropriating money to compensate persons or counties for exhibits lost at the state fair by fire, is invalid, in view of Const. art. 4, § 31, providing that the Legislature shall have no power to make any gift to any individual, municipality, or other corporation, the inclusion of individuals invalidating the act, though such an act as to counties alone might have been valid.

Mandamus by the County of Alameda against John S. Chambers, as State Controller. Demurrer to the petition sustained.

W. H. L. Hynes, Dist. Atty., of Oakland, for petitioner. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Robert T. McKisick, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

BURNETT, J. Petitioner asks for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent, as controller, to issue his warrant for the sum of $4,603.96, under the provisions of an act of the Legislature (Stats. 1917, p. 1668), which reads as follows:

> "The sum of thirty thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be proved to be due, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the state treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the claims of various persons and counties against the state of California for losses sustained by fire in the state agricultural society's pavilion at Sacramento, California, subject to the provisions of section six hundred sixty-three of the Political Code."

Section 663 of the Political Code, above referred to, provides that:

> "Every claim against the state for which an appropriation has been made or for which a state fund is available, must be presented to the board [of control] for its scrutiny before being paid."

The petition alleges that the county of Alameda is a body corporate and politic of the state, and a political subdivision thereof; that on the 3d of September, 1916, the state of California maintained in the city of Sacramento a state fair; that the county of Alameda, on said date, "was the owner of an exhibit suitable to be used for exhibition at fairs such as that maintained by said state; that said state fair was conducted by the state for the purpose of promoting the best interests and welfare of said state, and for the purpose of advertising and making known the resources and products thereof; that various counties of the state, of which the petitioner is one, for the purpose of aiding the said state in the conduct and maintenance of said fair, maintained exhibits thereat;" that, for the purposes aforesaid and at the request of the state, said county of Alameda placed its said exhibit in the charge of the state and its duly authorized officers conducting said fair, and that said exhibit was of the reasonable market value of $5,000; that on said 3d day of September, 1916, said exhibit was completely destroyed by fire; that it was negligently housed by the state and was permitted to be kept "in a building temporarily constructed of canvas and other imflammable material, not suitable or safe for the housing of such an exhibit." It is then alleged that on August 11, 1917, after scrutiny by the board of control, said claim was allowed and approved by said board for the sum of $4,603.96, and was sent to the respondent for the purpose of having him draw his warrant for said sum, which respondent has refused to do.

Respondent filed an answer denying specifically all the allegations of the petition above set forth, except that petitioner is a body corporate and politic. It is then alleged in the answer that petitioner "did, through its authorized officers, and prior to the 3d day of September, 1916, hire of and rent from the state of California a certain space in a building belonging to said state upon the state fair grounds, for the purpose of placing in said building * * * an exhibit for the purpose of advertising the products and resources of said county of Alameda, and that said county paid to said state for said exhibit space so rented a valuable consideration;" that petitioner placed said exhibit in said building in charge of its duly authorized agents, and that the building was properly constructed; that the fire referred to was not due to the fault of the state or any of its officers.

There is also an allegation in the answer that the petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, or to entitle petitioner to the relief prayed for.

The respondent declined to issue his warrant for the sum found by the board of control to be due petitioner on account of said loss, on the ground that the claim was repugnant to the provisions of section 31, article 4 of the Constitution, providing that:

> "The Legislature shall have no power * * * to make any gift, or authorize the making of any gift, or any public money or thing of value to any individual, municipal or other corporation whatever."

The position taken by petitioner in support of his contention that the writ should issue is (1) that the act is constitutional on its face, and therefore must be upheld, the court not being allowed to examine into extraneous questions of fact; (2) that the act does not make a gift within the constitutional inhibition but is an appropriation for a public purpose; and (3) that, conceding that the legislation in question does make a gift as that term is used in section 31 of article 4 of the Constitution, still the county is not a "corporation" as that term is used in said section.

In support of the contention that the act is constitutional on its face, petitioner cites Stevenson v. Colgan, 91 Cal. 649, 27 Pac. 1089, 14 L. R. A. 459, 25 Am. St. Rep. 230, and Rankin v. Colgan, 92 Cal. 606, 28 Pac. 673. Both of these cases occurred before 1893, in which year the Legislature passed an act permitting persons to sue the state for negligence, where their claims had been denied by the board of examiners. Stats. 1893, p. 57.

In Stevenson v. Colgan, the act in question provided:

> "The sum of $125 per month, payable monthly, for the period of 21 months, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the state treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the relief of Colonel Jonathan D. Stevenson; provided, however, that said appropriation shall cease upon the death of said Stevenson, if he shall die before said period has elapsed; the sums paid under the provisions of this act to be accepted by the said Stevenson in full payment and satisfaction of all claims of every kind and nature that he may have, or claim to have, against said state for services, or otherwise."

It was objected by the controller that as a matter of fact Stevenson had no claim against the state. The court held that the act was constitutional on its face, saying among other things:

> "The act in question does not show upon its face the nature of the claim which the petitioner made against the state."

In Rankin v. Colgan the act in question read:

> "The sum of $250 is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the state treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay James W. Rankin for services in the state treasurer's office during the period elapsing from November 13, 1884, to December 15, 1884, both dates inclusive, under appointment by Governor George Stoneman, on account of the delinquencies of Arthur January, deputy state treasurer."

The court relied on the Stevenson Case, saying, inter alia:

> "The nature of the services rendered under and by virtue of his appointment by Governor Stoneman does not appear."

[1] The foregoing cases would be in point and conclusive of the controversy here were it not for the recital in the appropriation of the purpose for which it was made, namely, "to pay the claims of various persons and counties against the state of California for losses sustained by fire in the state agricultural society's pavilion." In other words, if the act had simply provided that "the sum of $30,000 or so much thereof as may be proved to be due is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the state treasury not otherwise appropriated to pay the claims of various persons and counties [enumerating them] against the state of California, subject to the provisions of section 663 of the Political Code," there would be an end to the inquiry after the board of control had allowed the claim of such person or county, and this for the reason stated in the Stevenson Case; but since the Legislature has seen fit to declare the nature of the claim, we are compelled to inquire whether it may be legally regarded as the basis of a debt or obligation on the part of the state. That it is an appropriation for a public purpose can hardly be successfully asserted. It provides for compensation for the loss of property, and manifestly the destruction of property does not contribute to the promotion of the public interest. The cases cited by petitioner as to this point are essentially different, as is readily apparent. In Daggett v. Colgan, 92 Cal. 53, 28 Pac. 51, 14 L. R. A. 474, 117 Am. St. Rep. 95, an act appropriating $300,000 for the purpose of erecting a building and exhibiting the state's products at the Chicago fair was attacked. It was held, however, that the appropriation was for a public purpose and for the promotion of the public welfare, the court, among other things, saying:

> "There is no difference, except in degree, between the appropriation contained in this act and those which for years have been made without any question as to their validity, for the support of the state agricultural fair, and the various district agricultural societies throughout the state."

The justification for such expenditure was based upon the proposition that the state has the general power to provide for the public welfare, "the limits of which are perhaps not capable of exact definition."

So in Board of Directors v. Nye, 8 Cal. App. 527, 97 Pac. 208, an appropriation for the relief and support of the Women's Relief Corps Association was upheld on substantially the same ground, it being clearly pointed out that the association constituted a state institution engaged in an important and patriotic public purpose.

The same principle is expounded and applied in the County of Sacramento v. Chambers, 164 Pac. 613, wherein was involved an appropriation by the state in aid of work for the relief of tuberculosis carried on by counties under the direction of the state authorities.

[2] If the appropriation here had been made for the purpose of paying expenses incurred in connection with the undertaking of making an exhibit of the state's resources, it could be said undoubtedly that it was for a public purpose, but that situation is not presented, at least not directly so.

But may we not assume that this appropriation was in recognition of an obligation of the state connected with and growing out of the promotion of such public purpose? In other words, may we not hold that the state may have made a contract with the county of Alameda to place said exhibits in the custody of the former in furtherance of the purposes of the state fair, and therefore became liable as bailee for the safekeeping of said property? If so, the case would fall under the rule announced in Chapman v. State, 104 Cal. 690, 38 Pac. 457, 43 Am. St. Rep. 158, wherein it was held that:

> "A cause of action for damages for the loss of coal received at a public wharf, under the jurisdiction of the state harbor commissioners, in consideration of wharfage and dockage paid to them, and which was agreed to be delivered on such wharf for removal therefrom, and which was lost by the breaking away of the wharf, through neglect of the harbor commissioners to keep the wharf in repair, is grounded in breach of contract, and not merely upon the negligence of the harbor commissioners; and the state is liable for the loss of the coal."

The decision was grounded upon the principle that a state is bound by the same rules as an individual in measuring its liability on a contract, and to that effect a quotation was made with approval from People v. Stephens, 71 N. Y. 549. The rule, though, necessarily presupposes a valid contract with the state. Melvin v. State, 121 Cal. 16, 53 Pac. 416. But the trouble with the supposition in the case here is that the state cannot make such contracts, and that it is not liable for any debts contracted in reference to the exhibits at the state fair. Section 5 of "An act to provide for the management and control of the state agricultural society of the state" (Stats. of 1880, p. 49) provides:

> "The state board of agriculture shall be charged with the exclusive management and control of the state agricultural society as a state institution; shall have possession and care of its property, and be intrusted with the direction of its entire business and financial affairs. * * * They shall provide for an annual fair or exhibition by the society of all the industries and industrial products of the state, at the city of Sacramento; provided that in no event shall the state be liable for any premium awarded or debt created by said board of agriculture."

It is thus to be seen that all such contracts must be made by said board, and that the state incurs no liability therefrom. The act was under consideration in the Melvin Case, supra, and it was held that said proviso "is to be construed as intended to hold the state free from liability for the obligations which the state board of agriculture might incur, calling directly or indirectly for the payment of money." The state, therefore, could not have incurred any liability for such exhibits by virtue of any contract, and hence no action could be maintained for damages for the violation of such contract.

[3] The question remains whether the state could be liable for a tort. As to this, in the Melvin Case, it is said:

> "The states are not suable except with their own consent. * * * No claim arises against any government in favor of an individual, by reason of the misfeasance, laches, or unauthorized exercise of powers by its officers or agents."

This is true, at least in the discharge of governmental functions, although the rule may be different where the government is exercising some proprietary right.

It has been furthermore decided that no additional right was conferred by the act of February 28, 1893, entitled "An act to authorize suits against the state, and regulating the procedure therein." This act has been regarded as simply affording a remedy where the corresponding right already exists. It is so held in Melvin v. State, supra.

In Molineaux v. State, 109 Cal. 378, 42 Pac. 34, 50 Am. St. Rep. 49, the effect of this act was considered as to its bearing upon the liability of the state to pay additional interest upon its war bonds. It was said:

> "Inasmuch as prior to the passage of the act there was no liability for interest on the part of the state, it was not competent for the Legislature to create such liability by the passage of the act."

To the same effect is Davis v. State, 121 Cal. 210, 53 Pac. 555, wherein it was said:

> "The act is a mere waiver within certain bounds of the state's sovereign prerogative not to be sued."

In Denning v. State, 123 Cal. 316, 55 Pac. 1000, it was declared that this act—

> "did not create any liability or cause of action against the state where none existed before, but merely gave an additional remedy to enforce such liability as would have existed if the statute had not been enacted."

That decision is also very instructive as to the question whether the state is liable for the tort of its officers. The plaintiff therein was employed by the board of harbor commissioners as a night deckhand upon its tugboat belonging to the state and used by said board. While engaged in said employment, plaintiff was injured, through the negligence, as he claimed, of the state acting by said harbor commissioners. It was conceded by the plaintiff that an action would not lie against the state for injuries caused by the negligence of its officers or agents in the discharge of a purely governmental duty, but it was claimed that the defendant was engaged in the discharge of a purely business function, and therefore it was liable for negligence. This phase of the subject was carefully considered, and the conclusion reached that while certain duties performed by said board would indicate a business for profit, the particular branch of the service in which the plaintiff was engaged, namely, the protection against or extinguishment of fires, constituted the exercise of a purely governmental function. As to this matter, it would seem no doubt could exist that anything done by the state as to the exhibits at the state fair must necessarily relate to the general public welfare and could not in any just sense be regarded as an act for the promotion of business for profit.

The said act of 1893 is also referred to in County of San Luis Obispo v. Gage, 139 Cal. 398, 73 Pac. 174, and Bickerdike v. State, 144 Cal. 681, 78 Pac. 270, but neither has any relation to the point herein involved.

In Union Trust Co. v. State of Calfornia, 154 Cal. 716, 99 Pac. 183, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1111, the question involved was as to the liability of the state for the payment of certain "Montgomery Avenue bonds," and it was held that the officers whose duty it was to levy and collect the assessments necessary to discharge the bonds were agents of the state and were charged with governmental functions, and that the state was not liable for their negligence since they were engaged in discharging ordinary official duties pertaining to the administration of the government of the state.

The most recent decision of the Supreme Court involving a consideration of the difference between a private or proprietary and a governmental capacity in which a municipality or state may exercise its functions is Chafor v. City of Long Beach (Sup.) 163 Pac. 670. Therein it was held that a city in constructing and maintaining an auditorium was acting in its proprietary capacity, and was liable for damages to plaintiff caused by the negligent maintenance of the structure. That case is manifestly different from this in the nature of the enterprise and in the circumstance that it affected a municipality instead of the state.

We think it must be held that the appropriation is one based upon an implied liability that cannot legally exist either by virtue of a contract or by reason of the negligence of the officers of the state, since the tort if committed related to a governmental function instead of a proprietary business. It would seem therefore that the appropriation not being based upon any legal liability constitutes a gift within the contemplation of said constitutional provision, and cannot be maintained.

[4] There remains the other proposition that the county is but an agency of the state and not a "corporation" as the term is used in said section 31, article 4, of the Constitution. Hence it is contended that the inhibition against a "gift" does not apply to petitioner. The character of a county as an entity has been carefully considered in some of the cases cited herein, especially in County of Sacramento v. Chambers, supra, but the point, if well taken, cannot save the situation. The appropriation is of one lump sum for individuals and for counties, and it is quite apparent that the Legislature intended to treat such claims upon the same basis. There was no appropriation of a specific amount for the claims of individuals and a distinct appropriation for the counties. Upon the assumption, therefore, that the indivisible part of the appropriation for the claims of counties may be regarded as legal, it is impossible to determine what that portion is; in other words, how much or what portion of the act is valid and what invalid. They are so inseparably connected that the unconstitutional character of the appropriation for individuals permeates and vitiates the whole act. If it be not so, it would be difficult to conceive of a case for the application of the familiar rule for considering an act as an entirety where it was manifestly the intention of the Legislature to so regard it.

It is believed that the appropriation cannot stand, and the demurrer is therefore sustained and the order to show cause discharged.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

35 Cal. App. 630

MUSHET v. DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SERVICE OF CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al. (Civ. 2445.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 17, 1917.)

1. PLEADING ⟹350(3) — JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS—ANSWER TAKEN AS TRUE.

An answer to the petition must be taken as true upon motion by plaintiff for judgment on the pleadings, and to grant the motion is error if the answer states a defense.

2. MANDAMUS ⟹23(1)—MUNICIPAL OFFICERS — INSPECTION OF BOOKS AND RECORDS — PARTY BENEFICIALLY INTERESTED.

In an action to compel officers of the city of Los Angeles to allow petitioner to inspect books and records, an answer stating that the petitioner is not the party beneficially interested, but seeks information for an electric company competing with the city, held to state a defense under Code Civ. Proc. § 1086, providing that writ of mandate "must be issued upon a verified petition of the party beneficially interested."

3. MANDAMUS ⟹23(1)—PARTY BENEFICIALLY INTERESTED.

The right of a private corporation to examine the books of the city through the petitioner as its agent can be determined only at the suit of the corporation itself.

4. RECORDS 🔑14 — MUNICIPAL — RIGHT OF INSPECTION—"OFFICIAL DOCUMENT."

The books of the city of Los Angeles relating to its electric system are not "official documents" within Civ. Code Proc. §§ 1888, 1894, providing for inspection of public records, but are the city's private property belonging to its business as a private "public utility corporation."

5. CORPORATIONS 🔑181(1)—RECORDS—RIGHT OF STOCKHOLDER TO INSPECT.

The right of a stockholder of an ordinary corporation to inspect its books existed at common law as an incident to his interest in the corporate enterprise.

6. RECORDS 🔑14 — RIGHT OF CITIZENS TO INSPECT.

At common law every interested person was entitled to the inspection of public records, including those of municipal corporations.

7. RECORDS 🔑14 — INSPECTION OF CITY'S PRIVATE RECORDS—RIGHTS OF CITIZENS.

A citizen has the right to inspect the books of the city of Los Angeles relating to its private business of owning and operating an electric plant as a public utility to the same extent a stockholder can inspect the books of a private corporation or a citizen can inspect public records.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Proceedings in mandamus by W. C. Mushet against the Department of Public Service of the City of Los Angeles, a municipal corporation, and others. Judgment on the pleadings for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed, with directions.

Albert Lee Stephens, City Atty., W. B. Mathews, Lewis E. Whitehead and Wm. B. Himrod, all of Los Angeles, for appellants. Delphin M. Delmas, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, Judge pro tem. This action was commenced for the purpose of compelling appellants, by writ of mandate, to allow respondent to inspect and examine certain of the books of account, records, papers, and documents kept by appellants, under the claim that the same are public records. The petition for the writ alleges that respondent is a resident, citizen, and taxpayer of the city of Los Angeles, to the affairs of which the duties of appellants relate. The appellants answered the petition, and the respondent made a motion for judgment on the pleadings, which was granted, and judgment was rendered accordingly. It is from the judgment that the appeal is prosecuted.

[1] In ruling upon the motion for judgment on the pleadings, the trial judge took the allegations of the answer as true (Bradford Investment Co. v. Joost, 117 Cal. 204, 211, 48 Pac. 1083), and the points presented on this appeal turn on the question as to whether the answer states a defense. If it does, the motion for judgment on the pleadings was improperly granted.

[2] The answer specifically denies an allegation of the petition that petitioner "brings this action on behalf of himself and other citizens and taxpayers of the city of Los Angeles similarly situated." It is alleged affirmatively, in the answer, that appellants are managing and controlling an electric system which the city is constructing for the purpose of generating, transmitting, and distributing heat, light, and power, and that certain parts of the system are already completed and in beneficial operation; that the Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corporation is in the same kind of business, and is a competitor of the city in the business; and that it is and has been the policy of the Gas & Electric Corporation to ascertain the plans of the city for extending its electric system, and to anticipate the construction of such extensions by the municipality by installing its own lines in territory proposed to be occupied by the city, and thus prevent the city from securing or serving additional customers desired by it. The answer then proceeds:

> "That defendants are informed and believe, and therefore allege, that said Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corporation is the party beneficially interested in the bringing and prosecution of this proceeding, and that said W. C. Mushet, petitioner herein, is seeking, by means of this proceeding, to gain access to the records, books, papers, memoranda, and data concerning the municipal electric project of the city of Los Angeles, and mentioned in the petition herein, for the use and benefit of said Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corporation, in connection with the operation and extension of its own electric system in competition with the electric system of said city."

The Code of Civil Procedure provides (section 1086) that the writ of mandate "must be issued upon the verified petition of the party beneficially interested," and it has been held frequently that it will alone issue upon the petition of such party. People v. Pacheco, 29 Cal. 210; Fritts v. Charles, 145 Cal. 512, 78 Pac. 1057.

[3] The allegations of the answer show that the Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corporation is the party beneficially interested in this action, in that they show that Mushet desires to examine the records of appellants in a search for information for that corporation, and not for himself. If the corporation is entitled to examine the records, it can, of course, do so through Mushet as its agent; but whether Mushet, as its agent, may make the examination cannot be determined at his suit, but only at the suit of the principal, the corporation itself.

Our views upon this question necessitate a reversal of the judgment, but, as the action must now go to trial, it becomes incumbent upon us to pass upon other allegations of the answer which the trial court held insufficient in granting the motion for judgment on the pleadings. Let us, however, first briefly mention a claim of the appellants which we do not deem it necessary, or even proper, now to pass upon, for the reason that, considering what we have said above, it cannot again arise in the present action. The appellants contend that they cannot be compelled to open to a business competitor the books and records under their charge. If, after hearing the evidence upon the issue as to the beneficial interest of the Gas & Electric Corporation in the litigation, the trial court shall determine that such interest is actually in the corporation, and not in the petitioner, the action fails. If, on the other hand, the court shall resolve that question against the contention of the appellants and hold that Mushet is proceeding in his own right as a principal, the question as to the opening of the books to a business competitor cannot arise, for the reason that Mushet is not a competitor of the city.

[4] The appellants contend that the records, an examination of which is now sought, are not public records or writings subject to the inspection of either Mushet or the Gas & Electric Corporation, but that they are the private property of the city of Los Angeles. There are several sections of the Codes of this state which provide that citizens are entitled to an inspection and, upon demand, to certified copies, of public writings, and to these sections we are referred; but there seem to be but two sections which define, or determine what are, public writings. Section 1894 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

> "Public writings are divided into four classes: 1. Laws; 2. Judicial records; 3. Other official documents; 4. Public records, kept in this state, of private writings."

Section 1888 of the same Code follows:

> "Public writings are: 1. The written acts or records of the acts of the sovereign authority, of official bodies and tribunals, and of public officers, legislative, judicial and executive, whether of this state, of the United States, of a sister state, or of a foreign country; 2. Public records, kept in this state, of private writings."

The books and papers which the petitioner seeks to examine, by means of this proceeding, are described in his petition as "all books of account, records, papers, and other documents and kept by the department of public service of the city of Los Angeles which would in any manner explain the items of expenditure, and for what the same were expended, by or under the authority of the board of public service commissioners, or otherwise, of any and all sums of money expended, or ordered or authorized to be expended, by said board of public service commissioners, or said department of public service, or either of them, from either of" two funds mentioned elsewhere in the petition as arising from certain bond elections in the city of Los Angeles, expenditures from which funds were under the control of appellants, and which expenditures were to have been made for the acquisition and construction of works for generating and distributing electricity for the inhabitants of the city. Returning to the language of sections 1894 and 1888 of the Code, it is plain that the books and papers mentioned in the petition are not described in either subdivisions 1, 2, or 4 of section 1894, or subdivision 2 of section 1888. If the sections cover them at all they must fall within the language of the one remaining subdivision of each; in other words, consolidating the language of those subdivisions, they must answer this description: They must be "official documents" other than laws or judicial records, and must be "the written acts or records of the acts * * * of official bodies" or "tribunals" or "of public officers, * * * of this state."

Leaving aside the question, as to which there might be some debate, whether the books and papers in question are written acts or records of acts, as those terms are used in the statute, we take up the question whether they are official documents. It is conceded by counsel for respondent, and the authorities are plainly to the effect, that, in handling the affairs to which these books and papers relate, the appellants are engaged in a private business of the city of Los Angeles. Marin Water & Power Co. v. Town of Sausalito, 168 Cal. 587, 595, 143 Pac. 767. In making the concession mentioned, counsel for respondent says:

> "I agree, of course, that, when engaged in 'the installation and operation of the municipal electric system,' the city is neither more nor less than a 'private public utility corporation.' It is, in other words, an electric corporation, and nothing more. Of the city of New York, when similarly engaged in the installation and operation of its municipal subway, the Court of Appeals said: 'The city owns the subway, and it is a railroad corporation, so far as the construction, operation, and leasing thereof is concerned. * * * In other words, the subway is a business enterprise of the city, through which money may be made or lost, the same as if it were owned by an ordinary railroad corporation. It was built by and belongs to the city as a proprietor, not as a sovereign.' In re Board of Rapid Transit Commissioners, 197 N. Y. 81, 90 N. E. 456 [36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 647, 18 Ann. Cas. 366]."

This is a fair statement of the law on the subject. The appellants contend that the books of account and the records, papers, and documents pertaining to expenditures made in connection with a business such as is described in the quotation just made from the New York decision cannot, in any sense, be viewed as public documents. It is contended that, as all of the properties and instrumentalities used in the conduct of the business are the private property of the city, the books of account, showing the conduct of the business by means of those instrumentalities, must also be its private property. This would seem to be a just estimate of the situation. At any rate, we are convinced that the books and papers in question are not public documents, as that term is used in the sections of the Code now under review. The appellants, it is true, are by the charter of Los Angeles made officers of the municipality; but the books and papers which respondent seeks to examine are not made official documents merely because they are kept under the direction of city officials. Their character is fixed by the considerations which we have already advanced.

[5-7] The respondent asserts that he occupies the same relation to the appellants and to the business conducted by them as a stockholder of an ordinary public utility corporation occupies toward such corporation. He argues that because the stockholder is entitled to access to the books and papers of his corporation, he, the respondent, is likewise entitled to access to the books and papers kept by appellants. The right of the stockholder of an ordinary corporation to open the books of his corporation is a right which existed at common law as an incident to his interest in the corporate enterprise. Hobbs v. Tom Reed Gold Min. Co., 164 Cal. 497, 501, 129 Pac. 781, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1112. Before we proceed to consider the point made by respondent, let us state another rule of law, the appositeness of which does not now appear, but will immediately be shown to exist. At common law every interested person was entitled to the inspection of public records. 24 Am. & Eng. Ency. 182; People v. Cornell, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 329; Brewer v. Watson, 71 Ala. 299, 46 Am. Rep. 318; State v. King, 154 Ind. 621, 57 N. E. 535; Clement v. Graham, 78 Vt. 290, 63 Atl. 146. Respondent invokes an analogy, in the matter of the right to inspect records, between the situation of a stockholder with reference to his corporation and the situation of respondent himself with relation to the appellants, and an analogy may also be claimed under the rule of the common law last stated. That analogy is between the situation of a citizen as to public records which he has not the right by statute to inspect and the situation, again, of respondent with relation to the books and papers of appellants. The principle behind the rule of the common law to the effect that a stockholder of an ordinary corporation has an inherent right to inspect the corporate books and papers also demands the extension of the same right to respondent in connection with the books and papers of appellants. The reason for the rule is the same in each case. In Hobbs v. Tom Reed Gold Min. Co., supra, the court said, at page 501 of 164 Cal., at page 782 of 129 Pac. (43 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1112), of the right of a stockholder of a corporation to inspect the corporate books:

> "The reasoning on which this rule is founded is that a stockholder has an interest in the assets and business of the corporation, and that such inspection may be necessary or proper for the protection of his interest or for his information as to the condition of the corporation and the value of his interests therein."

Likewise, the rule of the common law that an interested person may examine public records would seem, on principle, to apply to the right of respondent to examine the books and papers kept by appellants—although we have held that, strictly speaking, they are not public records—because the reason for the right is the same in both cases. In State v. King, supra, which was a controversy over the attempt of a citizen to enforce the right to inspect certain records, the Supreme Court of Indiana said:

> "Aside from the statute to which we have referred, we are of the opinion that the relator, under the facts presented by his petition, has shown such an interest in the matters to which the records and papers in the offices of the auditor and treasurer of his county relate as would entitle him to a general inspection thereof for the purpose which he has in view. These public records are the property of the county, and are not the property of the officer in whose custody they have been placed. The latter is but the mere custodian thereof. It is his imperative duty to keep them safe for the use and benefit of the office to which they belong, and also for the use and benefit of the public. * * * A county may be said to be an involuntary public corporation, organized by the state as an instrumentality in the furtherance of its government. The people residing therein are virtually the corporators. As taxpayers they contribute to the public revenue, and as voters they select the public officials who are to administer the county's affairs. Surely, under such circumstances, they retain or have a great interest in the proper management of the business and matters pertaining to their county, and therefore are entitled to know whether the public officials whom they have selected to represent them have properly used, disbursed, and accounted for the public funds which, under the law, have been confided to their custody and administration. The various county officials, in a political sense, are considered as the agents of the people in managing and conducting the business of the county. These officials are commonly denominated—and properly so—'public servants' and are directly responsible to the people who select them for the honest and faithful discharge of the duties and powers with which, under the law, they are invested. Under such conditions and circumstances, as they exist under the peculiar structure or genius of our government, it would certainly be a harsh interpretation of our laws, and one which would be, in our opinion, adverse to sound reason, to deny any taxpayer or citizen the right, subject to the reasonable rules and regulations previously mentioned, to inspect or examine the public records of his county in order to discover or ascertain whether the public officers had properly administered the funds of the county to which such taxpayer had been required to contribute. In fact there can be no sound reason advanced for depriving a citizen of this right; for it is evident that the exercise thereof, for the purpose in view in this case, will serve as a check upon dishonest public officials, and will in many respects conduce to the betterment of the public service."

In short, the analogy claimed by respondent is perfect. Reason requires the application of both of the stated rules of the common law to his relationship to the books and papers kept by appellants. Therefore, as the public ownership of utilities did not come into any considerable vogue in the British Isles until about 1835 (Dillon's Mun. Corp. [5th Ed.] § 1292), a time long after the promulgation of the two rules of the common law to which we have so often referred, we see, in the situation now before us, a new condition of affairs, uncontemplated at the time those rules sprang into being, but to which they must be held to have a distinct application. We have no doubt of our right to make this application. The rules of the common law will be applied to those cases which come within their reason and equity, even when such cases seem to be outside the strict letter of such rules as they are ordinarily stated. The terminology employed in the enunciation of the principles of the common law had its rise in conditions existing at the time of such enunciation. As new situations are discovered, strict terminology will be relaxed, and it will be determined, accordingly, that such situations either do or do not come within the rules, as their true spirit and equity may direct and require. These statements find general support in Katz v. Walkinshaw, 141 Cal. 116, 123, 70 Pac. 663, 74 Pac. 766, 64 L. R. A. 236, 99 Am. St. Rep. 35; San Joaquin & Kings River Co. v. Fresno Flume Co., 158 Cal. 626, 629, 112 Pac. 182, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 832; Martin v. Superior Court, 168 Pac. 135, decided October 11, 1917. If it shall appear to the trial court upon the hearing of evidence under the issues presented by the pleadings, that the respondent is not acting for the Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corporation, but upon his own interest as a citizen, then application will be made of the rules of the common law to which we have adverted.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to deny the motion for judgment on the pleadings.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

35 Cal. App. 589

GALLWEY v. CASTELHUN. (Civ. 2170.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 14, 1917.)

1. Bills and Notes 🔑534—Actions—Attorney's Fee.

Allowance of $50 attorney's fee, on collection of note for $300 by suit in which considerable time was consumed trying the issue as to partial payment, was not excessive; the allowance of attorney's fees being within the discretion of the court.

2. Pleading 🔑398—Variance—Effect.

Where a defendant is misled to such an extent as to be unable properly to combat the charges of plaintiff, a variance between the proof and pleadings is fatal to the right of recovery.

3. Pleading 🔑424—Bill of Particulars—Objection to.

Where plaintiff sued on a note and to recover a balance on a mutual open and current account for moneys advanced and loaned, and a bill of particulars was furnished, showing that the second item was a charge for commissions on a real estate trade, the variance was not fatal in the absence of motion for an order excluding evidence as to such item and in the absence of objection on the trial thereto.

4. Account Stated 🔑3 — What Constitutes.

One essential of an account stated being a previous indebtedness, where the parties agreed to exchange property and that the rents, taxes, and interest should be adjusted pro rata as of the date when the transaction was consummated by the exchange of deeds, there was no account stated as to the rents, taxes, and interest, until the adjustment was made.

5. Contracts 🔑34—Execution—Parties.

A written agreement which consisted of a letter from defendant to a third person, authorizing it to act as his agent in exchanging property, and a letter by another company to an individual employed by the agency accepting a proposal of exchange, constituted a contract between the acceptor and the defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by K. Gallwey against F. C. Castelhun. Judgment for plaintiff, and order denying motion for new trial, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. J. Castelhun, of San Francisco, for appellant. Gerald C. Halsey, of San Francisco (C. Harold Caulfield, of counsel), for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This is an appeal from the judgment in favor of plaintiff and from the order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial.

The complaint contained three counts, the first being upon a promissory note for $300 executed by defendant on the 27th day of April, 1914, to Eberhardt Estate Company and by it indorsed to J. W. Wright & Co. and by the latter indorsed to plaintiff. The second count is to recover a balance of $213.95 alleged to be due upon a mutual open and current account for moneys advanced and loaned to the defendant. The third count is on a written contract, in which it was agreed that all rent, taxes, interest, etc., on the respective properties to be exchanged were to be adjusted pro rata as of the date of exchanging of deeds. The third count then alleged that the exchange of properties was consummated on April 28, 1913, and that at the special instance and request of defendant, and pursuant to the said written agreement, defendant became indebted to said Shafter Realty Company in the sum of $287.08 as a balance due upon a mutual open and current account. Then the assignment of the indebtedness to plaintiff is pleaded.

In answer to the first count the defendant set forth two defenses to the note, viz.: (1) That the note was given in full satisfaction of the claim sued on in the second count; and (2) that the defendant should have been given credit for four payments of $50 each on account of the note. Upon this phase of the case the evidence is conflicting and therefore we need not further consider the contention that the trial court's finding concerning the payments made upon the note is contrary to the evidence.

[1] The court below found that plaintiff had employed an attorney to collect the note, and allowed $50 as a reasonable fee for the services of the attorney in collecting the note. Defendant objects to the allowance as grossly excessive. The objection is without merit. While the execution of the note was admitted, the payments were disputed, and considerable time was consumed in trying the issue concerning these payments, and the amount to be allowed as attorney's fees being within the discretion of the court, obviously therefore the allowance of $50 as an attorney's fee was not unreasonable or excessive.

Defendant contends that an item of $400 sued for in the second count of the complaint should not have been rendered in the judgment, because it was shown to be not "money advanced" or "money loaned," but is, as alleged in the bill of particulars, a charge of $400 against the defendant for commissions upon a trade effected between the defendant and the Shafter Realty Company. In other words, defendant, it is claimed, is charged $400, not for money advanced to him nor for moneys loaned to him as pleaded, but for services rendered, and therefore there is a fatal variance between the allegations of the complaint and the proof.

[2, 3] Of course, where a defendant is misled to such an extent as to be unable to properly combat the charges of the plaintiff, a variance between the proof and the pleadings is fatal to plaintiff's right to recover. Nichols v. Randall, 136 Cal. 426, 69 Pac. 26. But in the case at bar defendant could not have been surprised or misled by the proof of this item of $400 because he demanded and received a bill of particulars in which that very item was set forth and labeled. The account and its various items, including this disputed one, was admitted in evidence without objection, and at no time during the trial did counsel for defendant object to its allowance, but in fact he himself introduced the bill of particulars in evidence. When a party receiving a bill of particulars, which is for any reason objectionable, proposes to object to the introduction of evidence thereunder, he may not wait until the trial, but previous to the trial must move for and obtain an order excluding the evidence. Conner v. Hutchinson, 17 Cal. 279; McCarthy v. Mt. Tecarte Land Co., 110 Cal. 687, 43 Pac. 391. No objection having been made to the introduction of the bill of particulars and no objection having been made at the trial of the cause to this item of $400, and defendant having been made aware of the same by the bill of particulars, he will not now be heard to complain.

[4] The third count is on a written contract to which the defendant pleads the statute of limitations, upon the theory that said count is one on an account stated. He argues that the bill of particulars states and shows that there was an adjustment between the parties, and that this adjustment constituted a stated account.

There was no account stated between the parties. One of the essentials of an account stated is a previous indebtedness. 1 R. C. L. p. 208. In the present case the items claimed to constitute an account stated were items arising out of a transaction wherein, as previously stated, two pieces of property were to be exchanged, and, pursuant to the exchange agreement, those items, namely, the rents, taxes, interest, etc., on the respective properties to be exchanged were to be adjusted pro rata as of the date when the transaction was consummated by the exchange of the deeds, and therefore until that time arrived there was no indebtedness.

[5] Defendant argues that the agreement admitted in evidence was not between the Shafter Realty Company and the defendant, but between the defendant and the J. W. Wright Company. The written agreement in question consisted of a letter from Castelhun to J. W. Wright & Co. authorizing it to act as the agent of Castelhun in the proposal of exchange of certain property, stating the terms and conditions, and a letter by the Shafter Realty Company to George Bew, accepting the proposal of exchange. It appears from the record that George Bew was a salesman for J. W. Wright & Co. and was also acting for the Shafter Realty Company in the negotiations between the Shafter Realty Company and Mr. Castelhun. The court found, and the evidence shows, that this written agreement was between the Shafter Realty Company and the defendant.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; RICHARDS, J.

35 Cal. App. 646

BROAD v. BROAD. (Civ. 1780.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 19, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 14, 1918.)

1. DIVORCE 🔑231 — ALLOWANCE FOR SUPPORT—DENIAL OF DIVORCE.

Civ. Code, § 136, providing that a husband may be required to support his wife although she be denied a divorce, authorizes a support allowance, while the parties are separated.

2. DIVORCE 🔑237 — DENIAL OF DIVORCE—ALLOWANCE FOR SUPPORT.

A support allowance under Civ. Code, § 136, authorizing such allowances though divorce be denied, held justified, where the husband had manifested his preference for the society of other women, etc., although the parties were separated and each had been denied a divorce.

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Edgar T. Zook, Judge.

Divorce action by Harriet F. Broad against Alfred F. Broad. From a judgment requiring defendant to pay a maintenance allowance, he appeals. Affirmed.

A. J. Treat and W. B. Kollmyer, both of San Francisco, for appellant. O'Gara & De Martini, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in a divorce proceeding requiring the defendant to pay plaintiff monthly a certain sum of money as maintenance in an action in which each of the parties sought a divorce from the other on the ground of extreme cruelty, but which was denied both parties.

The sole question presented by the record is whether or not in the exercise of its sound discretion, under section 136 of the Civil Code, a court may, in an action wherein it finds that the wife is not entitled to a divorce, and she is living apart from her husband, make a decree that she be supported by him while such separation exists.

If a husband be guilty of conduct constituting any of the five grounds for divorce enumerated in section 92 of the Civil Code, his wife may institute an action for divorce, and in such action she may be awarded alimony; or, being entitled to a divorce, she may choose not to apply therefor, but may institute an action for permanent support (Civ. Code, § 137); or, in a divorce proceeding, although the divorce be denied, the court may provide for the maintenance by the husband of the wife and children of the marriage, or any of them (Civ. Code, § 136).

[1] Under the language of these sections it appears that in a proceeding for divorce or maintenance the wife, if entitled to a divorce, may be awarded permanent alimony; and on the other hand, even if a divorce be denied, still in the discretion of the trial court, if sound reason exist therefor, the husband may be compelled to provide for the support of his wife. Conditions may be such as not to entitle the wife to apply for a divorce, and yet the circumstances surrounding her marital life might be such as to render it obviously unjust to deny her all relief. Such, we think, might be the case where the wife was compelled to leave her home because of torment or insult suffered from her husband's relations living with them; or, if the husband had been guilty of all the grounds of divorce described in section 92 of the Civil Code except desertion, and upon a recriminatory plea in defense it was found that the wife had deserted him, and therefore could not be granted a divorce, the court could hardly send her back to live with her husband; and it would seem that under section 136, Civil Code, it might compel the husband to provide for her. Sweasey v. Sweasey, 126 Cal. 123, 128, 58 Pac. 456. We need not, however, rely upon imaginary cases for the application of this principle. In the case of Hagle v. Hagle, 68 Cal. 588, 9 Pac. 842, the court found that while the defendant was not guilty of anything amounting to legal cruelty, nevertheless his conduct as a husband was cold, harsh, and disagreeable, making it unpleasant for the plaintiff to live with him, but that her conduct was not free from blame, and that the marriage was unhappy from the beginning. Upon these facts the court applied the provisions of section 136 of the Civil Code, and held that, although a divorce must be denied to the wife, still the husband could be required to provide for her maintenance while she was living separate from him. See, also, Volkmar v. Volkmar, 147 Cal. 175, 176, 81 Pac. 413; Anderson v. Anderson, 124 Cal. 51, 56 Pac. 630, 57 Pac. 81, 71 Am. St. Rep. 17.

In answer to this position defendant's counsel claim that this section of our Code is adopted from the law of the state of New York, where it has been held under this section that the wife may be granted alimony only in the event that she is entitled to a decree of separation (Davis v. Davis, 75 N. Y. 221; Robinson v. Robinson, 146 App. Div. 533, 131 N. Y. Supp. 261; Waring v. Waring, 100 N. Y. 570, 3 N. E. 289; Palmer v. Palmer, 29 How. Prac. [N. Y.] 390; Douglas v. Douglas, 5 Hun [N. Y.] 143); and contend, therefore, that this construction should be given here, for the reason that when one of the states of the Union adopts a statute of another state, it is ordinarily adopted in the light of such judicial construction as has there been given to it. Estate of Moffitt, 153 Cal. 361, 95 Pac. 653, 1025, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 207. But an examination of this provision of the law of New York discloses that it was a part of a long section of a statute of that state specifying the particular circumstances under which a decree of separation from bed and board might be granted; and decisions construing this law have held that from a reading of the whole section it was clear that the court could provide for maintenance for the wife when no decree of separation was made only when she was entitled to such a decree and waived her right thereto. It as also held in one of these New York cases that the subsequent re-enactment of that section in several separate and additional sections would not be presumed as intended to enlarge the scope or purpose of the original enactment.

In this state section 137, Civil Code gives to the wife the right to maintenance where she has a cause for divorce but waives it; and section 136—which has stood alone since its passage—when construed in relation to section 137 and other cognate sections, seems clearly to contemplate relief in cases where the wife may not be entitled to a decree of divorce. To give the section the construction contended for by the appellant would be to treat it as a useless enactment adding nothing to the body of our law. Such an interpretation will not be given to an enactment of the Legislature if it can be reasonably avoided.

[2] In the case at bar it appears that while the wife was not guilty of extreme cruelty, nevertheless her conduct towards her husband had been cold and indifferent, but this attitude towards him was provoked by his express preference for other women, and by his very friendly, although not immoral, relations with them, which conduct caused her great mental distress. It also appears that plaintiff and defendant are living apart, that they are estranged and cannot live together happily or harmoniously, and that it is necessary for the peace of mind and general well-being of each of the parties that they should live apart. The amount of alimony allowed the wife was not unreasonable. The court reserved the right to modify it upon good cause shown. We think the case fairly falls within the aim and purpose of section 136 of our Civil Code, and that the judgment should be affirmed.

It is so ordered.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

---

35 Cal. App. 553

WOODY v. PEAIRS, Judge. (Civ. 1747.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 12, 1917.)

1. GRAND JURY 🔑36 — AUTHORITY TO APPOINT PERSON TO SEARCH FOR TESTIMONY AND SUBPŒNA WITNESSES.

The grand jury or the superior court is not authorized to designate or appoint or require any person other than the public officers charged by law with the performance of such duties to search for testimony and subpœna witnesses to be used by and before the grand jury as to matters legally under investigation by it; there being no such express authority, and it not coming within the inherent powers of the superior court.

2. COUNTIES 🔑204(2)—CLAIMS OR CHARGES AGAINST—PRESENTATION AND FILING—APPROVAL BY AUDITOR—STATUTES.

Unless there is some provision of law expressly authorizing a different course of procedure, all claims or charges against a county must be presented, filed, approved, and allowed as provided by Pol. Code, §§ 4075, 4076, 4091, 4173, 4307, in which cases alone the auditor is required to interpose his official approval as a prerequisite to the payment thereof by the treasurer.

3. CONTEMPT 🔑21—MANDAMUS 🔑101—VALIDITY OF ORDER—AUDIT OF CLAIM AGAINST COUNTY.

The superior court of a county had no inherent power to make an order requiring the county auditor to audit a claim against the county, the auditor not being an officer of the court, and not a party to the proceeding in which the order allowing the claim was made, the claimant's remedy as against the auditor's refusal to audit the claim being by mandate, the duty of the auditor to audit the claim being expressly enjoined on him by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086.

Petition for writ of prohibition by S. A. Woody against Howard A. Peairs, Judge of the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Kern. Transferred to Supreme Court. Order of the Superior Court annulled, set aside, and vacated.

E. F. Brittan, of Bakersfield, for petitioner. E. L. Foster and Chas. A. Barnhart, both of Bakersfield, for respondent.

HART, J. Petitioner applied to the Supreme Court for a writ of prohibition to prevent respondent from punishing petitioner for contempt of court, and the proceeding was duly transferred to this court for hearing and decision.

From the petition and from the return of respondent, the following facts appear: The petitioner, at all times mentioned, was the duly elected, qualified, and acting auditor of Kern county. On the 3d day of June, 1915, one J. J. Deuel petitioned the superior court of Kern county for an order allowing his two certain claims for services, one in the sum of $240 and the other in the sum of $925, "under and by virtue of section 4307 of the Political Code"; and said court was asked to make an order requiring the auditor to draw his warrants for said sums and a further order requiring the treasurer to pay the same. After a hearing in the matter of said petitions, the court found the following facts: That from January 2, 1915, to and including April 9, 1915, said J. J. Deuel "was employed by the grand jury of the county of Kern in securing evidence and witnesses in the various investigations being conducted by and before said grand jury," that during said times said grand jury "was actually engaged in investigations into the conditions of affairs in the county of Kern, as provided by law." That said grand jury "was engaged in an effort to close up all houses of prostitution and prevent their operation, and to prevent felonies, and was further engaged in an effort to stop the illicit sale of intoxicating liquors, and that during all of the time there was a large number of matters of this kind and character being investigated by the said grand jury, and that * * * it became and was necessary for the said grand jury to employ special detectives for the reason that the sheriff of the county of Kern was unable to furnish sufficient officers who could assist the grand jury in their investigations and that the help and assistance provided by the district attorney of the county of Kern was inadequate, and that by reason of the facts above stated the grand jury was unable to procure the attendance of witnesses, material and necessary to investigations then and there being made by the said grand jury, and that by reason of the inadequacy, incompetency, and lack of moral support from the sheriff and inadequate help from the district attorney and the board of supervisors, it became and was necessary to appoint special officers as aforesaid, to assist and aid the grand jury in the proper administration of its duties, under the instructions given by the presiding judge, when the said grand jury was impaneled. That the said grand jury duly and regularly employed J. J. Deuel as a special detective, and authorized him to secure witnesses and evidence in matters being investigated by and before said grand jury." That said Deuel performed necessary and proper services for the county of Kern, "all of which services were in relation to criminal proceedings, for which no specific compensation is provided by law, and that a just and reasonable compensation for the services was, and is, the sum of $10 per day. That the nature and kind of services performed by the said Deuel was as follows: Subpœnaing and interviewing witnesses; securing information as to the character of various alleged houses of prostitution, and investigating the character and habits of the inmates thereof; investigating into the sale and disposition of liquors in cases of alleged violation of the law; and investigation of matters of criminal investigation, then being conducted by the said grand jury, and in relation thereto, subpœnaing of witnesses, and interviewing the same, and investigating the commission of felonies. That by reason of the said services, the county of Kern is indebted to J. J. Deuel in the sum of $925, which said sum is due, owing and unpaid." That said claim has been approved by the foreman and secretary of said grand jury and said sum is a reasonable compensation for the services rendered. The order of the court was that the auditor draw his warrant for said sum of $925 in favor of said Deuel and that the treasurer pay said warrant upon presentation.

Cotemporaneously with the filing of said petitions by said Deuel, one John Lang filed petitions alleging the same facts, the amount claimed by him being $523.65, which included an item of $19.65 for traveling expenses, and similar findings and orders were made and entered as in the matter of the Deuel petitions. Each of said orders was dated on the 26th day of June, 1915.

On the 2d day of July, 1915, a citation was issued to petitioner, Woody, requiring him to show cause, on the 8th day of July, why he had not complied with said orders above referred to. Upon said last-mentioned date, after hearing, the court adjudged said Woody guilty of a willful contempt of court in disobeying said orders and ordered that he be committed to the county jail of the county of Kern, "to be there imprisoned until he shall have obeyed said judgment, order and decree of this court by drawing and issuing" warrants as directed.

Petitioner contends that the said superior court, respondent, was without jurisdiction to make said orders, the respective claims not being county charges, and that there is no provision of law authorizing the foreman and secretary of the grand jury or the superior court to appoint any one to do special work for the grand jury as a detective.

We think the court exceeded its jurisdiction in adjudging petitioner guilty of contempt, and that the adjudication must therefore be set aside as null and void.

[1] In the first place, it is to be remarked that counsel for the respondent have not pointed to any law authorizing a grand jury or the superior court to designate or appoint or require any person other than the public officers charged by law with the performance of such duties to search for testimony and subpœna witnesses to be used by and before the grand jury as to matters legally under investigation by that body; and, unless there is some express authority for such a course either in the grand jury or the superior court, it is very doubtful whether such power may legally be exercised by either, for we do not believe that such authority comes within the inherent powers of the superior court.

The grand jury is clothed by law with certain specifically enumerated powers. See sections 915 and 928 of the Penal Code and section 4151 of the Political Code. In none of said sections is there any provision that the grand jury may employ any person other than the public officers whose duty it is to perform that service to gather testimony or subpœna witnesses. On the contrary, section 1328 of the Penal Code expressly provides that a peace officer (a sheriff or a constable, or, in certain cases, the coroner, or the deputy or deputies of either) must serve in his county any subpœna delivered to him for service, either on the part of the people or of the defendant, and must make a return of the service thereof, subscribed by him, stating the time and place of service.

There are, it is true, certain occasions on which a person not a public official and denominated an elisor may, by an order of the superior court, be designated and appointed to serve and execute legal processes or orders. This may occur where both the sheriff and the coroner are disqualified for any reason from performing that duty. See Pol. Code, § 4173. And it doubtless is correct to say that, in the cases mentioned by said section, an elisor, duly appointed as so provided, would be competent to serve in the county in which he resides subpœnas issued by the district attorney (Pen. Code, § 1326, subd. 1) for such witnesses as the grand jury, for the purposes of an investigation pending before them, may desire. But, in any case where the appointment of an elisor becomes necessary, there must be a showing made of the disqualification of the sheriff and the coroner to serve and execute processes and orders. There was no such showing made in this case.

[2] In the second place, if we assume that the grand jury, under the authority of the superior court, may legally employ persons to assist it in the investigation of crime or other matters coming within the legal competence of that body, and thereby bind the county to the payment of the expenses following from such employment, or if it be assumed that the expenses incurred in the employment of persons other than the public official charged with such duties to subpœna witnesses for the grand jury or gather testimony to be presented to that body may be considered as coming within the expenses contemplated by subdivisions 2 and 3 of section 4307 of the Political Code, then it is very clear that the same cannot be allowed or paid until they shall have been presented and filed in the form and manner prescribed by section 4076 of the Political Code and thereupon considered, approved, and allowed as provided by section 4075 of said Code. Nor has the auditor authority to audit such claims until they are so presented and filed and approved and allowed. Pol. Code, § 4091. There are, it is true, some cases where claims against a county may be made upon an order of the judge of the superior court, or in a certain instance we have in mind (Pen. Code, § 869; McAllister v. Hamlin, 83 Cal. 361, 23 Pac. 357) by a magistrate. These cases, however, are exceptions to the general rule laid down upon the subject by the Legislature. In such cases, the law expressly confers upon the judge or magistrate the power to order the claims to be paid; and the judge or magistrate is then himself the auditor of the claim, the treasurer being required to pay the same upon the order of the judge and in the absence of the approval or auditing of the claim by the county auditor. But, unless there is some provision of law expressly authorizing a different course of procedure, all claims or charges against a county must be presented and filed and approved and allowed as provided by the sections of the Political Code above named, in which cases only is the auditor required to interpose his official approval as a prerequisite to the payment thereof by the treasurer. As was said by this court, in White v. Mathews, 29 Cal. App. 634, 156 Pac. 372:

> "We must look only to the statute to ascertain the extent of the authority of any tribunal to determine and fix the liability of the county for any claims that may be presented."

See, also, Ex parte Widber, 91 Cal. 367, 27 Pac. 733; Ex parte Truman, 124 Cal. 387, 57 Pac. 223; Murphy v. Madden, 130 Cal. 674, 63 Pac. 80; County of Yolo v. Joyce, 156 Cal. 429, 105 Pac. 125.

We have been cited to no law authorizing the judge of the superior court to fix the amount of, allow, and audit such a claim as the one involved herein, assuming that it constitutes the foundation for a valid charge against a county.

[3] But there is still another view to be taken of the question submitted here for decision, viz.: Conceding that the services rendered by the claimant to the grand jury constitute a legal charge against the county, and that it was legally required that the auditor rather than the judge of the superior court should audit the claim to authorize its payment by the treasurer, the remedy of the claimant as against the refusal of the auditor to audit the claim or demand would be by mandate; for in such case the duty of the auditor to audit the claim would be one expressly enjoined upon him by law. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085 and 1086. And in such case the auditor would be made and become a party to the action and accorded an opportunity to defend his position. If then the claim was determined to be a valid charge against the county and it had been regularly and duly allowed, and the auditor still refused to give it his official approval as prescribed by the law, he then might and probably would be subject to an adjudication of contempt of the court's mandate. In the present case, however, the auditor, who is not an officer of the court, was not a party to the proceeding in which the order allowing the claim was made, and the court certainly had no inherent power to make an order placing him in the perilous position of either auditing the demand or suffering imprisonment for contempt. Ex parte Widber, 91 Cal. 367, 370, 27 Pac. 733; Ex parte Truman, 124 Cal. 387, 57 Pac. 223.

We conclude: (1) That, if the claim in question constituted a legal charge against the county, it is not one of those the amount of which may be fixed and then allowed by the judge of the superior court, but is of that character of claims which must be presented and filed, and approved and allowed and audited as provided by sections 4075, 4076 and 4091 of the Political Code. (2) That, even if it be a claim which may be fixed and ordered paid by the judge of the superior court, the county auditor is not required to audit it to authorize its payment by the treasurer. (3) That, if it is a claim which cannot be paid without the official approval of the auditor, then mandate or some other appropriate proceeding, after the claim has been regularly passed upon and allowed, is the remedy to be resorted to against the auditor in case he refuses to audit the demand or claim.

It follows from the foregoing that the order adjudging petitioner guilty of contempt of court is absolutely void, and that the same must be annulled, set aside, and vacated. It is so ordered.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

35 Cal. App. 605

McCLELLAN v. STATE et al. (Civ. 2252.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 15, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 11, 1918.)

1. STATES 🔑191(2) — "SUITS AGAINST THE STATE"—RECOVERY OF TAXES PAID.

An assignee of a corporation cannot maintain an action without the consent of the state against the secretary of state and state treasurer to recover sums paid to them under the annual corporation license tax law; such a suit being one against the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Suit against the State.]

2. STATES 🔑191(1) — SUITS AGAINST — CONSENT.

A state cannot be sued without its consent.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Clifford McClellan against the State of California, Frank C. Jordan, as Secretary of State, and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

McClellan & McClellan, of San Francisco, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Raymond Benjamin, Chief Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff, as assignee of a large number of corporations, for the recovery of various amounts aggregating the sum of $71,680.50, paid by them to the secretary of state under the provisions of the annual corporation license tax law. Demurrers, both general and special, on behalf of the state and the other defendants were interposed, which demurrers were sustained by the trial court upon the ground that the court had no jurisdiction of the subject of the action, for the reason that the plaintiff could not maintain an action against the state without its consent. The defendants, Frank C. Jordan and Friend W. Richardson, are officers of and represent the state, and the state is the real party against whom the relief is sought; and, if the ruling of the trial court is correct, all of the defendants fall within the rule of prohibition.

[1] There is not now, nor has there ever been, any statute of this state authorizing any one to institute against the state, or any of its officers, an action for the recovery of any fee or sum of money of the character here involved. The only statute permitting the institution of such suits is the act of February 28, 1893 (Stats. 1893, p. 57). This statute authorizes actions against the state by "all persons who have, or shall hereafter have, claims on contract or for negligence against the state not allowed by the state board of examiners."

This action is admittedly neither an action on contract nor because of negligence, but counsel for appellant claims his right of action has foundation irrespective of any permissive act. The substance of his contention is that the rule that a state cannot be sued except with its consent is a common-law rule which originated in the minds of the kings of England in the Middle and Dark Ages, which would not permit the redress of a wrong against the king because of his divine sovereignty; and he argues that the rule has become antiquated and benighted, and has no place in these advanced and modern days; and he insists that an action against the state is no part of sovereignty, and intimates that rulings of courts based on that principle are old and antiquated, entirely erroneous, and that they should have no place in our modern scheme of advanced government and enlightened civilization.

This precise question arose in the early period of the history of our country, and engaged the minds of such publicists as Hamilton, Madison, and Marshall, and the doctrine was given full consideration by the Supreme Court of the United States in many cases. Various foundations for the principle upon which this exemption of liability from suit is based have been given, the broader reason being that it would be inconsistent with the very idea of supreme executive power, and would endanger the performance of public duties. In the important case of United States v. Lee, 106 U. S. 196, 1 Sup. Ct. 240, 27 L. Ed. 171, Mr. Justice Miller considered the question of suability of a sovereign from an historical standpoint. See, also, Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. 419, 1 L. Ed. 440. The books abound with discussions and conclusions upon the subject. No useful purpose, however, would be served by a review of those authorities.

[2] Whatever the reason may be it is sufficient to say that it is an established principle of jurisprudence in all civilized nations that a state cannot be sued without its consent. This is a privilege of sovereignty, and the rule is universally enforced, and needs no citation of authority for its support. We see no reason why it should be changed. Plaintiff is not without relief, however. If there is merit in his claim, undoubtedly the Legislature will make suitable appropriation for its payment.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

---

35 Cal. App. 607

STODDARD et al. v. FISKE et al.

(Civ. 2229.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 17, 1917.)

1. Master and Servant 🔑301(1) — Automobile Driver—Relationship.

Where, when driver of a loaned automobile was arrested for speeding and taken to a police station, his friend riding with him took the automobile to go to the central police station to deposit bail and secure an order for the driver's release, and returning from such errand ran into and injured a woman, the arrested driver was not liable for the injury; there being no legal relation between him and his friend, but mere friendship.

2. Appeal and Error 🔑1050(2)—Harmless Error — Question Calling for Conclusion.

Allowing a question as to existence of relationship of servant and master between witness and another, over the objection that it calls for a conclusion, is not prejudicial error unless the question of employment is the material fact in issue and under investigation.

3. Evidence 🔑471(28)—Conclusions.

Where plaintiff's claim of defendant's employment of witness making defendant liable for witness' injury to plaintiff was based solely upon a certain conversation between witness and defendant, a question by the court whether prior to that conversation the relation of employer and employé or principal and agent had ever existed between witness and defendant was not objectionable as calling for a conclusion; the question of prior employment being immaterial, and plaintiffs being given full opportunity to show by further questioning of the witness if the fact of prior employment existed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Addie Stoddard and another against E. A. Fiske and another. From judgment for defendant Bertram E. Nixon, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Elmer Westlake, of San Francisco, for appellants. Louis H. Ward, of San Francisco, for respondent Fiske. Ira S. Lillick, of San Francisco, for respondent Nixon.

RICHARDS, J. In an action brought by the plaintiffs, husband and wife, against the defendants for damages for personal injuries suffered by the wife, they recovered judgment against the defendant Fiske, but as to defendant Nixon judgment was rendered in his favor and against the plaintiffs. From that part of the judgment in favor of Nixon and against themselves the plaintiffs prosecute this appeal.

The facts of the case are substantially these: Some time in the month of September, 1913, three gentlemen, two of whom were Fiske and Nixon, the defendants in this action, were standing in front of the St. Francis Hotel with another gentleman, Mr. Travers, who was the president of the Taxicab Company of California at that time, a company which operated several automobiles in that region. One of the machines of that company was devoted to the personal use of its president and was standing in the street near the hotel. These three gentlemen were friends of Mr. Travers, apparently, and while they were standing there he asked them if they wished to take a ride. Evidently they did, and he told them, pointing to his machine, that it was at their disposal. Apparently he knew them well enough to know that both of these defendants knew how to operate the automobile, and his remarks were addressed, not to any one of them, but to all three of them. They all proceeded to the car, and Mr. Nixon, for the time being, took the wheel and drove the car. While they were riding about the city the party was stopped by a policeman, and Nixon, the driver of the car, was arrested for speeding, and the party taken to the Bush street police station. Nixon offered to give the arresting officer $20 for bail in order to secure his release, but the arresting officer informed him that he could not take the money or could not release him and that he must go to the Central station and make his deposit there in order to obtain his release. He declined to allow Nixon, however, to go there alone for that purpose, whereupon Fiske offered, or Nixon requested him—it is immaterial which—to go there, and accordingly he took the automobile and went. While he was returning from his errand, having secured the order for the release of Nixon, he ran into and injured Mrs. Stoddard, one of the plaintiffs in this case; Nixon at that time not being in the car but being at the Bush street police station awaiting the return of his friend. This action was brought, as we have said, by the plaintiffs to recover damages for the injuries suffered by Mrs. Stoddard in said collision. A motion for nonsuit in behalf of Nixon was made at the close of plaintiffs' case, which was denied; but at the conclusion of the entire testimony a motion was made for a directed verdict in favor of said defendant, and that motion the court, with all of the evidence in the case before it, granted, and directed a verdict in favor of Nixon. It is from that order and from the judgment in his favor thereupon made that the plaintiffs appeal, claiming that they were entitled to a verdict against Nixon, and that the court erred in taking the case in that manner from the jury.

There are two points made in the case: First, that the court erred in directing the finding of a verdict in favor of Nixon; and, second, that the court committed error in permitting the defendant Fiske to testify in response to questions that the relationship of employer and employé, or of principal and agent, did not exist between himself and Nixon at any time prior to the conversation at the Bush street police station already referred to.

[1] As to the first of these points, it is the appellants' contention that Fiske having undertaken the errand for the benefit of Nixon, either at his request or with his acquiescence, is to be considered the agent of Nixon, with the latter's resulting liability for the negligence of Fiske in the carrying out of his agency. Under the circumstances as detailed above we cannot agree that the legal situation contended for arose. There was no evidence of any employment of Fiske by Nixon, but it is clear that the latter undertook what he did in order to be of assistance to Nixon in his difficulty and as an act of friendship from one man to another. The doctrine of respondeat superior sought here to be invoked by the appellants must necessarily be based upon a relationship between two parties by which one has the legal right to direct the activities of the other and the latter the legal duty to submit to such direction. Such a relationship did not exist in the case at bar. If Fiske, after undertaking his mission, had abandoned it and left his friend in the lurch, he would have been guilty of no breach of legal duty although undoubtedly guilty of a most reprehensible breach of moral duty. In this case there was no such relation as that of master and servant, of principal and agent, or employer and employé. In the performance of his errand Fiske was at liberty to proceed to its performance in any way he chose and was not amenable to the direction of Nixon. The latter therefore is not liable for the negligent act of Fiske in its performance, and the authorities cited by appellants sustaining the principle they contend for have no application to the facts of this case. On the other hand, the following authorities support the principle just stated: Koenitsky v. Matthews, 64 Misc. Rep. 167, 118 N. Y. Supp. 367; Fay v. German V. Soc., 163 Cal. 118, 124 Pac. 844; Cotter v. Lindgren, 106 Cal. 602, 39 Pac. 950, 46 Am. St. Rep. 255; Smith v. Belshaw, 89 Cal. 427, 431, 26 Pac. 834; City of Chicago v. Gathman, 236 Ill. 9, 86 N. E. 152, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1178, 15 Ann. Cas. 830; Messmer v. Bell & Coggshall Co., 133 Ky. 19, 117 S. W. 346, 19 Ann. Cas. 1; Brady v. Ry. Co., 114 Fed. 100, 52 C. C. A. 48, 57 L. R. A. 712; Atwood v. Ry. Co. (C. C.) 72 Fed. 447; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Rahn, 132 U. S. 518, 10 Sup. Ct. 175, 33 L. Ed. 440.

It is also urged by the appellants that the court erred in permitting certain questions to be answered by the defendant Fiske while a witness. One of them was:

> "Before this incident on this particular day had the relation of employer and employé, or principal and agent, ever existed between you and Mr. Nixon?"

This question was objected to by the appellants on the ground that it called for a conclusion of the witness. The objection was overruled, and the witness answered: "Absolutely nothing." This question was asked by the court; and, apparently not satisfied with its precise wording the court then put to the witness the following:

> "Q. I say, before the conversation at the Bush street station, has the relation of employer and employé, or principal and agent, ever existed between you and Mr. Nixon?"

This question encountered the same objection that it called for a conclusion of the witness; and, the objection being overruled the witness answered, "No, sir."

In between these two questions defendants' counsel put a similar one, as follows:

> "Before this accident, Mr. Fiske, before this accident and at the time of the accident had Mr. Nixon employed you to do anything for him?"

This question was objected to as calling for the witness' conclusion. It remained unanswered, but the court, in adverting to it and in explanation of its own questions and to the limit of time to which they were pointed, made this statement:

> "As to your question, Mr. Lillick (defendants' counsel), I think it ought to be before that conversation. In other words, as I have previously ruled, whatever the relationship existing between these two defendants was on that day grew out of that conversation, or rather, as shown by what happened at the Bush street station, both you gentlemen should ask for the conversation."

[2] While it has been held that the bald statement by a witness that he was employed by a certain person or corporation may be a mere conclusion, it is also the rule that to permit the introduction of such evidence will not be held to be prejudicial error unless the question of employment is the material fact in issue and under investigation. Thus, in the case of Winslow v. Glendale Light & Power Co., 164 Cal. 688, 130 Pac. 427—a case cited by appellants in support of their contention—while it was held to be error to permit a witness to testify that he was "working for the Glendale Light & Power Company," where it appeared that this statement was merely the witness' conclusion, it was only so held because the very question in litigation was whether the work upon which the witness was employed as one of a crew of workmen was being done by the company named or by another person as an independent contractor. In such a case, says the learned author of the opinion:

> "The rule limits the testimony of the witness to a statement of the person by whom he was employed, the nature, terms, and surrounding circumstances of his employment. From these, with such other evidence as the case presents, must the conclusion be drawn as to who in fact was the responsible employer."

But in the same case it is also said:

> "In many instances, as where the agency or the ownership of the property is not in issue, it is permissible, for the purpose of curtailing the inquiry, to allow questions to be asked and answered, which questions and answers would be to the last degree improper were issue joined upon the question of agency or ownership. Instances come readily to mind, and, indeed, in the courts are of daily or even of hourly occurrence. If the ownership of a piece of land is not in issue, it is not objectionable to ask the witness who owns that land. If the agency or employment is not in question, it is equally permissible to ask the witness whose agent he was, or for whom he was working. It is but a time-saving method of presenting the truth upon a matter not controverted."

[3] In the case at bar the foregoing questions asked of the witness were not objectionable as calling for a conclusion. They were directed to a time prior to Fiske's undertaking the mission in the course of which the accident occurred, and called merely for information on the point as to whether any employment of any kind had ever up to that time existed—clearly under the circumstances an ultimate fact. The plaintiff had raised no issue of prior employment, but relied for the establishment of any relationship of principal and agent between Nixon and Fiske solely upon the episode between them at the Bush street station. The question of prior employment was, moreover, an immaterial one; and when it came to the proof of the conversation which resulted in Fiske undertaking his errand for Nixon counsel were confined to the strict rule of proof; and the appellants were given full opportunity to show by further questioning of the witness if the fact of prior employment existed. Under the circumstances of this case we are clearly of the opinion that the questions were not objectionable on the ground urged.

For the reasons given, the portion of the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

35 Cal. App. 639

CALDWELL v. REGENTS OF UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 2232.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 18, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 14, 1918.)

1. TRIAL 🔑3—DISCRETION OF COURT—SEPARATE TRIALS.
Granting separate trials between plaintiff and separate defendants rests in the trial court's discretion.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑964—DISCRETION OF COURT—GRANTING SEPARATE TRIALS.
Granting separate trials between plaintiff and separate defendants will not be reversed on appeal, except for an abuse of discretion.

3. TRIAL 🔑3—SEPARATE TRIALS—PARTITION SUIT.
In a partition suit, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by requiring plaintiff to proceed as to certain defendants who claimed the entire title without waiting for service on other defendants who were not concerned in such issue.

4. MORTGAGES 🔑489—FORECLOSURE—VALIDITY.
A mortgage foreclosure in which the property belonging to certain defendants was sold to an amount necessary to satisfy that portion of mortgage debt not outlawed as to them held valid.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑169 — QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—POINTS FIRST MADE ON ORAL ARGUMENT.
Points made for first time upon oral argument will not be considered.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Donohue, Judge.

Action by R. A. Caldwell against the Regents of the University of California and others. From a judgment for defendants and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frank W. Sawyer, of San Francisco, and Joseph K. Hawkins, of San Rafael, for appellant. Warren Olney, Jr., of San Francisco, and F. F. Thomas, of Berkeley, for respondents.

LENNON, P. J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment and order denying a new trial. The action is ostensibly an action for partition, but in reality so far as the defendant-respondents are concerned, it is an action to quiet title, and the sole issue in the action as between the plaintiff and these defendants is as to the title of the property in question.

The facts are as follows: The Regents of the University of California purchased the property in question at a foreclosure sale made under a foreclosure decree in a foreclosure action wherein the mortgagor was served with summons, appeared and answered. No appeal was taken, and upon the period of redemption expiring the regents took possession of the property, fenced it, and ever since have had possession. Just two days before the expiration of five years from the date of the foreclosure sale the mortgagor quitclaimed the property to the plaintiff, who, on the last day of the five years, filed a complaint against the regents to quiet title. The plaintiff never served summons in this action to quiet title, and after about twenty months it was dismissed for want of prosecution. The plaintiff appealed from the order of dismissal, and the order was affirmed. Shortly after the affirmance of the order of dismissal the plaintiff conveyed a half interest in the property to one Shea, and within a few days thereafter commenced the present suit for a partition between himself and Shea, making, however, over 100 persons other than Shea, and including the regents and their vendee, the Country Club Heights Company, parties defendant. The regents and the Country Club Heights Company answered, claiming to be the sole owners of the property. So far as the record shows, neither Shea nor any of the other defendants save the respondents were served with summons, and none of them appeared. The respondents moved to have the course set for trial for the determination of the issue of title between themselves and the plaintiff, and the plaintiff sought to have the trial postponed until the action should be at issue as to all the other defendants. However, the action was set for trial and tried, and judgment rendered in favor of the respondents.

[1-3] The plaintiff now claims that it was error on the part of the court below to proceed with the trial of the issues raised by the pleadings between the plaintiff and the defendants without awaiting for the appearance in the action of the remaining defendants. There is no merit in this contention. Manifestly the remaining defendants were not concerned with, and were not necessary parties to, a determination of the issue of title as joined between the plaintiff and the defendants here. It is a matter of discretion on the part of the trial court to grant separate trials as between the plaintiff and separate defendants, which discretion will not be interfered with on appeal except in the case of abuse which is not made manifest here.

[4] Plaintiff contends that the sale under foreclosure of mortgage by Knowles to the regents, by which sale the regents have the record title, is void for the alleged reason that the decree of foreclosure upon which the sale was based was void in this that it declared that the mortgage debt was barred as to any sum in excess of $10,000, and yet directed a sale to pay a sum in excess of this amount.

The findings, conclusions, and decree show the contrary. The trial court simply found that the mortgage debt was barred as to certain defendants as to any claim in excess of $10,000. The court then specifically found and designated the particular lots that were owned by these particular defendants, and as to which a part of the mortgage debt was barred, and accordingly ordered the sale of the various lots comprising the mortgaged property, directing that the sale was to proceed until the sum of $10,000, as to which the statute of limitations had not run as to any of the defendants, with interest and costs, had been realized, and that when this sum was realized the lots, specifically enumerating them, which belonged to the defendants as to whom the remainder of the mortgage debt was barred, should be withdrawn from the sale, which should continue only as to lots owned by defendants as to whom none of the mortgage debt was barred. It appears from the record that the sale followed these provisions of the foreclosure decree.

Upon the oral argument it was conceded by counsel for plaintiff that there was no merit in the contention made in the opening brief filed upon behalf of the plaintiff to the effect that the trial court had erred in making an amendment to the findings and judgment as originally made and rendered, and therefore that point need not now be discussed.

[5] This disposes of all of the points made in the printed brief of counsel for the plaintiff. We are not required and we will not discuss and decide points made for the first time upon oral argument.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; RICHARDS, J.

(35 Cal. App. 567)

HEPLER et al. v. WRIGHT et al. (Civ. 1407.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 13, 1917.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES 🔑152(8)—APPROPRIATION OF WATER — EVIDENCE — SUFFICIENCY.

In suit to enjoin interference with appropriation of water, evidence held insufficient to establish appropriation by defendant's predecessors in title.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑757(1) — SCOPE OF REVIEW—RECORD—SUFFICIENCY.

On appeal by the alternative method, where neither party complies with Code Civ. Proc. § 953c, requiring the printing in the briefs of such portions of the record as the parties desire to call to the attention of the court, where the record consisted of over 400 typewritten pages, the court will decline to inspect the record.

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES 🔑152(10)—APPROPRIATION — ACTIONS — FINDINGS — SUFFICIENCY.

In suit to restrain interference with use of water for irrigation, a finding that defendant's predecessors in interest did not appropriate all the waters from a stream carrying 10.75 inches of water, and that plaintiffs' predecessors appropriated 6 inches of water, should have been more definite, though thereunder impliedly defendants were entitled to the difference between plaintiffs' appropriation and the total flow.

4. TRIAL 🔑391—FINDINGS OF COURT—REQUISITES.

While the general rule requires that there should be a finding on every material issue, it does not require a finding on an issue as to which there is no evidence.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1071(1)—HARMLESS ERROR.

In suit to enjoin interference with use of water for irrigation, error, if any, in finding that defendants had not appropriated all the water of a stream carrying 10.75 inches, and that plaintiffs were entitled to 6 inches therefrom, was not injurious to defendants, where the evidence conclusively established plaintiffs' right to 6 inches of water.

6. ACTION 🔑50(10) — MISJOINDER — RESTRAINING APPROPRIATION—PARTIES.

Where two plaintiffs owned two lots jointly, and were jointly interested with a third plaintiff in a third lot, it was not necessary to bring two actions to restrain interference with the appropriation of water which it was alleged all the plaintiffs had jointly appropriated for the benefit in equal parts of all three lots.

Appeal from Superior Court, Plumas County; J. O. Moncur, Judge.

Suit by Charles Y. Hepler and wife and another against C. E. Wright and A. C. Frohlich. From the judgment for plaintiffs, and order denying motion for new trial, defendants appeal by the alternative method. Affirmed.

H. B. Wolfe and L. N. Peter, both of Quincy, for appellants. M. C. Kerr, of Quincy, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiffs bring the action to have their right determined to 6 inches of water measured under a 4-inch pressure, for an injunction restraining defendants from diverting the same or any part thereof and for damages in the sum of $500 for defendants' alleged interference therewith.

It is alleged in the second amended complaint: That plaintiffs Charles and Emma Hepler now are, and for more than 20 years last past have been, the owners of, and have occupied, used, and farmed certain lands, to wit: lots 2 and 3 of block 7 of the town of Crescent Mills, Plumas county, Cal. That the said plaintiffs last named and plaintiff Kelley are the owners, and for more than 20 years last past they and their predecessors in interest have been the owners in possession and occupying lot 1 of block 7 aforesaid. That plaintiffs Charles and Emma Hepler are in possession and entitled to the possession of said lot 1, and are farming the same under lease with their said co-owner, and are the owners of all the crops now grown on said lands or to be grown thereon. That plaintiff Kelley has no interest therein. "That all of said lands are agricultural in character, and irrigation is necessary on all of the said lands." That by means of irrigation, plaintiffs Charles and Emma Hepler, for more than 7 years last past, have raised and produced, and are now raising and producing on all of said lands, valuable crops of fruits, vegetables, hay, and other crops. That the irrigating season for said lands is from April 1st to and including October 1st of each year, and "irrigation is necessary on said lands during all of said time." "That a stream of water flows from what is generally known as and called the Green Mountain No. 6 tunnel * * * carrying during the irrigating season, about eleven inches of water, measured under a 4-inch pressure." It is then alleged: "That more than 20 years ago the predecessors in interest of the plaintiffs went into and upon said stream and appropriated 6 inches of water, measured under a 4-inch pressure, and erected dams across said stream and dug ditches leading from said stream to and upon the lands of plaintiffs herein, and by means of said dams and ditches diverted from said stream said 6 inches of water, measured as aforesaid, to and upon the lands of said plaintiffs as described in * * * this complaint. That said 6 inches of water was and now is divided and used upon said above-described lands in the following amounts and proportions: Upon lots 2 and 3 of block 7 of said town of Crescent Mills, hereinbefore described, 4 inches of water measured under a 4-inch pressure; upon lot 1 of said block No. 7 * * * 2 inches of water, measured under a 4-inch pressure. That all of said water was and is used on said lands for irrigating, for domestic use, and for watering stock, and said water and the whole thereof ever since has been, and now is, necessary for said purposes on said lands in the proportion and to the extent above set forth." That prior to the commencement of this action, and at the commencement of the action and ever since, Charles and Emma Hepler have been and now are entitled to the possession and the use of the flow of said waters to the extent aforesaid, and they are now using said water on said lands. That on or about April 23, 1913, defendants, acting in concert and with a common purpose, diverted all of the waters flowing in said stream away from the lands of the plaintiffs herein, and prevented any of the said waters from flowing to the plaintiffs' lands, except when such diversion was interfered with by plaintiffs, and defendants do now threaten to divert and conduct all of said waters away from plaintiffs' lands, and will do so unless restrained by this court. That the crops growing on said lands are in such a state of cultivation and growth that if the flow of water to plaintiffs' lands be interfered with by defendants and diverted from plaintiffs' lands, the said crops will be "stunted in growth and utterly destroyed, and the damage accruing to said plaintiffs * * * will be irreparable and of such a nature that the exact amount thereof cannot be accurately measured." Alleges the insolvency of defendants and their inability to respond in damages. Alleges that plaintiffs Charles and Emma Hepler, by reason of the said diversion of said waters by defendants, have been deprived of the beneficial use of the same, and have sustained damages thereby in the sum of $500, but that plaintiff Kelley "has no interest in any of the crops now upon said lands, and has not been damaged by said diversion and does not claim any damages therefor." It is further alleged: "That the defendants claim and assert some right or interest in and to the waters of said stream to the extent of 6 inches measured under a 4-inch pressure, so used and appropriated by plaintiffs and their predecessors in interest, adverse to said plaintiffs, but that said claims of said defendants are, and each of them is, without any right or title whatsoever."

The plaintiffs pray for an order of the court restraining defendants and their agents "from diverting from said stream any of the waters thereof to the extent of 6 inches, measured under a 4-inch pressure and to forthwith desist from diverting or attempting to divert any part of said 6 inches of water, measured as aforesaid, away from the lands of plaintiffs. * * * That plaintiffs have a judgment and decree of this court that they are the owners of, in the possession of, and entitled to the possession of, the aforesaid waters to the extent of 6 inches, measured under a 4-inch pressure, and measured and divided as set forth herein, and are entitled to have the same flow to, upon, and across plaintiffs' said lands, there to be used for irrigating, domestic purposes, and for watering stock; and that the defendants have no right or interest in and to said 6 inches of water, or any part thereof. That plaintiffs Charles Y. Hepler and Emma K. Hepler recover from the defendants the sum of $500 as damages," and to such other relief as is agreeable to equity.

A general and special demurrer to the second amended complaint was overruled, and fendants answered. They deny, either directly or upon information and belief, substantially all of the material averments of the complaint. Admit that on or about the 23d day of April, 1913, they, "with unity of purpose and by concerted action, diverted all the waters flowing in said stream away from the lands of plaintiffs herein." Admit that they did, at the date of the commencement of the action, threaten to divert and conduct all of said waters away from the lands of plaintiffs. Admit that defendants claim and assert right to and interest in the waters of said stream to the extent of 6 inches measured under 4-inch pressure, but deny that such amount was used or appropriated by plaintiffs or their predecessors or otherwise, but deny that claims of defendants are without right. "On the contrary, defendants allege that more than 25 years ago their predecessors in interest, under and by virtue of an agreement made and entered into to and with the Green Mountain Mining Company, the then owner of what is known as No. 6 tunnel, * * * constructed a ditch by means of which all of the water flowing from said tunnel was diverted away from said tunnel and to and on the lands of defendant Frohlich herein, and there and on other lands used for household, domestic, and irrigation purposes, and that such use on said other lands was with the consent of the predecessors of defendants and under an agreement with them."

It is alleged as a further defense that the predecessor in interest of defendant Frohlich, more than 25 years ago, and prior to any use of the waters hereinafter mentioned and described, by any person whomsoever for household or domestic uses, went in and upon said Green Mountain tunnel and constructed a ditch therefrom leading to and on certain lands situated as described in the answer, and there used the same for household, domestic, and irrigation purposes, and upon information and belief, it is alleged that each and every year since the date of the appropriation of said water as aforesaid and the construction of said ditch by defendant Frohlich's predecessor, said waters and the whole thereof, flowing from said No. 6 tunnel, has been conveyed through said ditch onto the lands of the predecessor of said defendant Frohlich and to other lands adjacent thereto, and there used for household, domestic and irrigation purposes. Alleges further that on information and belief plaintiffs Charles and Emma Hepler, for about 7 years last past, have been taking and using water from said ditch without the knowledge and consent of the predecessor of defendant Frohlich, and by stealth, and that at all times when the said defendant Frohlich's predecessor discovered such use by plaintiffs, he returned all of said water into said ditch, and stopped and prevented such use thereof. As a further defense, defendants allege that prior to April 22, 1913, and at a time when defendant Frohlich was negotiating the purchase of said water and said ditch and the whole thereof, together with certain land described, at the house of one Roedde, defendant Frohlich communicated to plaintiff Charles Hepler the fact of his said contemplated purchase, and said Hepler was then and there asked if he had any interest in the waters flowing in said ditch or from said lower No. 6 tunnel, or whether he claimed any interest in the same, and he, the said Hepler, then and there stated that he did not own or claim to own any interest in the waters flowing in said ditch or from said tunnel, and that he had a water right of his own for his said lands. That "thereafter defendant Frohlich purchased from and of W. F. Roedde said lands, together with said water right and said ditch line." And for a further defense, alleged on information and belief that neither of said plaintiffs has ever made any claim in any manner to W. F. Roedde of any right to divert any of the waters flowing from said No. 6 tunnel, and that plaintiffs have secured water for irrigation purposes on their said lands from springs situated within said lands, and "from what is known as the Dixie Canyon ditch leading from Dixie creek, over and across said lands." Defendants pray that plaintiffs take nothing by their action, "and for such other and further relief as to the court may seem meet."

The cause was tried by the court without a jury and the court found that substantially all of the averments of the complaint are true. The court found that the stream of water flows from the said Green Mountain tunnel, "carrying during the low stages water amounting to 10.75 inches, measured under a 4-inch pressure." That the predecessors in interest of plaintiffs more than 20 years ago appropriated 6 inches of water measured under a 4-inch pressure, flowing from said tunnel, and diverted and used the same to the extent of 6 inches as alleged in the complaint and in the proportions as therein mentioned, to wit, 4 inches upon lots 2 and 3, and 2 inches upon lot No. 1. That said water was used in the manner and for the purposes as alleged in the complaint, and that prior to the commencement of the action plaintiffs were and now are in peaceable possession of said waters to the extent of 6 inches measured under a 4-inch pressure "when the said water was flowing from said tunnel to the extent of 12 inches, and one-half of said water flowing from said tunnel when said flow is less than 12 inches measured under a 4-inch pressure." The court found that by reason of the diversion of said waters by the defendants as alleged in the complaint, the plaintiffs Charles and Emma Hepler have sustained damages to the extent of $100.

Attention is particularly called to finding 9 in the brief of defendants, which finding is as follows:

> "That defendants did not, nor their predecessors in interest did not, more than 25 years ago enter into an agreement with the Green Mountain Mining Company, the then owner of what is known as the Green Mountain No. 6 tunnel, for all of the waters of said tunnel, and did not by means of a ditch constructed convey all of the waters of said tunnel to and on the lands of defendant Frohlich herein; that said ditch constructed by the predecessors in interest of said defendant Frohlich was not of sufficient size to carry all of the water from said tunnel. That the predecessors in interest did go in and upon said Green Mountain tunnel and constructed a ditch therefrom to lands situate in section 24, township 26 north, range 9 east, M. D. M., and there used a portion of said water on said land for domestic, household and irrigation, but that said predecessors in interest did not appropriate and use all of said water and the said ditch was not of sufficient size to carry all of said water."

It is further found that the use of said water by said Heplers has been with the knowledge of the defendant Frohlich and not by stealth. That neither defendant Frohlich nor his predecessors in interest have at all times returned said water into defendants' ditch upon discovery of its use by said Heplers, but on the contrary, defendant Frohlich and his predecessors were at all times aware of the use of said water by the said Heplers. The court also found that at the time defendant Frohlich was negotiating the purchase of said water as mentioned in the answer at the house of said Roedde, plaintiff Charles Hepler did not state to said defendant Frohlich that he did not own or claim any waters flowing from said tunnel, nor did he state that he had a water right of his own for his lands other than the waters coming from said tunnel. The court found that plaintiffs had not secured water for irrigation purposes from springs situated within said lands, nor from what is known as Dixie Canyon ditch, as alleged in the answer, but that the water used on plaintiffs' said lands for irrigation has come from said tunnel aforesaid.

As conclusions of law, the court found:

> "That plaintiffs are entitled to judgment for 6 inches of water measured under a 4-inch pressure, flowing from Green Mountain No. 6 tunnel * * * when there is twice that amount, or more, flowing from said tunnel, and when there is less than 12 inches, so measured, flowing therefrom, to one-half thereof, the said amount to be divided as follows, to be used on lots 2 and 3 of block 7 of the town of Crescent Mills, owned by Charles Y. Hepler and Emma K. Hepler the extent of 4 inches of said water measured under a 4-inch pressure, and on lot No. 1 of said block 7 of said town of Crescent Mills, * * * to the extent of 2 inches of said water measured under a 4-inch pressure."

The court also found that plaintiffs were entitled to the injunction prayed for, and that plaintiffs, Charles and Emma Hepler, recover from the defendants the sum of $100 damages and costs of suit herein. Judgment was entered accordingly.

[1] The appeal is under the alternative method from the judgment and order denying defendants' motion for a new trial. There are over 400 typewritten pages of testimony, about an equal quantity of which was introduced by plaintiffs and defendants. In defendants' brief no part of the testimony on which they rely is given, and none referred to, except as will presently be noticed. In respondents' brief not a word of testimony is quoted, and the only reference to it is in the following form: "See testimony of" (the witness or witnesses)—but the page or folio of the transcript is not given. The only testimony quoted in defendants' brief relating to their alleged right to all the water of said tunnel consists of extracts from the testimony of one Roedde, referred to in the findings, through whom defendants claim title, as follows:

> "William Roedde, direct examination by Mr. Wolfe: Q. Then what was done concerning water for the Roedde place? A. My mother didn't know what to do about it, and so one day Mr. Rogers who was there himself at our place, he said they were having quite— Q. Were you present and heard the conversation? A. Yes, sir. Q. What was it? What was said at this time, you started to tell about Rogers being there, what was said concerning the water? A. He said they were getting quite a bunch of water in the tunnel, and if it was high enough we could have that water and take a survey around it from the tunnel. Q. What was done then? A. We did take a survey around with a straight edge. * * * Q. After that? A. It was plenty high enough. Q. What did you do then? A. I commenced digging the ditch. Q. When did you complete the ditch? A. I completed it—I don't understand that question quite. Q. After you commenced work on the ditch, was work kept up until it was completed, until you got it built? A. Yes, sir. Q. Where did you build the ditch to? From what point to what point? A. I dug it clear on around back behind the house and around on the far end of our place. Q. Where did you commence at, from what point? A. At the blacksmith shop. Q. Up at the Green Mountain tunnel, do you mean? A. Yes, sir. Q. You spoke of Charley Rogers, what was Charley Rogers doing, what connection, if any, did he have with the Green Mountain Company at that time? A. Well, he was superintendent and agent of the Green Mountain Company. Q. Was he in charge of the property and business and work of the company at that time? A. Yes, sir; he was. Q. After the completion of this ditch that you built, what did you do with reference to the water coming out of the Green Mountain tunnel, if anything? A. It was all turned in the ditch."

The only facts shown are that Rogers, the then superintendent of the Green Mountain mine, gave Roedde permission to use the waters escaping from said tunnel; that Roedde built a ditch from the tunnel to his place, and "all the water was turned into the ditch." He does not testify that the water was conveyed to his place, nor does he state where his place was, nor that he made any beneficial or other use of the water, nor when this was, nor how long he made any use of the ditch or the water. The brief states that these extracts from Roedde's testimony are in support of the issue that defendants, through their predecessors (Roedde), acquired title to all the water flowing from said tunnel. Obviously this testimony falls far short of establishing such issue.

[2] Defendants printed in their brief some extracts taken from disconnected parts of the testimony of both plaintiffs. This testimony in no wise aids defendants' contentions. On the contrary, it tends, so far as it can be understood without recourse to omitted portions, to establish plaintiffs' case. It appears from this testimony that plaintiffs took up their residence on what was called the "Leek place" in 1906; that prior to that time and at that time, water was brought from said tunnel to the Leek place and was used for domestic and irrigating purposes; that up to 1910, the water was first used at what was called the "Cornell boarding house" at the time, and on the lawn around the house, and what was not used passed to plaintiffs' ditch. In 1910 the boarding house burned, and the water continued as before to pass over the Cornell place, sank into the ground for a short distance and was picked up where it emerged and was conveyed to their land in plaintiffs' ditch. It is stated in respondents' brief, and not denied by appellants, that after 1910 no further use was made of the water by the company. The condition of the case is this: Neither party has complied with the statute. Section 953c, Code of Civil Procedure, reads in part as follows:

> "* * * In filing briefs on said appeal the parties must, however, print in their briefs, or in a supplement appended thereto, such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court."

There are no portions of the record called to our attention in the way pointed out by the statute that can be of the slightest assistance to the court in determining whether or not the evidence is sufficient to support the findings. Under such circumstances, we must decline to explore these 400 and odd pages to sift out the wheat from the chaff. That we are fully justified in doing so, we refer to Cunnison v. Miller, 167 Pac. 890, decided July 6, 1917. The court said:

> "The appeal is taken under the so-called and most unsatisfactory 'alternative method,' but appellant has failed to follow the statute, in that no part of the record to which he desires to call attention is printed in his brief. Having omitted to comply with the direction of the statute in that regard, no duty is imposed upon this court to examine the typewritten transcript"—citing Marcucci v. Vowinckel, 164 Cal. 693, 130 Pac. 430; Wills v. Woolner, 21 Cal. App. 528, 132 Pac. 283; Miller v. Oliver et al., 163 Pac. 357; Pasadena Realty Co. v. Clune, 166 Pac. 1025; McKinnell v. Hansen et al., 167 Pac. 887.

In this state of the case we must presume that there was evidence sufficient to support the findings, and it is not contended that the findings do not support the judgment.

Defendants, however, present a question upon which they place special reliance. Plaintiffs have not claimed, and do not claim, and the court does not award them, more than 6 miner's inches of the water flowing from said tunnel when there is at least twice that amount flowing therefrom, or one-half when less than that quantity. The court found that about 10.75 miner's inches of water flow from said tunnel at low stage. Manifestly there is a quantity of water flowing from said tunnel which plaintiffs do not claim. Defendants, in their answer, claim all the water. The court on that issue made the findings above quoted, in effect, that defendants did not enter into the agreement alleged "for all of the waters of said tunnel," and did not "by means of a ditch convey all" of said waters, and that the ditch constructed by defendants "was not of sufficient size to carry all" of said water; that defendants did construct a ditch to certain land claimed by defendants from said tunnel, and "there used a portion of said water on said land, * * * but * * * did not appropriate and use all of said water, and the said ditch was not of sufficient size to carry all of said water." According to rules of logic, this is a finding that defendants constructed the ditch claimed by them of capacity to carry some water; that defendants did appropriate and use on their lands some water, and that the ditch had the capacity to carry whatever this amount so used was. Defendants in their answer do not ask for any affirmative relief; they simply pray that plaintiffs take nothing by their action and "for such further relief as to the court may seem meet."

[3-5] The plaintiffs in their complaint allege that defendants claim some right to 6 miner's inches of said water "adverse to said plaintiffs, but that said claims of said defendants are, and each of them is, without right or title whatsoever." We think the finding complained of should have been more definite, and had the evidence been sufficient to enable the court to find the amount of water to which defendants are entitled, and had defendants requested a finding on that subject, no doubt the court would have made it. Apparently defendants were content to rely upon the issue, as a complete defense to plaintiffs' action, that defendants were entitled to all the waters flowing from said tunnel. Plaintiffs insist that there was no evidence upon which the court could have made a finding of the definite quantity of water to which defendants were entitled, and hence the court could only find as it did in response to defendants' claim. Defendants have not called attention to any evidence that would have justified the court in making a specific finding as to defendants' right to any particular quantity of water. While the general rule requires that there should be a finding on every material issue, and while the finding in question is uncertain and evasive, the rule does not require a finding on an issue as to which there is no evidence. Furthermore, as between plaintiffs and defendants, it is conclusively established that of all the waters involved, plaintiffs are entitled at no time to exceed 6 inches measured under a 4-inch pressure. The balance of the water by implication, as between the parties, belongs to defendants, and we do not see that they are injured by the form in which the finding is couched.

[6] Defendants make the point that there is a misjoinder of causes of action, and that the demurrer should have been sustained on the ground that plaintiff Kelley had no interest in lots 2 and 3, and that it appears by the complaint that there are two separate and distinct appropriations and diversions of water for two separate parcels of land. The complaint alleged that plaintiffs were the owners of lots 2 and 3, and joint owners with Kelley in lot 1, and that the alleged appropriation of water was for the benefit of these three lots, 4 inches thereof belonging to lots 2 and 3, and 2 inches to lot 1. As the appropriation of the water was in part for the benefit of lot 1, in which all the plaintiffs had an interest, we think Kelley was properly joined as plaintiff, and that it was not necessary that two separate actions should be brought to accomplish what readily could be attained in one action.

We can discover no ground for reversing the judgment or order, and they are therefore affirmed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

---

35 Cal. App. 597

GARDNER v. BOARD OF PARK DIRECTORS et al. (Civ. 2009.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 14, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 11, 1918.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚷210—OFFICERS—PARK BOARD—DISCHARGE OF EMPLOYÉS—"COMMISSIONER."

Under Oakland Charter (St. 1911, p. 1551), providing a commission form of government for such city, and article 12 thereof, creating the board of park directors with exclusive control of parks and authorized to employ superintendents, laborers, gardeners, etc., the board has power to discharge a gardener employed by it, and such power does not rest in the mayor under article 7, § 29, subd. 1, giving him general supervision over all boards appointed by him, of which the park board is one, and article 13, § 81, making all persons in the classified civil service subject to suspension and removal by the commissioners in whose department they are employed, since the mayor is not a "commissioner," and an employé of the park board is not in the department of public affairs of which the mayor is the head.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Commissioner.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Waste, Judge.

Application for writ of mandate by Calberth B. Gardner against the Board of Park Directors of the City of Oakland and others. From a judgment and order sustaining a demurrer to the application, the applicant appeals. Affirmed.

Rodolph Hatfield, of Oakland, for appellant. Paul C. Morf, City Atty., and William H. O'Brien, Deputy City Atty., both of Oakland, for respondents. Harrison S. Robinson, of Oakland, as amicus curiæ, for Civil Service Board, City of Oakland. Charles A. Beardsley, of Oakland, as amicus curiæ, for Civil Service Employés' Ass'n.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment and order sustaining a demurrer to an application for a writ of mandate. The petitioner was originally appointed to the position of assistant gardener in the month of June, 1915, from the civil service classified list of the city of Oakland, under and in accordance with the civil service provisions of the charter of that city. The following December he was dismissed by the respondents the board of park directors, whereupon he filed his petition in the superior court of Alameda county praying for a writ of mandate directing the respondents to reinstate him in that position. In support of his claim to such relief the appellant contends that the power of removal is vested in the mayor of the city as commissioner of public affairs and not in the board of park directors, and therefore his removal was irregular and invalid.

For a complete understanding of the duties and powers of the various commissions and boards of the city of Oakland a review of its charter provisions becomes necessary. Article 5, § 8, of that instrument (Stats. 1911, p. 1565) provides that the elective officers shall be a mayor, an auditor, who shall be ex officio assessor, four commissioners, and six school directors; also, that the council shall consist of the mayor and the four commissioners above specified. It further provides that candidates for commissioner shall be designated as commissioner No. 1, or No. 2, or No. 3, or No. 4. Throughout the charter there is a clear distinction made between the mayor and these four commissioners. In several sections they are distinguished one from the other, and in no section is the mayor referred to expressly or by implication as a "commissioner." See article 5, §§ 8, 9, 10, 12, 14, 15, 17, and 19. In article 6, § 21, the mayor is made chief executive officer of the city, and he "shall see that all the ordinances, resolutions and laws thereof are duly enforced. He shall be charged with the general oversight of the several departments of the municipal government." Article 7 defines these different departments, which are five in number. Section 27 of that article provides that:

> "The executive and administrative powers, authority and duties of the city, not otherwise provided for, shall be divided into five general departments, as follows: (1) Department of public affairs, which shall be under the supervision of the mayor. (2) Department of revenue and finance, which shall be under the supervision of the commissioner of revenue and finance. (3) Department of public health and safety, which shall be under the supervision of the commissioner of public health and safety. (4) Department of public works, which shall be under the supervision of the commissioner of public works. (5) Department of streets, which shall be under the supervision of the commissioner of streets."

Under this section there is a specific designation of four commissioners who are elected by the people. By section 28, article 7, it is provided that the council shall designate and assign one of its members, not the mayor, to be a commissioner of revenue and finance, one to be a commissioner of public health and safety, one to be a commissioner of public works, and one to be a commissioner of streets. Here again there is a clear distinction made between the four commissioners and their departments, and the mayor who has "supervision" over the department of public affairs. The department of public affairs in turn is given "general supervision" over all boards appointed by the mayor. Article 7, § 29, subd. 1.

It thus appears that the intention of the framers of the charter was to vest in some one department a general supervisory control and check over the different boards appointed by the mayor. The charter further particularly specified the authority, powers, and duties of these four different departments presided over by the four commissioners. In subdivision 1, § 30, art. 7, provision is made for the appointive chief officials, which are: City attorney; treasurer, who shall be ex officio tax collector; a city clerk; a city engineer; a chief of police; a chief of the fire department; a street superintendent; a health officer; and a superintendent of the electrical department. Some of these are appointed by the city council, and others by the different members of the four named commissioners. The council itself is the governing body of the municipality. In addition to the above-named appointive officials, the charter also provides for certain other appointive boards by the mayor, subject to confirmation by the council. They are as follows: (1) The board of library directors; (2) the board of playground directors; (3) the board of park directors; (4) the civil service board. Articles 10, 11, 12, and 13. With the exception of the civil service board, each of these last-described boards serves without compensation. It appears to us plain that these boards appointed by the mayor, subject to confirmation by the council, are intended by the charter to consist of persons particularly qualified to render services of a special character and without reference to political considerations.

Recapitulating the above analysis of the charter, it appears that there are twelve elective officials, i. e., the mayor, the auditor, the four commissioners, and the six school directors. The mayor and the four commissioners are ex officio members of and constitute the council. On the other hand, the appointive officials are certain officers designated as "chief officials," such as the city attorney, treasurer, city clerk, etc., and the four boards appointed by the mayor, who are assumed to have special knowledge for the proper administration of the libraries, the playgrounds, the parks, and the department of civil service. Each of the four elective commissioners is placed in charge of one of the general departments. The fifth general department, the department of public affairs, is placed under the supervision of the mayor. Subdivision 1, § 27, art. 7. Here it would appear is a carefully planned segregation, division, and balancing of powers. The mayor has general supervision of all the departments. The department of public affairs itself has a general supervisory control over all boards appointed by the mayor. Each of the other four general departments is under the general supervision of an elective commissioner, and each of the appointed boards has the control of a certain part of the municipal government, and is responsible for its proper conduct, just as each of the appointive public officials is responsible for the proper conduct of his office.

Coming now particularly to the board of park directors, it is provided that:

> They, among other powers, "shall have the complete and exclusive control, management and direction of the said parks, squares and grounds. * * * Said directors may employ and appoint superintendents, laborers, surveyors, gardeners, engineers and other officers and assistants, and prescribe and fix their duties, authority and compensation. They shall have the exclusive management and disposal of all funds legally apportioned or received from any source for the support of said parks, squares, and grounds. The board shall establish rules and regulations for the conduct of its officers and employés and may require adequate bonds from all or any of them, except laborers, for the faithful performance of their duties in such sums as may be fixed by it." Article 12, § 65.

It is conceded that the fundamental rule that the power to appoint includes by implication the power to remove should apply to the board of park directors unless something is found elsewhere in the charter making the rule inapplicable. The language of section 81 of article 13 is relied upon by appellant as showing that the rule does not here apply. This section provides that:

> "All persons holding positions in the classified civil service shall be subject to suspension, fine and also to removal from office or employment, by the commissioner in whose department they are employed."

It is contended by the appellant that the commissioner here referred to is the mayor, for the reason that the mayor is given general supervision over all the boards appointed by the mayor. Article 7, § 29, subd. 1. From this the appellant argues that this supervision is by the department of public affairs, and that the mayor having supervision over the department of public affairs, is in fact the commissioner over that department, and that as such commissioner he alone has the power to remove the appellant from that department.

The provisions of the charter do not warrant such a construction. The mayor is not in any sense a commissioner. He is the chief executive of the city, and as such is very properly given the supervision over the department of public affairs, which in turn has a general supervision over appointed boards. And it is clear that it was never intended by this general supervision to make an employé of the park board one under the department of public affairs. Manifestly, particular control of the parks and of the employés of the park board is given to the park board itself, and all that is intended by the other sections of the charter is to give a general supervision to the department of public affairs, and to the mayor as chief executive of the city, over the park board, as well as over the other three appointed boards. In this way only can an intelligent and working scheme be found in the charter as adopted. Any other construction would lead to confusion and to a limitation upon the authority of the park directors and other appointed boards which is clearly intended to be vested in them so that they may be held responsible for the proper management and control of the affairs of the municipality placed under their jurisdiction.

It is urged in the briefs filed by the respondents board of park directors that the civil service provisions of the charter do not apply at all to the park employés. Meritorious as we think this contention is, still in view of what we have said we do not consider it necessary to pass upon that particular question. Whether the civil service provisions apply or not, the power of a motion is placed by the charter in the park board; and, as it is not claimed that any of the civil service provisions of the charter were violated as to the mode followed in removing appellant, it follows that the order of the trial court should be sustained.

It is ordered that the order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

---

35 Cal. App. 549

BURMESTER et ux. v. HORN. (Civ. 2239.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 12, 1917.)

1. Vendor and Purchaser 🔑334(3)—Rescission—Rights of Parties.

Where the purchasers under installment contract were in default, and the vendor served notice of cancellation and thereafter with the consent of the purchasers took possession, there was a rescission which entitled the purchasers to recover from the vendor the amounts paid by them on the contract.

2. Vendor and Purchaser 🔑187—Installment Contracts—Waiver of Payment.

Where purchasers under installment contract of which time was of the essence were constantly in default for seven or eight months, and the vendor did not demand exact performance, the right to strict forfeiture provided for by the contract was waived by his acceptance of payments after their due dates.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Emmet Seawell, Judge.

Suit by Otto Burmester and wife against John W. Horn. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

G. P. Hall, of Petaluma (E. J. Dole, of Petaluma, of counsel), for appellants. F. A. Meyer, of Petaluma, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover from him a sum of money paid by the plaintiffs on account of the purchase price of real and personal property situated in Sonoma county.

A brief account of the facts of the case is as follows: On January 14, 1913, Antonia Brandt, being the owner of the real property described in the complaint and of certain personal property, made a bill of sale and deed thereof to John W. Horn, the defendant, in consideration of which Horn entered into an agreement with her whereby within 30 days he was to pay her the sum of $1,500, to be derived from a mortgage upon the property, and thereafter the sum of $25 per month without interest for the period of 76 months if she lived during that period, otherwise the payments to cease at her death. Time was not made of the essence of the contract, nor did it provide, as is quite usual in similar contracts, for a forfeiture of the vendee's rights in case the installment payments were not punctually made.

Thereafter, on February 3, 1913, Horn agreed in writing to sell and convey to Otto Burmester and Cora Burmester, the plaintiffs herein, the same land and personal property for the sum of $6,000, $900 of which was to be paid upon the execution of the agreement, and the balance at the rate of $50 or more a month, beginning March 1, 1913, together with interest on the deferred payments at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum compounded quarterly. This contract further provided that, in the event of a failure to comply with any of its terms, the unpaid balance should at once become due and payable, and that Horn should be privileged to terminate all the right, title, or interest of the Burmesters in the property, and to retain as liquidated damages the payments already made thereon. Time was made of the essence of this contract. The Burmesters were let into possession, and at the time this action was brought they had paid in all on account of the contract the sum of $1,365.82.

On May 6, 1913, Antonia Brandt brought a suit against Horn to set aside her deed to and contract with Horn, on the ground that they had been obtained from her through fraud and undue influence; she alleging in this behalf in part that at the time those instruments were made she had recently lost her husband, that she was old and infirm in body and mind, that she spoke and understood the English language with difficulty, that she was inexperienced in and practically knew nothing about business affairs, and that Horn took advantage of her condition and made certain false and fraudulent promises and representations with the purpose and intention of defrauding her of the property so conveyed.

On January 19, 1914, the Burmesters were in default in their payments to the amount of $392.83, and on that day Horn notified them in writing that they being in default he, in pursuance of the terms of their contract, "canceled, annulled and set aside" the same; and on the following day Horn appeared in open court, and in the suit brought against him by Antonia Brandt consented that judgment be entered against him annulling and canceling the deed and bill of sale made by her to him. Thereafter, on February 6, 1914, with the consent of the Burmesters, Horn took possession of the property, real and personal, and turned it back to his grantor. Other facts will be stated in the course of the opinion.

[1, 2] It will be observed that the defendant did not in his letter of January 19, 1914, as he might have done, attempt to terminate the plaintiffs' rights under their contract with him, but simply notified them that the contract itself was annulled, canceled, and set aside. In the evidence the contract was continually referred to as having been terminated and rescinded, and it is so pleaded in the complaint, admitted in the answer and found by the court. The effect of a rescission by the parties was to entitle the plaintiffs to recover from Horn the amounts paid by them on account of the contract. The rule is that, where a contract has been abandoned or rescinded by the parties, the vendee although in default, may recover back installments paid on the purchase price, less actual damages to the vendor occasioned by the vendee's breach of contract, although it was stipulated that such payments should be forfeited upon default. Cleary v. Folger, 84 Cal. 316, 24 Pac. 280, 18 Am. St. Rep. 187; Drew v. Pedlar, 87 Cal. 443, 25 Pac. 749, 22 Am. St. Rep. 257; Phelps v. Brown, 95 Cal. 572, 30 Pac. 774; Shively v. Semi-Tropic Co., 99 Cal. 259, 33 Pac. 848; Heilig v. Parlin, 134 Cal. 99, 66 Pac. 186. Besides this, we are of the opinion that Horn was in no position to claim the strict forfeiture provided for under the terms of his contract, for whatever default was suffered by the Burmesters thereunder was waived by the acts of Horn. It appears from the evidence that no one of the seven or eight monthly payments was ever made by the Burmesters in accordance with the terms of their contract. In one instance several months had elapsed between two of the payments, and the Burmesters were always in arrears as to part of the amount due from the very inception of their contract. Under such circumstances, where, as here, time is of the essence of the contract, the vendor is deemed to have waived strict compliance with its terms as regards time of payment, and he cannot thereafter rescind or forfeit the contract without first notifying the vendee of his intention to require a strict compliance with the conditions of the agreement, and allowing him a reasonable time to make good the existing default. Where, says the Supreme Court of this state, time is made of the essence of the contract for the payment of money, and this covenant has been waived by the acceptance of payments after they are due, with knowledge of the facts, such conduct will be regarded as creating such a temporary suspension of the right of forfeiture as could only be restored by giving a definite and specific notice of an intention to enforce it. Boone v. Templeman, 158 Cal. 290, 110 Pac. 947, 139 Am. St. Rep. 126; Stevinson v. Joy, 164 Cal. 279, 285, 128 Pac. 751; Pearson v. Brown, 27 Cal. App. 125, 148 Pac. 956.

In the case at bar this notice was never given. The default of the Burmesters having been waived by the repeated acceptance of payments after their due date, no right existed in Horn to terminate their rights under the contract and to declare forfeited the payments already made; and when he undertook to terminate the contract by his notice of January 19th the Burmesters were entitled to acquiesce in such action and to recover from Horn the amounts paid to him under the contract.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

35 Cal. App. 578

KENDRICK v. HANSEN. (Civ. 1726.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 13, 1917.)

1. Brokers ⚷86(2)—Commissions—Actions—Evidence—Sufficiency.

In broker's action for commissions, evidence held insufficient to establish allegations of defendant that the agency had been terminated before sale of the land.

2. Witnesses ⚷270(2)—Cross-Examination—Immaterial Matters.

In an action for broker's commission by one member of firm to whom other members assigned their claims, conversations between the members at the time of the assignment were immaterial.

3. Evidence ⚷398—Parol Testimony Varying Writings—Admissibility.

In action on a broker's written contract for commissions, conversations of a broker with defendant at the time of entering into the agreement were inadmissible.

4. Appeal and Error ⚷1058(2)—Harmless Error—Excluding Evidence.

In action for broker's commission due under written contract, conceding error in sustaining objection to conversations at the time of making the contract where fraud in the contract is alleged, the error was harmless, where the witness was later permitted to testify to the alleged representation and to state that he relied thereon.

5. Brokers ⚷9 — Right to Commission — Dissolution of Firm.

Dissolution of a firm of brokers did not terminate a contract giving them the right to sell land for a commission, where their dissolution agreement expressly continued the business as to the contract involved.

6. Trial ⚷252(16)—Actions—Instructions—Evidence—Admissions.

In action for broker's commission on sale of realty, where defendant admitted signing the contract agreeing to pay a commission, and further admitted that it had never been revoked in writing, and the contract showed on its face that it could not be revoked without consent of the broker until a certain date, an instruction, "It is admitted in this case" that defendant executed the contract, and that the contract had not been revoked in writing at the time defendant sold the land, but it could have been revoked even without the broker's consent under its terms after the date therein specified, was proper.

Appeal from Superior Court, Glenn County; Wm. M. Finch, Judge.

Action by J. K. Kendrick against Charles Hansen. Judgment for plaintiff and order denying motion for new trial, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Duard F. Geis, of Willows, for appellant. Frank Freeman, of Willows, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiff brings the action to recover commissions on the sale of certain real estate alleged to belong to defendant. It is alleged that at all the times mentioned in the complaint the plaintiff, M. E. Jacoby, and E. E. Avery were copartners doing business "under the firm name and style of Kendrick, Jacoby & Avery, in the county of Glenn," and were engaged in the business of buying and selling real estate; that on June 7, 1912, the said copartners entered into a certain contract in writing with defendant, a copy of which is appended to the complaint and made part thereof. By the terms of this agreement this firm was employed as "the sole and exclusive agents to sell" for defendant certain real property described in the agreement, and defendant agreed to convey said property, alleged as consisting of 2,159 acres, "to any purchaser or purchasers obtained by the said Kendrick, Jacoby & Avery, for the sum of $40 per acre, or for any less sum hereafter agreed upon" by defendant. The agreement, among others, contained the following provision:

> "This employment and authorization shall continue for a period of four months from the date hereof, and during said time is irrevocable, and shall continue after said time until withdrawn by me by ten days' notice in writing; and I agree to pay to the said Kendrick, Jacoby & Avery, in the event of the sale of said property by said agents, or by any one else, or by myself, while this contract is in force, a commission of seven and one-half (7½) per cent. on the above-named amount as said agent's compensation to service herein, and I further agree that any sum obtained by the said Kendrick, Jacoby & Avery for said lands over and above the amount herein stated may be divided equally between the said Kendrick, Jacoby & Avery and myself. Terms $25,000.00 cash, balance one, two and three years at 6 per cent. In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this 7th day of June, 1912. [Signed] Chas. Hansen."

It is alleged in the complaint that the said firm "spent a great deal of time and much money in an endeavor to secure a purchaser for the said property, and in the course of the endeavors of said copartnership referred many prospective purchasers to defendant herein"; that on or about May 24, 1913, defendant "personally sold the real property hereinabove described, together with the improvements thereon, as plaintiff is informed and believes, for the sum of $107,950, and the purchaser was one who became interested in the purchase of said property through the instrumentality of the said copartnership"; that prior to the commencement of this action for a valuable consideration the said M. E. Jacoby and the said E. E. Avery sold, assigned, and transferred to plaintiff all their right, title, and interest in and to said contract and the proceeds thereof, and the plaintiff is now the owner and holder of said contract; that at the time of the sale above referred to the contract herein set forth between the said copartnership and defendant was in full force and effect, and the same has never been withdrawn. It is then alleged that the commission due plaintiff under the said contract amounts to the sum of $17,262; that plaintiff has demanded payment of the same from defendant, but defendant has refused and still refuses to pay the same or any part thereof.

A general demurrer was overruled, and defendant answered; on information and belief denied the existence of the alleged copartnership, and denied that it was engaged in the business alleged in the complaint; there is an allegation in the answer that the name of the alleged copartnership was fictitious and does not disclose the name or names of the persons interested in said business, and alleged other facts apparently with the view of making the defense that neither the said firm nor the plaintiff, as assignee thereof, could maintain the action; this issue seems to have been abandoned, and need not be further noticed; denied that he entered into the contract set out in plaintiff's complaint; denied on information and belief that the said firm, or any of them, "did a great deal or any work, or spent a great deal or any time or money in an endeavor to secure a purchaser for the property described in said complaint"; denied that he, on the 24th day of May, 1913, or at any time personally or otherwise, sold the said real property described in plaintiff's complaint for any sum or sums greater than $45 per acre, and alleges the fact to be that on said date he sold the said real property for the sum of $45 per acre, "and out of which said sum so received by the said defendant the said defendant received from said sale a sum net to him of $88,458.34 for the said land, and no more"; denied the alleged assignment of said contract by said copartners to plaintiff; denied that at the time of said sale the said contract was in force or effect or at all, and denied that the said contract had not been withdrawn, and alleged in relation thereto that at the time of the sale of said property there was no contract of any kind existing between the said firm, as copartners, individuals, or otherwise, and this defendant, wherein the said copartners or either of them was or were in any way "authorized to sell or to in any way enter into negotiations for the sale of the said land or any part thereof," and denied that the purchaser of said real estate was one who became interested in the purchase thereof through the instrumentality of said alleged copartners; denied that there is any commission due plaintiff; and alleged that there is no commission due of any kind to any one under said contract.

The averments of the answer hereafter to be stated appear as part of the original answer, but it appears by stipulation in connection therewith that in fact these averments were an amendment to the original answer made by leave of court at the time of the trial. By these averments it is alleged that on June 7, 1912, defendant "did authorize the said Kendrick, Jacoby & Avery to sell for the said defendant [then follows a description of the property containing 2,159 acres, more or less], wherein the said defendant agreed to convey the said property," etc., for the sum of $40 per acre setting forth thereafter the provisions of the said contract, and alleging that there was indorsed on said contract as a part thereof, the following: "Expires October 7, 1912"; alleged that during the life of said authorization the said copartnership "waived that portion of the said authorization wherein it was provided that the same should continue after the period of four months until withdrawn by defendant by ten days' notice in writing, and the said defendant agreed to and accepted said waiver, and which said waiver was so made and accepted long prior to the time of the sale of the said land made by the defendant herein, to wit, long prior to the 24th day of May, 1913"; alleged that after the signing of said authorization for the sale of said land, and during the life of the said authorization, the said Kendrick, Jacoby & Avery "did rescind that portion of said authorization providing for the continuance of said authorization, after four months from the date of said authorization 'until withdrawn by defendant by ten days' notice in writing,' and notified this defendant that the said authorization, so made by said defendant to the said Kendrick, Jacoby & Avery for the sale of said land, expired on the 7th day of October, 1912, which said rescission so made was accepted by defendant and so acted upon by defendant with full knowledge on the part of said Kendrick, Jacoby & Avery long prior to the sale of said land by the defendant"; that after the said waiver and rescission above referred to the said Kendrick, Jacoby & Avery "sought to secure of and from the said defendant another authorization for the sale of the said land which the said defendant refused, and has at no time given"; alleged that at the time of said sale by defendant neither of the said partners nor either of them had any contract of any kind for the sale of said lands, and that the only authorization of any kind ever given by defendant to them or either of them for the sale of said land expired on October 7, 1912.

For further answer and as a further defense defendant alleged that at the time the said contract was presented to defendant for his signature he stated to plaintiff that he would not give a longer time than four months within which the said firm would be authorized to sell the said lands, and refused to sign the said agreement because it contained the clause "and shall continue after said time until withdrawn by me by ten days' notice in writing"; that plaintiff represented to defendant that the form of contract presented was one adopted by the members of the real estate association, "and then and there falsely, fraudulently, and for the purpose of deceiving, defrauding, and inducing this defendant to sign the said agreement in form as presented, represented and stated to this defendant that they, Kendrick, Jacoby & Avery only wanted and intended the said agreement to be, and that the said agreement would be, operative for the period of four months from said date, and no longer; that they then had a purchaser for the lands, and if they did not make a sale of said lands within the four months, they would quit and the said agreement was at an end"; alleged that at the time of the making of said statement, plaintiff "had no intention whatever of carrying the same out"; that, relying upon said representations, defendant signed the said agreement but would not have done so if said false and fraudulent statements had not been made; that said false and fraudulent statements were so made by the plaintiff for the purpose of defrauding defendant "and to cause this defendant to rely thereon and for the purpose of having the said agreement extended, in its operation, beyond the said period of four months, and as in the said agreement provided, without the knowledge of this defendant; that by reason of the false and fraudulent representations and statements so made by said plaintiff to this defendant, and in thus securing this defendant to sign and deliver the said agreement as herein set out, the said plaintiff intended to and did perpetrate a fraud upon this defendant, and this defendant was and is defrauded thereby." Wherefore defendant prays that plaintiff take nothing by the action.

The cause was tried by the court with a jury, and a verdict was rendered in favor of plaintiff for $6,477, and judgment was accordingly entered by the court. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

There was evidence sufficient to justify the jury in finding that the contract set out in the complaint was executed by defendant and delivered to the parties therein named as contractees, and that they were then copartners doing business in buying and selling lands as real estate agents; that they were actively engaged from the date of said contract in an endeavor to find a purchaser for said land, and continued their efforts to that end until January or February, 1913; that the copartnership was dissolved as to its business generally about February, 1913, but that the partnership continued, and there were reserved as still part of its unfinished business certain contracts in which each of the partners retained an equal interest, including the contract with defendant; that defendant at no time gave the firm or any of its members written notice that he had withdrawn or desired to terminate said contract, and that on May 24, 1913, he personally sold the land for the consideration of $45 per acre, and, as he alleged in his answer, "out of which sum * * * the defendant received from said sale a net sum to him of $88,458.34, and no more"; that prior to the commencement of the action Jacoby and Avery assigned all their right to and interest in said contract to plaintiff. The defense on which defendant relies arises out of matters set forth in the answer as follows: That the contract bore an indorsement, "and as a part thereof the following, expires 'October 7th, 1912' "; that Kendrick, Jacoby & Avery waived that portion of said contract reading "that the same should continue after the period of four months until withdrawn by defendant by ten days' notice in writing"; that defendant "agreed to and accepted said waiver, which said waiver was so made and accepted long prior to the time of the sale of the said land made by defendant herein, to wit, long prior to the 24th day of May, 1913"; that said Kendrick, Jacoby & Avery rescinded that portion of said contract above referred to during the life of said contract; that after said waiver and rescission and said acceptance the said Kendrick, Jacoby & Avery sought from defendant "another authorization for the sale of said land, which the said defendant refused"; that when said sale was made by defendant said parties had no contract "of any kind for the sale of said lands"; and that the only contract for said sale given to them expired October 7, 1912. The foregoing, together with the special defense added to the answer at the trial, alleging fraud in procuring said contract as hereinbefore set forth, constituted the matters on which defendant relied.

The indorsement on said contract, "expires October 7th, 1912," was explained by the witness Emma C. Harder, who testified:

> "I was clerk in the office, and just put it on as a record for my office work."

It formed no part of the contract. The alleged waiver and rescission rest upon the testimony of defendant as to a conversation which took place between him and Mr. Jacoby by telephone. Defendant testified:

> "I had a conversation with Mr. Jacoby about the 7th or 8th of October, 1912, and he asked me if they came over to see me if I would give them a new contract. He stated that their contract had expired, that they had spent considerable time and money in trying to sell the land, and said to me, 'Will you give us a new contract?' and I replied, 'Mr. Jacoby, I will not give a new contract; I do not want to tie it up any more on those terms.' "

He also testified to a conversation he had with Kendrick and Jacoby at the city of Willows on June 18, 1913, following a letter he had received from Mr. Kendrick of date June 17, 1913, in which the writer referred to the sale defendant had made of the land, and, among other things, it was stated:

> "We are entitled under our contract to full commission upon this sale and request that you make an accounting as to this sale and payment to us for commission without further delay."

Defendant's testimony was that when he met these men the next day Mr. Jacoby said:

> "We don't feel like we are entitled to the full commission, but we feel like we are entitled to something. * * * I said, 'Mr. Jacoby, you admitted to me that that contract expired last fall, and you know you asked me for a new contract, and I refused to give it to you,' or something to that effect."

The testimony of Jacoby and Kendrick was that the renewal referred to in their conversation with defendant, testified to by him, had reference to the four months' clause only.

At the taking of a deposition given by defendant prior to the trial he was shown the contract, copy of which is attached to the complaint, and testified that he recognized it as the contract he had signed; that he read it at that time and was given what purported to be a copy, but "was not an exact copy." He testified at the trial:

> That in his copy the contract stated, "if I found a buyer myself during the four months and made a sale, they should receive only half of that commission; my contract had that in it."

He testified:

> That when he verified his first answer, in which he "admitted the execution of the contract sued on in the exact form as the contract." he overlooked the fact "that they had told me at the time I signed the contract that, if they didn't make a sale within four months, they would quit, and didn't tell my attorney about it. I did not have a copy, and to the best of my knowledge I burned it up after the contract expired. I mean after the 7th day of October."

The testimony of Kendrick and Jacoby was that, when the contract was signed by defendant, there was nothing said about their quitting unless they made a sale in four months. Kendrick testified that, to the best of his recollection, no copy was given to defendant at the time, and Jacoby testified:

> "I don't think there was a copy made. * * * I am almost sure there was no copy. There were no provisions made as to the nonenforcement of the ten days' notice involved in that contract. It wasn't mentioned. There was nothing said with reference to our accepting one-half of the commission if the land was sold by Mr. Hansen during the life of that contract. I was present at the conversation of June 8th in front of the post office, between Mr. Kendrick and Mr. Hansen and myself. I don't think there was anything said at that time about our not being entitled to all of the commission."

As to the conversation over the phone about October 7, 1912, Jacoby testified that all that was said at that time by him, and the reply of defendant was as follows:

> "I called him up and asked him if he would renew the contract, and he said he would not, and I said, 'Why don't you want to sell?' and he said: 'Yes; but I won't renew it at this time,' and I said, 'If that's the case, that is all,' and I hung up. There was nothing said about my coming over there at that time."

[1] Upon all the points relied on by defendant the evidence was conflicting, and there was sufficient to justify the jury in finding that defendant had failed to support the issues presented by his answer above noted.

[2] The assignment of the contract to plaintiff was shown by a written instrument signed by Jacoby and Avery and bears date July 8, 1913. On cross-examination plaintiff testified that he did not remember the date. He testified:

> "The date is on it and shows for itself;" that he talked it over with his partners, and they said "they didn't want to go into this suit." "Q. Then what did you say? (Objected to as irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent, and not cross-examination.) Q. What was said, Mr. Kendrick, by you to your associates relative to this assignment? Same objection. The Court: Same ruling."

We cannot see the materiality of the question. The conversation between the partners at the time the assignment was made was a matter of no concern to defendant. The witness was permitted to testify that the consideration paid by him was $10 each to Jacoby and Avery. No issue was raised as to the bona fides of the assignment, and it was not competent on cross-examination of the witness to show otherwise.

[3] Quite a number of questions were put to witness Kendrick on cross-examination by which it was sought to show what conversation the witness had with defendant at the time the contract was entered into. The court sustained plaintiff's objection thereto, made on the grounds of immateriality, irrelevancy, and incompetency, and not cross-examination. The trial court properly held that conversations had at the time the contract was signed were inadmissible, as also was parol testimony varying the terms of the contract. The effect of the questions was to be determined by their form, and not by defendant's avowal of his intention in asking them.

Defendant's assignment of error No. 10 involves the same principle. The question was on cross-examination of plaintiff, and went to a conversation between him and defendant at the time the contract was entered into. If it was also designed to bring out some fact in support of defendant's averment of fraud, it was not competent to establish it by the cross-examination of plaintiff.

[4] Defendant was a witness in his own behalf. He was asked a number of questions for the purpose of showing what was said by the parties during their negotiations at the time of the making of the contract as to what was told the witness to the effect that, "if they did not make a sale of the land within the period of four months, they would quit, and the agreement would be at an end." Conceding error in sustaining the objection in view of the charge of fraud, it was without prejudice, since the witness afterward was permitted to testify that such statement was made to him, and that he acted on it, and would not have signed the contract had it not been made. On cross-examination also the facts were fully brought out. We have examined the other assignments of error in the admission and rejection of evidence, and have discovered no ruling which we deem prejudicial.

[5] It is contended that the dissolution of the partnership terminated the contract. As the agency created by the contract contemplated that the defendant was entitled to the services of all the partners, the point would have force but for the fact that in the dissolution it was expressly agreed by the partners that the partnership was to continue with respect to certain contracts, among which was the one here involved, and this relation as to it was not changed until the contract was assigned to plaintiff some time after defendant had sold the property.

Error is assigned in giving and refusing certain instructions. By the instruction marked III the jury were told that "the defense of fraud set up by defendant consists of four elements, and you must find, and it is your duty before you can find for defendant on this defense, that each and every of the said four elements must be found in favor of said defendant": (1) That plaintiff, or Jacoby, on behalf of the partners, promised that, if they did not sell the lands within four months from the date of the contract, they would quit and the contract would end; (2) that defendant acted on this promise when he signed the contract; (3) that defendant was induced by reason of the promises alleged to have been made to execute and deliver the contract; (4) that plaintiff has not performed, and had no intention of performing. The objection urged is that the instruction necessarily eliminates any element of fraud other than the four mentioned, whereas it was alleged in the answer that plaintiff and his partners represented to defendant "that they only wanted and intended said agreement to be operative for the period of four months from its date." This very point is fully covered in instructions IV and V, and by other instructions the statutory definition of actual fraud was fully given.

The court instructed the jury that, if they found for plaintiff, their verdict must be for $6,477. It is objected that the instruction "deprived the jury from rendering a judgment for a lesser sum, and deprived the jury from considering evidence before them bearing upon the amount of the verdict." There were 2,159 acres of land in the tract. The agreement was that defendant would pay 7½ per cent. on the sum of $40 per acre. The land sold for more. At $40 per acre, it brought $86,360, and 7½ per cent. of that amount is the sum of $6,477. We think the court intended by the instruction, and that the jury so regarded it, that to find for the plaintiff meant that defendant was liable under the contract sued upon, and in that view no other verdict would have responded to the finding.

[6] The court instructed the jury as follows:

> "It is admitted in this case that defendant executed and delivered to plaintiff here for Kendrick, Jacoby & Avery the contract involved here, plaintiff's Exhibit II, and that said contract has not been revoked or withdrawn in writing, as provided in said contract, prior to the sale by the defendant of the property described in said contract, and such contract could have been revoked without the consent of Kendrick, Jacoby & Avery by such notice in writing at any time after October 7, 1912, but prior to that time said contract could not be withdrawn or revoked by such notice unless accepted by Kendrick, Jacoby & Avery."

The error assigned is that:

> "It instructs the jury generally as to admissions by the language, 'It is admitted in this case,' * * * but, as applicable to defendant, we contend it is erroneous."

Defendant admitted signing the contract when shown him on the witness stand, and he also admitted that it had never been revoked in writing at any time prior to the sale, and the contract shows on its face it could not be revoked prior to October 7, 1912, without the consent of the contractees, but could have been revoked in writing after that date without their consent. We discover no error in the instruction.

The court instructed the jury that no confidential relations existed between defendant and the other parties to the contract when it was made. This conforms to the evidence. The parties dealt at arm's length.

Error is assigned in the court's refusing certain instructions requested by defendant. Instructions XII and XIII, given by the court, we think, fully responded to the instructions refused. Taken in their entirety, the instructions seem to give defendant the benefit of a correct statement of the law upon all involved issues.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

---

35 Cal. App. 518

NUTTING v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al. (Civ. 2391.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 10, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 7, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑513(7)—PROCEEDING FOR ASSESSMENT—REVIEW—EVIDENCE ADMISSIBLE.
Where street opening proceedings were commenced by ordinance, pursuant to Street Opening Act 1903 (St. 1903, p. 376), evidence of proceedings prior to such ordinance would be inadmissible in a suit to have the assessment declared void, unless such evidence tended to establish in connection with other facts proved that the city council willfully and fraudulently overassessed the property of plaintiff.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑513(7)—ASSESSMENTS—REVIEW.
An assessment must be sustained, unless it be proved that the city council refused to decide, upon the merits, objections urged against it, and instead thereof willfully based its order upon illegal considerations inconsistent with an assessment in proportion to benefits, in view of Street Opening Act 1903, § 19, declaring that the action of the city council upon objections to assessments shall be final and conclusive.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑513(7) — STREET IMPROVEMENTS — ASSESSMENTS — VALIDITY—EVIDENCE.
In action to have assessment for expenses of street opening proceeding declared void, enjoin collection, etc., held plaintiff wholly failed to establish that officers of defendant city acted wrongfully and illegally, or that assessment resulted from anything but an honest attempt to make it in proportion to benefits.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by E. M. Nutting against the City of Los Angeles and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Albert Lee Stephens, City Atty., and Charles S. Burnell, Asst. City Atty., both of Los Angeles (Arthur M. Ellis, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellants. E. M. Nutting, of Los Angeles, in pro. per.

CONREY, P. J. Appeal by the defendants from the judgment. By his action the plaintiff seeks to have it determined that an assessment levied against his property to pay expenses of a street-opening proceeding is void, to enjoin the defendants from proceeding to enforce the assessment, and to quiet his title against said assessment. The prayer of his complaint further demands that under and by virtue of section 26a of the Street Opening Act of 1903, as amended (St. 1913, p. 433, § 5), being the act under which the proposed street opening has been conducted, the defendant city of Los Angeles and its officers be directed to prepare and levy a reassessment upon the property within the assessment district, and to levy against the plaintiff's property, known as parcel 39 in said assessment, a total assessment not exceeding the sum of $15,000. The court below determined that the assessment was void, and ordered a reassessment to be made in accordance with certain directions which are contained in the decree.

After the board of public works had reported to the city council its assessment, the plaintiff and others filed their protests, which were duly brought on for hearing before the council. The complaint in this action alleged, and the court found it to be true, that at said hearing the attitude of said council and its members was not fair and impartial, but was biased and prejudiced; that each of the members of the council was then already determined to confirm and ratify the assessment without regard to what protests, evidence, or arguments might be offered at any hearing thereof. The complaint further alleged that prior to the hearing of said protests each and all of the members of the city council and of the members of the board of public works and the clerk of the board of public works had discussed with each other said assessment and the several assessments of the parcels within the assessment district, and had agreed and determined upon "the unjust and unlawful apportionment constituting the said assessment," as the same was thereafter confirmed by the council. Upon this allegation the findings are silent.

The proceedings in question are for the opening, from Tenth street southerly to Eleventh street and from Twelfth street southerly to Pico street, of the street known as Broadway in the city of Los Angeles. Prior to the commencement of these street-opening proceedings, Broadway had been opened as a street from Eleventh street to Twelfth street, and also existed as a principal business street of the city, extending for a long distance northerly from Tenth street. There was also an extension of Broadway from Tenth street southerly to Main street. The proposed new extension of Broadway from Tenth street to Eleventh street forms an acute angle at its northerly end with said pre-existing extension of Broadway connecting with Main street. Main street is a north and south street, one block east of Broadway, which runs approximately parallel to Broadway. The assessment district of these street-opening proceedings includes property on both sides of the proposed new Broadway extension from Tenth to Eleventh and from Twelfth to Pico streets, and also includes lands on each side of Broadway from Eleventh to Twelfth street. Assessments numbered 15 to 37, which are the assessments of the lots fronting on Broadway between Eleventh and Twelfth, charged against those properties an aggregate sum much less in proportion to area and much less in actual amount than the assessments levied against the other portions of the assessment district. Respondent claims that by reason of such underassessment the remaining portions of the district were greatly overassessed.

In conformity with allegations of the complaint, the court found that the parcels 15 to 37 were grossly underassessed; that they were not assessed in proportion to the benefits to be derived from the opening of Broadway; and that each and all of said parcels have been assessed in amounts much less than they would have been respectively assessed if the assessment had been made in proportion to the benefits to be derived by said respective parcels from the opening of Broadway; that parcel No. 39 (property of the plaintiff) as shown on said assessment diagram is not assessed in proportion to the benefit to be derived by it from said opening of Broadway, but is grossly overassessed, and is assessed in said proceeding an amount much in excess of the amount which said parcel 39 would have been assessed had said assessment been made upon each parcel of property in said assessment district in proportion to the benefits to be derived from said opening of Broadway.

All of the foregoing allegations of the complaint referring to the alleged wrongful methods of assessment and the alleged bias, prejudice, and predetermination on the part of the city officers, were denied by the answer of the defendants. The defendants claim here that there is no evidence to sustain the findings as to those issues.

These street-opening proceedings were commenced by an ordinance adopted by the city council on May 27, 1913, whereby the council declared its intention to order the opening of the street between the limits described and to proceed with the matter of said improvement under the provisions of the Street Opening Act of 1903. At the trial of this action the plaintiff was permitted, over the objection of the defendants, to introduce in evidence certain portions of the minutes and records of the city council prior to May 27, 1913. The objection presented was that such minutes and records prior to that date were incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, for the reason that, under the express provisions of the Street Opening Act of 1903, the proceedings are initiated by the adoption of an ordinance of intention, and that nothing done prior to that time is part of those proceedings. By the evidence thus received it was shown that on April 1, 1913, the city council ordered that the city attorney and engineer prepare the necessary ordinance for the opening of Broadway from Tenth to Eleventh street and from Twelfth to Pico street, and that the assessment district should be all the property which would face on the proposed opening between the streets named. On the 15th day of April, 1913, the city council received and referred to the streets and boulevards committee a certain petition, No. 772, which was a petition purporting to be signed by or on behalf of certain owners of property facing on Broadway between Eleventh and Twelfth streets, and wherein the petitioners made the following statement:

> "In the matter of the assessment district to be assessed for the condemnation of land necessary for the proposed opening of Broadway between Tenth and Eleventh streets, and Twelfth and Pico streets, we beg to advise you that we are of the opinion that the property facing on Broadway between Eleventh and Twelfth streets which is dedicated for street purposes by map No. 2289, should be included within the assessment district. We are of the opinion, however, that the assessment which would be levied against the property fronting on said Broadway between Eleventh and Twelfth streets should not bear the same proportion of assessment as that between Tenth and Eleventh, or between Twelfth and Pico, we having dedicated said street to the city free of all incumbrances, and we consider that in making this suggestion that your honorable body will take into consideration this fact when the assessment for the condemnation of said land is being made."

On April 22, 1913, the streets and boulevards committee reported to the council concerning said petition 772, and recommended that the instructions theretofore given the city engineer and city attorney to prepare the necessary ordinances for the opening of Broadway between Tenth and Pico streets be rescinded, and that there be prepared and presented to the council the necessary ordinance of intention for the opening of Broadway from Tenth to Eleventh street and from Twelfth to Pico street in one proceeding; and "that the board of public works in preparing the assessment shall take into consideration the prayer of the petitioners and shall levy the assessment according to petition No. 772." The minutes show that this report as read was adopted, and the "map of the assessment district" was approved. The context shows that this map was merely a map of the proposed assessment district which had been presented with another petition (numbered 789) of property owners within the proposed district.

[1] It should be kept in mind that all of these proceedings which occurred in April, 1913, preceded the ordinance of May 27, 1913, and therefore are not a part of the procedure legally necessary and pertaining to the proceedings under the Street Opening Act of 1903 and upon which the validity of the assessment must depend. The evidence of such preliminary action on the part of the council cannot have any bearing upon the merits of this case, unless it can be maintained that in connection with other facts alleged and proved, it tended to establish the fact that the city council willfully and fraudulently refused to assess property in accordance with benefits received, and that it did willfully and fraudulently overassess the property of the plaintiff in order that it might give credit to other property owners because those owners had previously dedicated for street purposes that portion of Broadway between Eleventh and Twelfth streets. The record is destitute of evidence that petition No. 772 and the approval thereof by the council was ever relied upon or used in any manner by the board of public works or city council in their proceedings conducted pursuant to the ordinance of May 27, 1913, unless it be true that the assessment itself as finally approved by the council furnishes evidence sufficient to establish that it was made and intended to be made upon the basis of such petition and recommendation.

The assessment was made by the board of public works as the law requires. There is no evidence that the board of public works or any person connected with it ever knew anything about petition No. 772 or the recommendations or orders of the city council concerning that petition, to which we have referred. Neither was the board bound to take notice thereof. Viewing the assessment as made by the board of public works, it stands before us the same as if said preliminary proceedings had not existed, and it must be regarded as wholly uninfluenced thereby. When in due time the assessment as made by the board of public works and the protests of the plaintiff and other property owners came on for hearing before the city council, the record shows that the protestants were given a complete hearing. Thereupon the assessment as made by the board of public works was approved by the council without changes, except for the correction of some minor errors which may here be disregarded.

Section 19 of the Street Opening Act of 1903 (Deering's 1915, Gen. Laws, Act No. 3928), which provides for a hearing by the council of objections to the assessment, declares that "the action of the council upon such objections and assessment shall be final and conclusive in the premises." Similar provisions are contained in other street assessment statutes which have been the subject of judicial investigation, wherein the courts of this state have given full recognition to the power of the city council to render "final and conclusive" judgment concerning street assessments. Duncan v. Ramish, 142 Cal. 686, 76 Pac. 661, related to an assessment under the street improvement law commonly known as the Vrooman Act. The proceeding in that case was for grading, graveling, and other street work. Referring to the refusal of the trial court to admit evidence offered for the purpose of proving that the benefits accruing from the improvement of the street were not in excess of the damages caused thereby and also not in excess of the assessment against the lots for the expenses of the improvement, the Supreme Court said:

> "It is true that local assessments are said to be imposed on the theory that the property adjacent to the improvement receives special benefit therefrom. But this is a matter which is for the determination of the legislative authority of the state, acting through its established agencies for the government of political subdivisions, or directly by the Legislature of the state, as that body may see fit. It is enough for the local property owner that he has a right to be heard before the city council upon the question, by filing a petition of remonstrance in the proceeding prescribed by law, setting forth his reasons why the improvement should not be made. Upon this the council must decide the question, and its decision is final."

In United Real Estate Co. v. Barnes, 159 Cal. 243, 113 Pac. 167, the proceeding in question was under the act of March 6, 1889 (Stats. 1889, p. 70), providing for the opening of streets. It was held that the decision made by the council was conclusive upon the plaintiff, and Duncan v. Ramish, supra, was quoted as authority for the decision. Referring to Duncan v. Ramish, the court said:

> "This case, it is true, arose under the Vrooman Act in a proceeding for paving or macadamizing a street, and not under the Street Opening Act. But the legislative power of the state, exercised in both instances by the city council, is the same in one case as in the other, the provisions of the statute as to the proceedings in the council and the conclusive effect of its decisions are substantially the same, and the same principles must apply."

In Cake v. City of Los Angeles, 164 Cal. 705, 130 Pac. 723, the action was one to recover moneys paid by the plaintiff under protest, her contention being that the assessment was void, and also that she was compelled to pay a sum greater than that for which she was legally liable. That proceeding was under the Street Opening Act of 1903. The plaintiff had filed objections to the assessments, which objections were overruled by the city council. Judgment against the plaintiff was affirmed by the Supreme Court. In its decision that court said:

> "Plaintiff's allegation that the assessments upon her two lots were inequitable was a matter upon which she had the right to be heard, and was heard before the council. She makes no charge of fraud in connection with the assessment of her property, and, without such a charge, the determination of the council is final."

Section 26a of the Street Opening Act of 1903 (as added by St. 1913, p. 433, § 5), does not, in our opinion, change the rule, which, as elsewhere stated in that statute, makes the council's decision, when acting within its jurisdiction, "final and conclusive."

[2] It is the necessary effect of these decisions that the assessment challenged in the present case must be sustained unless the facts alleged and proved show that the city council refused to decide upon the merits the objections urged against the assessment, and that instead thereof it willfully based its order upon illegal considerations which were inconsistent with making an assessment in proportion to the benefits to be derived from the improvement, and which in effect amounted to a fraud upon the rights of the plaintiff. It is the contention of the plaintiff, and it is the theory of his action, that these elements of fraud are presented and established in this case, and that in fact there was no "assessment" made, but only an arbitrary imposition. Spring Street Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 170 Cal. 24, 148 Pac. 217, is relied upon as sustaining this contention. That was a proceeding for the widening of Eighth street in the city of Los Angeles. After the board of public works had filed its assessment, protests were entered against it by certain property owners. Upon the hearing of those protests the council ordered that the board of public works file a new assessment, and that a report made to the council by the streets and boulevards committee with reference to the assessment be referred to the board of public works for consideration in making the new assessment. The committee report had recommended "that the lots fronting on Eighth street be assessed the same amount as allowed for land taken, and that the balance of the amount to be raised be assessed equally per front foot on the land fronting on Eighth street." The reference to "amount as allowed for land taken" was to the awards which (in the condemnation suit which had been instituted in connection with the proceedings, as provided by the statute) had been made to the owners of the lots fronting on Eighth street. Thereafter the board of public works prepared the assessment in accordance with the instructions thus received, but presented with such new assessment a report in which it said:

> "We are, however, still of the opinion that the original assessment as made by this board is proper and correct, and beg leave to invite the attention of the honorable council to the several assessments on lots situated in the middle of blocks, and which have been assessed a comparatively small amount in this new assessment, because the amount allowed for land taken was small, whereas these inside lots are benefited more in proportion to the lots on the corners, as they only have the Eighth street frontage."

Protests were filed to this so-called new assessment, urging that it was arbitrary, unjust, excessive, and illegal, but, after hearing, the council confirmed it in toto. In making its decision reversing a judgment which had affirmed the validity of this assessment, the Supreme Court said:

> "The effect of the assessment so made is not and may not be questioned. It canceled every dollar of the $226,000 awarded by the court in the condemnation proceedings for the taking of this private property for a public use, under an implied omnibus finding that the property of every person whose lands fronted on Eighth street was benefited at least to the amount of his award in the condemnation proceedings for the taking of his property, and was also benefited just a little more, that little being the property owner's proportionate share of the expense of the city in the matter of its condemnation proceeding, which additional amount is contemplated by the suggestion contained in the report of the streets and boulevards committee 'that the balance of the amount to be raised be assessed equally per front foot on the land fronting on Eighth street.'"

The Supreme Court held that:

> The assessment was apparently made "in an effort to see just how far the legislative agents and mandatories might go in their taking of private property without compensation, until told by the court that they had passed the outermost bound of law and reason. That bound has been reached and passed by the assessment in this case. It bears upon the face of the record, as here presented, convincing and conclusive evidence that no effort at all was made by the council to assess in proportion to benefits. It is impossible that under the exercise of any discretion in the matter it could be found that in every case the damage awarded by the court for the taking of the property was exactly or more than covered by the benefit which would accrue to the remaining property by the widening of the street. And it is also impossible that those separate pieces of property were, in addition, each one of them, benefited to the exact added amount which it cost the city to take the condemned land. It is to strain credulity beyond the breaking point to ask that any such belief be for a moment entertained. * * * We believe the assessment here in question to be so manifestly and so grossly unjust upon the face of this record as to call for no extended argument for its condemnation. It was not even the quasi judicial act of the board intrusted with the duty of making the assessment, the board of public works. That board apparently entered upon the performance of its duty with a due sense of responsibility justly pertaining to its judicial character. If the communication of the city council to them was a command, they felt compelled to obey it in the matter of the new assessment, and did so under formal protest. If it was not a command, but merely a suggestion, then it was a suggestion of which their judgment did not approve, and their disapproval of which they formally expressed. * * * We hold that the record here presented furnishes convincing evidence that the assessment was ordered prepared without the slightest exercise of judicial discretion, and so unwarrantedly, arbitrarily, and unjustly as to work a confiscation of the property, and to be, therefore, in no legal sense an assessment at all."

We have examined in detail the many items of assessment shown by the record in this case and the extended arguments thereon by respondent, wherein he contends that the amounts of the several assessments as compared with each other are so extremely and absurdly unreasonable as to compel the conclusion that the council did not exercise judgment according to law upon the matters presented for its consideration, and that instead thereof, the council willfully based its decision upon illegal grounds. So far as the merits of the assessment are concerned, it may be that, if the justices of this court were authorized to act as a court of direct appeal, they would order that the assessment be modified in some of the instances presented. But it is not enough that we might differ with the members of the city council, or that the judge of the trial court did so differ, as to the reasonableness of some of the items in question. Those are matters about which the minds of reasonable men might reasonably differ. That being so, the court may not interfere with that judgment of the city council which the law has declared to be "final and conclusive."

One or two instances will further illustrate the nature of plaintiff's contentions. The total amount of the assessment is $1.210,038.00. Of this large sum $299.544.00 are charged against the south block, $702.968.45 against the north block, and $207,525.55 against the middle block. The several assessments in the middle block are exactly equal to each other for each and every foot of frontage in that block. The assessments in the two other blocks bear to each other no such relation of equality with respect to frontage. Can there be reasons which in the minds of fair and reasonable men might justify these diversities in amounts of assessment as between the owners of the middle block fronting upon a section of Broadway as already established and the owners of the two other blocks which are to receive new street frontage by the opening of Broadway? Undoubtedly the assessing officers had the right to take into consideration the fact that one block will not, and that the remaining blocks will, receive an entirely new street frontage; that the benefit to the middle block must arise merely from the development of the entire thoroughfare by reason of the new extension thereof; that no new corner lots are created in the middle block, and that the lots in that block are of equal depth. Many diversities of condition apparently affect the other blocks which do not exist in the middle block. Conceding, as we readily may, that the owners of the middle block were not entitled to have their assessments reduced on account of any previous dedication of land which they may have made for street purposes, the evidence produced to the court was insufficient to prove that such illegal credit was given in the assessments as made.

The record in this case cannot be paralleled with the Spring Street Co. Case, supra, as constituting an attempt to absorb by assessment charges the awards of damage which had been made to the several parties for portions of land condemned for Broadway street purposes. It is true that some of the assessments are for amounts exceeding the awards made, but there is such diversity in the amounts charged and in the reasonably possible causes in operation, that the amounts of the assessments furnish no evidence of a sinister purpose to enlarge assessments so as to overcome large awards of damages. Assessment No. 5, in the south block, against Anna M. Murphy, is 12 times the amount of damages awarded to her. Assessment No. 7, against Fitzwilliams, is less than twice his damages awarded. Assessments 47 to 50, against the Rindge Company are only one-third of that company's damages awarded. Assessment No. 39, against the plaintiff in this action, amounts to nearly 2½ times the award allowed for taking of the owner's adjoining property and for damages to this assessed property. These differences may be accounted for by a variety of possible reasons having reference to areas, frontages, values, and relative situations of the several parcels. The actual reasons which guided the minds of the assessors in reaching their conclusions upon the question of benefits received are beyond our range of inquiry. It is enough that, with regard to the relation between assessments and awards, the court may not say here, as was said under the facts shown in the Spring Street Co. Case, that the process of assessment was vitiated by a deliberate purpose to assess according to damages awarded, and not in proportion to the benefits to be derived from the opening of the street.

[3] According to our opinion, the record wholly fails to establish the charge that the officers of the city acted in these matters wrongfully and illegally in their proceedings, or that the assessment has resulted from anything other than an honest and fair attempt on their part to make the assessment in proportion to the benefits received and as the law requires.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

35 Cal. App. 807

FITZWILLIAM v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al. (Civ. 2425.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 10, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 7, 1918.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by Patrick Fitzwilliam against the City of Los Angeles and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Albert Lee Stephens, City Atty., and Charles S. Burnell, Asst. City Atty., both of Los Angeles (Arthur M. Ellis, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellants. Stephens & Stephens, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action was tried together with No. 2391, Nutting v. City of Los Angeles et al., 170 Pac. 680, in which the decision of this court was filed to-day; the two cases being tried upon the same evidence. The opinion written in the Nutting Case covers all of the questions which we find it necessary to determine in this case. Upon the authority of that decision, the judgment appealed from herein is reversed.

35 Cal. App. 808

MURPHY et al. v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al. (Civ. 2467.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 10, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 7, 1918.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by Alvina M. Murphy and another against the City of Los Angeles and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Albert Lee Stephens, City Atty., and Charles S. Burnell, Asst. City Atty., both of Los Angeles (Arthur M. Ellis, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellants. Hanson, Hackler & Heath, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This action was tried together with No. 2391, Nutting v. City of Los Angeles et al., 170 Pac. 680, in which the decision of this court was filed to-day; the two cases being tried upon the same evidence. The opinion written in the Nutting Case covers all of the questions which we find it necessary to determine in this case. Upon the authority of that decision, the judgment appealed from herein is reversed.

35 Cal. App. 809

RINDGE CO. v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al. (Civ. 2468.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 10, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 7, 1918.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by the Rindge Company against the City of Los Angeles and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Albert Lee Stephens, City Atty., and Charles S. Burnell, Asst. City Atty., both of Los Angeles (Arthur M. Ellis, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellants. Edw. F. Wehrle, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action was tried together with No. 2391, Nutting v. City of Los Angeles et al., 170 Pac. 680, in which the decision of this court was filed to-day; the two cases being tried upon the same evidence. The opinion written in the Nutting Case covers all of the questions which we find it necessary to determine in this case. Upon the authority of that decision, the judgment appealed from herein is reversed.

177 Cal. 404

PEOPLE v. MILLER. (Cr. 2100.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 1, 1918. Rehearing Denied Feb. 28, 1918.)

1. Criminal Law 🔑231—Failure to Read Formal Parts of Complaint—Reversible Error.

Where in compliance with Pen. Code, § 864, the committing magistrate read the whole charging part of a complaint to defendant at the preliminary hearing, that the formal parts thereof, as well as the name of accused, were not read, could not prejudice any substantial rights of accused.

2. Jury 🔑108—Qualifications—Scruples against Death Penalty.

In a prosecution for murder in the first degree, the state's challenge to a juror having conscientious scruples against inflicting the death penalty and who stated that he would not vote to convict, if conviction was to be followed by the death penalty, was properly granted.

3. Criminal Law 🔑1035(3) — Appeal — Remarks of Court Not Objected to.

That the court, during the questioning of a juror on voir dire, expressed doubt as to the propriety of questioning as to whether the fact that defendant was colored would affect the juror's judgment, and remarked that he was not absolutely clear whether, when other things are absolutely equal, color should not be permitted to weigh, will not be considered on appeal, where defendant made no objection to the remark or request for admonition to the veniremen present to disregard remark.

4. Criminal Law 🔑1166½(12)—Remarks of Judge—Cure by Instructions.

The alleged prejudicial effect of such remark, if any, was cured by an instruction of the court that: "The law knows no creed or condition, no color, no nationality; every defendant, whatever his race, color or condition, whether he be rich or poor, high or low, stands equal before the law and should be tried with perfect impartiality."

5. Criminal Law 🔑823(14)—Instruction—Reasonable Doubt.

Where the court instructed that the jury must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt, and fully explained the meaning of the term reasonable doubt, no prejudice could result from an instruction to the effect that defendant's guilt might be established by proof of facts and circumstances from which it might be reasonably and satisfactorily inferred.

6. Homicide 🔑340(2) — Instructions Not Applicable—Harmless Error.

An instruction that, "when the killing is proved, it devolves upon the defendant to show any circumstances in mitigation to excuse or justify the homicide by evidence on his part," conformed to Pen. Code, § 1105, and, although inapplicable because the killing was denied and no mitigating circumstances were shown or suggested no possible injury could result to defendant from the giving thereof.

7. Criminal Law 🔑625 — Submission of Question of Insanity.

Where no affidavits were offered in support of motion after trial for an order inquiring into accused's insanity, and no evidence was introduced at the trial in support of a defense based on insanity, the motion was properly denied under Pen. Code, § 1368, providing that, if doubt arises as to the insanity of defendant, the court must order the matter submitted to the jury and suspend the pronouncement of judgment until the question is determined.

8. Criminal Law 🔑404(3) — Weapon — Admissibility.

The admissibility of a gun found at or near the place designated by accused was unaffected by failure to establish that the bullets causing decedent's death corresponded to the caliber of the gun.

9. Homicide 🔑253(1) — First Degree Murder—Sufficiency of Evidence.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction for first degree murder.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Merle J. Rogers, Judge.

Fred Miller was convicted of first degree murder and appeals from the judgment and an order denying his motion for new trial. Affirmed.

Orr & Gardner, of Ventura, for appellant. Don G. Bowker, of Ventura, U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Robert M. Clarke, Asst. Atty. Gen., and Robert B. Camarillo, of Los Angeles, for the People.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. Following defendant's conviction upon an information charging him with the crime of murder in the first degree he was sentenced to execution as provided by law. From the judgment so pronounced and an order denying his motion for a new trial he appeals.

In the summer of 1915 defendant, who is a colored man, went to the village of Simi in Ventura county, where he was employed as a laborer, and for some time lived in a tent adjoining the home of a young girl named Josephine Rodrigues who lived with her grandmother, Adela Rodrigues, and a younger sister. In February, 1917, he was employed upon highway work, during which time he lived alone in a tent located some eight miles distant from Simi at a place called Hassan. On March 10th, while living at Hassan, he wrote a letter to Josephine Rodrigues, then 16 years of age, and gave it to a boy instructing him to deliver it to her. In this letter, which, however, never reached Josephine, he expressed a strong affection for her and stated that he had heard she was going to marry another person and therein made veiled threats of bodily injury to her if she married any one other than himself. On the night of March 10th Josephine, her sister, and her grandmother, Adela Rodrigues, all of whom occupied one bedroom in their home, retired, leaving, as was their custom, a lighted lamp turned low. Soon after 12 o'clock that night Adela was awakened by a noise in the room and discovered a man with a cloth mask over his face standing near her bed. Receiving no reply to her call "Who are you?" she grasped the mask, pulled it down from his face to a point, as she states, below his nose, at which time the wearer thereof, using a razor, cut her hand and also her face, and then, turning from her to the bed occupied by Josephine, he fired three shots from a pistol, two of which entered her head, causing her death and then left the house. The cries of the grandmother aroused the neighbors, who, upon information given by her as to the identity of the perpetrator of the crime, proceeded in an auto to defendant's camp at Hassan, eight miles distant, arriving there approximately at 2:30 a. m. They found no one at the tent occupied by defendant and received no response to the calls made for him in the vicinity. A short time thereafter another party seeking his apprehension arrived and found defendant in the tent. His shoes and clothes were damp and covered with mud, indicating that he had recently been walking in the wet grass and weeds. During the time that defendant lived in the tent adjoining the home of Adela Rodrigues she had often seen him pass the house, and in positive and unequivocal terms she identified him as the man who entered her room, assaulted her with the razor, and fired the shots which killed Josephine.

No evidence whatsoever was offered by defendant in response to that adduced by the prosecution, thus unerringly pointing to him as the perpetrator of the atrocious deed. Nevertheless, we are asked to reverse the judgment upon the ground of alleged errors whereby it is claimed the accused was prejudiced in his substantial rights.

1. At the preliminary examination the magistrate, in reading the complaint upon which the warrant of arrest was made, as required by section 864 of the Penal Code, omitted the formal parts thereof, as well as the name of the complainant. Supported by such fact defendant moved the court to set aside the information upon the ground that he had not been legally committed. The denial of the motion is assigned as error. It appears that enough of the complaint was read to fully inform defendant of the charge against him, all the details thereof as stated in the complaint—the whole charging part of the complaint being read.

[1] Clearly, it cannot be held under these circumstances that the omission to more precisely comply with the requirements of the section in any way prejudiced any substantial right of the defendant.

[2] 2. It appeared from the testimony of F. W. Burnell, called for examination as a juror, that he had conscientious scruples against inflicting the death penalty, because in his opinion no sane man would take the life of a fellow being, and, even though as a juror convinced that defendant committed the murder as charged, he would not vote to convict if his conviction was to be followed by judgment of death. The showing made on his voir dire disclosed that Burnell was clearly disqualified to act as a juror, since he had conscientious scruples against following the plain mandate of the law. The challenge interposed by the prosecution was properly granted.

[3, 4] 3. While questioning a proposed juror on his voir dire, counsel for defendant inquired of him whether the fact that defendant was of the colored race would in any way affect his judgment in passing upon his guilt or innocence. Thereupon the court expressed doubt as to the propriety of the question and as to the weight to be accorded conflicting evidence between a white and a colored witness and said:

> "Where all other things are equal, the jury has to decide one way or the other on the question of credibility. If every other thing is absolutely equal, he has to decide one way or the other, and I am not altogether clear that in such a case the shadow of color should not be permitted to weigh."

Defendant claims that this remark was prejudicial because made in the presence of other veniremen. Such fact, however, is not disclosed. Conceding the impropriety of the statement and that it was made, as claimed by defendant, in the presence of those thereafter called as jurors, no objection was made thereto, and no request made by appellant to admonish the veniremen present to disregard the remark. As stated in People v. Kramer, 117 Cal. 651, 49 Pac. 842:

> "The defendant cannot remain silent and take the chance of a favorable issue, and, losing, urge as ground for reversal an error, which, but for his silence, might never have found its way into the case."

Moreover, the alleged error and the prejudicial effect thereof, if any existed, was cured by an instruction to the jury as follows:

> "You are further instructed, gentlemen, that the law knows no creed or condition, no color, no nationality; every defendant, whatever his race, color, or condition, whether he be rich or poor, high or low, stands equal before the law, and should be tried with perfect impartiality."

[5] 4. The court instructed the jury to the effect that they must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt, and thoroughly and fully explained to the jury the meaning of the term "reasonable doubt," and hence no prejudice could have resulted from an instruction to the effect that defendant's guilt might be established by proof of facts and circumstances from which it may be reasonably and satisfactorily inferred.

[6] 5. Complaint is made that the court erred in instructing the jury with reference to evidence of circumstances in mitigation of the offense, and particularly in stating to the jury that:

> "When the killing is proved it devolves upon the defendant to show any circumstances in mitigation to excuse or justify the homicide by evidence on his part."

The instruction clearly conforms to the provision contained in section 1105, Penal Code. People v. Wilt, 173 Cal. 483, 160 Pac. 561. While inapplicable to the case for the reason that no circumstances of mitigation or excuse are shown or even suggested, the defense being a denial of the killing by the accused, no possible injury therefrom could result to defendant. People v. Tapia, 131 Cal. 647, 63 Pac. 1001.

6. The giving of two instructions complained of, one of which is identical with that given in People v. Rogers, 163 Cal. 476, and set forth on page 483 of said volume (126 Pac. 143), and the other a copy of an instruction given in People v. Valencia, 32 Cal. App. 631, and found on page 633 of said volume (103 Pac. 865), were therein fully considered and approved. No purpose can be served by reiterating what is said upon the subject in the opinions referred to. Suffice it to say the court did not err in so instructing the jury.

7. And, likewise, what is said by this court in People v. Worden, 113 Cal. 574, 45 Pac. 844, is a complete answer to appellant's contention that the failure of the court to give to the jury a form of verdict finding the defendant guilty of murder in the second degree was prejudicial error. Here, as there, the case was tried upon the theory that the defendant did not commit the acts with which he was charged. Here, as there, the court properly instructed the jury as to what constituted murder in the second degree. Here, as there, the court failed to give the jury such form of verdict and in neither case was any request made therefor by the defendant.

8. In the light of the entire evidence we have carefully examined lengthy instructions requested by defendant, and in so far as they embodied proper questions for the consideration of the jury the subjects thereof are fully covered by instructions elsewhere given.

[7] 9. It is next claimed that the court should have granted defendant's motion made after trial for an order inquiring into the sanity of the defendant. No affidavits were offered in support of the motion, and no evidence was introduced on the trial in support of a defense based upon the insanity of defendant. Section 1368 of the Penal Code provides that if a doubt arises as to the sanity of the defendant the court must order the question submitted to a jury and suspend the pronouncing of judgment until the question is determined. There is nothing disclosed by the record showing any doubt in the mind of the court, nor indeed is there anything which could be deemed calculated to raise such doubt as to defendant's sanity, in the absence of which no reason existed requiring the court to submit the question to a jury. People v. Hettick, 126 Cal. 425, 58 Pac. 918; People v. Pico, 62 Cal. 60; People v. Kirby, 15 Cal. App. 269, 114 Pac. 794.

10. Upon the ground that it was involuntarily made, the court excluded from evidence a purported confession of the defendant made on March 12th. Over defendant's objection upon the ground that it was sought thereby to elicit evidence of an admission not voluntarily made but obtained as the result of persistent questioning of the defendant on the preceding day, when the confession so excluded was made, the undersheriff was permitted to testify that on the morning of March 13th, he met the defendant and asked him what he did with the gun after the shooting, to which defendant replied that he—

> "put the gun on the other side of the bridge at Simi about halfway between the bridge and the culvert down on the right-hand side on a sloping bank in some weeds."

It further appeared that a gun was found at or near the place described by the defendant, which, over defendant's objection that it was not shown to have any connection with the crime, was received in evidence. The two rulings are assigned as error. The action of the court in permitting the answer of defendant was based upon the fact that the persistent interrogating of defendant the preceding day, the purpose of which, as shown by the record, was to ascertain why he committed the crime, did not then operate upon his mind or influence him in telling where he placed the gun after the shooting. In other words, there was no causal connection between the answer given to the undersheriff and the means which on the preceding day induced the making of the confession, the nature of which is not shown. If defendant, on March 13th, in making the answer to the undersheriff, was free from any influence due to the persistent interrogation on the preceding day, the statement was voluntary. The trial court so determined, and there is nothing in the record upon which we can say it erred in so doing.

[8] As to whether the revolver received in evidence was the one with which the killing was done admits of doubt, but the objection to its reception in evidence goes to the weight of such evidence rather than to its admissibility. Conceding that if such was the fact and the proof at hand it should have been shown that the bullets causing decedent's death corresponded to the caliber of the gun, nevertheless, the admissibility thereof in evidence is unaffected by the failure to establish such fact.

[9] The record discloses no prejudicial misconduct on the part of the district attorney. The rulings of the court were eminently fair, and the uncontradicted evidence, both direct and circumstantial, were such that it is impossible to conceive of a verdict other than that rendered by the jury.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; SLOSS, J.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.

177 Cal. 341

SALINE VALLEY SALT CO. et al. v. WHITE et al. (L. A. 5364.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 28, 1918.)

Time 🔑10(1) — Stockholders' Annual Meeting—Time of Holding—By-Law and Statute — Holidays — "Provided to be Done."

An annual meeting of a corporation fixed by its by-laws for a certain day is something "provided to be done" on that day, within Civ. Code Ariz. 1913, par. 3287, providing that whenever anything of a secular nature is provided or agreed to be done on a day named, and the day falls on a holiday, it may be performed on the next ensuing business day with like effect as though performed on the appointed day; so that such day falling on Sunday, a meeting on the following Monday, in pursuance of a notice by the secretary, acting on the president's order, and attended by nineteen-twentieths of the stockholders, should be considered the lawful regular annual meeting, rather than a meeting secretly held on the Sunday, though the by-law providing that all stockholders' meetings shall be regularly called by the secretary, provides that failure to give notice of the regular annual meeting shall not invalidate its proceedings.

In Bank. Original proceedings by the Saline Valley Salt Company and others against John D. White and others for writ of mandate. Writ granted by District Court of Appeal, and case transferred to Supreme Court. Writ denied.

George J. Denis, Oliver O. Clark, and Claud B. Andrews, all of Los Angeles, for petitioners. Fred N. Arnoldy and J. W. Hocker, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. An original application for a writ of mandate was made to the District Court of Appeal of the Second Appellate District, and after a hearing a peremptory writ was granted in accordance with the prayer of the petition. Afterwards the matter was transferred to this court.

In the opinion of the learned District Court of Appeal the essential facts and one of the principal questions are set forth as follows:

> "In this proceeding the petitioners seek to compel the delivery to them by the respondents of the papers and records of petitioner corporation. The controversy is between rival sets of persons asserting, respectively, that they are the officers and directors of the corporation. The petitioners other than the corporation claim to have been elected directors at a meeting of the stockholders held June 10, 1917. At the time of the meeting the outstanding capital stock of the corporation was 1,000,000 shares and the presence of the holders of a majority of the shares, either in person or by proxy, was necessary to constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. At the meeting there were present 97,381 shares by their owners and 480,408 shares by proxy, or a total of 577,789 shares. At the time all the proxies were issued, the holders of which were at the meeting, the by-laws of the corporation provided that 'stockholders may vote at all meetings either in person or by proxy appointed by instrument in writing subscribed by the stockholder or his duly authorized attorney, and granted not more than thirty days before the meeting, which shall be named therein.' Proxy holders at the meeting held proxies then more than thirty days old representing 286,652 shares. If these proxies had expired, the number of shares present at the meeting was 291,137, instead of 577,789; the meeting was not a legal one, for lack of a quorum, and the petitioners have no standing in this proceeding. The petitioner corporation is a creature of the laws of Arizona, and the Constitution of that state guarantees to stockholders the right to be represented by proxy at corporate meetings. The petitioners concede that an Arizona corporation may by its by-laws regulate the exercise of the right to vote by proxy, but contend that a by-law limiting the life of proxies to a period of thirty days is not a regulation, but, in effect, a destruction of the right."

Upon this question the court agreed with the contention of the petitioners, basing that conclusion upon the authority of People's Bank v. Superior Court, 104 Cal. 649, 38 Pac. 452, 29 L. R. A. 844, 43 Am. St. Rep. 147, wherein a by-law which provided that no proxy should be voted by any one not a stockholder was held to declare an unreasonable rule and one of no force. Upon the analogy of that decision it was decided that the by-law here considered was unjust and void; the court saying:

> "To limit the life of a proxy to thirty days is unreasonable. Such a limitation serves to disfranchise a stockholder sojourning abroad and it might even have such an effect upon one traveling from place to place in this country. Under such a rule a tourist stockholder would be bound not only to mail from the antipodes, if he happened to be there, separate proxies for all stated meetings of the stockholders of his corporation, but he might very easily be deprived of the right to vote at special meetings held on hurried call as occasion for them might from time to time arise. If there exist a right to fix the life of a proxy through by-law provision at all, that life cannot be fixed at so short a period as thirty days."

Without giving our assent to this conclusion but for the purposes of this opinion conceding its correctness, nevertheless we feel compelled to disagree with our Brethren of the District Court of Appeal in the conclusion reached by them regarding the regularity of this meeting. The principal facts relating to the meetings are well stated in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal as follows:

> "The meeting at which the petitioner directors claim to have been elected was held on Sunday, June 10, 1917. The by-laws of the petitioner corporation contain the following provisions: 'The annual meeting of the stockholders, after the year 1903, shall be held on the 10th day of June in each year at 10 o'clock a. m., and the secretary shall give notice thereof without being specially requested so to do. * * * Special meetings of the stockholders shall be called by the secrtary at the written request of the president, or two directors, or of stockholders of record owning a third of the stock issued and outstanding. All stockholders' meetings, whether annual or special, shall be called by the secretary by mailing a printed or written notice thereof, stating the day, hour and place of the meeting; and, in case of special meetings, the general nature of the business to be transacted, to each stockholder of record at his last-known post office address, postage prepaid, at least five days, exclusive of the day of mailing, before the date of the meeting. * * * A failure to give the notice for the regular annual meeting shall not invalidate the proceedings of the meeting. * * *' The respondents claim to be directors and officers of petitioner corporation by virtue of an election had at a meeting of the stockholders held Monday, June 11, 1917, at the same place at which the meeting of Sunday, June 10th, convened. There is no law of Arizona which prohibits the holding of stockholders' meetings on Sundays, but paragraph 3287 of the Civil Code of that state provides: 'Whenever anything of a secular nature other than a work of necessity or charity, is provided or agreed to be done upon a day named, or within a time named, and the day or the last day thereof falls on a holiday, it may be performed on the next ensuing business day with like effect as though performed on the appointed day.' On May 8, 1917, the secretary of petitioner corporation, acting at the request of its president, mailed to the stockholders a notice calling the annual meeting for June 11th. The notice stated that the by-laws required the meeting to be held on June 10th, recited the fact that the day would fall on a Sunday, and stated that on that account and 'in accordance with the law of Arizona provided in such instances,' the meeting would be held on the 11th."

The by-laws, although providing that the failure of the secretary to call a regular meeting shall not prevent the holding of such a meeting, also provide that, "All stockholders' meetings, whether annual or special, shall be called by the secretary." Learning that the regular date of the annual meeting would fall on a Sunday the secretary conferred with four of the directors, and was by them advised to make the call for Monday instead of Sunday. One of his advisers was Mr. Penn, now one of the petitioners in this proceeding, who after so assenting to the call of a regular meeting on Monday instead of Sunday afterwards met on June 10th with three other stockholders, without notice to the secretary and under circumstances indicating a wish that their actions should not become known to other stockholders not in sympathy with their ambitions. It is shown that these men stood by and without protest permitted the secretary to send out notices as prescribed by the by-ways calling the regular meeting for the 11th instead of the 10th. It is shown by the affidavit of the secretary that petitioner Penn not only advised the calling of the meeting on Monday, but approved a copy of the call for that meeting which was submitted to him by the secretary. It is a principle of corporation law that participation by an officer in issuing the call is a waiver by him of informalities in such call. Cook on Corporations, § 599. Therefore as to Mr. Penn in any view of the matter it may be said that he is not in a position to complain of the actions of the secretary nor the action of the stockholders at the called meeting. It is also a rule that only a stockholder whose rights have been infringed and who is equitably entitled to complain may question an election. Cook on Corporations, § 620. Generally speaking, the annual stockholders' meeting for the election of officers need not be held on the day named in the by-laws, but may be held on a later day. Cook on Corporations, § 595; People ex rel. Miller v. Cummings, 72 N. Y. 433; Hughes v. Parker, 20 N. H. 58.

All of the stockholders now petitioning took part in the meeting on the 11th of June and in the election there held. Some of them took part in the organization of that meeting. The minutes show the following proceedings at the very opening of the meeting of Monday:

> "By Mr. Smith: I move that Mr. Penn act as chairman of the annual meeting of the Saline Valley Salt Company in the absence of the president, and Mr. White Smith as temporary secretary.
>
> "The motion, being seconded by J. A. Foote, was put and declared to be unanimously carried."

All of the acts of the petitioners in the premises were inconsistent with good faith and fair dealing toward their associates, and we are convinced that this court should not contribute to the success of their purported election, unless convinced that they were acting within their clear rights under the law. Petitioners insist that they were so acting, and rely principally upon the authority of Cheney v. Canfield, 158 Cal. 342, 111 Pac. 92, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 16, for support of their contention in that behalf. It was decided in that case that section 11 of the Civil Code of California does not apply to a meeting of a board of directors, the time whereof is fixed by the by-laws of a corporation. But that case is not controlling as to the effect of section 3287 of the Civil Code of Arizona on the same subject. The decision in Cheney v. Canfield was based on the proposition that by-laws of a corporation do not come within the designation of the term "law or contract," as used in section 11 of the Civil Code. That section provides that:

> "Whenever any act of a secular nature * * * is appointed by law or contract to be performed upon a particular day, which day falls upon a holiday, it may be performed upon the next business day, with the same effect as if it had been performed upon the day appointed."

It may be conceded for the purposes of the case that that decision is correct in holding that the by-laws of a corporation do not constitute a contract in the meaning of section 11. The general rule is that such by-laws do constitute a contract between the stockholders of the corporation. Riverside Land Co. v. Jarvis, 163 Pac. 59; Lum v. American Wheel, etc., Co., 165 Cal. 661, 133 Pac. 303, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 816. But however this may be, the Arizona statute does not use the words "law or contract." It declares:

> "Whenever anything of a secular nature other than a work of necessity or charity is provided, or agreed to be done upon a day named, or within a time named, and the day or the last day thereof falls on a holiday, it may be performed on the next ensuing business day with like effect as though performed on the appointed day."

It will be seen that this rule applies to all cases where anything of a secular nature, not a work of necessity or charity, is provided or agreed to be done upon a day named, regardless of the manner in which the time is fixed. Certainly a meeting fixed by the bylaws of a corporation for a certain day was something "provided to be done" on the day fixed, and could therefore be lawfully done on the following day if the day fixed were a holiday. This being the case, the meeting of June 11th, held as it was in pursuance of a notice by the secretary, acting on the president's order, that the regular day was a holiday, and that therefore the meeting would be held on the following day, and attended as it was by the holders of more than nineteen-twentieths of the stock, should be considered in law as the lawful, regular annual meeting of the stockholders. Therefore the petitioners have no ground for the mandate prayed for.

The writ is denied.

177 Cal. 378

SOUTHERN PAC. CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

(S. F. 8418.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 30, 1918. Rehearing Denied Feb. 28, 1918.)

1. Master and Servant 🔑405(4) — Workmen's Compensation Act—Work in Scope of Employment — Sufficiency of Evidence.

In proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 279) for death of an employé of a rolling mill, evidence held to show that the work of the employé and another, in getting suitable rock out of a car when there was none in the bin in which it was commonly stored for their use, was within the scope of his duty under his employment, as the rolling mill, through its agents, had permitted that duty to be made known to him.

2. Master and Servant 🔑417(7) — Workmen's Compensation Act — Review of Award by Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court, in reviewing an award of the Industrial Accident Commission, is not acting as a court of appeal, and has no power to weigh the effect of positive evidence, but must assume that the commission believed all the evidence given which tends to sustain the award.

3. Master and Servant 🔑417(7) — Workmen's Compensation Act — Review of Award by Supreme Court—Inconsistency in Findings.

The Supreme Court, in reviewing awards of the Industrial Accident Commission, has no power to annul an award because the findings are inconsistent; and, if there are findings which sustain the award, other findings inconsistent therewith, and which, if taken alone, might serve to annul it, will not be available for that purpose.

4. Master and Servant 🔑417(7) — Workmen's Compensation Act — Review of Award by Supreme Court—Findings.

Under Workmen's Compensation Act, § 84, authorizing the Supreme Court to annul an award of the Industrial Accident Commission only when the commission acted without or beyond its powers, or when the award was procured by fraud, or is unreasonable, or when the findings of fact do not support it, the findings of the commission are not subject to review, except in so far as they may have been made without any evidence whatever in support.

In Bank. Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Alice A. Hunt, for compensation for the death of William M. Hunt, the employé, opposed by the Southern Pacific Company, the employer. Compensation was awarded by the Industrial Accident Commission, and, to review the award, the employer applies for writ of review. Writ discharged, and proceeding dismissed.

Henley C. Booth and A. L. Clark, both of San Francisco, for petitioner. C. M. Bradley, of San Francisco, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is a proceeding to review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission allowing compensation to Alice A. Hunt for the death of William M. Hunt, a fireman employed by petitioner. It is claimed that the accident which caused the death of Hunt did not arise out of his employment or occur while he was engaged therein.

The petitioner was operating a rolling mill at Sacramento. In that work it was necessary to heat pieces of iron preparatory to rolling the same. This was done in a furnace, and to keep the iron in proper place for the application of the heat, rock was piled in the bottom of the furnace and the iron was placed thereon. The rock for this purpose was kept in a bin just outside the rolling mill. Adjacent to this bin, but outside of the rolling mill yard, was a railroad track, used for the purpose of carrying the rock to the bin. Between the railroad track and the bin there was a fence 5½ feet high, inclosing the rolling mill yard. The duty of Hunt under his employment was to take a sufficient amount of rock out of the bin and put it into the furnace, in order that the iron might be placed on the rock while it was being heated. He was a night workman. On the night of his death he was engaged in his work, and it was found that the rock then in the bin was too small to be suitable for the purpose. A carload of rock stood upon the track outside ready for unloading into the bin. It was not usually the duty of Hunt to unload this rock into the bin, or to go outside of the yard and get the rock out of the cars. On this occasion, however, he and the other man working with him, finding no suitable rock in the bin, went upon the car and threw the rock from it into the bin, preparatory to carrying it into the furnace. While so engaged, a runaway car came down the track, collided with the car containing the rock, with the result that Hunt was thrown to the ground and killed.

The commission made findings and an award after hearing the evidence. Finding 2 states that the injury to Hunt occurred while he was "performing service growing out of and incidental" to his employment, and while he was engaged in taking rock from the car on the track adjoining the mill for the purpose of using the same in the line of his duty. Finding 3 states that it was a part of the duty of Hunt to procure the rock and place the same in the furnace as a bed therein; that it was not the usual or habitual duty of Hunt and those engaged with him to unload rock from the car into the bin or to procure rock except from the bin, or to go upon a car containing the rock and unload the same; that at the time of the injury there was not a sufficient quantity of suitable rock in the bin, and there was such rock in the car alongside, ready to be unloaded into the bin; that Hunt and his associates, to avoid delay in the work, got upon the car for the purpose of procuring suitable rock to keep the furnace going, and threw off pieces of rock therefrom into the bin, and that the injury occurred while he was so doing; that under similar circumstances firemen had unloaded such rock from the cars; that there was no specific rule against the same, and that under the circumstances and in the emergency the act of Hunt in procuring rock from the car was a reasonable and proper act and was within the course of his employment.

[1] There was evidence by a witness named Merino, to the effect that for several weeks before the accident he was engaged on the premises as an employé of the petitioner, and that during that time, whenever there was not sufficient suitable rock in the bin, and there was good rock in the cars ready for unloading into the bin, it was the custom of the workmen to take the rock from the car to be placed in the furnace; that they did it right along whenever they needed big rock, and that this custom was known to the foreman in charge of the work. This clearly shows that the work of Hunt and his associate in getting suitable rock out of the car when there was none in the bin was within the scope of his duty under his employment, as the petitioner, through its agents in charge of the work, had permitted that duty to be made known to Hunt. It is amply sufficient to sustain the award of the commission on this point.

[2-4] This court, in reviewing awards of the commission, is not acting as a court of appeal. It has no power to weigh the effect of positive evidence. It must assume that the commission believed all the evidence given which tends to sustain the award made. Likewise the court has no power to annul an award because the findings are inconsistent. If there are findings which sustain the award, the fact that there are other findings inconsistent therewith which, if taken alone, might serve to annul it, will not be available for that purpose. Section 84, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, which gives us the power we are now exercising over this award of the commission, authorizes us to annul an award only when the commission acted without or beyond its powers, or when the award was procured by fraud, or is unreasonable, or when the findings of fact do not support it. The findings are not subject to review except in so far as they may have been made without any evidence whatever in support thereof. The review of the findings, even in such cases, is not based on the theory that they are not supported by the evidence, and that we are weighing evidence to determine that proposition, but upon the theory that the commission has no jurisdiction to make a finding where there is no evidence to support it. We find no cause in the record before us which would justify an annulment of the award.

The writ is discharged and the proceeding dismissed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SLOSS, J.; LAWLER, J.

---

177 Cal. 388

Ex parte SUMIDA. (Cr. 2121.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 30, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑111(7)—ORDINANCES—VALIDITY.

An ordinance of a city cannot be declared invalid because of bad motives in its enactment.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑111(7)—ORDINANCES—VALIDITY.

Motives permitting the enactment of a municipal ordinance cannot be inquired into in habeas corpus to secure the release of one prosecuted for violation of the ordinance.

3. SUNDAY 🔑2 — ORDINANCES — VALIDITY —POLICE POWER.

Ordinances, regulating businesses which may remain open on Sunday, are within the police power and valid.

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑87, 240(1), 296(1)—SUNDAY 🔑2—ORDINANCES—VALIDITY —POLICE POWER.

If an ordinance, regulating business remaining open on Sunday and prohibiting certain occupations on that day, is a valid exercise of the police power, it is not invalid as an unlawful or unauthorized invasion of the right of property, or as taking property without due process of law, or as depriving persons of the equal protection of the laws contrary to Const. U. S. Amend. 14.

5. STATUTES 🔑72—"SPECIAL LEGISLATION."

Legislation, applying generally to all persons within the territory to which the legislative power extends who come within the classification of the law, is not "special legislation" within Const. art. 4, § 25, if the classification is allowable under article 1, § 21, prohibiting special privileges.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Special Law.]

6. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑208(11) — CLASS LEGISLATION.

Fowler ordinance prohibiting the keeping open on Sunday of stores, workshops, banking houses, or other places of business, or public dance halls, pool or billiard halls, skating rinks, theaters or any places of public amusement, and excepting from the ordinance hotels, boarding houses, lodging houses, restaurants, bakeries, livery stables, retail drug stores, confectionery stores, ice cream parlors, garages, transfer, railroad, telephone, telegraph or express offices, fruit packing houses and newspaper or periodical agencies, is not invalid as class legislation, but is a reasonable enactment within the police power.

7. SUNDAY ⚷2—CLASS LEGISLATION.

Fowler ordinance prohibiting certain businesses from remaining open on Sunday and exempting from its operation other businesses, and requiring that where both classes of business are conducted in the same building, the business allowed to be open on Sunday shall be separated from the other by a partition not over five feet high, is not rendered invalid by the requirement of the partition.

In Bank. Habeas corpus on the relation of H. Sumida. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded to custody.

Frank Kauke, of Fresno, for petitioner. Arthur Allyn and M. G. Gallaher, both of Fresno, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The petitioner by means of this application seeks a decision of this court declaring that a certain ordinance of the town of Fowler is invalid. Fowler is a town of the sixth class. The ordinance purports to forbid the carrying on of certain occupations within said town on Sundays. Section 1 is as follows:

> "That it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation or association to keep open within the corporate limits of the town of Fowler, upon or on any Sunday, any store, workshop, banking house or other place of business or any public dance hall, pool or billiard hall, skating rink, theater or any place of public amusement."

Section 3 is as follows:

> "The provisions of section 1 hereof shall not apply or be construed to apply to persons, firms, corporations or associations who on Sunday keep open bona fide hotels, boarding houses, lodging houses, restaurants, bakeries, livery stables, retail drug stores, confectionery stores, ice cream parlors, garages, transfer, railroad, telephone, telegraph or express office, dried or green fruit packing houses, newspaper or periodical agencies for the legitimate business of each. Provided, that in case one or more of the excepted businesses is carried on in the same room with any business coming within the operation of this ordinance and required thereby to be kept closed on Sunday, that the part of the room in which said excepted business is carried on, shall be separated and set apart from the said business coming under the operation of this ordinance as aforesaid by a permanent partition or screen not less than five feet in height, and which said permanent partition or screen shall inclose and separate said place where said excepted business is carried on, from the remaining part of the room wherein the business coming under the operation of this act is operated as aforesaid."

Section 5 declares a violation of the ordinance a misdemeanor and provides for the punishment thereof.

H. Sumida has been arrested and is imprisoned upon a charge of violating said ordinance by keeping open within said town on a certain Sunday a general merchandise store for the purpose of doing business therein.

The petitioner claims that the ordinance is contrary to section 1 of article 1 of the Constitution, declaring that every person is entitled to acquire and possess property, section 21 of the same article declaring that no citizen or class of citizens shall be granted privileges or immunities which, on the same terms, shall not be granted to all citizens, and section 25 of article 4, which forbids special laws upon any subject other than those specifically enumerated therein.

[1-4] The title of the ordinance declares, and its terms show, that its purpose was to provide a day of rest one day in the week for those pursuing the occupations forbidden to be carried on upon Sunday. There may have been other designs in the minds of the board of trustees of the town in adopting the ordinance. But that question cannot be inquired into in this manner, nor can an ordinance be declared invalid because of the bad motives of the members of the legislative body which enacted it. It is the established law of this state that such regulations come within the police power, and are therefore lawful acts of the legislative bodies which possess that power. Ex parte Andrews, 18 Cal. 683. Dissenting opinion of Field, J., in Ex parte Newman, 9 Cal. 521, approved in Ex parte Andrews, Ex parte Koser, 60 Cal. 188; Ex parte Moynier, 65 Cal. 34. The court must hold the ordinance lawful if it can be done upon any rational theory. As the securing of a day of rest for the persons so engaged may have been one of its objects, and as that object would have been within the scope of the police power of the state, delegated to the board of trustees of the municipality by section 11 of article 11 of the Constitution, the ordinance must be upheld as an exercise of the police power, unless it appears that it is unreasonable in its operation, or that it constitutes special legislation on a subject forbidden by the Constitution, or class legislation of the kind forbidden by section 21 of article 1, aforesaid. If it is a legitimate exercise of the police power in these particulars, it cannot be condemned as invalid on the ground that it is an unlawful or unauthorized invasion of the right of property, or upon the ground that it is a taking of property without due process of law, or that it deprives persons of the equal protection of the laws contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

[5] It is a proposition too well settled to require discussion or authority in support of it that legislation which applies generally to all persons within the territory to which the legislative power extends who come within the classification of the law is not special legislation within the meaning of section 25 of article 4, provided the classification is one which is allowable under section 21 aforesaid. The sole question, therefore, is whether or not this ordinance is discriminatory, and class legislation within the principles of constitutional law applying to the subject.

The rules upon the subject are well established by many decisions in this state.

"From necessity it has been held that the Legislature may classify in order that it may adapt its legislation to the needs of the people. If this cannot be done, laws will not always bear equally upon the people. This classification, however, must be founded upon differences which are either defined by the Constitution or natural, and which will suggest a reason which might rationally be held to justify the diversity in the legislation. It must not be arbitrary, for the mere purpose of classification, that legislation really local or special may seem to be general, but for the purpose of meeting different conditions naturally requiring different legislation." Darcy v. Mayor, 104 Cal. 645, 38 Pac. 501.

"A law is general and uniform in its operation when it applies equally to all persons embraced within the class to which it is addressed, provided such class is made upon some natural, intrinsic, or constitutional distinction between the persons composing it and others not embraced in it. * * * The difference on which the classification is based must be such as, in some reasonable degree, will account for or justify the peculiar legislation." Ex parte Miller, 162 Cal. 698, 124 Pac. 430.

Other decisions supporting these propositions are cited in that case and need not be repeated here.

[6] The petitioner contends that there is no sound reason for allowing bakeries, livery stables, drug stores, confectioneries, ice cream parlors, garages, the offices of railroads, transfer, telephone, telegraph or express companies, dried or green fruit packing houses, or newspaper agencies, to be kept open, which does not apply with equal force to ordinary stores, workshops, banking houses, and the like. There appears, however, to be a well-founded distinction between the two classes of business, one of which is allowed to keep open, and the other is required to be closed upon Sundays. Stores, workshops, and banking houses, and other like places, are not usually open on Sundays, and in general there is no necessity that they should be open for business on that day. But in the case of boarding houses, lodging houses, restaurants, bakeries, livery stables, and drug stores, it is not only the custom that they should remain open for such business as they may do on Sundays, but there is to some extent a necessity that they should do so. Persons may be in need of accommodations from these places on Sundays for which they cannot conveniently wait until the following day, and their needs may come unexpectedly so that they cannot reasonably be required to prepare therefor prior to Sunday. While the necessity for the keeping open of confectioneries and ice cream parlors may not be so great in cold climates, we cannot say that in the region of Fowler the daily demand for the articles sold at such places may not be so great and general as to justify the discrimination which permits them to remain open on Sundays. Nor can we declare as matter of law that there may not be equal and like cause for the discrimination in favor of bakeries, lodging houses, garages, newspaper agencies, and the public service offices excepted from the operation of the first section. The case is almost identical with Ex parte Koser, supra. There the excepted kinds of business were hotels, boarding houses, barber shops, baths, markets, restaurants, taverns, livery stables, retail drug stores, and manufacturing establishments which are usually kept in continued operation. It was held that the classification was proper and the act constitutional. The manufacturing establishments there excepted are not substantially different from the fruit packing houses here involved. There may be a necessity for their continuous operation during the time when the packing is going on. Of this the local legislative body must be the judge. The courts cannot say that they are wrongly included, unless it appears beyond reasonable doubt that the decision was erroneous. This does not appear. Hence the legislation must be upheld. Ex parte Jentzsch, 112 Cal. 468, 44 Pac. 803, 32 L. R. A. 664, is not in conflict with these views, nor with the other cases on the subject of Sunday closing laws. It merely holds that a law forbidding the keeping open of barber shops and bathhouses after noon on Sundays, leaving all other occupations free, was based on an arbitrary and unjustifiable classification not founded on any reasonable or natural distinction or difference between those occupations and others which are usually followed on Sundays.

[7] The petitioner further contends that the provision of section 3 of the ordinance, requiring persons carrying on a business which is prohibited and one which is allowed in the same room to have the permitted business inclosed by a permanent partition which shall separate it from the place where the other business is carried on, is an unreasonable regulation which makes the entire ordinance void. It appears that the petitioner is carrying on a store for the sale of general merchandise in the town of Fowler, and that in connection therewith and in the same room he maintains a soda fountain and keeps for sale soda water, candies, confections, and bakery goods, and that the part of the store in which these articles are sold is not separated from the other portions thereof.

The answer to the proposition is that, as the board of trustees has power to enact the ordinance prohibiting the operation of the general store on Sundays, it must likewise have power to adopt such regulations as may be necessary to prevent the secret or surreptitious violation of that ordinance in a manner which could not be detected without an unreasonable expense on the part of the public, and that the fact that such regulation may impose a considerable burden upon the property owner does not make the ordinance invalid. This proposition is well settled. Thus in Ex parte Maier, 103 Cal. 476, 37 Pac. 402, 42 Am. St. Rep. 129, the court upheld section 626 of the Penal Code, which prohibited during certain seasons of the year any one from selling or offering for sale the hide or meat of any deer, holding that it was not invalid because of the fact that in the particular instance the petitioner was offering deer meat for sale from a deer carcass which he had procured from Texas where the deer had been lawfully killed, and which he had imported from Texas to California. The court said that the object of the section was to prevent the sale of game killed in the state of California, and with respect to the particular provision which made such offer of sale unlawful, regardless of the place where the game was killed, the court said:

> "It need hardly be suggested that such a provision, if enforced, will lend great aid to the attainment of the object sought. The facility and ease with which the statutes for the protection of game have been evaded in the past is a matter of common knowledge. Deer and other game have been slaughtered during the close season and foisted upon the market as game procured without the state, and, owing to the practical impossibility in the great majority of cases of proving with certainty the source from which it was procured, the attempted enforcement of the statutes for its protection has largely proven abortive."

So here it is obvious that, if the petitioner is allowed to keep his general store open on Sundays, in order that he may sell therein the soda water, confections, and bread, which under the first part of the section he would be allowed to sell on Sunday, it would be easy for him to violate the law at any time by also selling other goods to persons thus patronizing him, and it would be practically impossible for the authorities to detect or prevent such clandestine sales, except by keeping an officer in the store on Sunday. It is lawful for the legislative power to make such provisions in order to protect itself against such violations of its lawful police regulations and facilitate the enforcement thereof.

The result is that the ordinance must be declared valid, and that the petitioner is not unlawfully imprisoned.

It is ordered that the writ be discharged and that the petitioner be remanded to the custody of the officer.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SLOSS, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.

---

177 Cal. 381

HENSHAW v. HOMELAND CO. et al.

(S. F. 7769.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 30, 1918. Rehearing Denied Feb. 28, 1918.)

1. MORTGAGES 🔑308 — RELEASE OF JOINT OBLIGOR—EFFECT.

Releasing one obligor of a joint and several note from personal liability would not discharge his part of the property from the lien imposed thereon by trust deed securing the note in view of Civ. Code, § 2909, providing that a lien is to be accessory to the act for the performance of which it is security, and section 1473 providing that full performance of an obligation extinguishes it.

2. SUBROGATION 🔑3(2)—PAYMENT BY JOINT OBLIGOR.

Where a mortgage was given for a joint and several note, the payment by one obligor and his release from personal liability would not subrogate him to the rights of the payee in the security.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by William G. Henshaw against the Homeland Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Edward C. Harrison, Harding & Monroe, and Grant & Zimdars, all of San Francisco, for appellants. Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro and Alfred Sutro, all of San Francisco (A. D. Plaw, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. The mortgage for the foreclosure of which this action was brought was given to plaintiff by defendant Homeland Company to secure the payment of a note for $11,000 upon which said defendant paid the interest to February 13, 1912, together with $4,392.07 of the principal. Judgment went for plaintiff, from which, upon a bill of exceptions, the Homeland Company appeals.

In its answer defendant alleged certain facts as a defense, which facts are also contained in a cross-complaint upon which it sought to recover from plaintiff the amount of principal and interest paid by it upon the note. These facts are as follows: On July 3, 1891, James P. McCarthy and William M. Fitzhugh, as the owners in common of a tract of land, executed a mortgage thereon to plaintiff to secure their joint and several notes to him of even date in the sum of $24,000, payable on or before July 15, 1893. About February 5, 1892, McCarthy and Fitzhugh executed a deed of trust to the California Title Insurance & Trust Company, as trustee, transferring certain lands (other than those so mortgaged to secure the Henshaw notes of $24,000), together with notes and securities in trust, with power to dispose of the same, and apply the proceeds in payment of certain obligations, among which was the indebtedness evidenced by said notes of $24,000 to Henshaw, and providing that after the full execution of said trust the balance of said proceeds of sale and collections should be paid, 50 per cent. to McCarthy, 30 per cent. to Fitzhugh, and 20 per cent. to other parties named. In April, 1892, Fitzhugh paid Henshaw $8,450 on account of the $24,000 notes so given by him and McCarthy. In December, 1907, Henshaw executed an instrument whereby he transferred and assigned to the Homeland Company all the—

"right, title, interest and estate of any kind and nature, and all right or property of every kind and description belonging to or in any wise owned or claimed by the party of the first part under the aforesaid deed and assignment of trust, and of, in and to the indebtedness and obligation referred to therein, and which is designed to be, and is, in any wise secured by said deed and assignment of trust."

The document contained further provisions as follows:

"It is also further understood that the party of the first part [Henshaw] has heretofore released William M. Fitzhugh from all personal liability upon the obligation secured by the said assignment of trust, but it is expressly understood that there has been no release, in any wise, of any property covered by said deed or assignment of trust, whether owned by said William M. Fitzhugh or any other person, excepting only that the party of the second part [Homeland Company] shall not have the right to proceed against William M. Fitzhugh, personally, and above and beyond the value of any interest which the said William M. Fitzhugh may have in the property involved in said trust." "It is further understood that there shall be no recourse against the party of the first part provided that the statements and representations herein made by said party of the first part are true. If the same are untrue, this transaction may be rescinded. The party of the first part represents to the party of the second part, and upon this representation the party of the second part purchases the obligation, that the amount of the said indebtedness due the party of the first part and hereinbefore referred to, together with accrued interest thereon, amounts to the sum of not less than $20,000."

At the time of the transaction it was supposed the notes had been destroyed in the fire of 1906. Thereafter they were found indorsed, "Without recourse on me or William Fitzhugh. Wm. G. Henshaw"—and delivered to defendant in February, 1912. This transfer and assignment constitutes the sole consideration for which the note and mortgage here involved were given.

It is conceded, as found by the court, that at the time of the making thereof the indebtedness due Henshaw under the assignment in trust was in excess of $20,000. It was further represented that there had been no release of the lien upon any of the property described in the deed of trust so conveyed as security for the payment of the indebtedness, which representation the court found to be true. Appellant insists that this finding is without support in the evidence. This contention is based, first, upon the claim that as a matter of law the payment made by Fitzhugh upon the joint and several notes made by him and McCarthy operated to discharge his part of the property from the lien impressed thereon by the deed of trust.

[1, 2] To our minds the mere statement of the proposition is sufficient answer to it. "A lien is to be deemed accessory to the act for the performance of which it is a security." Section 2909, Civ. Code. The contract of security is distinct and separate from the promise to pay, and since one may exist without the other, it follows that the release of one obligation, unless effected by a full performance thereof (section 1473, Civ. Code), does not release or affect the other. As to Henshaw each of the parties was liable for the full amount which they jointly and severally promised to pay, and all the property was pledged as security for the performance of the promise. In the absence of an agreement to release the property from the lien, full performance of the act for which it was security was necessary to extinguish it. Section 1473, Civ. Code; Cyc. vol. 37, p. 379. Nor, since the security was given for the entire debt, is there any ground for the claim that by reason of the partial payment made by Fitzhugh and his release from personal liability on the notes he was to the extent of such payment subrogated to the rights of Henshaw in the security. Finnell v. Goodman, 156 Cal. 18, 103 Pac. 483.

It is claimed, however, that Henshaw by a written instrument delivered to Fitzhugh not only released him from personal liability on the notes, but also in express language released his property from the existing lien created by the deed of trust. This contention is based on the evidence of Fitzhugh as to the contents of a lost document given him some 20 years before by Henshaw. This testimony was vague, uncertain, and conflicting. He testified:

"The notes were supposed at that time to have been indorsed as they are indorsed at present, and that was set forth in this little agreement;" "the gist of the whole agreement was the writing on the notes;" "that William M. Fitzhugh shall be held harmless and the notes shall be indorsed without personal recourse against William M. Fitzhugh; * * * that is the gist of the whole thing."

In weighing this evidence the trial court no doubt determined that Fitzhugh's "understanding" that his property was released from the lien was based upon the fact that such was the effect of his being released from personal liability. In so doing this court cannot say the trial court erred.

The indebtedness was in excess of $20,000, and as found by the court upon sufficient evidence none of the property conveyed in trust as security for the payment thereof was released; hence defendant has no cause for complaint.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; WILBUR, J.

---

177 Cal. 353

In re PAVERT'S ESTATE.

LOVE v. PAVERT.

(S. F. 8469.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 28, 1918.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS 🔑325—SALES OF REALTY—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1516, providing there shall be no priority between personal and real property as to payment of debts of a deceased, the court may in its sound discretion sell real estate to pay debts or expenses of administration, although there is personal property belonging to the estate.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⟹325—SALES OF REALTY—ABUSE OF DISCRETION.

Where the only personal property belonging to a decedent's estate was a disputed claim of doubtful value, there was no abuse of discretion in ordering a sale of real estate to pay debts and expenses, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1516, 1536, relating to sale of property to pay debts and expenses of administration.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. S. Wells, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Maggie Pavert, deceased. R. J. Pavert, administrator. From an order directing a sale of real estate, F. D. Love appeals. Affirmed.

F. R. Wall, of San Francisco, and Latourette & Latourette, of Portland, Or., for appellant. Mortimer Smith, of Oakland, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Maggie Pavert died intestate, and R. J. Pavert, her surviving husband, was appointed administrator of her estate by the superior court of Alameda county. Upon his petition, the court made an order directing a sale of the real estate of said decedent. F. D. Love, the father of the decedent, and one of her heirs, appeals from this order.

The petition asked for a sale upon the grounds: First, that a sale of the real estate was necessary to pay the outstanding debts of the decedent, and the debts, expenses, and charges of administration; and, second, that it was for the advantage, benefit, and best interests of the estate and those interested therein that said real estate be sold. The order of sale found the existence of both grounds. The appellant does not question the sufficiency of the petition. His sole contention is that the evidence did not warrant the making of the order.

The property ordered to be sold consisted of two pieces of land, both of which were subject to mortgage. The debts of the estate, consisting of the mortgage obligations, amounted to $5,700, and the expenses, accrued and estimated, of administration came to $977. The petition alleged, and the administrator testified, that he had $59 in cash on hand, and that there was no other personal property belonging to the estate. The appellant's claim is that the evidence showed that there was considerable personal property belonging to the estate and not accounted for. The administrator had, during a period of several months, collected rents of $37.50 per month on one of the pieces of land. His testimony was that all of this money had been paid out by him for expenses, and, in particular, for a payment of $300 on account of one of the mortgages. At any rate, the amount thus collected, even if it had remained on hand, was not large enough to affect the ultimate finding that a sale was necessary to pay debts and expenses of administration.

The principal controversy arises over the contention of the appellant that the administrator himself was indebted to the estate of his wife in the sum of $11,000, on account of a promissory note executed by him to her. The administrator testified that this claim had been settled. The evidence on the subject of the $11,000 indebtedness was very confused and unsatisfactory. We may concede that, if the issue were one requiring determination in this proceeding, the court below might well, and perhaps should have, concluded that the administrator, in fact, was indebted to the estate on account of the note. But the fact remains that the liability was disputed. Not only this, but there was no showing that the demand against the administrator, granting its validity, could be collected. The claim was therefore at best a doubtful one.

The mere fact that there is personal property belonging to the estate does not preclude a sale of realty. Section 1358 of the Civil Code provides that all of the property of a person dying intestate, real and personal, "without any distinction between them," is chargeable with the payment of his debts. Similarly, section 1516 of the Code of Civil Procedure declares that all of the property of a decedent shall be chargeable with the payment of his debts, of expenses of administration and family allowance, and that the property, real and personal, may be sold under the direction of the court, as prescribed by the Code. "There shall be," the section adds, "no priority as between personal and real property for the above purposes." In harmony with the rule thus enacted, section 1536 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as it now reads, does not make a deficiency of personal estate one of the prerequisites to an order for a sale of realty. Property, real or personal, may be sold "when a sale of property of the estate is necessary" to pay family allowance, debts, or expenses of administration. Under the probate act, which was followed in the original enactment of the Codes, resort for payment of debts and expenses was first had to personalty, and a sale of real estate could be ordered only when the personal estate in the hands of the executor was exhausted or insufficient. But the contrary rule, now in force, was enacted in 1874. Code Amendments 1873-4, pp. 234, 367, 369. See Richardson v. Butler, 82 Cal. 174, 176, 23 Pac. 9, 16 Am. St. Rep. 101.

[1, 2] In the present state of the law, then, the court is authorized to order a sale of real or of personal property whenever such sale is necessary for any of the purposes enumerated in section 1536 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Whether it shall order a sale of the one or the other is a question committed to its sound discretion. So long, at least, as the cash on hand or readily collectible is not sufficient to pay debts or expenses, the court has authority to order a sale of real property. There may be circumstances under which it would be an abuse of discretion to direct such a sale, instead of resorting to the personal estate. But certainly this could not be said in a case where, as here, the personal property consists of a disputed claim of doubtful value. It must, therefore, be held that the court below was justified in finding that the sale was necessary to pay debts and expenses of administration. We need not inquire whether the showing was sufficient to support the sale upon the further ground that it would be for the advantage, benefit, and best interests of the estate and those interested therein.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.

---

177 Cal. 395

SOUTHERN PAC. CO. v. LOS ANGELES MILLING CO. (L. A. 4066.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 30, 1918. Rehearing Denied Feb. 28, 1918.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN 🔑20(5) — RAILROAD SPUR TRACKS—"PUBLIC USE."

A railroad spur track had for years served as an adjunct and appendage to the railroad, many persons, firms, and corporations receiving and sending shipments of freight to and from industries located adjacent thereto, including a public warehouse which received goods on storage from any and all persons having goods to store and shipped them over such spur track and received thereover incoming cargoes generally delivered for storage and subsequent distribution. The right of way was fenced and the doors and gates opening therefrom into the premises of the various industrial concerns along such track were locked against the general public, and where the track crossed public streets gates were maintained across the openings. Held that, notwithstanding these facts, the purpose to which the track had been devoted was a "public use," for which the railroad might have proceeded by condemnation to acquire land under Civ. Code, § 465, subd. 7, authorizing railroad corporations to acquire land by condemnation to be used in the construction and maintenance of their roads and all necessary appendages and adjuncts, and section 1001, authorizing any person to acquire property by condemnation for the uses specified in the Code of Civil Procedure.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Public Use.]

2. EASEMENTS 🔑17(5) — IMPLIED RESERVATION—RAILROAD SPUR TRACK.

That a railroad company's predecessor was the grantee of one of the defendants under a warranty deed did not prevent an assertion by it of the right to use a spur track in existence across the land at the time the deed was executed, since where the owner of one tract of land sells part of it, and such part is burdened by an obvious easement in favor of other persons or other parts of the larger tract, an implied understanding arises that the burdens and correlative advantages shall continue as they existed before the separation of the title.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑994(3) — REVIEW — CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES.

In a suit to enjoin defendants from tearing up a spur track across its land, the credibility of a witness who testified that before building a warehouse adjoining such spur track he had a conversation with the president of defendants' predecessor who told him that he would at no time in the future be molested in the use and enjoyment of the spur track was a matter peculiarly for the determination of the trial court, though the president was dead at the time of the trial.

4. CORPORATIONS 🔑432(1) — AUTHORITY OF OFFICERS—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where the unmolested use of the property was obvious to all, and such use at all was due to the permission granted by the president, the presumption arose that he acted upon authority.

5. ESTOPPEL 🔑93(2)—PERMITTING IMPROVEMENTS — INDUSTRIES ADJOINING RAILROAD SPUR TRACK.

Where, from the time defendants' predecessor acquired title to property across which was a railroad spur track in 1878 until 1911, the use of the spur track for the purpose of serving industries located along its line was uninterrupted, and warehouses and other buildings of very great value had been erected by the different industries, defendant was estopped to deny the right of the railroad to continue the use of such track.

6. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS 🔑55(6)—ACCRUAL OF CAUSE OF ACTION — CONTINUING TRESPASS.

Where a railroad company conveyed land across which it had a spur track which it continued to use thereafter, any action for damages for trespass was barred in three years under Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 2, requiring actions for trespass upon real property to be brought within three years, as the action must be commenced within the statutory period after the original infliction of the injury.

7. EMINENT DOMAIN 🔑2(1) — NATURE OF PROCEEDINGS—SUIT FOR INJUNCTION.

Where a railroad company had been using a spur track across defendants' land without interruption for over 30 years, a suit to restrain defendant from tearing up the track or obstructing its use could not be regarded as an action in condemnation under the guise of a proceeding to obtain an injunction, as it was a proceeding by which plaintiff sought to maintain a status acquiesced in for many years.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Gavin W. Craig, Judge.

Suit by the Southern Pacific Company against the Los Angeles Milling Company, which filed a cross-complaint against the plaintiff and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. G. Van Pelt and E. S. Williams, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. J. W. McKinley, Frank Karr, W. R. Millar, and W. I. Gilbert, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. The defendant, Los Angeles Milling Company, having threatened to destroy that portion of a certain spur track which traversed its premises, suit for an injunction was instituted by Southern Pacific Company. Defendant answered and filed a cross-complaint by which Southern Pacific Railroad Company, the lessor of the plaintiff, was brought in, and after issues joined upon answers to that pleading the cause was heard with the result that an injunction was granted restraining Los Angeles Milling Company from tearing up the track or obstructing the use thereof.

Prior to April 24, 1878, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company owned the land now occupied by appellant which is situated in the city of Los Angeles between Market and Commercial streets and fronting on Alameda street. At that time there was a spur track which joined the main line on Alameda street at a point about halfway between Jackson and Market streets. This spur track extended in a northwesterly direction across private property on the southwest corner of Market and Alameda streets, thence, after crossing Market street diagonally over the southwest corner of the property now owned by appellant and on into that now owned and occupied by the Los Angeles Warehouse Company, to a point near Commercial street, and thence by a switchback to a point on that property at the north side of Market street. Later this branch was extended southerly across Market street to the property between Market and Jackson streets now owned and occupied by the Los Angeles Warehouse Company and occupied also by certain industrial concerns to a terminus on the property of Nelson-Morris & Co. The entire spur track is about 1,575 feet in length. In 1878, W. H. Perry owned the land now occupied by the Los Angeles Warehouse Company and that now occupied by John A. Roeblings & Sons Company at the southwest corner of Alameda and Market streets. He conducted lumber yards on these two pieces of land. Later he owned and occupied with his pine lumber yard the property on the south side of Market street now occupied by the Western Commercial Company. It was at that time that the switchback was extended southerly across Market street.

On April 24, 1878, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company deeded the property now owned by appellant to Isaac Lankershim, the deed containing a covenant of warranty particularly against a certain deed of trust promising to repay the grantee, his heirs, or assigns $17,500 in gold coin in case of eviction by any one claiming under the said deed of trust. Thereafter service on the spur track was continued without interruption. Lankershim conveyed to the Los Angeles Farming & Milling Company and by mesne conveyances appellant has succeeded in title to that property. Warehouses and other buildings of very great value have been erected by the different industries which have developed on the land served by the spur track, and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, or its successor, the Southern Pacific Company, has operated its cars on the spur track as convenience required without interruption until in 1911 the railroad company was ordered to remove its tracks from defendant's land. All of these facts appear, without contradiction, from the testimony adduced at the trial.

Respondent also introduced testimony tending to prove, not only the hauling of materials and products to and from the manufacturing plants adjacent to the spur track, but also the transportation to and from the public warehouse of the Los Angeles Warehouse Company from points both within and without the state of California of goods and wares of many kinds; the outgoing cargoes consigned to various persons in many places; the incoming generally delivered for storage and subsequent distribution.

The complaint was founded upon the theory that the spur track had been devoted to a public use, and also that defendant was estopped to deny plaintiff's right to maintain the track by reason of said defendant's conduct in favor of plaintiff and in favor of the Los Angeles Warehouse Company.

The court found that the spur track for many years, last past, "has served as an adjunct and appendage to the railroad of plaintiff, many persons, firms, and corporations engaged in receiving and sending shipments of freight, to and from the industries owned and operated by said persons, located on and adjacent to the spur track"; that it serves and has served as an adjunct of the said railroad certain named firms; that "said Los Angeles Warehouse Company receives goods on storage from any and all persons having goods to store, and ships the same to points both inside and outside of the state of California, over said spur track and in cars placed on said spur track by plaintiff for the purpose of delivering freight to said warehouse company and its patrons, and for the purpose of receiving freight from said warehouse company and its patrons;" and that the spur track "has been and is now devoted and dedicated to public use, and plaintiff has at all times carried, and will hereafter continue to carry, all sorts of goods and freight for all purposes as a common carrier and deliver them to such persons as the consignors may designate, and carry and deliver them to the Los Angeles Warehouse Company, over and by means of said spur track, for the purpose of distribution to the general public."

It was also found that in 1906, just prior to the purchase by the corporation of the property now occupied by the Los Angeles Warehouse Company, O. B. Fuller and George Safford, two officers of said corporation, called upon I. N. Van Nuys, then president of appellant's predecessor in interest, and told him that their company was about to expend approximately $200,000 in the construction of a warehouse on the land, and that they desired to know whether or not any difficulty would arise from the use by their corporation of the said spur track as an adjunct to their business and whether or not the Los Angeles Farming & Milling Company would at any time in the future object to their use of the track or seek to curtail or prevent enjoyment thereof by the warehouse company; and that thereupon Mr. Van Nuys assured them that they would not at any time in the future be molested in such use and enjoyment of the spur track. It was found further that relying upon this assurance the Los Angeles Warehouse Company expended large sums of money in building the warehouse, and that it has continued to make substantial outlays in the conduct of its business. There were elaborate findings to the effect that, by failing for more than 20 years to object to the use of the track, defendant and its predecessors (being fully aware of all of the facts and the necessity of such spur track to the conduct of plaintiff's business as a common carrier) were estopped to deny the right of plaintiff to continue such use of the track.

[1] Appellant contends that the spur track has been devoted not to public but to private use; that the estoppel found was not justified by the evidence; and that the court's failure to take testimony regarding and to award damages for the use of its property amounted to condemnation of land without recompense. In support of the first position assumed in argument by appellant, counsel call our attention to the fact that the right of way is carefully fenced; that doors and gates opening from the right of way into the premises of the various industrial concerns along the spur track are locked against the general public; and that where the track leaves private property to cross the street gates are maintained across the openings to exclude the general public. All of these circumstances do not prevail against the finding of a public use, for it is not shown that any one of the establishments along the line of the spur track is denied the service of the plaintiff whenever it requires cars and equipment for facilitating shipment or receipt of commodities. That the track is well fenced and provided with elaborate safeguards tends merely to show that these establishments pay due regard to the very salutary slogan of modern railroading and manufacturing, "Safety First."

Respondent is of the opinion that under section 1001 and subdivision 7 of section 465, Civil Code, the purpose to which this spur track has been devoted for more than two decades is a public use for which, if there were no track in place, it might proceed by an action in condemnation to acquire land for such a branch. This position is, we think, well taken. A very illuminating authority upon this subject is Madera Ry. Co. v. Raymond Granite Co., 3 Cal. App. 668, 87 Pac. 27, a cause in which this court denied a petition for transfer. That was a condemnation suit, and defendants resisted the proposed taking of their land upon the ground that the use was in reality a private one, the road being designed only to serve plaintiff's alter ego the Madera Granite Company. Mr. Presiding Justice Chipman, in the course of the opinion of the court prepared by him, used the following language:

> "There was considerable evidence tending to the point that the main object in building the road was to enable the owners of the Madera Granite Company to market its product. Circumstances may arise where it becomes of public benefit for branch railroads to be built primarily to reach some important industry about to be inaugurated, or that is struggling along under difficulties for want of transportation facilities. The fact that the advantage of such road inures to a particular individual or a class of individuals will not render the use any the less public. And the fact that the stockholders of the Madera Granite Company were also stockholders of plaintiff company does not prove that the contemplated use is a private use. Lindsay I. Co. v. Mehrtens, 97 Cal. 676, 32 Pac. 802."

Appellant calls attention to the fact that in the case just cited the railroad traversed a public highway, and that the general public would therefore have access to it virtually throughout its entire extent. But in the case at bar the track crosses public streets, and might be used if needed by the general public. It appears that the railroad possesses excellent terminal facilities, and our attention is called to no proof that any goods have been shipped from or received upon the public streets, but this is not controlling. The fact remains that none of that part of the public whose establishments are conveniently served by the spur track and no customer consigning goods to the public warehouse for storage or shipment has been denied the use of this branch of plaintiff's track. It would not illuminate but would merely lengthen this discussion to attempt analyses of the many authorities cited in the able briefs in this case. Counsel seem to be agreed that each case must be tested with reference to its peculiar facts. There is no testimony to the effect that any one who had lawful occasion to use the spur track had ever been unable to do so. The testimony tended to show that the spur track has been used in common by all of the establishments conveniently located for such use.

The following language from the opinion in Madera Ry. Co. v. Raymond Granite Co., supra, expresses the true rule:

> "The public use required need not be of the whole state or any considerable portion of it, but the use and benefit must be in common, not to particular individuals. Every public use is in more or less degree local and benefits a particular section more than others. This is true of railroads, as well as of ordinary highways. The cases are numerous sustaining this rule. See notes to Lewis on Eminent Domain, 161. See, also, Lindsay I. Co. v. Mehrtens, 97 Cal. 676, 32 Pac. 802."

[2] Respondents deny that they seek to uphold their use of the right of way by prescriptive title. There is no finding of such title. They do contend, however, that, if it be said that in violation of the warranty contained in the deed of grant they or either of them evicted appellant or its predecessor from the strip occupied by the track, such eviction took place in 1878, or at any rate so long ago that the statute of limitations, which they pleaded, was entirely available. The deed to Lankershim is set forth in the cross-complaint of appellant as the basis of an alleged estoppel of either respondent to claim any title or interest in the right to maintain the spur track on the land of the Los Angeles Milling Company. Some of the defenses to this cross-complaint were based upon sections 318 and 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the court found in favor of respondent on those statutes. This was proper. The mere fact that appellant's predecessor was the grantee of one of the respondents under a warranty deed does not prevent an assertion by plaintiff of a right to use the track. Where the owner of one tract of land sells part of it, and that part is burdened by an obvious easement in favor of other persons or other parts of the larger tract, an implied understanding arises that the burdens and correlative advantages shall continue as they existed before the separation of the title. Cheda v. Bodkin, 173 Cal. 7–14, 158 Pac. 1025; Goodman v. Heilig, 157 N. C. 6, 72 S. E. 866, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1004; Geren v. Caldarera, 99 Ark. 260, 138 S. W. 335.

[3-5] The finding of estoppel arising out of promises made by the president of appellant's predecessor to representatives of the Los Angeles Warehouse Company is attacked on several grounds, one being the alleged inherent weakness and improbability of the testimony given in its support. It is true that Mr. Van Nuys, who was the person said to have made the promise, was dead before the trial of this case, but the credibility of the witness who related the conversation with him was a matter peculiarly within the determination and discretion of the trial court. There is nothing inherently improbable in the story as told by the witness. Indeed, it would be strange if the warehouse company would spend $200,000 to erect a building on the property without having some understanding with its neighbor such as that described in the testimony. But appellant denies the right of a president so to bind his corporation. In cases of this sort, where the unmolested use of the property is obvious to all, and such use was due at all to the permission granted by the president, the presumption arises that he acted upon authority. Fresno Street Railroad Co. v. Southern Pacific Railroad Co., 135 Cal. 202–208, 67 Pac. 773; Katz v. Walkinshaw, 141 Cal. 116–136, 70 Pac. 663, 74 Pac. 766, 64 L. R. A. 236, 99 Am. St. Rep. 35. There is more force in the contention that appellant was not shown to be in privity with its grantor in the matter of the consent to respondent's use of the property on behalf of the warehouse company, one of the railroad company's patrons. It would seem, however, than an intending purchaser, seeing the valuable improvements on neighboring land and observing that said property was served by a track passing through the premises offered for sale, would buy at its peril if it should fail to inquire by what authority the spur track was maintained. The matter of the estoppel against the appellant by reason of its promises to the warehouse company is comparatively unimportant, however, as there was abundant support of the finding that it was estopped to deny the right of plaintiff to continue the use of the spur track, by reason of long acquiescence of the said Los Angeles Milling Company and its predecessor in such operation. Fresno Street Railroad Co. v. Southern Pacific Company, supra; Katz v. Walkinshaw, supra; Hartley v. Vermillion, 141 Cal. 339, 74 Pac. 987; Crescent Canal Co. v. Montgomery, 143 Cal. 248, 76 Pac. 1032, 65 L. R. A. 940; Leverone v. Weakley, 155 Cal. 395–400, 101 Pac. 304; Schwerdtle v. County of Placer, 108 Cal. 589, 41 Pac. 448.

In Gurnsey v. Northern California Power Co., 160 Cal. 699, 117 Pac. 906, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 185, it was held that an owner who has long acquiesced in the use of his land by a public service corporation may not maintain ejectment against such corporation because the rights and interests of the public attach to the use. And in that case it is also held that while under the Constitution private property may not be taken for public use without compensation first paid, this condition is solely for the benefit of the landowner and may be either enforced or waived at his pleasure.

[6] Under the authority of the case last cited it is clear that any claim for damages which may have existed in favor of appellant has been waived. Any action for damages for trespass was barred within three years after the deed to Lankershim under subdivision 2 of section 338, Code of Civil Procedure. The action for damages must be commenced within the statutory period after the original infliction of the injury. Williams v. Southern Pacific Railroad Co., 150 Cal. 624, 89 Pac. 599.

[7] This cannot be regarded as an action in condemnation under the guise of a proceeding to obtain an injunction. It was a proceeding by which plaintiff sought to maintain a status in which appellant and its predecessors had acquiesced for many years.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WILBUR, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.

177 Cal. 347

In re GLANN'S ESTATE. (Sac. 2646.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 28, 1918. Rehearing Denied Feb. 25, 1918.)

1. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION 🔑57 — RIGHTS OF WIDOW.

Where deceased was survived by wife and one daughter, and the daughter died unmarried and without issue, the widow by right of inheritance from her husband and as heir of her daughter became entitled to all of deceased's property in absence of will, or to all property undisposed of by will, in view of Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 1, stating the order of succession.

2. WILLS 🔑634(16) — ESTATES CREATED — CONSTRUCTION—"VEST."

Where a will gave wife homestead during life of testator's brothers, recited formation of partnership with brothers, and gave wife one-third of net proceeds of the business for the life of the brothers, and provided that when the brothers died the use of his interest in the partnership should be given to the wife until majority of the child, and thereafter gave the use of one-half of the property to the wife during her life, the other half to the child, and on the death of the wife all of the property to go to the child, provided that it should not vest in her until the death of testator's brothers, and that, if the wife and child died before the brothers, all the property should go to them for their lives, and on their death to other relatives, the provision that the property should not "vest" in the child until the death of the brothers did not prevent title vesting in the child if the brothers were alive when the wife died; the word "vest" being used in a sense equivalent to right of possession by the child of the partnership property.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Vest.]

3. WILLS 🔑634(16) — ESTATES CREATED — CONSTRUCTION.

Under such will, death of wife and child being condition precedent to the disposition to the brothers, in view of Civ. Code, §§ 1346, 1347, defining and stating the effect of a condition precedent, where the child survived testator, but predeceased the mother and the brothers, the mother was entitled to the entire property.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Proceedings in the matter of the estate of Daniel Glann, deceased. From a decree determining rights of succession, Peter and Vincent Glann appeal. Affirmed.

Henry Conlin and John O. McElroy, both of San Francisco, Elliott & Atkinson and White, Miller, Needham & Haber, all of Sacramento, and Paul A. McCarthy, of San Francisco, for petitioners. George & Hinsdall, Devlin & Devlin, and Stephen F. Otis, all of Sacramento, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. [1] This is an appeal from a decree made October 3, 1916, determining the rights of all persons to the estate of the deceased in a proceeding under the provisions of section 1664 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The deceased died March 14, 1887. His will was thereupon probated, but, in accordance with a request expressed in the will, no proceedings were taken for distribution until after the death of his two brothers, Peter and Vincent. Then these proceedings were instituted. The lower court held that all the property should go to the respondent Anna Glann, the surviving wife of the decedent. There also survived the decedent a daughter, Anna, an only child, the fruit of his marriage with respondent. This daughter died May 23, 1901, when 16 years of age, unmarried and without issue. The widow, by right of inheritance from her husband and as the heir of her daughter, would be entitled to all the property of the decedent, in the absence of any will, or to the extent that the property was undisposed of thereby. Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 1. The appellants herein do not claim by right of heirship, but under the fifth provision of the will, hereinafter set forth.

For a correct understanding of this contention it will be necessary to state some of the facts and some of the provisions of the will. The will was executed November 23, 1886, contemporaneously with an agreement of partnership between the deceased and his two brothers, Peter and Vincent, which was referred to in the will. At the time of the execution of these instruments the decedent had been married about 2½ years to Anna Glann. They had one child, the daughter above mentioned, then about 1 year and 6 months old. The testator was then about 55 and his wife about 20 years old. The partnership agreement provided:

> That the business of the firm should be the business of "farming, stock raising, and conducting a dairy on the land therein described"; that the copartnership was to commence at once, and be continued as long as two of the partners survived; that "if either of the partners shall die the business of the firm shall be carried on by the survivors"; after the death of two of such firm "the business shall be carried on by the survivor in the same name (Glann Bros.) until his death"; that in the case of the death of either of said firm, "leaving a family, the said family shall be entitled to the share of the deceased member in the profits of said business, and the survivor or survivors shall be deemed a trustee for such family, and the support of such family shall come out of the deceased member's share of the profits of said business"; "that if all the members of said firm or the survivor or survivors shall determine it to be for the benefit of said business, any part of the real estate owned by the said three members, as above stated, may be sold, and the proceeds invested for the firm or for the use or benefit of the survivor or survivors and the family of the deceased member or members"; that "at the death of the survivor all of the property of the said copartnership, as well as the real estate hereinbefore mentioned, shall be disposed of as provided in the several wills of the said copartners, or as directed by the laws of succession of said state; it being the purpose of the signers hereof to continue said business as long as either shall live, and that then said property shall go to the heirs, devisees, and legatees of each."

The first clause of the will gives the wife a homestead in certain property during the life of the two brothers of the deceased. The second clause refers to the above-mentioned partnership agreement, and recites that thereby the balance of his property had been "placed under the control of the firm formed by said contract, and the survivor or survivors of the members thereof until all of such members shall be dead." Then bequeaths his wife "my third of the net proceeds of the business of said copartnership so long as either of my said brothers shall live, for the support of herself and family," and provides for the distribution of any surplus of said income, so that the children will have a share therein. The next four clauses are as follows:

> "Third. When my said brothers Peter and Vincent shall both be dead then there shall be under the direction of the proper court a division and distribution of all my interest in the property held under said contract and of the accumulations thereof in the hands of such survivor and of said homestead property as follows: To my said wife if she be then living the use of all of said property until my said child shall attain majority and when my child or children shall become of age my wife shall have the use of one-half of all of said property real and personal, during the term of her life, the other half shall go to my children share and share alike, and in the event of the death of any of my children under age leaving issue such issue shall take the share of the parent by right of representation, upon my youngest child attaining majority.
>
> "Fourth. On the death of my said wife all my said property shall go to my children then living in equal shares and to the children of such children if any by right of representation provided that such property shall not so vest in such children until the death of both my said brothers Peter and Vincent and after my wife's death, and until the death of my said two brothers my said children shall only receive my one-third of the net proceeds of said copartnership business.
>
> "Fifth. If my said wife and all my children and their children shall die before the death of both of my said brothers Peter and Vincent then it is my will that all my property shall go to my said two brothers Peter and Vincent for their lives and upon their death the same shall go to and vest in my other brothers and sisters in equal shares and as to any brother or sister who is now dead or who may die before the death of the said Peter and Vincent it is my will that his or her share shall go to his or her heirs.
>
> "Sixth. It is my will that during the continuance of the said copartnership agreement all my interest in the said property in said agreement mentioned and the proceeds thereof not turned over to my said wife and children as above provided, shall be held in trust by my said brothers and the survivor of them, the proceeds to be disposed of as in that agreement herein provided."

The will then provides:

> That the brothers, Peter and Vincent, should be appointed executors without bonds; that after the filing of the inventory and payment of debts, "no further proceedings be taken in my estate, but that the affairs thereof be administered under said agreement and this will without the intervention of such court until the death of my two brothers Peter and Vincent, and upon their death I request that my wife or one of my children be appointed executrix and the distribution of all my property be immediately made as hereinbefore provided."

It is apparent from the foregoing that it was the intention of the testator that his estate should be held in trust by his brothers or the survivor of them, the income thereof to be paid for the support of his family, and upon their death the property to be distributed, the management and control, however, at all times theretofore to be in the survivor or survivors of said partnership.

It will be observed that the third clause gives the fee in one-half of the property to the daughter, and a life estate in the other half to the wife, "when my brothers Peter and Vincent shall both be dead," leaving the remainder of the fee, in the half subject to the wife's life estate, undisposed of; that the fourth clause in logical sequence disposes of that remainder by providing that "on the death of my wife all my property shall go to my children then living," but the testator evidently considered that such death might precede that of either Peter or Vincent. So we have the proviso that the property shall not vest in such children "until the death of both my said brothers, Peter and Vincent," etc.

[2] Appellants treat this clause as a provision that title should not vest at all in the children if the brothers are alive when the wife dies. This does violence to the express terms of the will, which provide that upon the death of the wife the property should go to the children "then living." The proviso that the property should not "vest" in the children was evidently to prevent them from interfering with the possession and management of the property by Peter and Vincent and the performance of their duties with relation thereto, as provided by the partnership agreement and the will, and was used in the same sense as taking of possession, as is permissible. Burney v. Arnold, 134 Ga. 141, 67 S. E. 712; Jacobs v. Whitney, 205 Mass. 477, 91 N. E. 1009, 18 Ann. Cas. 576; Nolan v. Otney, 75 Kan. 311, 89 Pac. 690, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 317. No provision is made in the event that the wife survived all issue, but the fifth clause does provide for the other possible situation, namely, the death of the wife and children and their descendants before the death of the brothers, Peter and Vincent.

[3] That the death of the wife and issue before the death of the brothers, Peter and Vincent, was a condition precedent applying to the entire disposition in the fifth clause to such brothers, with the remainder to the other brothers and sisters and heirs, seems too plain for argument, or to require a discussion of the numerous cases cited by the appellant, each of which must of course, depend upon the peculiar circumstances of such case. Civ. Code, §§ 1346, 1347. If we hold under subdivision 4 that the title of the child to one-half the property was dependent upon its surviving its mother, then as to that contingent remainder there was no disposition by will, and the title to that extent goes by inheritance one-half to the wife and one-half to the daughter, and by reason of the latter's death that half goes to her mother, the decedent's wife, as her heir. If we regard the fourth clause as vesting a remainder in fee in the child, the same result follows by a little different process, namely, all goes to the mother, as her sole heir. It is true that wills are to be construed so as to prevent partial intestacy, but here we have a complete scheme for distributing all of the property of the estate in all events except to those very unlikely to occur. The claims of the appellant are based on a clause of the will which deals with the remote contingency that the wife, child, and descendants of children shall be dead before the two brothers of the deceased died, and, aside from their life estate, make substantially the same disposition as by the law of succession. A strained construction of this clause should not be indulged in at the expense of the widow of the deceased.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem; MELVIN, J.; SLOSS, J.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.

---

177 Cal. 363

In re RANDALL'S ESTATE.

RANDALL v. PHILBROOK.

(S. F. No. 8521.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 29, 1918. Rehearing Denied Feb. 28, 1918.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS 🔑32(1) —ISSUANCE OF LETTERS TESTAMENTARY—RIGHT OF EXECUTOR.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1354, provides that when a person absent from the state is named as executor, letters of administration with the will annexed must be granted, but that the court may in its discretion revoke them on the return of the absent executor. Sections 1383–1386 provide that when letters of administration are granted to any other person than the surviving husband or wife or certain other relatives, any one of them who is competent may obtain the revocation of the letters, and be entitled to administration, and that the surviving husband or wife when letters of administration have been granted to other relatives may assert a prior right and obtain letters of administration and have the letters before granted revoked. Held that, where the widow, the named executrix, was residing in Maine, and letters of administration with the will annexed were granted to a sister of the decedent, and the widow subsequently came to California, whereupon the court revoked the letters of administration granted to the sister, it was not an abuse of discretion to grant letters testamentary to the widow, and it would have been an abuse of discretion to refuse such letters, as she had an absolute right to the revocation of the letters granted to the sister and to the issuance to her of letters of administration, and the only substantial difference between letters testamentary and of administration with the will annexed is the matter of giving of bonds.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS 🔑32(1) —ISSUANCE OF LETTERS TESTAMENTARY—RIGHT OF EXECUTOR.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1301, providing that an executor failing for 30 days to petition the proper court for the probate of the will and for the issuance of letters testamentary may be held to have renounced his right to letters, and that the court may appoint any other competent person as administrator, must be construed in connection with section 1354, relative to the revocation of letters of administration with the will annexed on the return to the state of the person named as executor, and the court, in its discretion, may appoint a returning executrix on revoking letters previously issued, though she failed to file such petition within 30 days, as the renunciation referred to in section 1301 is in no sense the equivalent of a voluntary renunciation.

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS 🔑15—COMPETENCY OF PERSON NAMED AS EXECUTOR.

The testator's widow named as executrix was not disqualified because she was defending a suit brought by one to whom letters of administration with the will annexed had been granted.

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS 🔑32(2) —ISSUANCE OF LETTERS TESTAMENTARY—FINDINGS.

In a proceeding by the testator's widow to revoke letters of administration with the will annexed, and for her own appointment as executrix, all the essential facts were found by an order containing findings that the petitioner was the surviving wife of the decedent, that she was the person named in his last will as executrix, and was competent to be appointed and to act, and that she had not renounced or forfeited her right to letters testamentary.

5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS 🔑32(2) —ISSUANCE OF LETTERS TESTAMENTARY—RESERVATION OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW.

In such proceeding, where no complaint was raised in the court below because the clerk did not set the matter for hearing, nor give sufficient notice thereof, and defendant appeared and submitted to a trial on the merits, such questions could not be raised on appeal.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William S. Wells, Judge.

Proceeding by Anne Bates Randall for the revocation of letters of administration with the will annexed on the estate of Humphrey A. Randall granted to Florence E. Philbrook, and for the issuance of letters testamentary to the petitioner. From an order revoking the letters of administration, and appointing the petitioner as executrix, the administratrix appeals. Affirmed.

Horace Philbrook, of San Francisco, for appellant. Ftizgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, of Oakland, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court revoking letters of administration with the will annexed issued to the appellant, Florence E. Philbrook, a sister of the decedent, and appointing as executrix Anne Bates Randall, widow of said decedent, named in the will as executrix thereof. Decedent at the time of his death, November 18, 1914, was a resident of the state of Maine, residing there with his wife, the respondent herein. Upon his death his will was there offered by his widow for probate, and was on January 22, 1915, admitted to probate in Cumberland county, Me. On February 3, 1915, the appellant, Florence E. Philbrook, filed a petition for the probate of said will as a foreign will and for her appointment as administratrix with the will annexed. This order was made on the 15th day of February, 1915, and is the appointment revoked by the order appealed from. Subsequently the widow came to California, and on March 15, 1917, applied for the revocation of said letters to appellant and for her own appointment as executrix. Notice of the hearing of said application was given by personal service of citation upon the appellant, and by posting and publication of such notice. Appellant appeared and answered said petition, and after trial thereon the order appealed from was made.

[1, 2] The Code provides:

> "Where a person absent from the state * * * is named executor. * * * If there is no other executor, letters of administration, with the will annexed, must be granted; but the court may, in its discretion, revoke them on the return of the absent executor. * * *" Section 1354, Code Civ. Proc.

The respondent had an absolute right to the revocation of appellant's letters and to the issuance to her of letters of administration, with the will annexed, without regard to the question of whether or not she was named as executrix in the will as against the appellant. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1383 to 1386; In re Li Po Tai, 108 Cal. 484, 41 Pac. 486. In such a case where the substantive right to administer the estate is absolute, and the only substantial difference between letters testamentary and of administration with the will annexed is the matter of the giving of bonds (the will waiving bonds), and where a bond may be required by the court in its discretion in that case, it would be an abuse of discretion to refuse, rather than an abuse of discretion to grant, such letters testamentary. Appellant, however, claims that the respondent widow had renounced her right to letters testamentary by a failure for 30 days "to petition the proper court for the probate of the will, and that letters testamentary be issued to" her, under section 1301, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that an executor who has knowledge of a will, and that he is named therein as executor, who fails for 30 days thereafter to petition the proper court for the probate of the will, and that letters testamentary be issued to him, "he may be held to have renounced his right to letters, and the court may appoint any other competent person administrator, unless good cause for the delay is shown." It is contended that "may" as used in this section, should be construed as "must." But it is evident that this section must be construed in connection with section 1354, Code of Civil Procedure, above quoted. Where the executor is "absent from the state" and returns, the court "may revoke" letters previously issued, and so construed the question of the appointment of the returning executor is discretionary with the trial court. It is also apparent that the "renunciation" referred to in section 1301, supra, is not in any sense the equivalent of a voluntary renunciation, and cases with relation thereto do not apply. The case of Rice v. Tilton, 13 Wyo. 420, 80 Pac. 828, relied on by appellant, decides that a statute of that state (section 4574, Rev. Stat.), corresponding to our section 1301, Code of Civil Procedure, applies to foreign as well as domestic wills, and that the delay of 30 days without application for probate of the will "unless good cause for delay is shown," operates as a renunciation of the right of appointment, and justifies a court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, in refusing to revoke letters of administration, with the will annexed, issued before such application. The effect of section 5499, Revised Statutes of Wyoming 1910 (similar to our section 1354, Code of Civil Procedure), is not discussed in that opinion; nor was the case one in which a widow entitled to preference in the granting of letters of administration applied therefor; nor does that case help the appellant here, for it decides that the probate court's action was discretionary, as is provided by our section 1354, Code of Civil Procedure. A similar conclusion here would result in an affirmance of the judgment, for there was no abuse of discretion in appointing the respondent executrix without bonds, as provided in the will.

[3, 4] Appellant complains of a failure of the trial court to find on certain issues. To this there are two answers: First, that the essential facts that petitioner was the widow of said decedent, and the appellant the sister, are admitted by the pleadings, as were the will and terms thereof. The allegations of the answer that the petitioner (respondent) was defending a suit brought by the administratrix, and for that reason was disqualified, was not material, for that fact did not disqualify her. Estate of Brundage, 141 Cal. 538, 540, 75 Pac. 175. Second, that all essential facts are found by the court. The order states:

> "The court finds that the said petitioner Anne Bates Randall is the surviving wife of said decedent; that said Anne Bates Randall is the person named in the last will and testament of said decedent as the executrix thereof, and is competent to be appointed as and to act as the executrix; * * * that said Anne Bates Randall has not renounced or forfeited her right to letters testamentary. * * *"

[5] Appellant complains that the clerk did not set said matter for hearing, nor give sufficient notice thereof. These questions were not raised in the court below, and for that reason cannot be raised here by the appellant, who appeared and submitted to a trial on the merits. Estate of Dombrowski, 163 Cal. 290, 125 Pac. 233; Estate of Latour, 140 Cal. 414, 425, 73 Pac. 1070, 74 Pac. 441; Estate of Kasson, 119 Cal. 489, 51 Pac. 706. Cases cited by appellant concerning defects in notice of probate of will (Estate of Cobb, 49 Cal. 599; Estate of Carpenter, 127 Cal. 582, 60 Pac. 162) have no application.

We have considered the various matters complained of by appellant, notwithstanding that it is clearly apparent that there was no "miscarriage of justice in the lower court," and that appellant relies on alleged errors in "matters of procedure" (article 6, § 4½ of the Constitution); and notwithstanding the fact that the opening brief of appellant is filed with language so improper and abusive of the trial court as to require that it be stricken from the files (Gage v. Gunther, 136 Cal. 338, 350, 68 Pac. 710, 89 Am. St. Rep. 141).

The order appealed from is affirmed, and the opening brief of appellant is ordered stricken from the files of this court.

We concur: VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.; MELVIN, J.

(177 Cal. 325)

KELLY, County Treasurer, v. WOOLSEY et al. (S. F. 6667.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 26, 1918.)

1. Taxation 🔑879(1)—Inheritance Taxes—Transfer in Contemplation of to Take Effect After Death.

St. 1905, p. 341, § 1, imposing an inheritance tax on all property transferred "in contemplation of the death of the grantor, vendor, or bargainor, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after such death," looks to the substance rather than to the form, and can be avoided only by bona fide conveyances, parting absolutely with possession, title, and enjoyment in grantor's lifetime.

2. Taxation 🔑880—Inheritance Taxes—Transfers in Consideration of Support Not Taxable.

Property conveyed in consideration of support of grantor by grantee, if title, possession, and enjoyment pass at date of conveyance, and no intention to evade the tax appears, is not taxable as made in contemplation of death or to take effect at or after death, even though the deed is withheld from record until grantor's death.

3. Taxation 🔑893—Inheritance Taxes—Transfer Subject to Tax—Intent—Parol Evidence.

In determining whether property transferred is subject to inheritance tax, the inquiry is not confined to the terms of the written instrument, but parol evidence of the real agreement may be shown, as in cases of resulting trust or to declare a deed a mortgage.

4. Taxation 🔑893—Inheritance Taxes—Transfers to Defeat Tax—Evidence.

Facts examined, and findings of court that, in the transfer of property, there was no intent to evade the inheritance tax law or to defraud the state, upheld.

5. Taxation 🔑893—Inheritance Taxes—Transfer in Contemplation of or Intended to Take Effect After Death—Evidence.

Facts examined, and findings of trial court that there was no intent to postpone passing of title, control, or use and enjoyment of property, and that it was not made in contemplation of death, upheld.

6. Taxation 🔑879(1)—Inheritance Taxes—Life Estate.

The mere fact that the transferor remains in possession and enjoyment of the property, by sufferance, or permission, or at the request of the transferee, does not establish intent or agreement to retain a life estate, where the circumstances justify a reasonable inference otherwise.

7. Deeds 🔑58(1)—Sufficiency of Delivery to Third Person—"Constructive Delivery."

A grant without actual delivery to grantee is constructively delivered, where deed is delivered to a stranger for benefit of grantee, whose assent is shown or may be presumed. Civ. Code, § 1059.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Constructive Delivery.]

8. Deeds 🔑208(5)—Delivery—Intent of Parties—Effect—Proof.

That grantor executed and delivered deed to a stranger without conditions or reservation of control or other directions as to time than to deliver to grantee at his discretion, and immediately informed grantee of transaction asking grantee to reside on property, is sufficient proof of delivery of deed on its day and date.

9. Gifts 🔑30(4)—Inter Vivos—By Deposit in Bank of Money of Donor and Donee.

An aunt creating with her own money a joint bank account with her niece held to have made a gift of the money then on deposit.

10. Gifts 🔑52—Deposits—Joint Account—Checks.

Where an aunt established a joint bank account with her niece in which were deposited rentals from her property, and thereafter checked on the account, the inference that the rentals were used by the aunt for her own support being as reasonable as the opposite inference, the finding to that effect will be upheld.

11. Deeds 🔑192—Delivery and Effect—Presumptions.

Where grantor made a deed to one to take effect after her death, it does not follow that in the deed of other property to another person made at the same time and delivered with the first deed to a third person does not pass immediate title; the circumstances being materially different.

12. Trusts 🔑63¾—Resulting Trust—Deposit in Bank.

Where two persons have a joint bank account and one deposits rents from her property therein, a resulting trust may arise in her favor unless she shall have withdrawn such deposits.

13. Appeal and Error 🔑1071(6)—Harmless Error—Finding Without Evidence.

The failure to make findings on an issue is not prejudicial error unless there is evidence on the subject.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. S. Wells, Judge.

Action by M. J. Kelly, County Treasurer of Alameda County, against Rosa M. Woolsey and others to recover inheritance tax. From a judgment denying part of plaintiff's claim and denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. L. Hynes, of Oakland, U. S. Webb, of San Francisco, Crosby & Richardson, of Oakland, Robert A. Waring, of Sacramento, and J. C. Altman, of San Francisco, for appellant. J. A. Elston, of Berkeley, and Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, of Oakland, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The plaintiff appeals from certain parts of the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The action was begun in September, 1909, to recover inheritance tax alleged to be due upon certain properties, transferred by Rosa M. Shattuck in her lifetime to the defendants. It is alleged that the transfers were made by said Rosa M. Shattuck, without valuable consideration, in contemplation of her death, and that they were intended to take effect in possession and enjoyment after her death. The transfers in question are the following: (1) A deed to Rosa M. Woolsey, dated August 16, 1906, conveying certain parcels of real estate in the town of Berkeley; (2) a deed to the defendants Clinton R. Morse, Blanche Morse, Ruby R. Morse, and Nellie M. Winter, dated August 15, 1906, conveying a lot in the town of Berkeley; (3) a deed dated August 15, 1906, conveying to Mary C. Morse and Minnie Morse two lots in the town of Berkeley; (4) balances upon two joint accounts standing in the names of Rosa M. Shattuck and Rosa M. Woolsey at the time of the death of Rosa M. Shattuck, one in the First National Bank of Berkeley, the other in the Berkeley Bank of Savings.

[1] Rosa M. Shattuck died on September 13, 1908. The law in force on the subject at the time of these transfers provided for the imposition of inheritance tax upon all property transferred by the owner thereof, if "made in contemplation of the death of the grantor, vendor, or bargainor, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after such death." Stats. 1905, p. 341.

The court below found that none of the transfers was made in contemplation of death; that the transfers to Rosa M. Woolsey were not intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor, but were intended to have full effect at once, except a certain part of the real property conveyed, consisting of the dwelling house occupied at the time by said Rosa M. Shattuck, as to which part the intention was that the possession and enjoyment of the grantees should be postponed till after the death of the grantor; that the transfers made by the two conveyances to the Morses were intended by the grantor to take effect in possession and enjoyment after her death and not before; and that the transfers of the said bank accounts to Rosa M. Woolsey were not made either in contemplation of death, or with the intention that they should take effect in possession and enjoyment upon, or after, her death. Judgment was accordingly given that inheritance tax be paid upon the value of properties so conveyed to the Morses, and upon that part of the property conveyed to Rosa M. Woolsey on August 16, 1906, embraced in the dwelling house and appurtenances occupied at the time by Rosa M. Shattuck; and refusing to order the payment of taxes on the remainder of said lands, or upon the said bank accounts. The appeal is taken from portions of the judgment refusing to allow the claim of inheritance tax on said parts of the property.

The inheritance tax law looks to the substance rather than to the form of the transaction.

The "payment of the tax can only be defeated or avoided by such a bona fide conveyance as parts absolutely with the possession, title, and enjoyment in the grantor's lifetime." Dos Passos on Inheritance Taxation, 329.

"It is not an entirely unnatural desire, and certainly not one infrequently indulged, for property owners to attempt to evade the inheritance tax and transmit estates to the objects of their bounty unimpaired; and even though the transfer is not actuated by any such motive, its practical effect, so far as the public revenue is concerned, is the same. It is the purpose of such statutes to preclude, so far as possible, this evasion of taxation, whether with fraudulent intent or not, and to secure to the state its revenue on all transfers which have their occasion in the death of the transferor; but it is not the purpose of the statute to inhibit ordinary transfers, by gift or otherwise, if not made in contemplation of death, or not postponed in enjoyment or possession until after the death of the donor or grantor." Ross on Inheritance Taxation, § 111.

[2] In cases where property is conveyed in consideration of the support of the grantor by the grantee during the former's life, "if a present title is conveyed, if the property passes in possession and enjoyment as of the date of the conveyance, no intention to evade the tax appearing, the transfer is not taxable as having been made in contemplation of death or to take effect at or after death; and this although the deed is withheld from record until the grantor's death." Ross on Inheritance Taxation, § 114; Lamb v. Morrow, 140 Iowa, 89, 117 N. W. 1118, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 226; Estate of Hess, 110 App. Div. 476, 96 N. Y. Supp. 990.

[3] The character of the transaction is not wholly determined by the terms of the written instrument employed to accomplish it. Parol evidence of the real agreement is permitted with a latitude similar to that indulged to show a resulting trust or to transform a deed absolute on its face into a mortgage. People v. Moir, 207 Ill. 190, 69 N. E. 905, 99 Am. St. Rep. 205; Ross on Inheritance Taxation, § 112. These are the leading principles of law upon which the provisions of the statute are to be applied to the present case.

[4, 5] The finding of the court that the property here in controversy was not transferred to Rosa M. Woolsey in contemplation of death, or with the intention that the transfer should take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of Rosa M. Shattuck is general in terms and follows the language of the statute. It amounts to a finding against the appellant upon every element of the case mentioned in the above statements of the law. The transfers in the present case were made by instruments in writing. The finding is, in effect, a finding with respect to the property exempted, that there was no intent to evade the inheritance tax law, or to defraud the state thereof, and no intent to postpone the passing of title and absolute control of the property to the grantee, or to restrict the grantee's use and enjoyment thereof in any manner not compatible with the legal effect of the instruments by which the transfers were made, and that there was no agreement except those expressed by said instruments.

It is the contention of the appellant that the finding above mentioned is contrary to the law and the evidence. It is not contended that the finding that the transfers were not made by Rosa M. Shattuck in contemplation of death is contrary to the evidence. The controversy arises upon the question whether the transfers were intended to take effect in possession and enjoyment only upon or after the death of Rosa M. Shattuck. The finding of the court being to the contrary, the evidence must be considered on the theory that every reasonable inference deducible therefrom favorable to the respondent must be deemed to be an established fact. There is no substantial conflict in the testimony. The inquiry is confined to a consideration of the different inferences that may be reasonably deduced from the evidence.

Rosa M. Shattuck was possessed of an estate for her life in the real property formerly belonging to her deceased husband, worth from $400,000 to $500,000. She also possessed other real property, which, in 1906, was estimated to be worth in excess of $500,000. She had no children or lineal descendants. John W. Havens was a nephew of her deceased husband. Rosa M. Woolsey was her niece. The Morses mentioned above were also of kin, but the degree of relationship does not appear. She was of a gentle, affectionate, generous, benevolent, and trustful disposition, and much attached both to Havens and to her niece Mrs. Woolsey and her husband. On November 27, 1905, she conveyed to Havens, as a gift, her said life estate in the property of her deceased husband. He immediately took possession thereof, and that transfer is not in controversy. The transfers to Mrs. Woolsey and to the Morses covered all of the property that she owned, except her household goods. She was then 77 years of age and was in her usual health. Mrs. Woolsey, with her husband and family, had been residing on a farm in Sonoma county for about 25 years. A large lot or block of the land included in the deed to Mrs. Woolsey was the homestead of Mrs. Shattuck. It consisted of two dwelling houses, one of which she occupied, a barn, a chicken yard, a garden and a pasture. For some 10 years prior to that time Mrs. Shattuck had desired to arrange her affairs so that Mrs. Woolsey could live with her, or near her, on said premises. Shortly before the making of these transfers, while on a visit to Mrs. Woolsey in Sonoma county, Mrs. Shattuck obtained Mrs. Woolsey's consent to go to live on the Berkeley homestead. She then returned to Berkeley, executed the deed to Mrs. Woolsey, informed Mrs. Woolsey that she had done so, and asked her to come to Berkeley. The Woolseys thereupon removed to Berkeley, arriving there in October, 1906, and thereafter they resided in the old Shattuck residence on the Shattuck homestead, adjoining the new dwelling house thereon occupied by Mrs. Shattuck. No rent therefor was ever paid, nor was it ever mentioned.

John W. Havens had been for many years the confidential agent and adviser of Mrs. Shattuck, and the manager of her affairs. The deeds to Mrs. Woolsey and to the Morses were all prepared, signed, and acknowledged, at the same time, under the direction of Havens, and were thereupon delivered to him without any instructions as to further delivery, but with the understanding that he "should keep them and record them some time" and should give the possession of them to the grantees at "the proper time"; that being left to his judgment. Nothing was said or understood to the effect that he should keep the Woolsey deed until after Mrs. Shattuck's death, nor was there any instruction that he should hold it as an escrow, or for the benefit of Mrs. Shattuck, or subject to her order or control. To Mrs. Woolsey Mrs. Shattuck said:

> "I have made a deed. I have given the deeds to John (meaning Havens) for you. It is all yours. Everything is yours. All I have got here is yours. You might as well learn how to manage it."

She also frequently said to Mrs. Woolsey that the property was all hers to do with as she pleased. In September, 1907, a parcel of the land deeded to Mrs. Woolsey was conveyed to the Shattuck Hotel Association as a hotel site, in exchange for 6,800 shares of its stock. In negotiating for the sale the attorney for the association had an interview with Mrs. Shattuck in the presence of Mr. Woolsey and Havens, in which Mrs. Shattuck said:

> "I have very little interest in the matter. I have turned everything over to Rosa"—meaning Mrs. Woolsey.

The attorney was then ignorant of the deed to Mrs. Woolsey. After learning of Mrs. Woolsey's deed, the attorney prepared a deed to be executed by Mrs. Shattuck and Mrs. Woolsey to the hotel association. In company with Mr. Havens, he went to Mrs. Shattuck's house and there read said deed to her, saying:

> "I understand that this property has been deeded away, and it will be necessary for Mr. Woolsey to join in the deed."

To which she said:

> "Yes, that has all been arranged; the property belongs to Rosa. John has the deed."

Referring to the stock to be taken in exchange, she said that it made no difference to her whether it was issued in her name and indorsed by her to Mrs. Woolsey, or whether it was issued immediately to some one else. The deed was executed by both of them, and the stock was issued in the name of Mrs. Shattuck, and by her indorsed to Mrs. Woolsey, and delivered over to Havens for delivery to Mrs. Woolsey; but it was not actually delivered by him until after Mrs. Shattuck's death. All the parties knew that Havens had the Woolsey deed and the stock, and no demand for either was made on him by them. Some time during the two years of Mrs. Shattuck's life, after the making of the Woolsey deed, another parcel of land was conveyed to the First National Bank of Berkeley for $3,000 in cash and $10,000 in stock of said bank. The cash was deposited to the aforesaid joint account, and the stock was issued to Mrs. Woolsey.

The deeds were not recorded until after Mrs. Shattuck's death, and were not actually delivered by Havens into the possession of the grantees until after that event. Neither Mr. Woolsey nor Mrs. Woolsey were informed of the making of the deeds to the Morses. They remained ignorant thereof and supposed that the deed to Mrs. Woolsey included it all, until after the death of Mrs. Shattuck. On October 3, 1906, Mrs. Shattuck had some money on deposit with the First National Bank of Berkeley, and on that day she, by a writing signed by her, opened a joint account of herself and Rosa M. Woolsey, payable to either of them, with said bank and transferred said deposit to said joint account. From that time forward Mr. Woolsey had the active management of the property formerly belonging to Mrs. Shattuck, including that embraced in the deeds to the Morses, as well as that transferred to Mrs. Woolsey. A large part of it was leased to tenants. These leases were renewed from time to time under Mr. Woolsey's management; the new leases being usually signed by him, alone, or by Mrs. Shattuck, as lessor. The money received as rent was deposited to the joint account. There was no request by Mrs. Shattuck that this should be done, nor any agreement to that effect. So far as the evidence shows, the matter was never mentioned by her, although, of course she must have been aware of the fact. Mrs. Woolsey and Mrs. Shattuck each checked upon this account for their respective individual uses. Each would sign checks thereon for management expense, but usually these checks would be signed by Mrs. Shattuck. The property was assessed in the name of Mrs. Shattuck and the taxes were paid by checks on the joint account which, generally, were signed by her.

In explanation of the fact that he consulted Mrs. Shattuck about the property, and had her sign leases and checks for taxes and expenses, Mr. Woolsey testified: That he attended to the business entirely as representing his wife, and had no agreement with Mrs. Shattuck to act as her agent. That he would talk with his wife and Mrs. Shattuck, and the latter would advise and make suggestions. That he more frequently had Mrs. Shattuck sign the expense checks because the business was done in the office in the house in which Mrs. Shattuck lived, and, as she was generally around, it was more convenient to go to her than to Mrs. Woolsey. That, in regard to the leases, Mrs. Shattuck was generally known as the owner, while the Woolsey deed was not public, and he thought it was more satisfactory to Mrs. Shattuck to have it kept quiet. That, while it was not necessary to take matters of concern to the estate to Mrs. Shattuck, he would "defer to her, naturally, of course, as a man would under the circumstances, as far as I ever could. We naturally felt under great obligations to Mrs. Shattuck. She had been my wife's benefactress, had practically turned over everything she had to my wife, and I couldn't do less than consider her, and consult with her, on every occasion." That when he first came to the property it was practically new to him, and she would talk with him and advise him as to the better policy, and that he always felt that he would never give Mrs. Shattuck occasion to think that he would ignore her, and always took her into consultation whenever he could, although the business was entirely in his hands and he managed it and looked after it just as if it was his own, and for his wife.

Upon moving into the house, Mrs. Woolsey immediately took the active management of all of the property, and always thereafter, through her husband as her agent, continued to manage the same, excepting, however, the house in which Mrs. Shattuck lived. During the following two years of Mrs. Shattuck's life the Woolseys used the horses and carriage, the barn, chicken yard, garden, and pasture, and all of the homestead, excepting only the Shattuck dwelling and the grounds immediately around it. Mrs. Shattuck also made such use as she desired although it was but little, of the horses, carriage, barn, chicken yard, garden, and pasture. Nothing was ever said between them on the subject of this mutual use, and there is no evidence that it was in pursuance of any arrangement between them whereby Mrs. Shattuck reserved, or was granted, the right to such use.

[6] There was no evidence of an express agreement that the possession or enjoyment of the property was to be given to Mrs. Shattuck during her life, or for any period, or that the possession or enjoyment thereof by Mrs. Woolsey was to be postponed until the death of Mrs. Shattuck. The contention of the appellant is that the circumstances conclusively establish the intent of the parties, as to all of the property, that Mrs. Shattuck should have the possession and enjoyment thereof during her life. By the terms of the act, it is only where such intent exists that property transferred is subject to such taxation at the death of the transferor. This intent is essential and must be proven, either by the instrument of transfer, or by some other agreement, oral or written, express or implied. Such agreement or intent may be shown by circumstances from which it may be reasonably inferred, as well as by express declarations. For the purposes of the case, it may be conceded that such intent may be shown by proof, direct or circumstantial, of a parol agreement contradicting the terms of the instrument of transfer. But the mere fact that the transferor remains in possession and enjoyment, by sufferance, or permission, or at the request of the transferee, does not of necessity establish such intent or agreement, where there are circumstances justifying a reasonable inference that there was no such intent.

[7, 8] The evidence supports the conclusion that the Woolsey deed was delivered to Havens with intent to pass to the grantee the present title to the property in question, and that the title thereupon vested absolutely in Mrs. Woolsey. A grant without any actual delivery into the possession of the grantee is constructively delivered "where it is delivered to a stranger for the benefit of the grantee, and his assent is shown, or may be presumed." Civ. Code, § 1059. Mrs. Shattuck signed and acknowledged the deed to Mrs. Woolsey and handed it to Havens, without conditions or reservation of control thereof, and with directions to deliver it to the grantee at his discretion, and without other direction as to time of delivery, and she immediately informed Mrs. Woolsey that she had made the deed, saying, "I have given the deeds to John for you," and that the property was hers, and asked her to take up her residence upon it; and she afterwards frequently repeated the statement that the property belonged to Mrs. Woolsey. Mrs. Woolsey took possession of the property, but left the deed in the custody of Havens. This sufficiently establishes the fact that Mrs. Shattuck intended that Havens should hold the deed for the benefit of and as agent for Mrs. Woolsey, and supports the finding that the deed was delivered on the day of its date. Carr v. Howell, 154 Cal. 381, 97 Pac. 885. Where a grantor intends that the deed executed by him shall operate as a present transfer of title, and delivers it to a third person without condition, the title passes as of the date of the delivery to such third person, although the deed is not actually delivered to the grantee until after the grantor's death. Sneathen v. Sneathen, 104 Mo. 210, 16 S. W. 497, 24 Am. St. Rep. 326; 1 Devlin on Deeds (3d Ed.) § 275a, p. 433. There can be no doubt that Mrs. Woolsey assented to the transfer. This brings the case within the rule stated in section 1059. The finding of the court that there was a transfer of the property and a passing of the title thereto at the date of the execution of the deed is therefore sustained by the evidence.

The evidence is also sufficient to uphold the finding that there was no secret intent or understanding that Mrs. Shattuck should have, during her life, the use and enjoyment of the property. The court below, from the evidence, may have inferred that she was entirely willing to trust her own support, unasked, to the generosity and kindly affection of her niece and nephew, believing that it would be freely provided, with the tact and grace which the mutual love and affection between them would inspire. Such unconditional dispositions of property by aged persons to members of the immediate family are not unusual or infrequent. This is shown by the many cases in the reports which have arisen because such confidence has been betrayed, and in which unavailing attempts are made to have a constructive trust declared against the beneficiary. The cases where there is no betrayal do not come before the courts for relief, and it may well be supposed that they are the rule and that the betrayals are the exception. Therefore it cannot be said to have been unreasonable for the court below to infer that the disposition in the present case was made without any secret intent or any arrangement or understanding whatever for the benefit of Mrs. Shattuck.

[9, 10] In the creation of the joint account in October, 1906, she was dealing with the money she already had on hand, and was making a gift thereof to Mrs. Woolsey. The subsequent deposits to that account were made by Mrs. Woolsey out of the rents accruing from the property, including that accruing from the property deeded to the Morses. She was put in possession of all of this property by Mrs. Shattuck, and was not placed by her under any obligation to account for the rentals accruing during her lifetime. The evidence shows that these deposits were made without consultation or arrangement with Mrs. Shattuck, and without any obligation on the part of Mrs. Woolsey to do so. The inference therefore is that these subsequent deposits, so far as they consisted of rentals from the Woolsey property and were used by Mrs. Shattuck for her own support, were not in discharge of any implied obligation or any promise, but were made by Mrs. Woolsey as a voluntary provision for that support, and as a gift to her aunt, and that she took this method of providing for her support in order to enable her aunt to avail herself thereof freely without the annoyance or embarrassment of asking therefor, and to feel herself independent. All these inferences are as reasonable, from the evidence, as the supposition that there was an obligation or promise by Mrs. Woolsey to do so. It is enough to support the findings if we can say that the conclusion was not unreasonable, although the opposite inference might be equally reasonable.

[11] The argument is made that, since it was found by the court below that the deeds to the Morses were made with the intent that they should not take effect in possession and enjoyment by the Morses until the death of Mrs. Shattuck, it must follow that the deed to Mrs. Woolsey, being made at the same time, was made with the same intent. The circumstances, however, were materially different, and such conclusion does not necessarily follow. Mrs. Woolsey was immediately informed of the deed to her, and was invited to take possession at once, which she did with the entire consent and approval of Mrs. Shattuck. The Morses were not informed of the deeds made to them, nor asked to take possession, and they received none of the rents. These differences justify the different inferences made by the court with respect to the several transactions. So, also, with regard to the dwelling in which Mrs. Shattuck continued to reside after the making of the Woolsey deed. While it was included in that deed, the conduct of the parties with reference thereto was wholly different from that respecting the other portions of the land conveyed. Mrs. Shattuck remained in possession. While there is no evidence of any express arrangement by which she was to have the right to such possession, the court may justly have inferred from the conduct of the parties that such arrangement was in fact made, as to that part. The opposite conduct respecting the other parts of the property authorized it to infer the contrary with respect to those portions. Our conclusion therefore is that the finding of the court that the transfers to Mrs. Woolsey, except of the Shattuck dwelling and grounds, were not made with intent that the enjoyment and possession thereof should remain in Mrs. Shattuck until her death, or with the intent that the enjoyment and possession of Mrs. Woolsey should be postponed until the death of Mrs. Shattuck, is fully sustained by the evidence.

The appellant cites a number of cases holding that the inheritance tax cannot be escaped or evaded by a resort to any device or plan, the effect whereof is that the income, profit, or enjoyment of the property, is secured to the grantor or transferor during his life. These cases are distinguishable from the case at bar by the fact that in each of them the arrangement was such that the enjoyment or possession was secured to the grantor, and in none of them did the grantor rely wholly on the kindness, affection, or gratitude of the beneficiary, as was the case here. Thus, in Reish v. Commonwealth, 106 Pa. 526, where the court said that the grantor could not defeat the statute "by any device which secures to him, for life," the enjoyment of the property, the grantee gave a bond to pay the income to the grantor and to allow him the free use and control of the residence and appurtenances during his life. This was the device referred to in the above quotation. In Du Bois Appeal, 121 Pa. 368, 15 Atl. 641, the deed of transfer created a charge on the land in favor of the grantor for the payment of his debts, contracts, and obligations, made or incurred during his life, and was conditioned that if he survived the grantee the deed should be void. In People v. Moir, 207 Ill. 180, 69 N. E. 905, 99 Am. St. Rep. 205, the transfer was made, and simultaneously therewith the grantor made a partnership agreement with the grantees, whereby one-half of the net income from the property was to be paid to the grantor. In Lacy v. State Treasurer (Iowa) 121 N. W. 179, the instrument of transfer reserved to the grantor the use and possession of the property during his life. In State Street Trust Co. v. Treasurer, 209 Mass. 373, 95 N. E. 851, the donees were not to receive any part of the property during their lives, but were to receive one half of the income thereof, the donor retaining the other half. The property itself did not pass until his death. In Estate of Jones, 65 Misc. Rep. 121, 120 N. Y. Supp. 862, the deeds in question were held by the grantor, unrecorded, and without delivery until his death. In Todd's Estate, 237 Pa. 466, 85 Atl. 845, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 869, the grantor reserved to himself during his life a right to the income of the property. In Matter of Cornell, 170 N. Y. 423, 63 N. E. 445, the instrument of transfer reserved to the donor during his life all, or such part, of the net income, of the property, as he might wish. It is obvious that none of these cases is authority for the proposition that where no reservation is made, and the grantor relies on the voluntary acts of the grantee without receiving any promise, secret or otherwise, to allow him the enjoyment of the property or any part thereof, and the grantee thereafter voluntarily allows the grantor to receive a part of the income from the property, such transfer can be deemed to have been made with the intent that it shall take effect in possession and enjoyment after death.

It follows from what has been said that the transfer of the real property by Mrs. Shattuck to Mrs. Woolsey does not come within the terms of the inheritance tax law, and that said property is not only not taxable thereunder, but also that since August 16, 1906, it has been the absolute property of Mrs. Woolsey. The effect is that the deposits made to the joint account thereafter from the rents of said property were not transfers made by Mrs. Shattuck to Mrs. Woolsey, but were transfers made by Mrs. Woolsey out of her own property to the joint account, and, so far as Mrs. Shattuck availed herself thereof by checking out that money for her personal use, the amount so used was a gift by Mrs. Woolsey to Mrs. Shattuck. Necessarily the amount thereof remaining at the death of Mrs. Shattuck was not taxable as property disposed of by her in her lifetime.

The amount of money in the account of Mrs. Shattuck on October 3, 1906, when she changed it to the joint account, is not shown by the evidence or pleadings. It does appear that Mrs. Shattuck drew on said account for her personal expenses from that time until her death. In the absence of anything to the contrary, and if it were necessary to support the judgment, it would be presumed that she consumed it all for her personal support during her lifetime.

[12] The moneys received from August 16, 1906, until the death of Mrs. Shattuck, from the rents of the three lots deeded to the Morses, were also deposited in the joint account. As this property, according to the findings, still belonged to Mrs. Shattuck, and as there is no evidence of any understanding between Mrs. Shattuck and Mrs. Woolsey respecting its disposition, except such inferences as may arise from the fact that Mr. Woolsey received and deposited it, the result would be that in equity a resulting trust might arise with respect thereto, in favor of Mrs. Shattuck, so that to that extent the joint account may be deemed to have been held in trust for her use. The amount of rents accruing from this source was not shown. Only one of said lots was improved. A large part of the property embraced in the Woolsey deed had valuable improvements thereon. On January 30, 1908, so much had accumulated in that joint account, which was drawing no interest, that $10,000 was drawn therefrom and deposited to the joint account in the savings bank. At the death of Mrs. Shattuck in the following September, the balance in the commercial account was nearly $7,000. It is to be inferred that the amount received from the Morse property was relatively very small, as compared with that from the Woolsey properties. The checks drawn by Mrs. Shattuck for her personal use on the joint account would be equitably chargeable to the rents accruing from the Morse lots, and would be applied to that part of the fund, rather than to the contributions thereto made by Mrs. Woolsey from her rents. There being evidence that she drew checks as desired for her personal use, and no evidence as to the amount of this part of the fund, it may be that it was all drawn out by her for her own use. Nothing to the contrary appearing, that fact is to be inferred in support of the judgment. It follows therefore that the plaintiff has failed to establish the fact that any of the funds contributed by Mrs. Shattuck to the joint account remained undisposed of by her in her lifetime for her own use. It may be added that the complaint does not assert any claim to a tax on the money deposited to this account after August 16, 1906. From these facts it appears that the question of the effect of a deposit to joint account, as a disposition of property with the intent that it shall take effect in enjoyment and possession at the death of the donor, does not arise in the case. This renders it unnecessary to consider the argument of appellant on that subject.

[13] Appellant further claims that the findings do not cover all the matters in issue. This refers to the allegation of the complaint that, in addition to the personal property hereinbefore described, Mrs. Shattuck, after August 15, 1906, and in her lifetime, transferred to Mrs. Woolsey "other personal property, the character of which was unknown to" plaintiff, owned by Mrs. Shattuck on August 16, 1906, of the value of $2,000. Appellants say the evidence shows a transfer of some household goods, a horse and carriage, and 6,800 shares of stock in Shattuck Hotel Association, none of which is mentioned in the findings.

The failure to make findings on an issue is not prejudicial error unless there is evidence on the subject. There was no evidence that Mrs. Shattuck in her lifetime transferred any household goods, or horse and carriage, to Mrs. Woolsey. Apparently she continued to be the owner of this property until her death. The facts already stated show that the transaction by which Mrs. Woolsey acquired the hotel stock was, in substance and effect, not a transfer to her by Mrs. Shattuck as a gift, but an exchange by Mrs. Woolsey of a parcel of the land which she had already acquired by the deed from her aunt as aforesaid, for the stock in question. The evidence of that transaction does not tend to sustain the allegation. Moreover, it is plain that the aforesaid allegation of the complaint referred to property owned by Mrs. Shattuck on August 16, 1906, and consequently it did not include the hotel stock. In these circumstances the failure to make findings concerning these articles of property is not assignable as prejudicial error.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SLOSS, J.; WILBUR, J.; MELVIN, J.

177 Cal. 356

ASH v. SOO SING LUNG. (S. F. 7922.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 29, 1918.)

1. Witnesses 🔑374(2) — Examination of Impeaching Witness.

After the purpose of showing the interest of defendant's witness has been completely subserved by answer of plaintiff's witness that defendant's witness did ask him to become a witness in the case, the sustaining of objection to the further question, "What did he say to you?" was not error.

2. WITNESSES 🔑373—LAYING FOUNDATION FOR IMPEACHMENT.

To impeach a witness by evidence of his declarations showing his interest in the case which he has denied, the foundation must first be laid by calling his attention to the particular statements with such circumstances of time, place, and persons present as to give full opportunity for explanation.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1056(1)—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE—FACTS OTHERWISE ESTABLISHED.

An alleged error in sustaining objections to a question asked plaintiff's witness as to whether defendant's witness had talked to him about testifying in the case held not sufficiently harmful to justify reversal where the evidence was cumulative and was purely preliminary to one calling for declarations that were inadmissible.

4. DAMAGES 🔑62(3) — DUTY OF OWNER TO PREVENT OR MINIMIZE.

One recovering for injury to property through breach of an obligation respecting it by another cannot recover for losses directly resulting from his own failure of duty to prevent or minimize the loss, but an instruction that plaintiff could not recover if he could have done himself what defendant failed to do goes beyond the rule.

5. TRIAL 🔑296(1)—INSTRUCTIONS—CORRECTION.

An instruction examined, and held in direct contradiction to, but not correcting, an erroneous instruction, since it entirely omits all reference to plaintiff's duty to avoid injury to his property through the breach of contract by another which had been erroneously stated.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by David Ash against Soo Sing Lung. From a judgment for defendant and denial of a motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Judgment and order reversed.

Everts & Ewing and Carl E. Lindsay, both of Fresno (M. G. Gallaher, of Fresno, of counsel), for appellant. M. B. Harris, E. M. Harris, and T. R. Thomson, all of Fresno, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendant in an action to recover damages for the breach of a contract. The plaintiff was the owner of a peach orchard in the county of Fresno upon which there was growing a crop of peaches during the year 1914. In the month of July of that year the plaintiff and the defendant entered into a contract in writing by the terms of which the defendant agreed to purchase the said growing crop of peaches and to harvest and market the same upon the terms and conditions set forth in said contract. Among these were the following stipulations:

> "Said second party shall at his own cost and expense tie up the trees, the twine to be furnished by said second party therefor. * * * It is expressly understood and agreed that all of the work herein designated shall be done at the time and in the manner herein set forth, under the direction of the said party of the first part and at such times as he shall designate and to his satisfaction."

The defendant, upon the execution of this contract, entered into possession of the premises and proceeded with the performance of his part of the agreement, except that he did not tie up a considerable number of the trees so as to prevent the breaking of the limbs from the increasing weight of their fruitage, as a result of which the limbs of such trees were overweighted and broken down, and the orchard thereby materially injured. The plaintiff sued to recover damages for this alleged breach of the defendant's contract and consequent injury to his orchard. The defendant in his answer denied the existence of any agreement on his part to tie up the trees, and denied that he had failed or refused to do so, and denied that any of their limbs were broken and destroyed, and affirmatively alleged that any injury and damage which had been occasioned to the trees was caused by the fault and negligence of the plaintiff himself, and in the course of this averment stated that:

> "From and after the time the said agreement was entered into by said plaintiff and said defendant, and during all of the time the said injury and damage were being done, the said plaintiff knew that said trees were becoming broken and damaged."

The cause was tried before a jury, which returned a verdict in the defendant's favor, and from the judgment entered thereon and after denial of the plaintiff's motion for a new trial the latter prosecutes this appeal.

[1, 2] The appellant presents two points for our consideration upon this appeal. The first relates to an alleged error of the court in the exclusion of certain evidence offered on plaintiff's behalf. During the trial a witness named E. H. Morgan was called and examined on behalf of the defendant. Upon cross-examination he was asked, the following questions, and gave the following answers:

> "Q. Haven't you interviewed witnesses for the defendant? A. No, sir. Q. Haven't you talked to any of his witnesses? A. No sir; I haven't. Q. Haven't you gone around trying to get witnesses for him? A. No, sir; I haven't."

The evident purpose of these inquiries was to show interest on the part of the witness in the success of the defendant's case. Thereafter in rebuttal the plaintiff produced a witness named Saffell, who was asked by plaintiff's counsel if he knew E. H. Morgan, and answered that he did. He was then asked if since the damage done to plaintiff's orchard Mr. Morgan had any conversation with him with reference to his becoming a witness in the case. He answered in the affirmative. He was then asked if Mr. Morgan requested him to become a witness, and he answered that he did. Thus far no objection had been made to the foregoing questions or answers. He was then asked the question, "What did he say to you?" to which the defendant objected upon the ground that it was irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial. The court sustained this objection. It is not contended by the appellant that the objection made was not broad enough in terms to cover the specific objection that the proper foundation for the question had not been laid; but, even if that criticism had been urged, it would not in our opinion be tenable, particularly since the record discloses that the court was fully advised by the discussion attending the objection as to its scope. The court did not err in sustaining the objection. The purpose of the inquiries put to this witness being that of showing the interest of the witness Morgan in defendant's case, that purpose was completely subserved by the testimony of the witness Saffell, given without objection, to the effect that he had been interviewed by Morgan and requested to become a witness in the case. The particular question objected to called for declarations of the witness Morgan, and it is a well-settled rule that, when a witness is sought to be impeached by evidence of his declarations showing his interest in the case, the foundation for such an inquiry must first be laid by directing the attention of the former witness to the particular statements sought to be proven, with such circumstances of time, place, and persons present as will give the witness intended to be impeached a full opportunity for explanation. Code Civ. Proc. § 2052; 2 Wigmore on Evidence, § 953; Silvey v. Hodgdon, 48 Cal. 185; Fagan v. Lentz, 156 Cal. 681, 105 Pac. 951, 20 Ann. Cas. 221; Est. of Bedford, 158 Cal. 145, 110 Pac. 302. The case of Lewis v. Steiger, 68 Cal. 200, 8 Pac. 884, chiefly relied upon by appellant as laying down a different rule does not in fact do so, since in that case the decision states that the record discloses that the proper foundation for the impeaching testimony was in fact laid.

[3] Following the witness Saffell the plaintiff produced two other witnesses named Vickery and Eudaly, of the first of whom the question was asked as to whether the witness Morgan "had talked" to him about testifying in the case. To this question the defendant urged the same objection as before, which the court sustained. Of the witness Eudaly the same question was asked, and this witness was permitted to answer it affirmatively, without objection; but when asked for the conversation, the former objection was urged and sustained. The trial court might well have permitted the preliminary question asked of the witness Vickery to have been answered, but its error, if any, in refusing to do so was harmless for several reasons. In the first place the interest of the witness Morgan in the defendant's case had already been shown by the preceding testimony given by the witness Saffell without objection, and it was further shown by the answer of the witness Eudaly, given without objection, that he had been "talked to" by Morgan. The addition of like evidence on the part of the witness Vickery would only have been cumulative, and for that reason the exclusion of it would not be sufficiently harmful to justify a reversal of the case. People v. Emmons, 7 Cal. App. 685–694, 95 Pac. 1032. Besides, it is evident from the record that the question was purely preliminary to one calling for declarations on the part of the witness Morgan, and which, as we have seen, would have been inadmissible for the reasons already given. For the same reasons the final question asked of the witness Eudaly was, upon objection, properly excluded.

[4] A much more serious contention on the part of the appellant arises over the alleged error of the trial court in the giving of a certain instruction to the jury. There was evidence in the case sufficiently tending to show that the defendant did not tie up a considerable number of the larger of the fruitladen trees, as a result of which their branches became badly broken. There was also evidence tending to show that shortly after the contract with the defendant was entered into, and after the latter had gone into possession of the premises, the plaintiff visited the orchard, and then observed that numbers of the trees were becoming overweighted with their burden of fruit, and were in danger of being broken, and that he directed the attention of the defendant's employés to the matter, and insisted upon the tying being done, and even went to the extent of showing how the same should be done, and was then assured that it would be attended to. The evidence further tends to show that upon a later visit not long thereafter the plaintiff saw that the defendant's agreement in that regard was not being kept, and that numbers of the trees were already broken, and that others were in imminent danger of breaking. The plaintiff did not himself act upon the discovery of these facts in the way of taking any steps to avert further injuries to his trees by tying them up himself. The defendant in his pleading, proof, and argument sought to invoke the rule of law which renders it the duty of one who is threatened with an injury of his property through the breach of an obligation by another to do everything in his power to prevent or minimize the loss consequent upon such breach, and if he suffers injury by failing to take these precautions he cannot recover for such damages as are the direct result of such failure on his part. In support of this contention before the trial court the defendant requested and the court gave the following instruction:

> "You are instructed that the law requires that the party claiming to be injured shall do whatever he reasonably can, and improve all reasonable opportunities to lessen the alleged injury. * * *
>
> "If you find from the evidence that the defendant failed to tie the trees according to the directions of plaintiff, or at the times designated by him, and if you also find from the evidence > that plaintiff knew of such failure on the part of defendant at the time of such failure, and if you also find from the evidence that plaintiff could himself have tied or caused said trees to be tied, and if you further find that he failed to do so, then in such event your verdict must be for the defendant."

Conceding that the rule contended for by the defendant requiring one threatened with injury to his property through the breach of an obligation respecting the same undertaken by another to do all in his power to prevent or minimize the loss to himself impending upon such breach to be a correct statement of the law, it must be apparent that the foregoing instruction went far beyond the boundaries of this rule; for in effect it charged the jury that the plaintiff could recover no damages from the defendant for injuries arising from the latter's breach of his obligation if the plaintiff could have done himself what the defendant ought to have done, but failed to do under the terms of his contract. A rule of law thus broadly stated would place a premium upon the defendant's breach of his agreement, and result in entirely transferring to the plaintiff's shoulders the burden of the defendant's violated obligation. The utmost extent to which the rule invoked by the defendant in this case should have been applied would have been in the form of an instruction that the defendant was bound to respond in damages to the full extent of whatever injuries the plaintiff had sustained through the breach of the obligation, less such an amount of such damages as the jury might find could have been prevented or minimized by the plaintiff's own action in the use of ordinary care and prudence to avoid the effects and consequences of the defendant's breach of his obligation, after discovering the impending danger of injury to his property resultant upon such breach.

[5] The respondent, however, contends, that the vice of the foregoing instruction, conceding it to be faulty, was offset or removed by the following instruction, given at plaintiff's request:

> "Gentlemen of the jury, if you find from the evidence that the defendant in this action agreed with the plaintiff in this action to tie up the trees on said premises, under the direction of plaintiff, and at such times as plaintiff should designate, and if you further find that the plaintiff gave such instructions, and if you further find that the defendant neglected so to do, you are instructed that your verdict should be for the plaintiff for such damage, if any, as was proximately caused thereby, not exceeding, however, the amount prayed for, namely $4,628.00."

The utmost that may be said of this instruction is that it is in direct contradiction of the former one, and that it cannot be held to have cured the error therein, since it entirely omits all reference to the very matter of the plaintiff's duty to avoid injury, which constitutes the vice of that instruction. The jury could hardly have failed to be led into confusion by these conflicting instructions and hence the error in giving the former instruction must be held to have been prejudicial. The respondent's contention that such error would be cured by the general verdict of the jury in defendant's favor upon all of the issues in the case has no merit in view of the fact that the uncontradicted evidence in the case shows that some at least of the damages complained of arose after the date of the contract between the parties had been entered into and was due to the defendant's breach of his obligation to properly tie up the branches of the plaintiff's trees. This being so, the court's erroneous instruction went to the very meat of the case, and obviously conduced to the verdict in the defendant's favor.

Judgment and order reversed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.

(177 Cal. 367)

In re PUSEY'S ESTATE. (L. A. 5283.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 29, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1180(1), 1202—REVERSAL WITHOUT DIRECTION—NEW TRIAL.

Where the Supreme Court reverses a judgment or order without special direction to the court below to proceed further, the case is not concluded, and the court below can act further and direct new trial of the matter.

2. JUDGMENT 🔑822(1)—INVALIDITY OF FOREIGN JUDGMENT OR JUDGMENT OF OTHER STATE—EVIDENCE.

The invalidity of a foreign judgment, or of a judgment of a sister state, may be shown collaterally by evidence not incorporated into the part of the record constituting the technical judgment roll.

3. DIVORCE 🔑79 — AFFIDAVIT SUPPORTING SERVICE BY PUBLICATION.

In proceedings for probate of a deceased wife's will, the question in issue being whether such will had been revoked by her marriage, and it being claimed that her marriage was void because her husband had a first wife living and undivorced at the time of the purported marriage, affidavit of the husband, in his divorce suit against his first wife in another state, supporting service of summons by publication, and stating that personal service within the state could not be made, etc., was competent evidence tending to prove that defendant wife could not be found within the state.

4. EVIDENCE 🔑80(1)—PRESUMPTION—IDENTITY OF LAW OF TWO STATES.

Where it is not shown that the law of Oregon on a particular point differs from the law of California, the California court, where the matter is material, will presume it to have been the same.

5. DIVORCE 🔑326 — RECITALS OF DIVORCE DECREE—CONCLUSIVENESS AS TO DUE SERVICE OF PROCESS.

Where an Oregon divorce decree contained recitals as to service of summons having been made by publication, the same having been ordered on due and proper "affidavits" filed and approved by the judge, the publication of summons having been duly approved according to law, etc., such recitals were conclusive of the fact that due service of process on proper affidavits had been made, unless contradicted by other parts of the record, or by proof made independently of the record, where admissible, and the recital imported that at least two affidavits were filed to obtain the order of publication, and the California court, upon collateral attack on the Oregon decree, must presume that there was another affidavit, not incorporated by the Oregon clerk in the transcript of record introduced in evidence, sufficient to support the order in such particular, this though the order for publication of summons referred to but one affidavit.

6. DIVORCE ⚿326 — FOREIGN JUDGMENT — PRESUMPTIONS FAVORING.

In proceedings to probate a woman's will, wherein the validity of divorce secured by her husband in Oregon from his first wife was material on the question of revocation of the will by marriage, the Supreme Court of California was bound to presume that the date in the summons by publication in the Oregon suit was the date of the order for publication as required by the Oregon statute.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Gertrude C. Pusey, deceased. From an order admitting decedent's alleged will to probate on petition of S. H. Finley, H. F. Pusey appeals, and, from an order denying his petition for administration, C. S. Crookshank appeals. Orders reversed.

C. D. Latourette, of Oregon City, Or., and Williams & Rutan, of Santa Ana, for appellants. Steele Finley, of Santa Ana, and E. J. Fleming and B. F. Woodward, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Gertrude C. Pusey died on October 1, 1914, leaving property subject to administration in Orange county, Cal. S. H. Finley filed a petition in the superior court of Orange county for the probate of a document dated September 20, 1913, alleged to be the last will of said decedent. Henry F. Pusey, claiming to be the surviving husband of said decedent, filed a contest of said will on the ground that he was lawfully married to said decedent on June 15, 1914, and that by reason of said marriage said will was by law revoked. Civ. Code, § 1300. M. M. Crookshank, as nominee of H. F. Pusey, the alleged husband of said decedent, filed in said court a petition for letters of administration upon the estate of said decedent. The two petitions came on for trial, whereupon the court made its orders admitting the alleged will to probate, and denying the petition of Crookshank for letters of administration. Appeals were duly taken from these orders and in July, 1916, this court reversed both of them. 159 Pac. 433. It was the contention of Finley that the claim that Pusey was the surviving husband of the decedent was not sustained, because in the year 1891 he was lawfully married to one Julia Jarvis, who was still living, and that said marriage still existed, and that his subsequent attempted marriage to the decedent was for that reason void. In proof of this contention Finley introduced in evidence the record of a judgment of the circuit court of the county of Clackamas, state of Oregon, rendered on November 13, 1893, purporting to be a judgment divorcing said Pusey and his said former wife Julia, which judgment he claimed was void because of the failure to obtain jurisdiction of the defendant therein. The orders admitting the will to probate and denying administration were reversed on the ground that no evidence had been given to show whether or not the former wife, Julia, was alive at the date of the marriage of Pusey to said decedent, and that in view of the presumption that persons were innocent of crime, it would be presumed that the former wife was dead at the time of the subsequent marriage, and that said Pusey was therefore free to enter into said subsequent contract of marriage. The judgment of the court was simply that the two orders appealed from be reversed. There was no direction for further proceedings in the court below.

Thereafter, on motion of the proponent of the will, the court, over the objection of contestant, proceeded to try the causes again, and again made orders therein admitting the will to probate and denying the petition for administration. It appeared that during the pendency of the appeal M. M. Crookshank, the petitioner for administration, had died, and that a new petition was then filed by C. S. Crookshank, who had been subsequently nominated as administrator by Pusey. Thereupon Pusey appealed from the order admitting the will to probate and Crookshank appealed from the order denying his petition for administration. These are the appeals now presented for our consideration.

[1] The appellants first contend that the entire matter was concluded by the judgment of this court upon the former appeals, and that the court had no power to try the causes again, and could do nothing more than deny probate of the will and make an order appointing Crookshank as administrator of the estate. His theory upon this point is that where this court reverses a judgment or order without special direction to the court below to proceed further, the case is concluded and the court below is without power to act further, except to carry out the judgment of the Supreme Court by giving the relief demanded by the party who is successful in the appeal. There is no merit whatever in this contention. The contrary is thoroughly settled by numerous decisions of the court. In Sharp v. Miller, 66 Cal. 98, 4 Pac. 1065, upon a similar question, the court said:

> "The reversal of the judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial when the cause was here before, * * * placed the parties in the lower court in the same position as if the case had never been tried, with the exception that the opinion of this court must be followed so far as applicable in the new trial."

When an order has been reversed the effect is that:

"It no longer had any vitality or force, and the result was to leave the proceeding where it had stood before that order was made." Estate of Mitchell, 126 Cal. 250, 58 Pac. 549.

In Ashton v. Heydenfeldt, 124 Cal. 14, 56 Pac. 624, speaking of a decree which had been reversed, the court said:

> "But that decree having been reversed—vacated—on appeal, the matter stood as though no decree had ever been made."

Many cases decide the same proposition. Stearns v. Aguirre, 7 Cal. 443; Phelan v. Board, 9 Cal. 16; Davidson v. Dallas, 15 Cal. 84; Ryan v. Tomlinson, 39 Cal. 639; Myers v. McDonald, 68 Cal. 162, 8 Pac. 809; Falkner v. Hendy, 107 Cal. 49, 40 Pac. 21, 386. The court, therefore, was acting within its powers in directing that a new trial of the two petitions should be had.

Upon the second trial it was shown that Julia, the former wife of Pusey, was still living; that she was informed of the decree of divorce in favor of Pusey against her shortly after it was rendered, and took no steps to vacate or defeat it; that on July 18, 1902, a marriage ceremony was regularly performed between her and one J. H. Proctor; that they have ever since lived together as husband and wife; that on November 6, 1906, Henry F. Pusey was again married to one Kittie E. Paine, who thereafter, on May 7, 1907, duly obtained a judgment of divorce from him. It inferentially appears, and it is not disputed, that Henry F. Pusey never instituted any other action for divorce from his first wife Julia, or obtained any decree of divorce from her, other than the decree of 1893 aforesaid. It would follow, therefore, that if that decree is void he still remains her lawful husband; that his subsequent marriages were void; that he is not the surviving husband of the decedent nor entitled to succeed to any part of her estate or to nominate a person to apply for letters of administration thereon, or to contest her will, and that a will made by her prior to said attempted marriage to him would not be revoked by that marriage. The decision of the case, therefore, depends upon the question whether or not the decree of the Oregon court in 1893, purporting to divorce Henry F. Pusey from his wife Julia, is valid. Upon the former appeal the court held that the presumption of innocence and death above mentioned rendered it unnecessary to determine this question.

A document was introduced in evidence, duly authenticated by the certificate of the clerk of Clackamas county, Or. The certificate stated that:

> "The annexed transcript of record, including decree, has been compared by me with the original files on record in this office, and that it is a correct transcript therefrom, and of the whole of said original files as the same appear of record in my office and in my custody."

The transcript on its face appears to be a copy of the record and papers in the proceedings in the case of Henry F. Pusey v. Julia Pusey, for a divorce, culminating in the decree of divorce rendered on November 13, 1893. It is claimed by the respondent that the decree is void for the reason that the summons was not served on the defendant, except by publication, and that the affidavit for publication, the order for such publication, and the summons as published were not in conformity with the laws of Oregon then in force upon the subject, and consequently that they were ineffectual to confer upon the court jurisdiction to render the decree against the defendant.

[2] The appellants claim that under the law of Oregon the affidavit and order for publication of summons form no part of the judgment roll and cannot be considered, upon collateral attack, as evidence to impeach the validity of the decree. This was the rule in force in this state with regard to collateral attacks upon domestic judgments during the time when our Code was the same as the law in force in Oregon in 1893. Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 404, 94 Am. Dec. 742; Estate of McNeil, 155 Cal. 342, 100 Pac. 1086. But in this case the question is unimportant. The decree was rendered in Oregon. So far as this point is concerned it stands upon the same footing as a foreign judgment. The invalidity of a foreign judgment, or of a judgment of a sister state, may be shown collaterally by evidence which is not incorporated into the part of the record constituting the technical judgment roll. Estate of Hancock, 156 Cal. 812, 106 Pac. 58, 134 Am. St. Rep. 177. The copies of the affidavit and order for publication, aforesaid, were introduced as evidence to impeach the judgment, and they must be considered.

[3, 4] The laws of Oregon on the subject were introduced in evidence, and it was stipulated at the trial that any decision of the Supreme Court of Oregon pertinent to the case should be deemed to be in evidence, and could be used either on the trial or on appeal to prove the law of that state. The statute provided that when "the defendant cannot after diligence be found within the state, and when that appears by affidavit to the satisfaction of the court or the judge thereof," the court shall order that the service be made "by publication of a summons." On the subject of diligence the affidavit states:

> "That personal service of summons herein within this state cannot be made on the defendant, and that the sheriff [of the county] having made due return thereof on the back of said original summons to that effect after due diligence and the plaintiff has made diligent search and inquiry and knows that said defendant is not within the state of Oregon."

This is a positive statement by the plaintiff that he knows that the defendant was not at that time within the state. If that were true, then, of necessity, she could not have been found within the state, even with the utmost diligence, or, in the words of the statute aforesaid, it would be true that "the defendant cannot after diligence be found within the state." It was possible that the plaintiff may have had positive knowledge that she was not then within the state. The affidavit was therefore competent evidence tending to prove the fact that the defendant could not be found within the state, and it was sufficient, so far as that point was concerned. As was said in Rue v. Quinn, 137 Cal. 656, 66 Pac. 217:

> "There is not an entire absence of evidence in the affidavit on behalf of the plaintiff to sustain the order, and it cannot be regarded as void." Anderson v. Goff, 72 Cal. 69, 13 Pac. 73, 1 Am. St. Rep. 34; Hoffman v. Superior Court, 151 Cal. 390, 90 Pac. 939; People v. Wrin, 143 Cal. 13, 76 Pac. 646.

It is not shown that the law of Oregon on this point differs from that of California, and it is therefore presumed to have been the same.

[5] The Oregon law further provided that:

> "In case of publication, the court or judge shall also direct a copy of the summons and complaint to be forthwith deposited in the post office, directed to the defendant at his place of residence, unless it shall appear that such residence is neither known to the party making the application nor can with reasonable diligence be ascertained by him."

On this subject the affidavit states only this:

> "That defendant's present address and whereabouts are to the plaintiff unknown, excepting that the last he heard of her she was somewhere in the state of California."

This does not even purport to aver that the residence of the defendant could not by reasonable diligence have been found by him, nor that he used reasonable, or any diligence, to ascertain it. The facts necessary to sustain an order for publication of summons which did not direct mailing of a copy of the summons and complaint to the residence of the defendant did not appear from this affidavit. The order for publication contained no directions for mailing such copy. If no other foundation were laid for the order, it would be invalid under the statute quoted. The decree itself, however, contained the following recital:

> "Service of summons having been made by publication, the same having been ordered herein upon due and proper affidavits having been filed and approved by the Honorable Loyal B. Stearns, judge of the Fourth judicial district of the state of Oregon, during the absence from Clackamas county, Or., of the Honorable T. A. McBride, judge of this court. The publication of summons having been duly approved according to law," etc.

The rule on this subject is that such recitals in a decree are conclusive of the fact that due service of process had been made, unless the recital is contradicted by other parts of the record, or by the proof made independently of the record, where such proof is admissible. If the recital is sufficient and the other parts of the record are equivocal, or if the independent proof is not of necessity inconsistent with the recital, such recital will prevail, and the judgment will be held valid by virtue thereof. In the present case the recital states, that the publication was ordered "upon due and proper affidavits," filed and approved by the judge making the order. The transcript certified by the clerk contains but one affidavit, and that does not support the order of publication as made. If the recital mentioned one only, it would be presumed that it referred to the affidavit in the record, and the decree would be held void. But the recital imports that at least two affidavits were filed to obtain the order, and we must therefore, upon this collateral attack, presume that there was another affidavit which was sufficient to support the order in this particular, and that for some reason the clerk failed to incorporate it in the transcript introduced in evidence. The certificate of the clerk does not, of necessity, show the contrary. It states that the document is a correct transcript "of the whole of said original files as the same appear of record in my office and in my custody." The certificate was made in the year 1914. It may be that another affidavit was filed in 1893 and that by some means it had been lost or removed from the files and was not in the custody of the clerk or in his office in 1914. The law does not require that such affidavits be recorded, and it is to be presumed that it was merely filed. This rule is well supported by authority. Thus in Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 407, 94 Am. Dec. 742, where the record contained a recital of service, the court said:

> "To illustrate: Suppose that portion of the judgment roll denominated the 'affidavit or proof of service' shows that personal service was made upon the son of defendant, and the remainder of the roll says nothing about service. We then have a want of jurisdiction appearing upon the face of the record. But suppose the judgment states that the defendant appeared, or that personal service was made upon him, or something else * * * equivalent, as it frequently does, the opposite result follows, for the record cannot lie, and it appears that the father as well as the son had been served, which may well have been the case. The record in such a case does not blow hot and cold, as might be supposed; on the contrary, both acts may have been done. On presentation of the return of service upon the son, the court may have declared it no service, and service upon the father may have been subsequently made, and the wrong return may have found its way into the judgment roll. To hold thus would be consistent with the record, while to hold otherwise would be to contradict the judgment. So in the case of a service by publication—if the affidavit of the printer states that the summons was published one month, and yet the court in its judgment states that it was published three, or that service has been had upon the defendant, it will be presumed that other proof than that contained in the judgment roll was made, for not to so presume would be to deny to the record that absolute verity which must be accorded to it."

Quivey v. Porter, 37 Cal. 463, is to the same effect. So far as we are advised the same doctrine prevails in Oregon. So in this case the judge who made the order may have declared the affidavit presented in the transcript introduced in evidence insufficient, and may have required another affidavit to be filed, upon which the order was made, which other affidavit was afterwards lost from the files. In support of the recitals in the judgment it must be presumed that this was done, otherwise the recitals would not be true. Upon these principles the judgment must be sustained so far as this objection is concerned.

The proposition that there was another affidavit as above stated is not disproved by the fact that the order for publication of summons refers to but one affidavit. Assuming the verity of the recital in the decree, as we must, the fact would be that the order would have been made upon the affidavit that was sufficient to support it, and which was subsequently lost, and not upon the affidavit contained in the record, and which was defective. This being so, the order would be accurate in referring to but one affidavit.

[6] With respect to the sufficiency of the summons as published, the requirement of the statute is that:

> "The summons published shall contain the name of the court and the title of the cause, a succinct statement of the relief demanded, the date of the order for service by publication, and the time within which the defendant is required to answer the complaint."

The summons as published, according to the record, closes as follows:

> "This summons is published by order of Hon. Loyal B. Stearns, judge of the Fourth judicial district of the state of Oregon.
> "Brownell & Dresser,
> "Attorneys for Plaintiff.
> "Dated September 19, 1893. 9–22:10–27."

According to the law of Oregon, it is imperative that the published summons shall comply with the above-quoted statute, in order to make a lawful service upon the defendant by publication. Odell v. Campbell, 9 Or. 304. The date of the order of service by publication does not appear in the summons, except as it appears by the words above quoted. It is claimed that the date therein given is not the date of the order for publication, but is the date of the summons itself, and hence that the publication is void. The law of Oregon does not require that the summons should be dated. The original summons appears in another place in the record, and it contains no date. It seems also that the law of Oregon does not require the summons to be issued by the clerk, and that the practice is for it to be signed by the attorneys for the plaintiff. The original summons was so signed, precisely as the summons published as aforesaid was so signed. It is obvious, therefore, that the date given in the publication as above shown was not intended as the date of the summons, but must have been intended for some other purpose. If it had been placed two lines higher in the paper there would have been no doubt that it was intended as the date of the publication order. Inasmuch as the law requires the summons to contain the date of that order, and as the date given was the correct date thereof, and serves no other purpose, and as the summons was not required to be dated, and was not dated, and in view of the presumptions in favor of lawful service arising from the effect of the recital in the decree aforesaid, we are of the opinion that we are bound to presume that this date was the date of the order for publication.

The respondent does not claim that any other defects exist in the record of the divorce case in 1893 which would defeat the jurisdiction of the court, or render the decree invalid. It must therefore be treated as a valid judgment of divorce. The result of this conclusion is that the marriage of Henry F. Pusey to the decedent was valid; that the will previously made by her was revoked by such marriage; and that upon the proofs offered the court below should have denied probate of the will and should have granted the petition for letters of administration.

The orders appealed from are reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.

177 Cal. 385

WEBSTER v. LOWE et al. (S. F. 7897.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 30, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1010(1)—REVIEW—FINDINGS SUPPORTED BY EVIDENCE.

If there is any evidence to support findings of trial court, they are binding on appeal.

2. PARTNERSHIP 🔑24—ESTOPPEL—ACCEPTING OBLIGATION OF ONE PARTNER.

That plaintiff took the note of the father alone as payment for property purchased by a firm in ignorance of the partnership would not estop him from claiming that the son was a silent partner.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Everett J. Brown, Judge.

Action by George A. Webster against Annie S. Lowe and husband and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants named appeal. Affirmed.

C. A. S. Frost, of San Francisco (Calder Innes, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants. Marcel Cerf and J. J. Lermen, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, to subject certain real property conveyed by defendant Lou Choy to his daughter-in-law, Annie S. Lowe, to the lien of a judgment theretofore obtained by plaintiff against defendant Lou Choy, execution thereon having been returned nulla bona. Plaintiff alleges that the property in question was transferred by defendant Lou Choy to said daughter-in-law for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding creditors. The court found in favor of the plaintiff upon all the allegations of the complaint, finding, among other things, that defendant Lou Choy was insolvent at the time of said transfer; that there was no consideration for the transfer, and that it was made for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding creditors. These findings are attacked on the ground that they are unsupported by the evidence. Appellant claims that the evidence shows that the consideration for said transfer was: First, an indebtedness due to his son Toy Kay Lowe for salary at $75 a month as an employé in the farming business for four years, together with money deposited by said son with said father, aggregating $5,000.10; second, the sum of $700 belonging to said daughter-in-law and loaned Lou Choy; and, third, the assumption of an indebtedness secured by deed of trust upon said property to the defendants Garthwaite and Eccleston as trustees for the Oakland Bank of Savings.

[1] It is unnecessary to discuss in detail the evidence in the case, for if there is any evidence to support the findings of the trial court those findings are binding on this court. With reference to the indebtedness alleged to be due from the father, Lou Choy, to the son, Toy Kay Lowe, respondent took the position that that indebtedness did not exist; that the relation between father and son was that of partners in the farming business, the son being a silent partner. There was evidence to support this view. Mr. Metson testified that defendant Toy Kay Lowe told him that he was interested with his father in farming, and that he was a silent partner with his father in the farming business. There was evidence with reference to the alleged indebtedness to the daughter-in-law of $700 which would have justified the court in a finding on that issue in favor of the appellants, but the court was not bound to believe that testimony, and this finding against the appellants on that issue must stand. The same is true with relation to the contention that the assumption of the indebtedness above mentioned constituted a consideration for the transfer.

[2] Appellant claims that the plaintiff is estopped from claiming that Toy Kay Lowe was a partner of his father. In order to understand this contention it will be necessary to state some of the evidence upon which it is based. The respondent furnished seed potatoes to defendant Lou Choy. The arrangement for the purchase of said potatoes was made with Toy Kay Lowe, but before he would sell the potatoes respondent demanded that the father, Lou Choy, execute notes in payment therefor. It is claimed that, having declined at that time to recognize Toy Kay Lowe as a partner, he is now estopped from claiming that he was then a partner. It was not claimed that respondent knew at that time that Toy Kay Lowe was a silent partner in the business. The result of appellants' contention, if sustained, would be this: Father and son were partners. They purchased potatoes from respondent, who took the promissory note of the father as payment for said potatoes, in ignorance of the partnership. Thus the son as silent partner secured the advantages of the transaction without assuming its burdens, so far as respondent knew. The son's wife now claims that, because the obligation of the father alone was taken as payment for property purchased by the partnership, respondent is thereby estopped from pursuing the father's property, upon which credit was intended, into her hands, on the theory that, not having recognized the existence of a partnership before he knew of it, he cannot assert its existence after discovering it. The mere statement of this proposition is its own sufficient refutation. No principle of estoppel applies.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge, pro tem.; MELVIN, J.

35 Cal. App. 663

LOGAN v. LEWIS. (Civ. 2255.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 20, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 18, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1002 — FINDING BASED ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE—REVIEW.

A jury finding based on sharply conflicting testimony will not be disturbed on appeal.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1040(10)—OVERRULING DEMURRER—HARMLESS ERROR.

In suit for personal injuries, where no evidence was introduced in support of the cause of action for damages to the motorcycle, and the same was dismissed before the case was submitted, defendant could not be prejudiced by the overruling of his demurrer, although causes of action were improperly joined under Code Civ. Proc. § 427.

3. TRIAL 🔑339(2)—VERDICT—CORRECTION.

The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff assessing general damages at $3,240 and compensatory damages at $400. Counsel for plaintiff, being of the opinion that that latter item was not warranted by the evidence, suggested that the court advise the jury to reconsider the verdict. This, with proper instruction, was done, and after further deliberation the jury returned a second verdict reducing the special damages, but adding the difference to the general damages, thus leaving the gross amount of the verdict the same as before. Held that, as the verdict had not been recorded, nor the jury discharged, the court was warranted in permitting the jury to amend their verdict in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 619, providing that where the verdict is informal or insufficient, it may be corrected by the jury under advice of court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by William A. Logan against H. F. Lewis. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Milton L. Schmitt, of San Francisco, for appellant. Dunn, White & Aiken, of Oakland, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action for personal injuries caused by a collision between a motorcycle and an automobile.

Appellant's first point is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict and judgment. According to the evidence introduced by the plaintiff the accident occurred about as follows:

Piedmont avenue in Oakland is one of the thoroughfares of that city running nearly north and south. At nearly right angles thereto it is intersected but not crossed by Monte Vista avenue, which comes into it from the east or right as one looks north. The neighborhood at this intersection is a business district of the city. On the day of the accident the plaintiff was riding on a motorcycle traveling north on Piedmont avenue toward the intersection of Monte Vista avenue, and the defendant's automobile, driven by his chauffeur, Kurihari, and containing his son and a young lady, was at the same time being driven from the east or right on Monte Vista avenue toward Piedmont avenue. At the corner of the intersection nearest plaintiff as he approached, a row of business houses entirely obstructed the view of defendant's chauffeur to his left, so that he was entirely unable to see the approach of plaintiff on his motorcycle until he passed this corner. The plaintiff was traveling north on the right-hand side of Piedmont avenue toward Monte Vista avenue at a speed of about 10 miles per hour, and the automobile of the defendant, a large Pierce-Arrow car, swung south around this obstructed corner at a speed of about 25 miles per hour, and in doing so came suddenly into the direct path on which plaintiff was traveling, by reason whereof there was a collision between the motorcycle and the automobile. The automobile did not cross the street to the right of the intersection before turning to the left, but took a short, sharp turn to the left, cutting this corner at a place and a rate of speed prohibited by law.

[1] It is defendant's contention that his car had come to a stop and was at rest when the accident occurred, and that the plaintiff in fact ran into the automobile. Two of his witnesses so testified; and he argues that the physical facts of the collision demonstrate this to be true. As to this controversy between the parties it is sufficient to say that the record presents a sharp conflict in the testimony, in the presence of which under a familiar rule appellate courts cannot disturb the finding of the jury or the trial court. Carter v. Grosshans, 17 Cal. App. 703, 121 Pac. 700.

[2] The appellant next contends that the court erred in overruling his demurrer to the complaint upon the ground of misjoinder of several causes of action. Assuming for the sake of argument that at the time this case was tried a cause of action for damages for personal injuries could not, under section 427 of the Code of Civil Procedure, be joined with one for injuries to personal property, and that the demurrer to the complaint ought for that reason to have been sustained, still as no evidence was introduced in support of the cause of action relating to damages to the motorcycle, and the same was dismissed before the case was submitted to the jury, we are at a loss to understand how it can be seriously asserted that the defendant was prejudiced by the overruling of the demurrer.

Exception is also taken to certain remarks made by the court in the presence of the jury concerning the manner in which the jury should bring in its verdict; the general tenor of those remarks being that the jury should separate the special from the general damages. Reading this instruction alone it perhaps would appear that the court assumed that the jury would find for the plaintiff, but the instruction immediately thereafter given to the jury directed them what to do in case they should find for the defendant; and moreover, all the instructions read together we think fairly covered the law applicable to the facts of the case.

The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, assessing the general damages at $3,240, and the compensatory damages—damages for nursing and medical attendance, etc.—at the sum of $400. As to this last item counsel for the plaintiff, fearing that perhaps this sum was larger than was warranted by the evidence, suggested to the court that it advise the jury to reconsider the verdict. This, with proper instructions, was done, and after further deliberation the jury returned a second verdict reducing the special damages to the sum of $285, and adding the difference to the general damages, thus leaving the gross amount of the verdict the same as before.

[3] Inasmuch as the verdict of the jury had not been recorded nor the jury discharged, we think the court was warranted in permitting the jury to make this amendment. Code Civ. Proc. § 619; 38 Cyc. 1893, 1894; 22 Ency. Plead. & Prac. 967, 968; McNutt v. Pabst, 25 Cal. App. 177, 143 Pac. 77; Conlin v. Lewis Inv. Co., 26 Cal. App. 388, 147 Pac. 472.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

---

35 Cal. App. 666

BANK OF FRUITVALE v. FIDELITY & CASUALTY CO. OF NEW YORK.

(Civ. 2228.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 21, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 18, 1918.)

1. INSURANCE ⟹177—INSURANCE AGAINST ROBBERY — CONSTRUCTION OF POLICY — STANDARD TIME.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1875, enumerating the measure of time as one of the facts of which courts take judicial notice, and the fact that since 1883 standard or railroad time has been uniformly recognized and adopted as the measure of time in the state, where a bank's policy of insurance against inside or outside robbery in that part fixing the attaching and termination of the insurance specified that standard time should control, the parties contracted with reference to standard time in a stipulation as to the hours between which the custodian of property must be accompanied by a guard.

2. INSURANCE 🔑143(6)—REVISION OF POLICY —STATUTE.

Under Civ. Code, § 3399, providing that when, through fraud or mutual mistake, etc., a written contract does not truly express the intention of the parties, it may be revised on the application of a party aggrieved to express that intention, where a bank applied for a policy of insurance against inside or outside robbery, and the insurer wrote its agent October 10th stating that it was covering the bank as of October 15th, and the bank had applied for insurance against loss of the character indicated up to 9 p. m. Saturdays, but the policy issued and handed to the bank covered only up to 8:30 p. m. Saturdays, the bank not examining the policy, and so not discovering the fact, such bank was not entitled to have the policy revised or reformed to extend insurance up to 9 p. m. Saturdays; the application for insurance and the insurer's letter to its agent not constituting a preliminary contract of insurance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Everett J. Brown, Judge.

Action by the Bank of Fruitvale, a corporation, against the Fidelity & Casualty Company of New York, a corporation. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Judgment affirmed.

Chas. C. Boynton, of Oakland, for appellant. Chickering & Gregory and Winfield Dorn, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendant after an order sustaining its demurrer to the plaintiff's fifth amended complaint.

The action was brought upon a policy of insurance against inside or outside robbery for a loss alleged to be covered by the policy. The complaint is in two counts, and the facts therein stated show that plaintiff is a banking corporation doing business in the city of Oakland, where it maintains a main office and a branch office in different parts of the city, keeping its money and valuables at the main office and conveying some portion thereof by a custodian to and from its branch office every day before and after business hours, which were from 8 a. m. to 5 p. m. daily except on Saturday, when its two places of business were kept open until 9 p. m.

On October 8, 1913, having received a request from plaintiff for a policy of insurance protecting it against loss from robbery and burglary, defendant sent one of its agents to plaintiff to obtain its application therefor. At this visit the agent of the defendant was told by one of the officials of plaintiff that the bank desired a policy of insurance to protect it against loss by robbery, such loss to be covered on Saturday evenings up to 9 o'clock. No assurance was given to the plaintiff that such a policy would be issued, but the application was reduced to writing by the agent and sent to the defendant, which in acknowledging its receipt on October 10, 1913, in a letter to its agent, stated that the company was covering the plaintiff as of the date of October 15, 1913, on which date the defendant issued and delivered a policy of insurance, which by its terms covered plaintiff against loss of the character indicated but only up to 8:30 p. m. on Saturdays. Upon receipt of this policy the plaintiff placed it in its vaults without reading it, and had no further communication with the defendant with reference thereto until after the occurrence of the loss. On Saturday evening, February 21, 1914, and for a long time prior thereto, plaintiff had in its employ an armed guard, a trustworthy person, who was specially directed and instructed by plaintiff to accompany its custodian while conveying plaintiff's money and valuables between its places of business, such attendance on Saturday evenings being required of him between the hours of 5 and 9 o'clock. On said evening the guard remained constantly with plaintiff's custodian until about the hour of 8:15, when, without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff, he left his place of duty, and the custodian remained unattended. A few minutes thereafter, about the hour of 8:34 p. m. standard time at Oakland, Cal., and 8:25 p. m. mean time for the meridian of that city, while plaintiff's custodian was conveying money and valuables from its branch office to its main office, he was held up and robbed of $2,300, the property of plaintiff. Other allegations of the complaint will appear in the course of this opinion.

The respondent, in upholding the action of the trial court in sustaining defendant's demurrer to the fifth amended complaint, contends that said complaint states no cause of action for the reason that it appears therefrom: First, that the custodian when robbed of the bank's funds was not accompanied by an armed guard; second, that the loss occurred at a time not covered by the insurance; and, third, that the facts pleaded do not entitle the plaintiff to a reformation of the policy as prayed.

As to the first of these points, one of the provisions of the policy reads:

"The insurance provided by this policy attaches specially and as stated below in section (a) to (f) respectively. * * *"

And section (c) of that part of the policy, which was made the subject of special indorsement, attached as a rider to the policy, reads:

"* * * In an amount of $2,000 to the loss of property * * * in the care and custody of the custodian unaccompanied by a guard except between the hours of 5 p. m. and 8:30 p.

m., when the custodian will be accompanied by one guard."

The respondent argues that these provisions of the policy constitute a condition upon which the insurance attaches; that between 5 p. m. and 8:30 p. m. money of the bank in possession of the custodian was not insured, unless the custodian was accompanied by the armed guard. On the other hand, plaintiff contends that the insurance company was not exonerated by the negligent disregard of his duty by the armed guard employed by plaintiff; its theory being that the requirement as to this guard was a warranty on the part of the plaintiff which was complied with by the employment of the guard, and that the latter's dereliction of duty in no way affects plaintiff's right to recover.

The conclusion we have reached as to the other points in the case will make it unnecessary to pass upon this contention.

[1] Referring to the second point made by plaintiff for a reversal of the judgment, we think that it must be held that the parties contracted with reference to standard time. In that part of the policy which fixes the attaching and termination of the insurance the parties specified that standard time should control. Having so contracted in one part of the policy a reasonable and logical construction requires that other points of time in the policy, in the absence of a specific provision to the contrary, should be determined to be the same standard. Section 1875 of the Code of Civil Procedure enumerates "the measure of time" as one of the facts of which courts take judicial notice; and since the year 1883 standard or railroad time has been uniformly recognized and adopted as the measure of time in this state. Here and elsewhere throughout the country the time of the arrival and departure of trains is governed by standard time; street cars are also operated with reference thereto; banks, stock exchanges, and public and private offices are opened and closed according to standard time. Mortgage foreclosure sales and sales under deeds of trust in this state are governed by standard time, as also legal notices by lawyers and business men. Some of the authorities supporting this view are: Rochester German Ins. Co. v. Peaslee, 120 Ky. 752, 87 S. W. 1115, 89 S. W. 3, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 364, 9 Ann. Cas. 324; State v. Johnson, 74 Minn. 381, 77 N. W. 293; Salt Lake v. Robinson, 39 Utah, 260, 116 Pac. 442, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 610, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 61; Globe, etc., Ins. Co. v. David Moffat Co., 154 Fed. 13, 83 C. C. A. 91.

[2] It is the final contention of the appellant that if it is not entitled to recover under the terms of the policy as written by reason of the precise moment when the loss occurred, the policy should be reformed so as to cover the risk up to 9 o'clock p. m. instead of 8:30 as written in the policy. In this regard appellant contends that its application for insurance together with defendant's letter of October 10, 1913, to the latter's agent, constituted a preliminary contract of insurance under which the plaintiff was insured against robbery of the character indicated up to the hour of 9 o'clock on Saturday evenings; and that when the defendant delivered its policy to plaintiff covering only up to 8:30 p. m. without calling attention to the change plaintiff was led to believe, and was warranted in believing, that the policy had been issued in exact accordance with the application and with this preliminary insurance, and was justified in accepting the same without examination.

The letter, however, was not addressed to the plaintiff, but to the defendant's agent; and while it used the word "covering," it did not purport to create a temporary arrangement for insurance pending the formal execution of a policy. In fact the letter states that the plaintiff will be covered as of the date October 15th, which is the precise day upon which the policy itself was issued. It is therefore apparent that the language of the letter now sought to be availed of by the plaintiff referred only to the issuance of the policy itself.

Section 3399 of the Civil Code, upon which the present contention of the appellant is based, reads as follows:

> "When, through fraud or a mutual mistake of the parties, or a mistake of one party, which the other at the time knew or suspected, a written contract does not truly express the intention of the parties, it may be revised on the application of a party aggrieved so as to express that intention, so far as it can be done without prejudice to rights acquired by third persons, in good faith and for value."

The only fact alleged in the complaint which it is claimed entitles plaintiff to the benefit of the application of this section of the Code is that the defendant did not issue a policy covering the particular risk applied for. This circumstance would have justified plaintiff in refusing to accept the policy; but it is far from constituting fraud, or a mutual mistake of the parties, or a mistake of one party which the other at the time knew or suspected—the conditions enumerated in the section necessary to entitle a party to a revision of a contract. Certainly no facts are pleaded showing that the defendant knew or could have known that the plaintiff would not examine the policy when issued to it; nor that the defendant or its agent took any affirmative action to prevent such examination. The plaintiff is therefore not entitled to a revision of the policy.

For the foregoing reasons, we conclude that the court committed no error in sustaining the demurrer to the fifth amended complaint, and in entering judgment for the defendant.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

35 Cal. App. 654

In re PAULSEN'S ESTATE.

UNITED STATES FIDELITY & GUARANTY CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SAN DIEGO COUNTY et al.

(Civ. 2504.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 19, 1917. Rehearing Denied Jan. 18, 1918.)

1. Certiorari 🔑28(1)—Invalid Judgment—Review.

When a tribunal is clothed with authority and jurisdiction to act only upon the existence of certain facts, and it receives no evidence tending to show that such facts exist, its action is void for want of jurisdiction, and it will be annulled on writ of review, provided no right of appeal exists.

2. Certiorari 🔑5(1) — Executors and Administrators 🔑20(7) — Appointment of Administrator—Review.

Where a special administrator is appointed without evidence of the death of the alleged decedent, the order is void for want of jurisdiction; and, as under Code Civ. Proc. § 1413, no appeal lies from such an order, the appointment may be reviewed by writ of review.

3. Affidavits 🔑18—Evidence of Death.

As affidavits may be used as evidence only in the cases expressly permitted by Code Civ. Proc. § 2009, and that use is not sanctioned in the case of an application for the appointment of an administrator, an order appointing a special administrator is void for want of jurisdiction where the only evidence of death was contained in an affidavit.

4. Executors and Administrators 🔑29(2)—Appointment—Collateral Attack.

An order granting special letters of administration without proof of the death of the alleged decedent is not subject to collateral attack by objection to the admission of the letters in evidence, where that fact did not appear on the face of the letters.

5. Executors and Administrators 🔑32(2)—Issuance of Letters—Cancellation.

Where special letters of administration were granted without proof of the death of the alleged decedent, the alleged decedent if alive, or any heir at law if such decedent be dead, may, within a reasonable time, procure a vacation of the order on that ground, and the time is not restricted to the six months period prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 473, for relief from judgments, the ground for vacation of the order not being mistake, inadvertence or excusable neglect.

6. Certiorari 🔑33(2)—Writ—Persons Entitled to Sue Out.

Letters of administration issued to petitioner's principal were revoked and a new administrator appointed. Such administrator commenced a suit against petitioner, the surety, and its principal for fraud in the prior administration. All the parties having an interest in the estate were ordered joined as parties plaintiff. Without proof of her death a special administrator was appointed for one of the heirs at law, and such special administrator joined as a plaintiff. Code Civ. Proc. § 1069, authorizes the issuance of a writ of review on the petition of a party beneficially interested. Held, that petitioner was entitled to a writ of review to set aside the special letters of administration, for, as the want of jurisdiction did not appear on their face, they could not be excluded from evidence, on objection; and, as they could be set aside by the heir at law if living or her heirs within a reasonable time, the judgment in the action against petitioner would not be binding on the heir at law represented by such special administrator.

In the matter of the estate of Bjelka Paulsen, deceased. Original application by the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company for a writ of review to the Superior Court of San Diego County, and S. M. Marsh, Judge thereof, to review an order appointing a special administratrix. Order annulled.

Patterson Sprigg, of San Diego, and Thomas, Beedy & Lanagan, of San Francisco, for petitioner. Bischoff & Thompson, of Escondido, for respondent.

WORKS, Judge pro tem. [1, 2] On September 14, 1917, upon petition regularly filed, the respondent made an order appointing Ingina Ostergard special administratrix of the estate of Bjelka Paulsen, deceased; but at the hearing on the petition no evidence was received of the death of Bjelka Paulsen. This proceeding is instituted for an annulment of the order because of the lack of the evidence mentioned. An administrator of the estate of a person manifestly cannot be appointed until such person is deceased, and the only manner in which death can be shown to the court which is asked to appoint is by the production of evidence of death. When a tribunal is clothed with authority or jurisdiction to act only upon the existence of certain facts, and it receives no evidence tending to show that such facts exist, its action is void for want of jurisdiction, and will be annulled upon proceedings under the writ of review (Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 180, 184, 185, 149 Pac. 35), provided, of course, no right of appeal exists in the premises; and no appeal lies from an order appointing a special administrator (Code Civ. Proc. § 1413).

[3] The respondent apparently concedes the invalidity of the order appointing the administratrix, for counsel makes no reply, in his argument, to the contention of petitioner that the order is void. At any rate, it is void. To clarify the situation, it may be stated that the order of appointment was made upon a recital of the fact of death in an affidavit, which, of course, was not evidence, as affidavits may be used as evidence only in cases expressly permitted by the Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 2009), and that permission is not given in the case of an application for the appointment of an administrator, either general or special.

[4-6] There is but one real controversy presented for our consideration, and what we have said above is only introductory to it. Section 1069 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the writ of review will issue on the petition of the party beneficially interested in a given controversy, and the respondent contends that the petitioner has not such an interest in the outcome of the present proceeding. A more complete statement of the facts is necessary to a discussion of this question. The petitioner is surety upon the bond of E. M. Barber as administrator of the estate of James Ostergard, deceased. The letters of Barber were revoked, and a new administrator was appointed in his stead. The new administrator commenced suit for fraud in the administration of the estate against Barber and petitioner, upon Barber's bond. The superior court then ordered that all parties having an interest in the estate of James Ostergard, deceased, be joined as parties plaintiff to that action. Bjelka Paulsen was an heir at law of the decedent, and therefore came within the order. Thereupon, and for the purpose of complying with the order as to parties, Ingina Ostergard filed her petition for appointment as special administratrix of the estate of Bjelka Paulsen, deceased, alleging the death of the latter. The petition came on for hearing, with the result above stated. The petitioner in this proceeding presented to respondent, before the filing of its petition here, a motion to set aside the appointment of the special administratrix on the ground that the court heard no evidence of Bjelka Paulsen's death, and the application was denied. By this step petitioner put itself in proper train for the maintenance of this proceeding (Elliott v. Superior Court, 144 Cal. 501, 77 Pac. 1109, 103 Am. St. Rep. 102), provided it has an actual beneficial interest in the controversy, for the filing with respondent of the motion to set aside could not give petitioner an interest which it did not as of right already possess.

Ingina Ostergard, as special administratrix of the estate of Bjelka Paulsen, deceased, has already been made a party plaintiff in the action on Barber's bond, although legally, as we have shown, she is not the representative of her alleged intestate. The amended complaint making her a party, although it is not before us, necessarily alleges her appointment and qualification as administratrix. If her appointment is to withstand the assault made upon it in this proceeding, and if petitioner, as a defendant in the action on the bond, shall object to the offer in evidence in that action of the special letters of administration, the objection will be overruled, because the lack of jurisdiction will not appear upon the face of the offer, and because the objection will be but a collateral attack upon the order of appointment. Emery v. Kipp, 154 Cal. 83, 97 Pac. 17, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 983, 129 Am. St. Rep. 141, 16 Ann. Cas. 792. But Bjelka Paulsen, if she be in fact alive, or any heir at law of hers, if she be deceased, may within a reasonable time, upon proper procedure—whether by motion or by independent action—procure a setting aside of the void order appointing the special administratrix; for a proceeding to set aside that order on the ground now presented to us does not come within the terms of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, limiting the time for relief thereunder to six months, there being no mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect as an element of the ground urged. Norton v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 97 Cal. 388, 30 Pac. 585, 32 Pac. 452, 33 Am. St. Rep. 198; De la Montanya v. De la Montanya, 112 Cal. 101, 44 Pac. 345, 32 L. R. A. 82, 53 Am. St. Rep. 165; Grannis v. Superior Court, 146 Cal. 245, 79 Pac. 891, 106 Am. St. Rep. 23; Smith v. Jones (Sup.) 163 Pac. 890, decided March 7, 1917. If such steps are taken by any of the interested parties mentioned, it may be that the void order of appointment will not thus be vacated until after final judgment shall have been rendered in the action on Barber's bond. If the order is then vacated, the judgment in that action will not bind Bjelka Paulsen, if she be yet alive, nor her heirs, if she be deceased. Under the order requiring that all persons interested in the estate of James Ostergard, deceased, be brought into the action on Barber's bond, we must assume that Bjelka Paulsen is a necessary party to that litigation. Therefore, if the appointment of Ingina Ostergard shall be set aside by any person other than petitioner, in the manner above mentioned, particularly after judgment shall have been rendered in the action on the bond, with Ingina Ostergard as a party, as administratrix, the petitioner may be subjected to further litigation of the matters involved in the action, either at the hands of Bjelka Paulsen in person, or at the hands of her duly lettered personal representative. Under these circumstances it is manifest to us that petitioner is beneficially interested in the outcome of this proceeding. It is the right of petitioner to have either Bjelka Paulsen, or her properly designated representative, made a party to the action on the bond.

The order of respondent appointing the special administratrix is annulled.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

35 Cal. App. 650

RICHARDSON & FISHER CO. v. CHICAGO BONDING & SURETY CO.

(Civ. 1959.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 19, 1917.)

Mechanics' Liens ⟹128—Action on Bond of Contractor—Conditions Precedent.

Plaintiff materialman's complaint in an action on a bond given pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, as amended by St. 1911, p. 1313, and providing that suit should be instituted within the time required by law for enforcement of liens, was insufficient where it omitted to state that plaintiff had filed his claim in the county recorder's office in view of section 1187, providing that every person save the original contractor must file for record with the county recorder of the county a claim of lien, section 1190, providing that no lien provided for in this chapter binds any property for a longer period than 90 days after the same has been filed, unless proceedings be commenced in a proper court within that time, and Civ. Code, §§ 2848, 2849, giving surety right of subrogation where he is required to pay under compulsion.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by the Richardson & Fisher Company against the Chicago Bonding & Surety Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Hoff & Chatterson, of San Diego, for appellant. Waldo, Root & Dysert, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment entered after an order had been made sustaining a general demurrer to the complaint as amended. Plaintiff is a materialman who furnished to the contractor materials which were used in the construction of a building for one Wm. J. Thayer. The action is brought to recover upon a bond which was given in conformity with the provisions of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure as amended in 1911. As required by that section, the bond provides:

> That it "shall inure to the benefit of any and all persons who perform labor upon or furnish materials to be used in the work described in said contract, so as to give such persons a right of action upon this bond in any suit brought to foreclose the liens provided for by the laws of the state of California, or in a separate suit brought on this bond."

The bond further provided:

> "That any suit brought on this bond to recover any claims hereunder must be instituted within the time allowed by law for instituting a suit to enforce a lien claim."

The following provisions from the chapter concerning the enforcement of liens of mechanics and others upon real property, have a bearing upon this case: Section 1187 contains the proviso:

> "That all claims of lien must be filed within ninety days after the completion of any building. * * *"

Section 1190 declares that:

> "No lien provided for in this chapter binds any property for a longer period than ninety days after the same has been filed, unless proceedings be commenced in a proper court within that time to enforce the same."

Section 1187 provides that:

> "Every person save the original contractor claiming the benefit of this chapter * * * must file for record with the county recorder of the county or city and county in which such property or some part thereof is situated, a claim of lien containing a statement of his demand after deducting all just credits and offsets," etc.

The building was completed by the contractor on the 1st day of September, 1914. The owner accepted the same, but did not at any time file notice of completion in the recorder's office. The complaint does not allege that he ever filed for record in the county recorder's office his claim of lien, and therefore it must be assumed that such claim was not filed. This action was not commenced until the 16th day of February, 1915.

It is our opinion that the plaintiff has no right to maintain this action without having first filed his claim of lien, as required by the above-quoted provisions of section 1187, Code of Civil Procedure. The plaintiff is a person "claiming the benefit" of the chapter in which section 1187 is contained. The bond was made in the form and was given for the purposes prescribed by section 1183, which also is a part of that chapter. It seems clearly to follow that an action upon the bond constitutes a claim of benefit under that chapter. The bond provided that:

> "The said owner shall retain the last payment and reserve, due said principal * * * until the expiration of the time within which liens or notices of liens may be filed, by reason of anything done in the performance of said contract, and until the payment of all claims of which he shall have knowledge or notice."

The requirement that the claimant must have filed for record his claim of lien is a requirement made for the benefit of the surety on the bond, as well as for the benefit of the owner of the building. If a claim of lien had been filed and if the surety had been required to pay, and under such compulsion had paid, the plaintiff's demand, the surety thereby would have been subrogated to the rights of the lienor. Civ. Code, §§ 2848, 2849. Of this right of subrogation defendant was deprived by the plaintiff's failure to file a claim of lien. For this reason we are satisfied that the complaint in this action, by omitting to state that a claim of lien had been filed, failed to state a cause of action against the defendant.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; WORKS, Judge pro tem.

---

35 Cal. App. 658

NOEL v. LEWIS, County Auditor.

(Civ. 2488.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 19, 1917.)

1. STATUTES 🔑93(9)—SPECIAL LEGISLATION—STATUTE PROVIDING FOR SECRETARY OF SUPERIOR COURT.

St. 1909, p. 940, providing for a secretary of the superior court in counties, and cities and counties, having a population of 300,000 inhabitants and over, is not unconstitutional on the ground that its application is special and limited.

2. STATUTES 🔑93(9)—SPECIAL LEGISLATION—CREATION OF "OFFICE."

St. 1909, p. 940, does not create an "office" within the meaning of Const. art. 4, § 25, subd. 28, providing that the Legislature shall not pass local or special laws creating offices, or prescribing the powers and duties of officers in counties, cities and counties, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Office.]

3. COURTS ⚷55—COUNTY "OFFICER"—SECRETARY OF SUPERIOR COURT — "EMPLOYÉ" — "ATTACHÉ."

The secretary of the superior court of a county, appointed by the judges under St. 1909, p. 940, is not an "employé" or "attaché" of a county office, within the constitutional provisions authorizing the framing of county charters, nor within the provisions of the county charter itself.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First Series, Attaché; First and Second Series, Employé.]

Petition for writ of mandate by James A. Noel against Walter A. Lewis, as County Auditor of the County of Los Angeles. Peremptory writ ordered to be issued.

Allen W. Ashburn, of Los Angeles, for petitioner. A. J. Hill, Co. Counsel, and Edward T. Bishop, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Petitioner in this proceeding seeks a writ of mandate to compel the issuance to him of warrants in payment of compensation which he alleges is due him for services while acting as secretary for the judges of the superior court of Los Angeles county and for performing the duty of jury commissioner. Petitioner was appointed secretary of the superior court under an act which, in its amended form, is found in the statutes of 1909, page 940. This act, in the portions material for consideration here, provides as follows:

> "In all counties, and cities and counties, having a population of three hundred thousand inhabitants and over, the judges of the superior court in such counties, and cities and counties, may appoint a secretary, who shall receive a salary of two hundred and fifty ($250) dollars per month, and hold office at their pleasure, and shall perform such duties as may be required of him by the court or the judges thereof. Said salary shall be audited, allowed, and paid out of the general fund of such counties, and cities and counties."

The Legislature in the year 1917 added certain new subdivisions to section 204 of the Code of Civil Procedure. St. 1917, p. 1169. Section 204 of that Code contains provisions relating to the making up of lists of grand and petit jurors. It provides generally that the selection of the persons to serve as such jurors shall be made by boards of supervisors, except that in counties, and cities and counties, having more than 100,000 population the selection shall be made by a majority of the judges of the superior court. In the new subdivisions added by the act of 1917, it is provided that in counties, and cities and counties, where the judges of the superior court are required to make the selection of persons to serve as jurors, a jury commissioner may be appointed, who shall receive a salary of $350 per month, and hold office at the pleasure of a majority of the judges, and that his salary shall be audited, allowed and paid out of the general fund of the county. Subdivision 204e provides that in such counties, or cities and counties, where there is a secretary of the superior judges, the majority of such judges in their discretion may require such secretary to perform the duties of jury commissioner, in addition to his regular duties as secretary, and the act provides:

> "In such case the salary of the secretary of the superior judges shall be three hundred and fifty dollars a month."

Before the end of July, 1917, the superior court judges of Los Angeles county made an order, requiring the secretary, petitioner here, to perform the duties of jury commissioner. The secretary had been regularly paid theretofore the salary of $250 per month, as fixed by the act first hereinbefore referred to. His contention is that, after the additional duties were imposed upon him, he was entitled to collect the additional $100 per month as is provided to be paid by the act of 1917. He has continued to draw regularly down to the time of the filing of his petition his salary as secretary in the amount of $250, without waiving his right to enforce collection of the additional amount.

The question presented is, particularly, as to whether, as the county of Los Angeles is operating under a freeholders' charter, the matter of fixing the compensation of the secretary of the superior court is one which rests with the board of supervisors of the county, and as to whether that board has not the power to determine what the compensation shall be, regardless of the provisions of the statute on the subject. Preliminarily it should be stated that the board of supervisors, by ordinance adopted in November, 1915, did provide that the secretary of the superior court should receive a salary of $250 per month, the exact amount fixed by the statute. In September, 1917, by an amendatory ordinance, it was provided, among other things, that the secretary of the superior court should receive a salary of $350 per month. This ordinance did not take effect until about the 6th of October, 1917. Were it not for the fact that two months and a fraction of a month elapsed between the date of the order of the superior court imposing the duties of jury commissioner upon the secretary and the date of the taking effect of the last ordinance of the board of supervisors, this proceeding would probably not have been instituted. However that may be, the controversy is now here, and the contention of petitioner is that he is entitled to look wholly to the two statutes of the Legislature in ascertaining the amount of his compensation and the manner of the payment thereof. Respondent's position is that the board of supervisors, acting with authority under the county charter, have both established the office of secretary of the superior court and provided for the compensation to be paid to such secretary. It is suggested further by respondent that the act of the Legislature, attempting to create the office of secretary of the superior court, when considered without reference to the question of the right of the supervisors to create such a position, is unconstitutional as being special legislation. Respondent's counsel argues that by that act an attempt is made to create an office in violation of section 25, art. 4, subd. 28 of the Constitution of the state. Qualified by the objections noted, respondent makes the following express admission:

> "That it is competent for the Legislature to provide for a jury commissioner who is an adjunct of the court; that it is competent for the Legislature to provide that the judges or majority of the judges of the superior court may appoint a jury commissioner or secretary of the court, and that in the present case the power of appointment is lodged in the judges of the superior court, and not in the board of supervisors, nor in the civil service commission; that section 204 of the Code of Civil Procedure is valid."

[1, 2] We do not think that the act providing for secretary of the superior court in counties, and cities and counties, having a population as fixed by the law, is unconstitutional on the ground that its application is special and limited. We do not think that the act creates an office within the meaning of the provision of the Constitution cited by respondent. Pratt v. Browne, 135 Cal. 649, 67 Pac. 1082; Stevens v. Truman, 127 Cal. 155, 59 Pac. 397. And we do not understand that respondent contends for any stronger cause or reason against the validity of the provisions of section 204 of Code of Civil Procedure, or the amendments made in 1917 thereto, which provide for the work to be done by a jury commissioner. The most important question presented in the argument is as to the effect of the power derived from the freeholders' charter adopted by the county of Los Angeles. Under the constitutional provisions authorizing the framing of such charters, very complete authority is vested in the electors of the county to adopt charters which shall be comprehensive in controlling and regulating the matter of the appointment and compensation to be paid to the officers and attachés of counties. See section 7½, art. 11, Const. Cal. If the secretary of the superior court may be considered as an officer of the county or an attaché connected with a county office, then respondent's position is unassailable.

[3] We are of the opinion, however, first, as we have already stated, that the act of the Legislature has not the effect of creating an office, and we are of the further opinion that the secretary of the superior court is not to be considered as an employé or attaché of a county office. Superior courts are a part of the judicial system of the state. Their process operates beyond the confines of the particular county in which the judges may have been elected, and the judges are authorized in particular contingencies to sit in any county of the state interchangeably. The secretary, like the official reporter, becomes an adjunct of that system, and one which the Legislature, we do not doubt, has the right to provide for when it deems necessary. Nicholl v. Koster, 157 Cal. 416, 108 Pac. 302. Our attention is called to certain decisions rendered by this court referring to the application of the county charter in its control of officers acting within the county. Gibson v. Civil Service Commission, 27 Cal. App. 396, 150 Pac. 78, is a fair type of these cases. It was therein held that a probation officer was an officer whose appointment and compensation were regulated by the county charter provisions. That decision is not of particular application here, because the constitutional provision authorizing the framing of freeholders' charters in counties expressly named probation officers as among those which county charters should affect. So that the question as to whether a probation officer provided for by general statute should be considered as falling within the classification of "county officers" was not necessary to be considered in the case above cited. The Constitution in its provisions relating to the framing of county charters does not in any manner refer to the state judicial department. The Los Angeles county charter nowhere makes provision for a secretary of the superior court, although it does contain the general provision authorizing the board of supervisors to provide for attachés, clerks, assistants, deputies, etc., "to be employed from time to time in the several offices and institutions of the county, and for their compensation and the times at which they shall be appointed." We have already sufficiently indicated our view that the secretary of the superior court is not an officer or attaché of the county within the meaning of the constitutional provision authorizing the framing of county charters, and we may add, not within the meaning either of the provisions of the county charter itself. If these conclusions are correct, it follows that the petitioner here is entitled to the relief asked for.

Peremptory writ is ordered to be issued; petitioner to have his costs.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

35 Cal. App. 676

SANTA BARBARA COUNTY v. RUCKER et al. (Civ. 1915, 1916, 1951, 1952.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 22, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 18, 1918.)

1. OFFICERS 🔑100(1)—INCREASING "COMPENSATION" DURING TERM—ROAD COMMISSIONER—STATUTES AND CONSTITUTION.

Compensation of the road commissioner in a county supervisor district, as provided for in Pol. Code, § 4246, before and after its amendment by St. 1911, p. 1148, is "compensation" within the meaning of the word as used in Const. art. 11, § 9, providing that the compensation of any county, city, town, or municipal officer shall not be increased after his election or during his term, so that the operation of such amendment of section 4246 in a supervisor district of the county was suspended until the incumbents' term expired.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Compensation.]

2. OFFICERS 🔑100(1)—INCREASING COMPENSATION DURING TERM—REIMBURSEMENT OF TRAVELING EXPENSES—CONSTITUTION— "INCREASE OF COMPENSATION."

Statute newly providing for reimbursement of expenses to the road commissioner in a county supervisor district, in addition to compensation previously allowed for his services, was an increase of the road commissioner's compensation during his term, prohibited by Const. art. 11, § 9.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Increase.]

3. HIGHWAYS 🔑97 — COUNTY SUPERVISOR AND ROAD COMMISSIONER—OFFICIAL BOND—INCLUSION OF COLLECTION OF INCREASED COMPENSATION CONTRARY TO CONSTITUTION.

The official bond of a county supervisor, ex officio road commissioner in his supervisor district, given for the faithful performance by him of all the official duties required of him by law, was broad enough to include his liability to the county for collecting increased compensation, under Pol. Code, § 4246, as amended by St. 1911, p. 1148, during his term of office, contrary to Const. art. 11, § 9, so that his sureties were subject to be sued with him.

Appeals from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; Samuel E. Crow, Judge.

Actions by the County of Santa Barbara against George F. Rucker and others, Howe S. Deaderick and others, Albert W. Conover and another, and Harold J. Doulton and another. From judgments for plaintiff, all defendants appeal. Judgment in each case affirmed.

H. P. Starbuck and Canfield & Starbuck, all of Santa Barbara, for appellants. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and E. W. Squier, Dist. Atty., Fred H. Schauer, Deputy Dist. Atty. and G. H. Gould, all of Santa Barbara, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The appeals in these cases are from the several judgments entered therein. The parties have stipulated that all of them may be heard together upon the same briefs and argument; the questions presented for consideration here being identical in all of the cases. In accordance with the suggestion of counsel our references to matters of record will be confined to No. 1916, County of Santa Barbara v. Rucker et al.

Appellant Rucker was elected to the office of supervisor of Santa Barbara county, for the fourth district thereof, at the general election of November, 1908, for the term of four years beginning with the first Monday of January, 1909. At that time section 4246 of the Political Code provided as follows:

> "In counties of the seventeenth class the county officers shall receive as compensation for the services required of them by law or by virtue of their offices, the following salaries, to wit: * * * 15. Each supervisor, six hundred dollars per annum, and twenty cents per mile for traveling from his residence to the county seat; and a road commissioner, four dollars per day, not to exceed two hundred dollars per annum in the aggregate." Stats. 1907, p. 473.

By an amendment approved April 27, 1911, said section 4246 was amended so that subdivision 15 read as follows:

> "Each supervisor, six hundred dollars per annum and twenty cents per mile for traveling from his residence to the county seat; and as road commissioner, four dollars per day for not to exceed eighteen days in any one month: Provided, that said supervisors shall receive no mileage when acting as road commissioner, but shall receive his actual traveling expenses while acting as such road commissioner, not to exceed the sum of two hundred dollars in any one year." Stats. 1911, p. 1148.

The Constitution of California, at article 11, § 9 thereof, as adopted in 1879 and still in force, provides that:

> "The compensation of any county, city, town, or municipal officer shall not be increased after his election or during his term of office. * * *"

After April 27, 1911, appellant Rucker, assuming that he was entitled to collect for his services as road commissioner in accordance with the terms of the act of 1911, made demands upon the county, which were approved and paid to him, for sums in excess of the amount which he could have collected under the statute as it was at the beginning of his term of office. This action was prosecuted to recover the amount of such excess payments together with 20 per cent. damages, as provided by section 4005b of the Political Code, a part of which reads as follows:

> "Whenever any board of supervisors shall, without authority of law, order any money paid as a salary, fees, or for any other purposes, and such money shall have been actually paid; or whenever any county officer has drawn any warrant or warrants in his own favor, or in favor of any other person, without being authorized by the board of supervisors, or by the law, and the same shall have been paid, the district attorney of such county is hereby empowered, and it is hereby made his imperative duty, to institute suit, in the name of the county, against such person or persons, to recover the money so paid, and twenty per cent. damages for the use thereof. * * *"

Appellants contend that the word "compensation" in section 9 of article 11 of the Constitution, refers only to the principal sum allowed to the officer as his salary, and does not include such compensation as that described in said section 4246, whereby the supervisor is allowed a limited per diem as road commissioner, or such as that other provisions of the same section as last amended whereby the supervisor is allowed also to receive, within a stated limit, the amount of his actual traveling expenses while acting as such road commissioner.

[1] The duties performed by a county supervisor as road commissioner are duties imposed upon him by virtue of his status as supervisor, but his official position and functions as road commissioner are separately classified and described by the statute. "Each supervisor shall be ex officio road commissioner in his supervisor district." Pol. Code, § 2641. The law awarded to defendant Rucker, at the commencement of his term, a limited compensation "as road commissioner" at the specified rate per day, not exceeding $200 in any one year and not including any reimbursement for traveling expenses. By the amendment enacted in 1911 the possible compensation of a road commissioner in that county was raised from the sum of $200 to the sum of $864, plus traveling expenses. The salary allowance to the supervisor for his general services as a supervisor is completely separate and distinct from the prescribed compensation allowed to him as road commissioner. It seems very clear, therefore, that the "compensation" of the road commissioner as provided for in section 4246, both before and after the amendment, is compensation within the meaning of that word as used in section 9 of article 11 of the Constitution, under any possible construction of that section; for as road commissioner he receives no fixed salary. It follows that the operation of the said amendment increasing the compensation of road commissioner, for the fourth district in Santa Barbara county, was suspended until Rucker's term expired.

[2] The defendant Rucker was not entitled to reimbursement of traveling expenses, any more than to increase of his aggregate per diem allowance. It has been decided that a supervisor of a county may not as road commissioner have reimbursement for traveling expenses, when at the time there was no statutory provision for such reimbursement. The reason given was that under section 215 of the County Government Act—corresponding to section 4290, Political Code, as enacted later—the salaries and fees provided for should be in full compensation for all services rendered the county as such officer or ex officio officer. The court declared that:

> "This language is in absolute repugnancy and hostility to the idea that where the compensation for all services is fixed by statute, personal and traveling expenses may still be allowed." County of Placer v. Freeman, 149 Cal. 738, 87 Pac. 628.

It would be inconsistent with that decision to say that a statute newly providing for reimbursement of expenses, in addition to compensation previously allowed for his services, is not an increase of the officer's compensation.

[3] We think that the terms of the official bond of defendant Rucker are broad enough to include the facts constituting the basis of Rucker's liability in this action, and that the sureties on the bond are subject to be sued with him in order to obtain recovery of the moneys illegally collected by him under his wrongful demands for compensation in excess of that to which he was legally entitled. It is true that Rucker did not as supervisor vote on the allowance of those demands, and that the acts of other officers in auditing and paying his claims were official acts which as to those particulars were not performed by him. But the bond was given for the faithful performance by Rucker of all of the official duties required of him by law. When Rucker presented those demands, obtained his warrant, and collected the money, he connived at and participated in a proceeding which as an entirety constituted the illegal withdrawal by him of money from the county treasury; all of which was done by reason of his office and contrary to his official obligation.

It being conceded that the questions presented in the Rucker Case are in legal effect identical with those pertaining to the other above-entitled cases, it is hereby ordered that in each of said four cases the judgment be and is hereby affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, Judge pro tem.; JAMES, J.

35 Cal. App. 738

FERGER v. ALLEN et ux. (Civ. 2235.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 31, 1917.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑255—VENDOR'S LIEN—CREATION.

Under Civ. Code, § 3046, giving a lien to one who sells real property for so much of the price as remains unpaid and unsecured otherwise than by the personal obligation of the buyer, as well as under the principles of equity giving such a lien, it is not essential to the right to claim a vendor's lien that an intention to retain the right to such a lien should be expressly declared, as the right is given in equity and in law by the nature of the transaction, and exists without regard to the express agreement of the parties.

2. TRIAL 🔑404(1)—FINDINGS—CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

Where the court found that defendants sold property to H. with knowledge that it was to be hypothecated for the purpose of procuring a loan with which to build upon the property, and also found as a separate and distinct finding that defendants intended to and did waive any lien which they might have had or claimed as vendors, this finding was not limited for its support to the fact found in the preceding finding.

3. Vendor and Purchaser 🔑266(1)—Waiver or Loss of Lien.

Under Civ. Code, § 3048, providing that a vendor's lien is valid against every one claiming under the debtor, except a purchaser or incumbrancer in good faith, a vendor's right to claim a lien was defeated by his knowledge of and acquiescence in the purchaser's hypothecation of the property, as against the claim of the mortgagee.

4. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors 🔑185 — Title Acquired — Equities of Third Persons.

Generally a trustee claiming under a conveyance for the benefit of creditors takes the property at the time of the execution of the conveyance subject to every equity which might then have been enforced against it in the hands of the debtor.

5. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors 🔑334(3) — Priority of Liens — Vendor's Lien.

An assignment for the benefit of creditors and a conveyance made thereunder, executed prior to an endeavor on the part of a vendor to declare and establish his lien, will prevail over his right to claim a lien, where the creditors become subscribing parties to the assignment and thereby accept it, by assenting to and claiming the benefits of its provisions, as they thereby assume the character of lien claimants; and hence where defendant, knowing that his vendee was in failing financial circumstances and informed that he was about to make an assignment of the property for the benefit of creditors, failed to assert and prove his lien until the vendee's creditors had joined in and agreed to accept the provision of the assignment, his right to a lien was extinguished in so far as such creditors were concerned.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by J. C. Ferger against Harry W. Allen and wife. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

N. Lindsay South, of Fresno, for appellants. U. G. Hayden, of Fresno, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff quieting title as against the defendants to certain described real property situate in the county of Fresno. The facts of the case as revealed by the pleadings and proof are substantially these:

The defendants sold the real property in question to one Heimbach for the agreed price of $900, and upon a conveyance of the property by deed dated November 25, 1912, Heimbach paid to the defendants $300 in cash on account of the purchase price, and for the balance due thereon gave his unsecured note, dated November 27, 1912, to the defendants in the sum of $600. This sum by the terms of the note was to be paid in installments "at the rate of $18 a month." It was Heimbach's desire to build a home upon the property. This desire was made known to the defendant Harry W. Allen, and the conveyance was accordingly made to Heimbach absolute in form to enable him to obtain a loan upon the property of a sum sufficient to defray the cost of the desired building. Thereafter Heimbach, with the tacit consent of said defendant, executed a deed of trust, dated December 11, 1912, conveying the property in question to the Pacific States Savings & Loan Company as security for a loan of $2,500, which sum, it seems to be conceded, was expended in the erection of a building upon the property. Thereafter Heimbach became financially involved as a result of the business transactions of the Heimbach Company, of which he was a copartner, and to such an extent that the plaintiff Ferger and other creditors of the copartnership attached certain property of Heimbach. The attachment, however, was subsequently released upon Heimbach executing an assignment, dated July 17, 1913, of his property, real and personal, including the real property in question, to the plaintiff Ferger, as trustee for the benefit of Heimbach's general unsecured creditors.

This assignment was made pursuant to and as a part of a contemporaneous trust agreement executed and signed by Heimbach and some 13 of his general unsecured creditors, wherein it was agreed that each of the creditors named thereby assigned the accounts due and owing them from Heimbach of the date of the agreement to the plaintiff Ferger for collection, and further agreed that the proceeds thereof were to be distributed pro rata among the creditors after paying preferred claims. Simultaneously with the execution of the assignment, and accompanying the trust agreement as a part thereof, and pursuant to its terms, Heimbach and his wife executed to plaintiff, Ferger, a mortgage of even date on the property in question, which was duly recorded July 22, 1913. On the 19th day of February, 1914, Heimbach and his wife, for the stated consideration of $10, but in fact for the purpose of enabling the plaintiff, Ferger, to consummate negotiations for the sale of the property pursuant to the terms of the assignment and trust agreement, executed to the plaintiff, Ferger, a quitclaim deed to the property in question, and on January 13, 1915, the plaintiff, Ferger, instituted this action to quiet his title as against the defendants to the same property. On the 23d of June, 1914, the plaintiff, Ferger, pursuant to the terms of an executory contract of purchase and sale, sold the property in question to one J. F. Cullen for the agreed price of $4,200, of which $800 was paid in cash, and the balance agreed to be paid in specified installments. This contract of purchase and sale was placed on record on June 27, 1914. On June 26, 1914, the defendant Harry W. Allen, upon behalf of himself and his wife, the defendant Claribel Allen, filed for record with the recorder of Fresno county their notice and claim of a vendor's lien upon the property in question.

The record contains some evidence which tends to show that the defendant Harry W. Allen, at all times prior to the formal declaration and recordation of the vendor's lien, and particularly at and before the execution of the assignment and trust agreement, had knowledge of the fact that Heimbach "was about to fail," that Heimbach's creditors were about "to close him out," and that he had been told by Heimbach that "he was going to turn the property over to Ferger as trustee for the benefit of his creditors." The action was defended upon the theory that the defendants had an interest in the property superior to that of the plaintiffs by virtue of a vendor's lien, the creation and existence of which were in effect pleaded in the answer of the defendants by averments of the sale and the terms thereof to Heimbach of the property in suit. The subsequent formal declaration and recordation of the defendants' notice and claim of a vendor's lien were also pleaded in said answer, and a copy of the claim of lien as declared and recorded was attached to and specifically made a part of the answer.

The evidence does not support and is contrary to the finding that the defendants did not retain and never intended to retain a vendor's lien upon the property. Evidently this finding was founded solely upon the theory that neither the negotiations and circumstances preceding and attending the transfer of the property from the defendant Harry W. Allen to Heimbach, nor the terms of the sale subsequently consummated, disclosed an express intention on the part of Allen to reserve and retain unto himself a vendor's lien for the unpaid portion of the purchase price.

[1] The right to a vendor's lien upon land sold for the unpaid and unsecured portion of the purchase price as originally conceived in equity is now embodied in our statutory law, which gives the right to "one who sells real property * * * independent of possession for so much of the price as remains unpaid and unsecured otherwise than by the personal obligation of the buyer." Civ. Code, § 3046. It never was and is not now essential to the right to claim a vendor's lien that an intention on the part of the vendor to create and retain unto himself the right to such lien should be expressly declared. The right is given in equity and in law by the very nature of the transaction, and consequently exists without regard to the express agreement of the parties. Claiborne v. Castle, 98 Cal. 30, 32 Pac. 807; Avery v. Clark, 87 Cal. 619, 25 Pac. 919, 22 Am. St. Rep. 272; Moshier, Adm'r, v. Meek, 80 Ill. 79.

[2] The further finding of the trial court that it was the intention of the defendants to waive, and that they did waive, any lien as vendors which they might have had or claimed against the property in question, is assailed upon the ground that it is contrary to the evidence; and in this behalf it is asserted that this particular finding receives support in the evidence only in the fact that the defendant sold the property in question to Heimbach with knowledge that it was to be hypothecated for the purpose of procuring a loan with which to build upon the property.

The particular finding under consideration does not rest solely upon the fact stated. While it is true that such fact is specifically found, still the finding of waiver is a separate and distinct finding, which, while perhaps resting in part upon the preceding finding of the fact stated, is nevertheless neither expressly nor impliedly limited for support to that fact, but may be fairly said to be based upon all of the evidence in the case, which, in addition to the fact stated, shows, as we have previously pointed out, a conveyance of the property to the plaintiff pursuant to the terms of a trust agreement to which Heimbach's general unsecured creditors were made parties by subscribing to the same and thereby claiming the benefits of the provisions which were incorporated therein for the adjustment and satisfaction of their several claims against Heimbach.

In addition to this fact the finding in question was doubtless rested in part upon proof of the fact that the property in question was in keeping with the terms of the trust agreement and as a part thereof further incumbered by the contemporaneous mortgage and the subsequent deed of the property to the plaintiff.

[3, 4] It is conceded, as indeed it must be, as against the Pacific States Loan & Trust Company, that the right to claim a vendor's lien was defeated by the defendant's (Harry W. Allen's) knowledge of and acquiescence in the hypothecation of the property to that corporation. This concession doubtless was made in deference to the provisions of section 3048 of the Civil Code which declare that a vendor's lien is "valid against every one claiming under the debtor except a purchaser or incumbrancer in good faith." But, while making this concession, it is insisted, as we understand the contention for defendant, that the plaintiff, Ferger, in the capacity of trustee for the benefit of the creditors, did not in law or in fact take the property under the trust conveyance either as a purchaser or incumbrancer in good faith and for value. Ordinarily and under a state of facts differing from those presented in the instant case this contention would prevail, for it seems to be the general and accepted rule that:

> "The assignee of a voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors stands in no better situation than the assignor. Neither he nor the creditors whom he represents are purchasers for a valuable consideration without notice as against prior equitable liens." 2 Kent's Comm. 542, note; Haggerty v. Palmer, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 437; Knowles v. Lord, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 500, 34 Am. Dec. 525.

This being so, it follows, generally speaking, that a trustee claiming under a conveyance made to him for the benefit of creditors takes the property at the time of the execution of the conveyance, subject to every equity which might then have been enforced against it in the hands of the debtor.

[5] But this general rule is subject to the exception that an assignment for the benefit of creditors and a conveyance made thereunder executed prior to any endeavor on the part of the vendor to declare and establish his lien will prevail over and operate to defeat the right to claim the lien, where the creditors, as did the creditors in the instant case, become subscribing parties to the assignment, and thereby accept the same by assenting to and claiming the benefits of its provisions. The reason for this exception to the rule is rested upon the theory that general creditors are not transformed into incumbrancers in good faith and for value by the debtor's mere voluntary assignment of his property for their benefit, because it still remains for the creditors to exercise the option which they have either of accepting or rejecting the assignment, and until "they have elected to take under the deed the assignee is rather the trustee for the debtor than for them; when they have accepted the assignment, by claiming or taking a benefit under it the assignee becomes their trustee, and they assume by virtue of the assignment the character of lien creditors." Green v. Demoss, 10 Humph. (29 Tenn.) 372.

This being so, the present action, although instituted in the name of the plaintiff, was to all intents and purposes an action upon behalf of lien creditors represented by the plaintiff to quiet the title to the property in question as against the defendants' alleged vendor's lien, and "where subsequent lien creditors intervene the contest is no longer between the vendor and vendee; it is between third persons contending for his estate. It depends no longer on the equity of the one party as against the vendee and those in privity with him; it depends upon the relative equities and rights of the disputants in a comparison with one another. * * * Lien creditors will supplant one who, though he had a right in equity to charge the land through his own laches and default, failed to secure a lien. Lien creditors are entitled to the whole estate of their debtor, subject only to prior specific liens, legal or equitable. If the vendor's equity be" not "a specific lien, * * * the right of lien creditors is paramount to it." Poe v. Paxton, 26 W. Va. 607.

The record shows that the defendant Harry W. Allen, notwithstanding he had knowledge of the fact that the vendee was in failing financial circumstances, and was informed that he was about to make an assignment of the property in question to the plaintiff for the benefit of creditors, failed to assert and prove his lien until the vendee's creditors had joined in and agreed to accept the provisions of the assignment; consequently it must be held that the defendant's right to the lien was, in so far as the lien creditors of the vendee were concerned, extinguished, and we take it that this is what the trial court meant by its finding that such lien had been "waived." This finding alone is sufficient to support the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

35 Cal. App. 671

WHEELER et al. v. CITY OF OAKLAND et al. (Civ. 2268.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 21, 1917.)

1. Dedication 🔑18(2) — Streets — What Constitutes.

Deed to individual referring to map showing street conveying 10-foot strip to be used for street purposes when accepted is a dedication, though the public is not a party thereto, since there is a dedication whenever the intent unequivocally appears, so far as the owner is concerned.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Dedication.]

2. Dedication 🔑43—Streets—What Constitutes.

In determining fact of acceptance of dedication by public user, sparsity of population and infrequency of travel may be considered.

3. Dedication 🔑18(2) — Streets — What Constitutes.

Insufficient description of land offered in dedication was cured by reference to map accurately fixing location.

4. Dedication 🔑43 — Evidence — Admissibility.

Where deed offering to dedicate land for street gave indeterminate beginning point in description by metes and bounds, and referred to map showing location, the map was admissible to amplify the description, though not recorded until after the deed was made.

5. Dedication 🔑63(2)—Nonuser—Effect.

The rights of the public in a dedicated street cannot be lost by nonuser or delay in the use or by a mere temporary abandonment of such use.

6. Adverse Possession 🔑8(2) — Public Streets.

Title cannot be acquired to a public street by adverse possession.

7. Dedication 🔑29 — Revocation — Strangers to Title.

A stranger to the title cannot revoke an offered dedication.

8. Dedication 🔑39 — Nonacceptance — Estoppel.

That one claiming title to land dedicated for a street paid taxes and erected improvements, or that the county purchased from another adjacent owner a part of the same strip, did not estop the city to assert dedication.

9. Dedication 🔑51—Width of Street—Effect.

The mere fact that strip dedicated for street was but 10 feet wide did not invalidate the dedication, the only restriction at the time under St. 1862, p. 78, § 2, as amended by St. 1867–68, p. 374, limiting maximum width to 4 rods.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Everett J. Brown, Judge.

Action by Roscoe Wheeler and another against the City of Oakland and another. From judgment for defendants, and order denying new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

H. W. Brunk and William O. Minor, both of Berkeley, for appellants. Paul C. Morf, City Atty., and John J. Earle, Deputy City Atty., both of Oakland, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. By this action plaintiffs claim ownership to a strip of land 10 feet in width by 400 feet in depth, and complain of an alleged trespass upon said property by defendants, and they seek damages for injuries committed and an injunction to restrain a recurrence thereof.

Defendants, a municipal corporation and its superintendent of streets, justify the acts complained of on the ground that the land in question is a portion of a public street, which it is the purpose and intention of defendants to improve and maintain as such. Defendants claim in that behalf that the 10-foot strip constitutes the westerly portion of Thirty-Sixth avenue, one of the public highways and thoroughfares of the city of Oakland, and base such contention upon the following facts:

On July 19, 1876, one James Lane, being then the owner of the land in dispute and of contiguous territory, granted to Joseph B. Hogarty a lot 50 feet wide by 400 odd feet in depth, and in this same instrument also conveyed the 10-foot strip adjacent to said lot on its easterly side, with the express limitation that it was to be used for street purposes, this strip being the land now in controversy. The description in said deed also referred to certain lot and block numbers as well as to certain streets, all as contained on a certain map, describing it. On September 24, 1878, Hogarty, the grantee in said deed, not having theretofore conveyed any of the property thereby acquired, caused to be filed in the office of the county recorder of Alameda county the map referred to in his deed, on which map were delineated lot and block numbers corresponding to those mentioned in the conveyance to him, and also certain streets called Lane and Washington streets, together with a delineation of the county road of San Leandro. Thereafter, on the 27th day of September, 1878, Hogarty granted to Henry C. Edgerly the lot of land 50 feet in width. The land so conveyed was described as bounded on the east by Lane street with appropriate reference to the map filed by Hogarty. Subsequently and on the 10th day of August, 1883, H. Edgerly conveyed to one Sandford Bennett the same 50 feet of land which he had acquired from Hogarty. Thereafter, on April 21, 1884, said Bennett made a conveyance to Roscoe Wheeler, plaintiff herein, purporting to grant a lot 60 feet in extent, which included not only the land acquired by him from Edgerly and to which he had record title, but also the 10-foot strip here in dispute, to which he had no title whatever. Roscoe Wheeler and his various successors in interest have claimed title to the entire 60 feet at all times since April, 1884, have maintained a fence inclosing the whole thereof until the commission of the acts here complained of, and have paid taxes thereon.

Defendants claim that the strip in question became a part of the city of Oakland by annexation in the fall of 1909 and when the council of that municipality subsequently adopted an ordinance accepting all dedications and offers thereof theretofore made of land for public street purposes then within the city. In March, 1915, defendants removed a fence and other obstructions maintained by plaintiff upon the 10-foot strip in dispute, and opened the same as a portion of the roadway of Thirty-Sixth avenue. Plaintiffs admittedly have no record title to this strip of land. Bennett had none when he conveyed to Wheeler; Edgerly had none when he conveyed to Bennett, nor did he purport to grant any. Plaintiffs' title, if any they have, rests, therefore, upon adverse possession together with payment of taxes. Defendants, on the other hand, rely upon the offers of dedication contained in the deed from Lane to Hogarty followed by his conveyance to Edgerly by reference to said map, such offers, it is claimed, having been accepted and converted into established and irrevocable dedications by user.

Judgment went for defendants in the court below, from which judgment and from the order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

[1] As grounds for reversal it is first insisted that the deed of Lane simply purports to be a conveyance to an individual, and does not constitute an offer to dedicate, the public not being a party to it. But the authorities establish the principle that an offer of the owner of land to dedicate it for public use may be established in every conceivable way in which such intention can be manifested. City of Los Angeles v. Kysor, 125 Cal. 463, 58 Pac. 90; People v. Laugenour, 25 Cal. App. 44, 142 Pac. 888; Sussman v. San Louis Obispo Co., 126 Cal. 536, 59 Pac. 24. The vital principle of dedication is the intention to dedicate; and whenever this is unequivocally manifested the dedication so far as the owner is concerned has been made. Smith v. San Luis Obispo, 95 Cal. 463, 30 Pac. 591.

While it is true that a provision in a grant, bargain, and sale deed, whereby the parties agree that the land conveyed shall be used as a public street, may be a mere covenant between them, still an intention to dedicate may arise therefrom, and upon acceptance by the public a complete and perfect dedication is created. Here Lane expressly declared in his deed to Hogarty that the strip in controversy was to be used for street purposes. The sale was made with reference to a map subsequently filed and recorded by Hogarty showing this and other streets contiguous thereto, and the description in the deed referred to this map. We think these acts indicated a clear offer to dedicate the roadway to the public, requiring only an acceptance to render it a binding and irrevocable dedication. City of Eureka v. Armstrong, 83 Cal. 623, 22 Pac. 928, 23 Pac. 1085.

[2] The trial court found upon sufficient evidence that there was an acceptance by public user, and that such user was sufficient in extent to constitute a valid acceptance of the offer of dedication. The suggestion by appellants that this evidence at most showed but a casual use which might be referable to a license is without merit. In considering the extent of the use made by the public of the strip in dispute, the fact that at the time of the dedication the land was situated in a sparsely settled suburban community, and where travel over it was not very great, is to be considered. Concluding, as we do, that there was a valid acceptance by public use, it becomes unnecessary to discuss the question as to whether or not the acceptance by ordinance was impaired by lapse of time.

[3, 4] Again, it is urged as grounds requiring a reversal that the deed relied upon as constituting an offer to dedicate conveyed nothing, for the reason that the description was defective. In this behalf it is claimed that in the description by metes and bounds the initial point given is indeterminate. Conceding this to be true, the property was further described by reference to lot and block numbers appearing on the map to which reference was made in the deed, and which reference makes definite and certain the land conveyed. This map was offered in evidence, and was admissible in explanation and amplification of the description in the deed, though not recorded until after the deed was made. Redd v. Murry, 95 Cal. 48, 24 Pac. 841, 30 Pac. 132.

[5, 6] Appellants urge the further point that even assuming that the strip had been once accepted and used by the public, the plaintiffs have subsequent to such use obtained title thereto by adverse possession. It is well settled that the rights of the public in a dedicated street cannot be lost by nonuser or delay in the use or by a mere temporary abandonment of such use. Pol. Code, § 2621; People v. Myring, 144 Cal. 351, 77 Pac. 975. It is also an elementary proposition in this state that title cannot be acquired to a public street by adverse possession. Hoadley v. San Francisco, 50 Cal. 265; People v. Pope, 53 Cal. 437; San Leandro v. Le Breton, 72 Cal. 170, 13 Pac. 405; Archer v. Salinas City, 93 Cal. 43, 28 Pac. 839, 16 L. R. A. 145.

[7] With reference to the claim that, conceding a dedication to have been properly made, the same was subsequently revoked, it is sufficient to say that no revocation of the offer of dedication was ever attempted by any one having any connection with the record title to the strip of land, and a stranger to the title had no power to revoke.

[8] Nor do we think there is any force in the claimed estoppel. The circumstances made a basis of this claim consist of the payment of taxes and the erection of certain improvements, stipulated as being of the value of $100, and the further fact that the county of Alameda purchased a portion of the land claimed to have been dedicated but not included in the strip here in controversy. The payment of taxes did not raise an estoppel. San Leandro v. Le Breton, supra. Neither did the expenditure for the improvements (Sacramento v. Clunie, 120 Cal. 29, 52 Pac. 44) nor the recognition of private ownership in an adjacent owner (Mills v. Los Angeles, 90 Cal. 522, 27 Pac. 354).

[9] And finally, the claim of the insufficiency of the width to constitute a public highway is without merit. At the time of the dedication there were in force local road laws applicable to the county of Alameda with reference to the width of public highways in that county. St. 1862, p. 78, as amended by St. 1867-68, p. 374. Section 2 of that act provided that a public road should not exceed 4 rods in width. This was the only requirement provided for. There was, therefore, no limitation on the width of a public road other than specified.

For the reasons given, the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

35 Cal. App. 692

POTTER v. SPAULDING et al. (Civ. 1739.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 28, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 26, 1918.)

VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑285(3)—REMEDY OF VENDOR—STRICT FORECLOSURE OF CONTRACTS—RELIEF.

In an action by the vendor of land against a vendee and his assignee for money damages and strict foreclosure, with the right to retain the moneys paid on account of the price, the vendor's wife not being a party to the action, and being under no obligation to convey her one-fourth interest in the land, such part of the judgment as directed the assignee to pay three-fourths of the contract price, and take in return a three-fourths interest in the property, should the wife refuse to sign deed with her husband, was improper, the husband having contracted to convey title to all the property, not a three-fourths interest therein.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Action by T. W. Potter against Henry C. Spaulding and the United States Land Company. From the judgment, the Company appeals. Reversed in part, with directions.

Lamberson, Burke & Lamberson, of Visalia (Snook & Church, of Oakland, of counsel), for appellant. T. E. Clark and Alfred Daggett, both of Visalia, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This action grows out of two separate contracts entered into by plaintiff and by Henry C. Spaulding, defendant, and W. R. Pigg. The action was essentially on the equity side of the court and was tried by the court without a jury. Defendant United States Land Company appeals from the judgment herein on bill of exceptions. In the same action, the transcript of which is entitled Sacramento No. 2423, Civil 1728, the plaintiff Potter appeals from the judgment and from certain orders made after final judgment. This latter appeal will be treated in a separate opinion. 170 Pac. 1066.

The first of the contracts above referred to was entered into on December 8, 1911, by which plaintiff, the party of the first part, agreed to sell to said Pigg and Spaulding, the parties of the second part, certain land in said agreement described in consideration of certain payments to be made to plaintiff and certain covenants therein set forth to be performed by said Pigg and Spaulding, the money payments to be as follows: "$1,000 which has been deposited by the parties of the second part in the Citizens' Bank at Visalia, Cal., to the credit of the party of the first part and which is to be paid over to the party of the first part as hereinabove provided;" $26,125 to be paid on delivery of the deed mentioned in the agreement, and balance, $20,000, on or before one year from the date of the agreement, to be secured by mortgage on the said land. It was provided by the agreement that first party should furnish to second parties by delivering the same to the Citizens' Bank of Visalia, a complete abstract of title to said land as soon as practicable, second parties to have 30 days from the receipt of the abstract within which to examine the same and point out any defects therein, which latter, when pointed out, first party agreed to cure "as soon as practicable thereafter"; second parties agreed to accept the property within 30 days from delivery of abstract if title was clear and merchantable, "but if not so free, as soon thereafter as said clouds are removed and said defects cured by said first party," unless the second parties should specify defects in the title within 30 days after receipt of the abstract by said bank, "title to said property should be deemed to have been accepted by them"; on the receipt of $1,000 deposited with said Citizens' Bank of Visalia, and the further sum of $26,125, and the execution of the mortgage referred to securing the payment of $20,000, first party was concurrently therewith to execute and deliver to second parties a good and sufficient deed to all the said land "free and clear of liens and incumbrances of every kind and character"; all acts and things to be performed by the parties to the agreement "shall be done with the utmost practicable expedition"; in case of default on the part of second parties in any of the terms of the agreement, it was provided that the bank should forthwith pay to first party the said sum of $1,000 "the same being the consideration moving to him for entering into this agreement." It was further provided that certain personal property described in the agreement, now on the land, "shall pass and be conveyed by the party of the first part to the parties of the second part by separate bill of sale and without any additional consideration at the time he grants and conveys said land to said parties of the second part."

On January 15, 1912, the parties to the original contract entered into a supplemental agreement in which it was recited that the first party had furnished second parties abstracts of title showing certain defects therein as pointed out by second parties and in consideration thereof and the covenants in said supplemental contract contained, it was further agreed that Power & McFadzean, attorneys at law, should proceed at once to cure any defects in the title to said property and put the same in merchantable condition at the expense of first party; that second parties shall advance to first party $11,000 to be used by him to procure from one

---

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

Ed. Mort a release of all his claims upon said land and the personal property thereon referred to in the contract of December 8, 1911, "which said sum of $11,000 shall be credited to said parties of the second part as a payment on the purchase price of said land"; first party was to give second parties immediate possession of the land and personal property; should first party be unable to cure the title to said property within a reasonable time, "he shall repay said parties of the second part said sum of $11,000, by causing to be conveyed to them 220 acres of land to be selected by them from any portion of the land hereinbefore mentioned and specifically described in said agreement of December 8, 1911, together with said personal property." Neither the deed nor the mortgage mentioned in the original contract to be delivered until title to the land was put in good and merchantable condition, and interest on the balance over and above said $11,000 was not to commence until said title is in a merchantable condition and said deed and mortgage delivered as aforesaid. Said $11,000 was to be applied upon the purchase price of said land, and it was provided that this supplemental agreement of January 15th was to be a supplement to the agreement of December 8, 1911, which latter "shall remain in full force and effect as modified by this supplemental agreement."

On February 7, 1912, as found by the court, Pigg and Spaulding assigned and transferred all their right to and interest in the aforesaid contracts and to all said personal property to defendant United States Land Company, of which defendant Spaulding was president and general manager. By the terms of the assignment, the assignee expressly assumed the burdens and obligations of said contracts and thereafter Pigg and Spaulding ceased to have any interest therein. The action was dismissed as to Pigg, and Spaulding in his answer disclaimed any interest in said contracts. The plaintiff alleged full performance of each and all of the covenants set forth in the said contracts to be by him performed and the failure of defendants to keep or perform the covenants undertaken by them to be performed. Defendant United States Land Company answered, alleging full performance of the covenants of said contracts upon the part of Pigg and Spaulding agreed by them to be performed and on its own part as assignee of the interest of said Pigg and Spaulding. It also filed a cross-complaint seeking certain relief.

The court made the following findings of fact and conclusions of law:

(1) That plaintiff is not the owner in fee of the property described in the complaint, but is the owner in fee of an undivided three-fourths thereof, and Epsie G. Potter is the owner in fee of the other undivided one-fourth of said property. That their said ownership in fee is subject to the following easements, to wit: (1) A right of way of a certain named railway company, "which right of way did not constitute an objection or defect in the title because excepted by the contract." (2) A right of way for a pipe line and telephone line of the Standard Oil Company. (3) A right of way to the San Joaquin Light & Power Company for an electric pole line. (4) A right of way for a levee 100 feet wide across certain sections designated in the findings. That on December 8, 1911, plaintiff and said Pigg and Spaulding entered into the agreement of date December 8, 1911, referred to in the pleadings.

(2) That said W. R. Pigg and Henry C. Spaulding have not, nor has either of them, ever deposited in the Citizen's Bank of Visalia, or in any other bank or place, to the credit of plaintiff or to be paid to him the first payment of $1,000, mentioned and provided for in said contract, nor has defendant, said land company, so deposited said money, nor have said defendants or any or either of them ever paid or offered to pay the said plaintiff said sum or any part thereof.

(3) Plaintiff furnished and delivered to said W. R. Pigg and Henry C. Spaulding a complete abstract of title to said real property as required by and within the time provided in said contract.

(4) That said defendants W. R. Pigg and Henry C. Spaulding employed Attorneys Power & McFadzean to examine said abstract and to determine therefrom the title to said land. That they did, within 30 days after said abstract had been furnished by plaintiff, report in writing the result of their said examination to plaintiff and to said W. R. Pigg and Henry C. Spaulding, and therein pointed out all the defects in said title shown in said abstract, "except that said attorneys did not specify or point out that said title was subject to a right of way for a levee 100 feet wide across said section 29," as above referred to.

(5) That thereafter and on or about January 15, 1912, plaintiff and defendants W. R. Pigg and Henry C. Spaulding entered into a supplemental agreement referred to in the pleadings, "and at the same time plaintiff executed to W. R. Pigg and Henry C. Spaulding a bill of sale, transferring to them the title to and ownership of the personal property described in the contract of December 8, 1911, aforesaid, and they immediately entered into possession of said lands and personal property and remained in possession thereof until February 7, 1912; then said United States Land Company entered into possession thereof and remained in possession until May 22, 1913." That said Pigg and Spaulding, while they remained in possession of said property as aforesaid, appropriated to their use the rents, issues, and profits thereof, as also did the United States Land Company, while it remained in possession thereof.

(6) That on February 7, 1912, the said Pigg and Spaulding duly assigned and transferred to the said land company all their right, title, and interest to the real and personal property above described, and all their right, title, and interest in the said contracts.

(7) That upon the execution of said supplemental agreement, said Pigg and Spaulding paid to plaintiff, Potter, the sum of $11,000 mentioned in said supplemental agreement, and said Potter used the same to obtain from one Ed. Mort a release of certain claims he had in and to the real property above described.

(8) That said plaintiff immediately upon the execution of said supplemental contract employed Power & McFadzean to cure the defects in and remove the clouds from the title to said real property. That said attorneys proceeded diligently to cure said defects, "and did cure said defects and remove said clouds, and completed said work on or about March 15, 1913, and thereupon notified plaintiff and said W. R. Pigg and Henry C. Spaulding in writing that the title to said real property was free and clear from clouds and defects and was good and merchantable. That no other abstract of title to said land was furnished by plaintiff to said defendants or either of them, except that after the commencement of this action plaintiff furnished to defendants a continuance of said abstract, which continuance included all matters of record affecting said title from the date of the original abstract to a date after said title had been made good as aforesaid. That all work of said attorneys in removing said clouds and curing said defects were done as soon as practicable and within a reasonable time, and with due diligence."

(9) That prior to entering into said original agreement, said Pigg and Spaulding "entered upon and examined the lands above described and saw the said pipe line and telephone line of the Standard Oil Company, and the pole and electric line of the San Joaquin Light & Power Company, extending across said lands on the respective rights of way of said companies, and the levee across said section 29 on the right of way therefor above mentioned; said pipe and telephone lines, and said pole and electric line, and said levee were then objects plainly visible, and were then known by said W. R. Pigg and Henry C. Spaulding to have been constructed on said lands; they made no objection thereto, or to the title to said lands on account thereof, but waived any and all objections thereto."

(10) That after plaintiff had been notified by said attorneys that the clouds upon and defects in the title to said lands had been cured and removed, and between the 15th and 24th days of March, 1913, plaintiff informed the said Spaulding, then president of said land company, that plaintiff wanted the deal closed, and that a deed conveying the said lands to W. R. Pigg and Henry C. Spaulding had been made and placed in escrow in the Citizens' Bank of Visalia. That said Spaulding replied that he had not the money and asked for further time in which to get the money required to complete the second payment on said land, to which plaintiff did not consent or agree. "Said deed was and is a grant deed made by plaintiff and his wife, Epsie G. Potter, to W. R. Pigg and Henry C. Spaulding, conveying to them the lands above described; it was deposited in said bank in the latter part of December, 1911, by said attorneys for plaintiff at his request, being handed by said attorneys to W. R. Pigg, who was then cashier of said bank, and it remained in said bank in escrow until about May 23, 1913." That at the same time plaintiff instructed said Pigg in writing that said deed be delivered to said Pigg and Spaulding on their payment to said bank of the sum of $26,125, mentioned in the original agreement, and the execution by them to said Potter and wife of the mortgage for $20,000, mentioned in said agreement, and at said time the said Spaulding was president of said land company. That neither he nor any officer or agent of the said company ever examined said deed, nor did Spaulding or any of said defendants ever make any objection to said deed or to the form thereof.

(11) That at the time of entering into said original agreement it was understood and agreed by the parties thereto that said Citizens' Bank of Visalia should receive the deed conveying said lands from plaintiff to W. R. Pigg and Henry C. Spaulding, and should deliver said deed to them on receiving from them the second payment and the mortgage mentioned in said agreement, "provided the $1,000 mentioned in said agreement had been paid, and said deed was in said bank ready for delivery to them at any time they complied with said agreement on their part from the time it was placed in said bank until May 14, 1913."

(12) That on May 14, 1913, plaintiff served a notice and demand in writing upon said Spaulding, a copy of which notice is set out in the findings and is directed to W. R. Pigg and Henry C. Spaulding. It calls attention to the contracts entered into by the parties and the provisions thereof, and states that whereas the said Pigg and Spaulding, the parties of the second part, have wholly failed to comply with the terms of said contracts, the notice proceeds: "Therefore, I declare the said agreement so far as the same relates to any obligation on my part to perform, abrogated, annulled, and canceled; and you are hereby further notified that demand is now made that you vacate and deliver up the possession of the said premises to the undersigned, or my authorized agent, together with all the personal property mentioned and described in the original agreement aforesaid, within 30 days from the date of the service on you of this notice." It is further found by the court "that plaintiff did not rescind the agreements or either of them."

(13) That on May 22, 1913, plaintiff entered upon and obtained peaceable possession of said lands and of the greater part of said personal property, but not with the consent of defendants or either or any of them, "and has ever since remained and now is in possession of said lands and the rents, issues, and profits thereof. That on the day last aforesaid and after taking possession of said personal property, he delivered possession of said personal property to said Henry C. Spaulding, who was then president of said United States Land Company, and said company has ever since retained the same and appropriated it to said company's use."

(14) That on May 24, 1913, the said defendant land company served upon plaintiff a notice and demand in writing in which attention was called to the execution of said contracts and the provisions thereof, and stating that said plaintiff had not, within a reasonable time or at all, cured the title to said property nor put the same in a good and merchantable condition, and have not as yet done so, and called attention to the assignment of said contracts to said land company. The notice proceeds: "Now, therefore, the said United States Land Company, as such assignee, as aforesaid, has elected to select said 220 acres of land and said personal property in lieu of the further performance by you of the terms and obligations of said contract, as aforesaid, and has selected the south 220 acres of said tract of land agreed to be conveyed by you, as is more fully set out and described in said contracts as aforesaid, and hereby demands of and from you, the conveyance to it, the said corporation, of the said south 220 acres of said tract of land, as aforesaid, and a bill of sale of all said personal property mentioned in said original agreement." It is found by the court that the plaintiff has refused "to comply with and has not complied with said demand in any manner or at all."

(15) "That defendants were entitled to a reasonable time in which to comply with the terms of said agreements on their part after notice was given to them as aforesaid by plaintiff. That said reasonable time had expired on May 13, 1913, and prior to the time plaintiff notified W. R. Pigg and Henry C. Spaulding that his obligations under said contracts were annulled and canceled as aforesaid. That said defendants have not nor has either of them ever been ready or able to make the payments specified in said original contract, nor have they or either of them ever paid any part of the purchase price of said property except the said sum of $11,000 paid at the time of the execution of said supplemental agreement. That plaintiff has not repaid to defendants, or either of them, any part of said $11,000."

(16) "That plaintiff was always ready, able, and willing to comply with the terms of said contracts on his part, up to the time he gave the notice and demand aforesaid, upon the performance by defendants of the terms of said contracts on their part."

(17) That defendants have not, nor has either of them, been damaged in any sum whatever by plaintiff's failure to convey to them or either of them the 220 acres of land hereinbefore mentioned, nor by his failure to repay to them or either of them the said sum of $11,000, nor by any other act, failure, or omission of plaintiff.

(18) "That plaintiff herein has suffered no damage because of the defendants, or any of them, being in possession of, or having the use of, the real and personal property described in said contracts."

(19) That neither of said defendants ever notified or stated to plaintiff prior to the written notice and demand of May 24, 1913, that plaintiff was in default in the performance of the terms of said contract. That said land company did demand on October 15, 1912, "the conveyance to it of 220 acres off the south end of said tract of lands, and plaintiff refused to comply with said demand. That plaintiff was not then in default and has never been in default in the performance of any of the terms of said contract on his part."

(20) That the reasonable value of said 220 acres of land and said personal property was on January 15, 1912, the sum of $11,000.

(21) "That plaintiff herein has not been damaged by the act or acts or failure to act of defendants or any of them in any amount whatever."

(22) "All sums of money agreed to be paid on the two contracts should have been paid within a reasonable term, to wit, prior to May 14, 1913."

As conclusions of law, the court found as follows:

"That there is due and unpaid upon said contracts the sum of $36,125 for purchase money, with interest thereon from March 24, 1913, at 7 per cent. per annum, provided plaintiff and his wife, Epsie G. Potter, execute to United States Land Company, as hereinafter provided, a good and sufficient deed conveying to said company the lands described in said contract and in said complaint. That in the event said Epsie G. Potter should refuse to execute said deed or join in the execution thereof, then there is due and owing on said contracts the sum of $24,343.75 for purchase money of an undivided three-fourths interest in said lands, with interest thereon at 7 per cent. per annum from March 24, 1913."

"That plaintiff is entitled to the judgment of this court that all the rights of the defendants Henry C. Spaulding and said United States Land Company and of each of them, in and to the said contracts, and each of said contracts, and in and to the lands described in said original contract and in the complaint herein, be foreclosed, and that plaintiff recover from the defendants Henry C. Spaulding and United States Land Company his costs in this action."

"That defendant United States Land Company should be allowed a reasonable time after date of the judgment herein in which to complete the payment of all sums of money due and owing on said contracts, and said reasonable time is hereby fixed at 60 days after date of said judgment."

"That on the payment by said United States Land Company at any time within 60 days from the date of the judgment herein of the sum of $36,125, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from March 24, 1913, together with plaintiff's costs in this action, the plaintiff and his wife, Epsie G. Potter, should execute to said United States Land Company a good and sufficient deed conveying to said company the lands described in said original contract, subject to the easements mentioned in the foregoing findings; and should deliver to said company possession of said lands."

"In the event said Epsie G. Potter fails or refuses to execute a deed or join in the execution of a good and sufficient deed, as above provided, with plaintiff, to said United States Land Company, then on the payment by said United States Land Company to said plaintiff of the sum of $24,343.75, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from March 24, 1913, at any time within 60 days from the date of the judgment herein, together with plaintiff's costs, said plaintiff shall execute to said United States Land Company a good and sufficient deed conveying to said company an undivided three-fourths interest in and to the lands described in said original contract, and shall deliver possession of said three-fourths interest in said lands to said company."

"In case of the failure of plaintiff, T. W. Potter, to make or join in the making of one of the deeds hereinbefore mentioned, a commissioner shall be appointed by this court to make such conveyance."

"In case of the failure of said defendant United States Land Company to make the payments within the time hereinbefore provided, then said judgment foreclosing all the right, title, and interest of Henry C. Spaulding and the United States Land Company, a corporation, and of each of them in and to said contracts and in and to the said lands shall be and become absolute."

Judgment was accordingly entered.

Briefly stated, plaintiff seeks money damages and a strict foreclosure of the contracts with the right to retain the $11,000 paid by Pigg and Spaulding on account of the purchase price of the land. Defendant United States Land Company seeks to have a lien declared upon all the land to the extent of $11,000 and interest from January 15, 1912, and that said lien be foreclosed; that said agreements be specifically performed and plaintiff adjudged to convey to defendant United States Land Company, or such defendants as the court may find entitled thereto, said 220 acres of land. As an alternative proposition, defendant offers to receive said sum of $11,000 or such sum as the court may adjudge to be owing to it, "or to take and receive from plaintiff said 220 acres of land above mentioned, or such portion thereof as the court may adjudge should be conveyed to it by plaintiff herein," or finally, "to pay to plaintiff herein the sum of money agreed by defendants W. R. Pigg and Henry C. Spaulding to be paid to plaintiff herein under said agreements of date December 8, 1911, and January 15, 1912, on the terms and conditions set out in said agreements if this court should adjudge that the same be paid upon conveyance to defendant United States Land Company, a corporation, by plaintiff herein of a good and merchantable title to the lands described in said agreement of date December 8, 1911"; and in this regard, defendant asks the court to grant "such length of time as to this court may appear meet and proper in the premises within which to pay to plaintiff herein the sums of money agreed by said agreement to be paid to plaintiff herein and to perform each and all of the terms and conditions therein set forth to be done by defendants W. R. Pigg and Henry C. Spaulding, and that thereupon plaintiff herein shall make, execute, and deliver to defendant United States Land Company, a corporation, or to such of the defendants as may be found by this court to be entitled thereto, a conveyance of a good and merchantable title to the whole of the lands described in said agreement of December 8, 1911," and for such other relief, etc.

The court, in its findings and judgment, has apparently adopted defendant's alternative proposition in so far as to decree that upon payment by defendant United States Land Company to plaintiff of $36,125, with interest at 7 per cent. from March 24, 1913, together with plaintiff's costs of action, plaintiff and his wife shall convey to defendant United States Land Company, by sufficient deed, the lands in said original contract described, "subject to the easements mentioned in the findings herein, and deliver to said defendant United States Land Company the possession of said lands." Then follows the provision of the decree which is claimed to be wholly outside of any agreements entered into by the parties and outside any issues in the case, namely, that in the event Mrs. Potter fails or refuses to join in the execution of said deed, "then upon the payment by the United States Land Company to said plaintiff of the sum of $24,343.75, with interest thereon at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum from March 24, 1913, at any time within 60 days from the date of this judgment, together with the plaintiff's costs, said plaintiff shall execute to said United States Land Company a good and sufficient deed conveying to said company an undivided three-fourths interest in the land described in said original contract, and shall deliver possession of said three-fourths interest in said land to said United States Land Company." It is then decreed that in case defendant United States Land Company fails to make such payments within the time decreed, "then the judgment foreclosing all the right, title, and interest of said defendant Henry C. Spaulding and United States Land Company and of each of them in and to the said interests and in and to said land shall be and become absolute." Should plaintiff fail to make or join in making of one of said deeds, a commissioner is provided for to make the same.

We have examined the evidence with some care and are satisfied that it is sufficient to support the findings of fact. It is not so much the facts themselves that are questioned by appellant as the force given them by the court. For example, the court found that plaintiff cleared the title of all defects notwithstanding there were certain easements which concededly were not removed. As to these the evidence was that the defendants were familiar with the land; had gone all over it before the contracts were entered into and, as the court found, "saw the said pipe line and telephone line of the Standard Oil Company and the pole and electric line of the San Joaquin Light & Power Company extending across said lands on the respective rights of way of said companies" and the other visible evidence of these existing easements and, as the court further found, "they made no objections thereto, or to the title to said lands on account thereof." Mr. Power, of Power & McFadzean, who were the attorneys agreed upon by the parties to cure the title, testified that it was understood by all the parties to the transaction that these visible easements were not to be considered as incumbrances. Appellant, among other of its objections, claims that these defects are incurable. That is true, but it was equally true when defendants were bargaining for the property, and this fact tends to show that they were not to be considered. It is chiefly on account of these easements that appellant now urges that plaintiff was in default.

The evidence was that said attorneys notified all the parties March 15, 1913, that the title was then clear and merchantable, and it was with this knowledge in mind when plaintiff called upon Spaulding as president and manager of defendant company that the latter made no objection to the title, but asked for more time in which to raise the money necessary to meet the payments then due. It was about two months thereafter that plaintiff served written notice on defendants mentioned in the findings.

As to the objection that the deed placed in escrow by plaintiff was a quitclaim deed in form, we do not think it now necessary to express an opinion. It was known to be in escrow with the other documents in the Visalia Bank, and its form was never objected to. The court found that it was a grant deed. However, in its findings of fact and conclusions of law, the court seems to have disregarded this deed. It was withdrawn from the bank by plaintiff, with other documents, about May 14, 1913. The court, in its conclusions of law, directed that on payment by defendants, plaintiff and wife execute a conveyance of a good and sufficient title except as to said easements. The court found, and we think the evidence supports the finding, that plaintiff was at all times ready and willing to perform on his part the covenants he had agreed to perform. There was much delay in perfecting the title, but the court found upon the testimony of said attorneys that owing to the complicated condition of the title the work of clearing all defects was performed within a reasonable time. An examination of the record convinces us that this finding is amply supported. Besides, defendants had no cause for complaint on this account. Their money obligations were not drawing interest, and they were enjoying the rents and profits of the property. The transaction found itself enmeshed in many intricacies and many conflicting phases, as is plainly perceivable from the pleadings and the findings. The court, sitting as chancellor, manifestly endeavored to adjust the equities upon sound principles, and on the whole case we think the court had the right conception of the merits of the contending claims.

We are, however, unable to find support for the conclusion of law which was carried into the judgment in the same language and as to which the judgment directs defendant land company to pay what we assume is intended to represent three-fourths of the contract price, and to take in return a three-fourths interest in the property, thus leaving a one-fourth interest outstanding in Mrs. Potter, should she refuse to sign the deed with plaintiff. Mrs. Potter was not a party to the action; she is under no obligation to convey her one-fourth interest. Plaintiff's contract was to convey title to all the property, not a three-fourths interest therein. To compel defendant land company to accept a deed for less than plaintiff agreed to convey is to compel the performance of a contract which neither it nor its assignors ever entered into. We can find nothing in the record to sustain this part of the judgment. Jackson v. Torrence, 83 Cal. 521, 23 Pac. 695; Olson v. Lovell, 91 Cal. 506, 27 Pac. 765. This portion of the judgment must be reversed. The court properly adjudged that upon the payment by defendant land company of the several sums specified, plaintiff and his wife should execute to said defendant a good and sufficient deed to all the lands described in said original contract. And the court provides for plaintiff's refusal by directing the appointment of a commissioner "to make such conveyance" who, of course, could not convey more than plaintiff's interest.

In its computation of the amount of money due under the contracts, the court credits defendant with the $11,000 paid by Pigg and Spaulding, but the court makes no finding as to what disposition should be made of this $11,000 should plaintiff fail to convey or cause to be conveyed the entire interest in the property; and this may happen should Mrs. Potter refuse to execute a deed to her one-fourth interest therein. It seems to us that the court should make a finding determining who is entitled to this $11,000 in the event of plaintiff's failure to convey or cause to be conveyed by a good and sufficient deed, a title to the entire interest in said property.

That portion of the judgment specifically referred to above as not supported is reversed, with directions to the court to make findings with reference to said $11,000 payment as above suggested; the matter to be heard upon the evidence contained in the present record, and such further evidence as the parties to the action may desire to submit.

It is further ordered that each party pay his own costs on this appeal.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

---

35 Cal. App. 707

POTTER v. PIGG et al. (Civ. 1728.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 28, 1917.)

1. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF 🔑53(3) — SETTLEMENT—MANDAMUS.

To have reviewed an order refusing to settle his bill of exceptions, plaintiff's remedy is by mandamus, and not by appeal.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑864—JUDGMENT IN CONFLICT WITH FINDINGS—REMEDY BY APPEAL.

Where the judgment is in conflict with the findings, the remedy is by an appeal from the judgment.

3. JUDGMENT 🔑305—VACATION—INCONSISTENCY WITH FINDINGS—INCORRECT CONCLUSIONS OF LAW.

The superior court has jurisdiction, on motion under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 663, 663a, to vacate a judgment as entered, which is inconsistent with and not supported by the findings of fact, and to enter proper judgment, and also where the conclusions of law are incorrect or erroneous, and not consistent with the findings of fact.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑113(1)—ORDER APPEALABLE—MOTION TO VACATE JUDGMENT.

An order denying a motion under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 663, 663a, to vacate a judgment as entered which is inconsistent with and not supported by the findings of fact, and to enter a proper judgment, is appealable.

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑285(5)—RIGHT OF VENDOR—RECOVERY—DAMAGES FOR USE.

Where, by contract of sale, the purchasers of realty were entitled to possession of the land and personalty, and their possession was lawful until the vendor made demand for possession, and without waiting for the purchasers to comply with the demand the vendor took possession of the property, and remained in possession, in his action to foreclose the contracts of sale, the vendor was not entitled to any damages for the use of the land and personalty.

6. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑285(3) — RIGHTS OF VENDOR—FORECLOSURE—CONDITIONS.

Where time was not specifically made of the essence of contracts for the sale of land, after demand made by the vendor the purchasers should have paid within a reasonable time, and, in the vendor's action for foreclosure of the contracts of sale, he was entitled only to have foreclosure ordered conditionally on the failure of the assignee of the purchasers to make full payment in accordance with the contracts.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Action by T. W. Potter against W. R. Pigg and others. From judgment and order made after final judgment, plaintiff appeals. Judgment and order so far as they affect plaintiff affirmed, except as to certain matters.

T. E. Clark, of Visalia, for appellant. Lamberson, Burke & Lamberson, of Visalia (Snook & Church, of Oakland, of counsel), for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from an order made after final judgment. The pleadings, findings, and judgment are identical with those in Civil No. 1739, 170 Pac. 1061, this day decided, Plaintiff gave notice of a motion under sections 663, 663a, Code of Civil Procedure, to vacate the judgment and to enter another and different judgment, which motion wa denied. The appeal from the order appears in part to be an attempt to have reviewed an order refusing to settle his bill of exceptions.

[1] The remedy is by mandamus, and not by appeal. Brode v. Goslin, 158 Cal. 699, 701, 112 Pac. 280. Besides, no bill of exceptions is in the record, and hence it cannot be determined whether or not the court erred. A bill of exceptions appears in No. 1739, above referred to, brought up on the appeal of defendant United States Land Company. In that appeal, plaintiff here is respondent. Plaintiff claims the right to resort to that bill of exceptions in support of his appeal from the order denying his motion to have the judgment vacated and another and different judgment entered. Where no reference is made in the record to a bill of exceptions in a separate transcript brought up on a different appeal, and no stipulation that it may be used, we doubt whether any rule of practice would authorize the appellant to resort to such bill of exceptions in order to show that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings. However, it is not necessary to consider the point, for we have, in deciding case No. 1739, reached the conclusion that the findings are supported by the evidence, and we discover nothing in plaintiff's appeal to change our opinion.

[2-4] Where the judgment is in conflict with the findings, the remedy is by an appeal from the judgment. Sharp v. Bowie, 142 Cal. 462, 76 Pac. 62. And the superior court has jurisdiction on motion under sections 663 and 663a to vacate a judgment as entered, which is inconsistent with and not supported by the findings of fact and to enter a proper judgment (Tyrrell v. Baldwin, 67 Cal. 1, 6 Pac. 867; Dahlberg v. Girsch, 157 Cal. 324, 107 Pac. 616), and also where the conclusions of law are incorrect or erroneous and not consistent with the findings of fact (Shafer v. Lacy, 121 Cal. 574, 54 Pac. 72). An order denying a motion to vacate a judgment under these sections is an order after final judgment, and is appealable. Kaiser v. Dalto, 140 Cal. 167, 73 Pac. 828.

[5] In his action plaintiff seeks damages as follows: "$5,000 for the detention by defendant and use of the real property"; $5,000 for the value of the personal property; $10,000 "on account of being deprived of the control and use of his said property and of the profits thereof, and failure of defendants to comply with the conditions of their agreements to pay the purchase price for the property in question to plaintiff within the time agreed, or at any time;" that defendants be forever enjoined from setting up any claim or right to the possession or title to the said 942½ acres of land aforesaid." The court found on sufficient evidence; and the contracts provided that defendants should go into the possession and use of the real property; and that such possession and use were to continue pending the time required in curing the title. As to the personal property, the court found on sufficient evidence that title passed by bill of sale to defendants. Upon this branch of the case the court, in its opinion, printed in the record, calls attention to the evidence, and shows very clearly that plaintiff was not entitled to damages. Said the court:

> "Plaintiff, however, is not entitled to any damages. By the terms of the contract the defendants were entitled to the possession of the land and personal property. Their possession was lawful until plaintiff made demand for possession. He served his demand on May 14, 1913, requiring defendants to give up possession within 30 days. Without waiting for them to comply with the demand, plaintiff took possession of the property on May 22, 1913. He has ever since remained in possession of the land. He is therefore not entitled to any damages for the use of the land. See Marshall v. Caldwell, 41 Cal. 611; Hannan v. McNickle, 82 Cal. 122, 23 Pac. 271. For the same reason plaintiff cannot recover for the use of the personal property by defendants, even had the title thereto remained in plaintiff. Defendants contend that title to the personal property passed to the purchasers at the time of the execution of the supplemental contract. Defendant Spaulding testified that a bill of sale of the personal property was written out with pen and ink, and executed by the plaintiff; that he (Spaulding) had it in his possession, but that it was afterwards destroyed by a fire which burned up the ranch house. Plaintiff denied the execution of any bill of sale. But he recognized defendants' title to the personal property. Spaulding sold $300 worth of hogs, and in writing to plaintiff about other matters mentioned this sale. Plaintiff made no objections thereto. Afterwards, it is true that plaintiff demanded possession of all the property. But after taking possession of all the personal property remaining unsold, he turned it over to defendants. All of the tools and farming machinery, except an engine which had already been removed, some 35 head of milch cows and some calves, plaintiff thus turned over to defendants. On taking possession of the land he recognized the ownership in a hired man of the United States Land Company in one-half the poultry, and paid the hired man therefor. This poultry was that mentioned in the original contract and the increase thereof. He did not remove the other half of the poultry, but he recognized Spaulding's or the United States Land Company's claim to the same, recognized their right to one-half the eggs, and they took their half of the poultry from the ranch. The hired man did not obtain his interest in the poultry from plaintiff, but from defendants, which plaintiff well knew."

[6] The court found that plaintiff was entitled to foreclosure of said contracts, but not to a strict foreclosure, which latter would have carried with it the forfeiture of the $11,000 payment made by defendants. The foreclosure ordered was conditioned upon the failure of defendant United States Land Company to make full payment in accordance with said contracts as shown in No. 1739. This we think gave to plaintiff the full measure of relief to which he is shown to have been entitled. Upon this point the learned trial judge in his opinion said:

"Plaintiff is entitled to foreclosure of said contracts, but defendants should be allowed a reasonable time in which to complete the payments for the lands, and on payment to receive the proper conveyances therefor. Time is not specifically made of the essence of the contracts, but after demand made by plaintiff, defendants should have paid within a reasonable time. They should have paid the $26,125 in cash not later than May 22, 1913, and executed the proper mortgage securing the final payment of $20,000 with interest thereon at 7 per cent. per annum, payable within one year from the last-mentioned date. They should also have paid the $1,000 by that date, May 22, 1913. The mortgage for $20,000 would have been due as early as May 22, 1914, and plaintiff should not now be required to accept a mortgage for that sum, but should be paid in cash. The defendant Spaulding or the United States Land Company should be granted sixty days from the date of judgment within which to pay the plaintiff the sum of $36,125, with interest thereon, from May 22, 1913, at 7 per cent. per annum, compounded annually."

The judgment and order, so far as they affect plaintiff, except as to matters considered and decided in case No. 1739, are affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

35 Cal. App. 688

PORTER v. BRYSON. (Civ. 2497.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 27, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 25, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑957(1)—REVIEW—DISCRETION—OPENING DEFAULT.

An order setting aside a default judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, authorizing the court to relieve a party from a judgment or order taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, will not be disturbed, unless it very clearly appears that the trial judge has abused his discretion.

2. JUDGMENT 🔑143(11)—OPENING DEFAULT—MISTAKE OF COUNSEL.

An order setting aside a default judgment against a public administrator will not be disturbed, where it was shown by affidavit that the deputy county counsel to whom the administrator delivered the summons made a mistake as to the date of service, and indorsed thereon an incorrect date, and that the deputy counsel to whom the case was assigned was thereby misled as to the time for answering, and where defendant promptly moved to set aside the judgment, and evidenced no desire to hinder or delay the prosecution of the action, and filed an answer raising substantial issues of fact, as the court could not say that the mistake was inexcusable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by Florence A. Porter against Frank Bryson, as administrator of Wallace James Joyce, deceased. From an order setting aside defendant's default, and a default judgment for plaintiff entered thereon, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Edward W. Cunningham, of Los Angeles, and Abe Hart, of San Francisco, for appellant. A. J. Hill, County Counsel, and David R. Faries, Deputy County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. The sole question presented by this appeal is as to whether the trial court abused its discretion in setting aside the default of the defendant and judgment entered thereon. Three affidavits were presented by the defendant in support of his motion to set aside the default and the judgment; also an answer the allegations of which raised material issues of fact, which answer was filed after the court had made the order which is sought to be reversed upon this appeal. The affidavit of the defendant set forth that the summons and complaint in the action were served upon him on the 19th day of November, 1915; that he delivered said summons and complaint on the same day to Robert B. Murphey, a deputy county counsel, and requested that the county counsel appear on his behalf in the action; that he did not know why no appearance was entered within the ten days prescribed by law. The affidavit of defendant further contained the statement that he had fully and fairly stated the facts and circumstances of the case to a deputy county counsel, one of his attorneys, and had been advised that he had a good and substantial defense on the merits of the action; that he believed the same to be true. Murphey's affidavit, being one of the three filed, reads as follows:

"Robert B. Murphey, being first duly sworn, deposes and says: That he is an attorney, duly admitted to practice law in the courts of the state of California; that he is, and at all times mentioned herein has been, a deputy county counsel in and for the county of Los Angeles, state of California; that Frank Bryson, public administrator, the defendant herein, delivered to affiant a copy of the summons and complaint herein, and that affiant informed said defendant that he would turn the matter over to A. J. Hill, county counsel of Los Angeles county, who would assign said matter to one of the deputies in his office; that at the time said summons and complaint were handed to affiant, he inquired of said defendant as to the time of service of the same upon him, and understood defendant to say November 21, 1915, and further understood said defendant to say that it was on a Monday; that affiant thereafter indorsed upon the back of said complaint and summons the words and figures, 'Served Monday, November 21, 1915'; that on the same day that the said defendant handed said summons and complaint to affiant, affiant delivered the same to Emily W. Wussow, secretary to said A. J. Hill, county counsel."

David R. Faries, a deputy county counsel, made affidavit that he was one of the attorneys for the defendant, and that about November 24, 1915, the matter of attending to the particular case referred to was assigned to him in the office of the county counsel; that it was customary to indorse upon the back of any pleading the date of service, and that when he received the complaint and summons there was indorsed on the back thereof the words, "Served Monday, November 21, 1915"; that he relied upon the indorsement as showing the correct date of service, and believed that he had up to and including December 1st in which to plead to said complaint; that he was preparing to and expected to plead to the complaint on December 1st, and was surprised to learn on November 30th that default of the defendant had been entered. It will be noted that the defendant in his affidavit asserted that he delivered the complaint and summons to Murphey on the day of their receipt by him, with a request that the county counsel appear on his behalf in the action. Murphey's affidavit by inference contradicts this statement in that he asserts that at the time the summons and complaint were handed him be understood defendant to say that service had been made on November 21, 1915. As to whether Murphey actually received the summons and complaint on the 19th cannot be told, but it does appear that when he indorsed thereon the words, "Served Monday, November 21, 1915," he made an error as to the date by reason of which error the second deputy in the office of the county counsel to whom the handling of the case was assigned was misled as to the expiration day of the time for pleading in the action. The motion to set aside the default and judgment was promptly made, and immediately after the court had granted that motion the defendant moved to set the cause for trial; but owing to the plaintiff's desire the date for the trial was not fixed, but this appeal was prosecuted.

[1, 2] Action of the kind here taken by trial judges under the authority given by the provisions of section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, as our Supreme Court has repeatedly said, will not be disturbed, unless it very clearly appears that the trial judge has abused his discretion. Orders granting such relief are more to be favored than those denying the same. "Relief in such cases is said to be within the discretion of the court; but 'the exercise of the mere discretion of the court ought to tend, in a reasonable degree at least, to bring about a judgment on the very merits of the case, and, where the circumstances are such as to lead the court to hesitate upon the motion to open the default, it is better, as a general rule, that the doubt should be resolved in favor of the application.' * * * Such orders 'rest very much in the discretion of the court below, and will not be disturbed by this court unless we are satisfied that the order is so plainly erroneous as to amount to an abuse of discretion.'" Miller v. Carr, 116 Cal. 378, 48 Pac. 324, 58 Am. St. Rep. 180; Melde v. Reynolds, 129 Cal. 308, 61 Pac. 932; Nicoll v. Weldon, 130 Cal. 666, 63 Pac. 63. In the latter case the court remarked:

> "Section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure is a remedial provision, and is to be liberally construed so as to dispose of cases upon their substantial merits, and to give to the party claiming in good faith to have a substantial defense to the action an opportunity to present it (citing cases). It is for this reason that we more readily listen to an appeal from an order refusing to set aside a default, than where the motion has been granted, since in such case the defendant may be deprived of a substantial right, whereas it may be assumed, if nothing to the contrary is shown, that the plaintiff will be able at any time to establish his cause of action. If, for any reason, he will be unable to do so, that fact should be made to appear; but if he is merely subjected to delay or inconvenience by having the default set aside, he can be compensated therefor by the terms which the court will impose as the condition of granting the motion."

See, also, Williamson v. Cummings, etc., Co., 95 Cal. 652, 30 Pac. 762; Morton v. Morton, 117 Cal. 443, 49 Pac. 557.

Appellant, admitting that the affidavits of the defendant show that a mistake had been made as to the date of service, argues that the affidavits are not sufficient in their showing that such mistake was excusable. In view of the settled disposition of the appellate courts in viewing the action taken under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, and as is held in the cases cited, the question is rather as to whether the affidavits show that the mistake was inexcusable, and that we are not prepared to hold. Deputy county counsel Murphey, it is not disputed, indorsed the wrong date of service upon the complaint and summons, and the deputy to whom the handling of the cause was assigned had no other information to guide him in determining when appearance was due than this indorsement. The defendant acted with promptness throughout, evidencing no desire to hinder or delay plaintiff in the prosecution of her action, and filed an answer which raised substantial issues of fact to be tried. We think that the order as made should not be disturbed.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; WORKS, Judge pro tem.

---

35 Cal. App. 728

COUNTRYMAN v. CALIFORNIA TRONA CO. (Civ. 2262.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 31, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 28, 1918.)

1. Appeal and Error ⚷1002 — Review—Conflicting Evidence.

Where the evidence was in substantial conflict as to whether an unauthorized contract by the general manager of a corporation was made known to and approved by a majority of the directors and whether with such knowledge and approval plaintiff was permitted to proceed with the performance of the services therein specified so as to constitute a ratification of the execution and terms of the agreement, the jury's finding in plaintiff's favor would not be disturbed.

2. Corporations ⚷426(5) — Officers — Unauthorized Acts—Ratification.

An agreement of a corporation, entered into by its manager without authority sufficiently ample to enable him to execute it, may be approved and ratified so as to become binding upon the corporation through the knowledge, approval, and consent of a majority of the directors acting individually and informally, particularly where a person has been permitted to continue in the open and active capacity and service of attorney for the corporation without objection or inquiry as to the existence or terms of his engagement so to do.

3. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT 🔑143—CONTRACTS AS TO COMPENSATION—VALIDITY.

The rule that, where the relation of attorney and client already exists when a contract is made respecting the attorney's fees, he is precluded from recovering more than a reasonable sum for his services without regard to the attempted fixing of their value by the agreement, is not a rule of universal application, and only applies where there are special reasons for its application, as where the written contract provides for greater compensation than was expressly or impliedly agreed upon prior to the existence of the confidential relation, or where special relations of confidence exist, or where the client had no other independent legal adviser, or where there was some failure on the part of the attorney to make full disclosure to the client as to the extent of the services required.

4. TRIAL 🔑296(11)—INSTRUCTIONS—CURE BY OTHER INSTRUCTIONS.

In an attorney's action for services, an instruction that, if a written contract was made fixing the amount of compensation, the verdict should be for the full sum provided for in such contract, without considering or going into the matter whether the services were reasonably worth such sum, was not misleading or sufficiently prejudicial to require a reversal, though such contract was made after the relation of attorney and client had commenced, where the court gave every instruction requested by defendant, and in so doing fully and repeatedly instructed the jury that the utmost limit of plaintiff's recovery was the reasonable value of his services.

5. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT 🔑165 — ACTIONS FOR COMPENSATION—PLEADING AND PROOF.

Where an attorney was discharged without cause, and before the full measure of the services, contemplated by his written agreement, had been performed, he was not required to allege or prove the reasonable value of his services which he was not permitted to perform, but was entitled to count upon the contract.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1040(10)—HARMLESS ERROR—OVERRULING DEMURRER.

In an attorney's action for services, the uncertainties in the complaint with respect to the specific services performed did not injure defendant where, at some time during the pendency of the action, defendant was furnished a bill of particulars setting forth specifically the services upon which the claim for compensation was based, and the items of such bill were made the subject of exhaustive examination during the trial, and hence the overruling of a demurrer to the complaint was not ground for reversal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by Robert H. Countryman against the California Trona Company. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Charles W. Slack, Chauncey S. Goodrich, and Perry Evans, all of San Francisco, for appellant. Chapman & Trefethen, of Oakland, and Wm. P. Hubbard and R. H. Countryman, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $39,000 and costs, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

The action was instituted for the recovery of the sum of $40,000, less the sum of $1,000 paid on account, alleged to be due from the defendant to the plaintiff as counsel fees. The complaint is in two counts, one upon an express contract for the payment of the above-named sum; the other a count for the recovery of said sum as the reasonable value of the plaintiff's professional services. The answer of the defendant denies the existence of any express contract for the employment of plaintiff to render any professional services whatever; and also denies that any such services which the plaintiff may have rendered to the defendant were of the reasonable value of $40,000 or any other sum whatever, and alleged that for any services which the plaintiff may have rendered to the defendant he has been fully paid. The defendant also pleads the bar of the statute of limitations to the action.

The cause was tried before a jury demanded by the defendant. The trial before such jury occupied nine days, at the conclusion of which the jury unanimously rendered a verdict in plaintiff's favor for the full sum demanded in his complaint. The defendant moved for a new trial upon the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict; that said verdict was against law; and also upon the ground of errors of law occurring at the trial and fully specified in the bill of exceptions. The entire record of the trial is before us, and is very voluminous.

The facts of the case, in so far as their recital may be necessary for its decision upon appeal, are as follows: The defendant is a mining corporation organized under the laws of the state of Califorina, with a capitalization of $1,000,000, and owning or claiming to own locations embracing 41,200 acres of mineral lands in the counties of San Bernardino and Inyo, in said state, containing deposits of potash, soda, and trona of vast and variously estimated value. The corporation began its operations for the development of these properties in the year 1908, and in the month of August of that year entered into an agreement with the Foreign Mines Development Company an English corporation, for the purpose of having provided the necessary capital for such development, giving its mortgage upon the properties to the latter corporation to secure such advances and expenditures as it might have and also such bonuses as under the agreement it was entitled to receive. After the development work had proceeded for a little more than a year the mortgagee gave notice of its election to consider all moneys secured by said mortgage to be due and payable, and of its intention to proceed to a sale of the property under the terms of the mortgage. Thereupon the mortgagor, the appellant herein, commenced an action in the superior court of Alameda county to enjoin the proposed sale, and secured a temporary injunction to that effect; whereupon the defendant therein, the Foreign Mines Development Company, filed its answer and cross-complaint, praying for the foreclosure of its said mortgage, and also filed its application for the transfer of the cause to the federal courts. This transfer being accomplished, the suit was referred to the master in chancery to take testimony therein. In the meantime and during the pendency of said action the California Trona Company granted to one E. H. Merrill an option to purchase all of its said properties for the sum of $1,000,000. At that time the plaintiff in this action was the attorney for said E. H. Merrill, while the defendant herein had been theretofore and continued to be represented by one J. Harwood. The existence of the foregoing option in the said Merrill, together with the various involvements of the defendant herein accruing out of or coincident with its financial and legal difficulties with its mortgagee, brought the said E. H. Merrill and his counsel into the close relations of a common interest with the defendant herein in an effort to extricate the properties of the defendant from its several imminent dangers of being lost to it. The plaintiff herein and the counsel for the defendant herein were thus brought into association for the protection of this common interest of their clients, in the course of which the plaintiff co-operated with the defendant's counsel in the preparation of certain affidavits by the president and directors of said corporation for use in the course of their pending suit in the federal court, and also participated in certain hearings therein. About this time also some trouble seemed impending with jumpers upon the property, in the course of which the plaintiff was called into consultation with Mr. Dolbeer, the general manager and one of the directors of the defendant, and performed some services in that connection and also in the way of advising and preparing relocations of certain of the defendant's claims. While these matters were impending the plaintiff in the month of September, 1910, received a telegram from Mr. Dolbeer requesting him to be formally associated with Mr. Harwood in the pending action in the federal court, and he thereafter appeared as representing the plaintiff (this defendant) therein, and also acted as its counsel in the various other difficulties in which it either was or was likely to become involved. In the month of December, 1910, the defendant held a corporate meeting in the city of San Francisco, at which its board of directors was filled out so as to consist of directors Boyes, Dolbeer, Simon, Philips, and Bartholomew, Dr. Boyes being elected president of the corporation, and Mr. Dolbeer vice president and general manager. A few days thereafter Mr. Dolbeer and director Philips visited the plaintiff's office in said city for the purpose of making an agreement covering his compensation for his past and future services, at which time the plaintiff said to Dolbeer and Philips that his fee would be $40,000 for his past services and his future services in the foreclosure suit. After some discussion a written contract was executed on behalf of the California Trona Company by said Dolbeer as its manager, which provides as follows:

> "That for and in consideration of the legal services heretofore rendered by said Countryman to said California Trona Company, and for the legal services to be rendered by said Countryman as such attorney at law, in the suit pending before the United States Circuit Court in and for the Northern District of California to foreclose the mortgage of the Foreign Mines Development Company on the property of said California Trona Company in San Bernardino county, California, there shall be paid to said Countryman the sum of forty thousand ($40,000) dollars in full settlement and discharge and satisfaction of all of said legal services.
>
> "In witness whereof the parties hereto have executed these presents the day and year herein first above written.
>
> "California Trona Company,
> "By C. E. Dolbeer, Mgr.
> "R. H. Countryman."

There is no evidence that Mr. Dolbeer was ever formally authorized by any resolution or other formal action of the board of directors of the defendant herein to enter into or execute this contract on its behalf, but there was evidence presented on the plaintiff's behalf tending to show that the subject and substance of this contract was made the subject of discussion and approval in various conversations between the plaintiff and a majority of the members of the defendant's board of directors, and was also discussed among themselves and with other persons. On January 17, 1911, at a general meeting of the stockholders and directors of the defendant, a resolution was offered by manager Dolbeer, and seconded by director Bartholomew, providing for the borrowing of the sum of $1,000 from Colonel Merrill and the giving of the corporate note therefor. The said resolution, as appears from the minutes of said meeting, certified to by its secretary, contained the following words:

> "Said money is for the purpose of making a partial payment to Robert H. Countryman on account of his agreement for his legal services rendered to this company."

There is evidence both ways as to whether the above-quoted clause was a part of said resolution at the time of its adoption, and there is also much evidence pro and con with reference to the several conversations with and among the directors of the corporation with reference to the existence and terms of the plaintiff's written agreement. During the year 1911 the defendant was passing through a series of internal convulsions arising out of the efforts of contending factions among its stockholders to obtain control of it, the faction seeking to overthrow its existing board of directors being led by one Guy L. Wilkinson, who was counsel for the Foreign Mines Development Company in its litigation with the defendant. This faction at length succeeded in accomplishing its object in the month of May of that year, and, after electing a board of directors to its liking, proceeded to notify the plaintiff herein and others who had been acting as counsel for the defendant that their services would be no longer required. The respondent herein admits receiving such a notice on October 4, 1911. This action was commenced on May 17, 1913.

As to the first contention of the appellant with respect to the insufficiency of the evidence as to the amount and value of the services of the plaintiff to the defendant to justify the general verdict of the jury rendered herein, and also as to the creation and ratification of the aforesaid written agreement, we are of the opinion, after a careful review of the entire record, and a consideration of the extended comments of counsel thereon, that the evidence in respect of these matters is in such general and substantial conflict that we would not be justified in any attempt to review or overthrow the unanimous verdict of the jury in favor of the plaintiff upon these contested issues; nor to attempt to review or reverse the order of the trial judge who, after hearing all of the evidence which was presented to the jury and all of the objections and arguments urged by the defendant against its sufficiency, denied the defendant's motion for a new trial.

[1, 2] The defendant further contends that the plaintiff herein was not entitled to recover upon his first cause of action for two main reasons, the first of which is that the written agreement upon which the plaintiff predicates his first count or cause of action was not shown to have been executed on behalf of the corporation defendant by any one having authority so to do. It is conceded by the respondent that Mr. Dolbeer, the general manager of the defendant, would not have been authorized by the scope of his powers as such to bind the corporation by such an agreement; but the respondent maintains that there is sufficient evidence in the record to show that the agreement was after its execution discussed with and made known to and approved by a majority if not all of the directors of said corporation, and that with such knowledge and approval the plaintiff was permitted to proceed with the performance of the services specified therein under such circumstances and for such length of time as to constitute a ratification of the execution and terms of such agreement. Upon these matters of fact the evidence, as we have seen, is in substantial conflict, and hence the finding of the jury in plaintiff's favor thereon will not be disturbed. It is well settled as a matter of law that the agreement of a corporation entered into by its manager without authority sufficiently ample to enable him to execute the same may be approved and ratified so as to become binding upon such corporation through the knowledge, approval, and consent of a majority of the membership of the board of directors acting individually and informally, particularly where, as in this case, the plaintiff has been permitted to continue in the open and active capacity and service of an attorney for the corporation without objection or inquiry as to the existence or terms of his engagement so to do. Brown v. Crown Gold Milling Co., 150 Cal. 376, 89 Pac. 86; Scott v. Superior Sunset Oil Co., 144 Cal. 140, 77 Pac. 817; Gribble v. Columbus Brewing Co., 100 Cal. 67, 34 Pac. 527; Goodwin v. Central Broadway Building Co., 21 Cal. App. 376, 131 Pac. 896; Reardon v. Richmond Land Co., 21 Cal. App. 357, 131 Pac. 894; Allen v. Central Counties Land Co., 21 Cal. App. 164, 131 Pac. 78.

[3] The second contention of the appellant with respect to the plaintiff's first cause of action is that, even conceding the due execution or subsequent ratification of the plaintiff's written contract, he would not be entitled to recover the sum specified on its face as the agreed amount of his compensation, but at most only the reasonable value of his services rendered thereunder; and the appellant urges in support of this contention that since at the time of the execution of said written agreement the relation of attorney and client had already been created between the plaintiff and defendant the law governing such relation requires that the attorney, standing already in a confidential relation to his client, is bound to the exercise of the utmost good faith in the matter of making a formal contract for his fees, and hence would be precluded from the recovery of more than a reasonable sum for any services rendered or to be rendered under and by virtue of his written agreement, without regard to its attempted fixation of their value.

It would be a sufficient answer to this contention to say that, conceding the law to be as counsel for the appellant asserts it to be, there is sufficient evidence in the record before us to sustain a finding of the jury that the amount of the plaintiff's claim was the reasonable value of his services, were it not for the fact that, as the appellant points out, the court in its instruction numbered 2 to the jury seems to lay down a different rule. In that instruction the court stated to the jury that if they should find from the evidence that there was a written contract, whereby the defendant corporation agreed to pay the plaintiff the sum of $40,000, and if they should also find that the plaintiff fully performed all of the services he was to perform under said written contract, then they need not consider or go into the matter as to whether the plaintiff's services were reasonably worth said or any other sum, but their verdict should be for the full sum provided for in said contract less whatever sums had been paid on account thereof. It is true that the trial court gave this instruction, and it is also true that it is in seeming variance with the equitable rule governing the relations of attorney and client invoked by the appellant as above set forth; but an examination of the cases cited by the appellant's counsel in support of this rule satisfies our minds that the equitable principle it embodies, however sound in the abstract, is not to be given universal application to every agreement made between attorney and client while the relation exists, but only to those agreements where the circumstances under which they are entered into disclose some special reason for its application—as where the written contract provides for greater compensation than was either expressly or impliedly agreed upon prior to the existence of the confidential relation (4 Cyc. 961); or where special relations of confidence exist; or where the client had no other independent legal adviser; or where there was some failure on the part of the attorney to make full disclosure to the client as to the extent of the services required. None of these special conditions requiring an equitable scrutiny of the written contract between plaintiff and defendant herein exists in this case. The latter was already possessed of other counsel as of a time prior to the inception of the plaintiff's services, and was thus in a position to be fully advised as to their past as well as prospective value. Both of the parties to the contract understood what legal services plaintiff had already performed, and what further services he was to perform in the particular action to which the contract referred. The parties stood in no special confidential relation to each other which would give rise to either opportunity or imputation of any undue influence attending the making of the written agreement as to the amount of plaintiff's fees. It may well, therefore, be questioned whether the abstract principle for which the appellant contends is to be given application to the facts of the case at bar so as to relieve the appellant from compliance with the precise terms of its written contract.

[4] But, aside from these considerations, we are satisfied from an examination of the whole body of the trial court's instructions that the jury could not have been misled by any defect in the foregoing instruction, for the reason that the court gave every instruction requested by the defendant, and in so doing fully and repeatedly instructed the jury that the utmost limit of the plaintiff's recovery in this action was the reasonable value of his services. In the light of these repeated admonitions to the jury, we cannot say that the alleged defect in the instruction which the appellant especially assails was sufficiently prejudicial to require a reversal of the case.

[5] In addition to this, it may be stated that it was a conceded fact in the case that the plaintiff was discharged by the defendant without cause and before the full measure of the services contemplated by the written agreement had been performed. Under these conditions plaintiff would not be required to allege or prove the reasonable value of services which he was not permitted to perform, but would be entitled to count upon his contract; and in this connection we think the trial court correctly instructed the jury that if they should find from the evidence that the plaintiff had been discharged without cause, and thus prevented from the full performance of his agreement, he would be entitled to recover the full amount agreed upon by its terms.

Without undertaking herein to review the entire body of the instructions of the trial court in this case, or to consider in detail the several other criticisms which the appellant aims at them, we will dispose of this branch of the case with our conclusion that, taken as a whole, the instructions given by the court to the jury were in a remarkable degree full, fair, lucid, and free from confusion, and that we are entirely satisfied that the jury were in no way misled thereby to the appellant's injury.

[6] The appellant makes the further contention that its demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint upon the ground of uncertainty should have been sustained. There are some uncertainties in the allegations of both counts of said complaint with respect to the specific services performed by the plaintiff which might well have been removed by a further amendment to his complaint; but the record shows that at some time during the pendency of the action the defendant was furnished by plaintiff with a bill of particulars which set forth specifically the services upon which his claim for compensation was based, and which in that respect eked out the uncertainties in his pleading. The items of this bill of particulars were made the subject of exhaustive examination during the trial; and there can be no contention that the defendant was in any way injured by the alleged uncertainties in the plaintiff's original pleading. This being so, the objection which is now urged thereto cannot be relied upon for a reversal of this case.

There are a large number of other exceptions and objections to the regularity of the trial of this cause which it would be unprofitable, not to say impossible, to review in detail. It is sufficient to say that in our opinion none of these go to the substantial merits of this controversy, or furnish a sufficient reason for the reversal of this cause upon appeal. The case was fully, fairly, and ably presented before an impartial judge and before a jury called at the defendant's own suggestion, and against the fairness of which no hint of bias or prejudice is urged. This being the case, we have been able to discover no sufficient reason why the verdict of the jury and the judgment and order of the trial court should be disturbed upon appeal.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

(35 Cal. App. 681)

LONDON & LANCASHIRE INDEMNITY CO. et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (Civ. 2350.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 27, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 25, 1918.)

MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑375(1)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—INJURY ON HIGHWAY —"TRAVELING EMPLOYÉ"—"EMPLOYÉ."

An employé of an iron works, whose duties were to assist in the manufacture and assembling of machinery, and who, whenever the works secured a contract for the installation of machinery in any particular place, was required to go to that place for such purpose, was a "traveling employé," so that he was entitled to compensation under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 279), for injuries sustained on the public highway while traveling to a town in course of his employment in an automobile.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Employé.]

Proceedings for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act by S. M. Summers, the employé. Compensation was awarded by the Industrial Accident Commission, and the London & Lancashire Indemnity Company, etc., the insurer, and another petition for certiorari to review the order of the Commission. Writ denied.

Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, for petitioners. Chris. M. Bradley, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The facts of this proceeding are these: The respondent S. M. Summers was employed by the California Iron Works as a millwright. His duties were to assist in the manufacture and assembling of machinery. Whenever his employer secured a contract for the installation of machinery in any particular place Summers was required to go to that place for that purpose. He thus traveled from place to place for his employer, and was allowed pay for the time consumed in making these journeys, and also was allowed a sum to pay his traveling expenses. In going and coming he was allowed to use any means of conveyance he desired. At the time of the injuries for which he sought compensation he had been directed to go to the town of Alhambra, and undertook to make the journey in an automobile belonging to his son. During the trip Mr. Stamm, the manager of the employer, preceded Mr. Summers and his son in another machine, directing the journey and showing them the road. While on the way the automobile in which Summers was riding turned over and he sustained the injuries for which he seeks compensation. The Industrial Accident Commission allowed him compensation upon a showing of the foregoing facts.

The petitioner herein seeks to have reviewed the order of the commission in that regard, basing its application upon the contention that the undisputed evidence showed that the injury did not arise out of the applicant's employment, for the reason that the risk of injury to which the applicant was exposed was one of those common risks to which the public generally are exposed, and to which every employé who travels the streets or highways in any sort of vehicle going to or returning from his work is exposed. On behalf of the respondent herein it is conceded that the general rule governing ordinary cases arising under the Workmen's Compensation Act is that for which the petitioner herein contends; but the respondent herein argues, we think convincingly, that the facts of this case bring it within the exceptions to the general rule. The exceptional cases are those wherein the employment itself is one in which the employé is required to travel from place to place at the will of the employer, and hence where the risks of such travel are directly incident to the employment itself, and hence wherein the accident occurring by reason of such risk is one arising out of the employment, and therefore a proper subject of compensation under the Employers' Liability Act.

The evidence in this case shows that the employment of the employé was in the nature of a traveling employment. It differed from the employment in the case of Hopkins v. Michigan Sugar Co., 184 Mich. 87, 150 N. W. 325, L. R. A. 1916A, 310—upon which the petitioner herein strongly relies—in the respect that in that case the injured employé was chief engineer of his employer supervising the installation and operation of machinery in six of its plants located in different cities, and that his injuries occurred while returning from a tour of inspection of one of these plants, and for which injury he was denied compensation; and also in the respect that the several places of his employment and service were at all times defined—the fact that there were several of them instead of one not preventing the application of the general rule; while on the other hand, in the case at bar the particular destination to which the employé should go from time to time in the course of his duty was not defined in advance, but was the subject of selection and direction from time to time by the employer to an extent which rendered the travel of the employé to such places a part of the employment itself sufficient to bring him within the category of a traveling employé, and thus to make this case one of those exceptional cases to which the general rule for which the petitioner herein contends has no application.

We are of the opinion that the evidence in this case fully sustains the position for which the respondent herein contends, and that the following authorities as a matter of law support that contention: Garratt-Callahan Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 171 Cal. 334, 153 Pac. 239; Brown v. Indr. Acc. Comm., 163 Pac. 664; Cameron v. Pillsbury, 173 Cal. 83, 159 Pac. 149; Kunze v. Detroit Shadetree Co., 192 Mich. 435, 158 N. W. 851, L. R. A. 1917A, 252; Milwaukee v. Althoff, 156 Wis. 68, 145 N. W. 238, L. R. A. 1916A, 327.

It follows that the writ should be denied, and it is so ordered.

---

35 Cal. App. 684

PRINCE v. SELBY SMELTING & LEAD CO. (Civ. 2247.)

(District Court of Appeals, First District, California. Dec. 27, 1917.)

BROKERS ⚷64(2)—RIGHT TO COMMISSIONS—FAILURE OF PURCHASER TO PERFORM.

After a contract was made for the sale of property providing for payment in installments, and that the vendor's obligations thereunder should cease on the purchaser's default, an agreement was made between the vendor and a broker, providing for payment of the broker's commission when payments of $5,000 and $10,000 were made by the purchaser, and specifically providing that, if the purchaser failed to carry out his contract, the broker should not be entitled to commission beyond the amount due at the time of the purchaser's default. Held that, where the purchaser was unable to make the payments of $5,000 and $10,000, and the vendor extended the time of payment on condition that if the payments were not made at the time as so extended the contract would lapse, and the payments were never made, the vendor was not liable to the broker for commissions because of the extension of time or because the broker had no notice thereof when the extension was made.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Charles M. Prince against the Selby Smelting & Lead Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Finlay Cook, of San Francisco, for appellant. Chickering & Gregory, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an action by plaintiff as a real estate broker to recover commission alleged to be due him for effecting a sale of real estate belonging to the defendant.

There is no dispute as to the facts, and the proposition of law involved is simple. The following is a brief synopsis of the steps in the transaction: On May 28, 1914, the defendant gave to the plaintiff a letter which in effect provided that if certain options theretofore given to plaintiff by the defendant, and which by their terms expired on June 15, 1914, were accepted, plaintiff should be allowed 5 per cent. commission, of which, should the sum of $7,500 be received by defendant, on account of a sale of the land made pursuant to said option, on or before June 15, 1914, $1,500 should be paid to plaintiff on account of said commission. On June 8, 1914, the defendant entered into a contract with A. D. Bowen, a prospective purchaser introduced by the plaintiff, for the purchase of the property involved, which contract departed from the terms of said options, and stipulated that the total purchase price should be $63,500, payable as follows: June 11, 1914, $1,000; September 1, 1914, $5,000; November 1, 1914, $10,000; November 1, 1915, $23,750; November 1, 1916, $23,750; and also provided that if the purchaser should fail to make the payments due on or before the 1st day of September, 1914, or on or before the 1st day of November, 1914, any payment theretofore made should become the property of the vendor, and all obligations under the agreement should cease and determine. Bowen paid the $1,000, the first amount due, but no further payment was ever made on account of the contract. On June 12, 1914, the defendant wrote to the plaintiff a letter which, after referring to the options held by plaintiff, and to which the letter of May 28th referred, set forth in detail the terms and dates upon which plaintiff's commission would become payable under the contract with Bowen—this rearrangement of terms and dates following the particulars in which the contract entered into with Bowen departed from the options upon which the letter of May 28th covering plaintiff's commission had been based—and stated that the first payment of commission would be made when the $5,000 due from Bowen on September 1, 1914, was paid, and that plaintiff was to receive the balance of his commission when Bowen made the further payment of $10,000 on November 1, 1914. It also specifically provided that if Bowen failed to carry out his contract concerning the payments due on November 1, 1914, and prior thereto, then the plaintiff should not be entitled to commission beyond the amount that might have been due at the time of Bowen's default. The terms of this letter as a modification of his original agreement as to commission were accepted by the plaintiff in writing. It thus appears that the obligations assumed by defendant to plaintiff by its letter of May 28th were by consent of both parties concerned superseded by the obligations created by the new agreement.

On September 1, 1914, the date upon which there became due from Bowen to the defendant the sum of $5,000, an extension of 30 days was granted to Bowen to make this payment upon his representation that he was unable to make it upon its due date. On November 1, 1914, the $5,000 still remaining unpaid, Bowen informed the defendant that he was unable to make either that payment or the one of $10,000 then also due, whereupon an extension of time until January 1, 1915, was granted upon the condition, however, that if these sums were not paid at that time, Bowen's contract would finally lapse.

As before stated, the payments were never made; so it appears clear that under the plain terms of the letter of June 12, 1914, the rights of the plaintiff terminated by the final default of Bowen. We see no merit in plaintiff's contention that the defendant, by granting to Bowen an extension of time in which to make his payments, became immediately liable to the plaintiff for his entire commission. It will be recalled that under this commission agreement the plaintiff was not entitled to anything unless Bowen paid $5,000 on September 1st. Therefore on that date, since Bowen had not made the payment, the defendant had a perfect right to terminate the contract, and by the express terms of the commission agreement the plaintiff would thereby have lost his rights to any commission; but, since the defendant did not elect to then declare the contract forfeited, but, on the contrary, gave Bowen some extensions of time, it is claimed that thereby the plaintiff acquired some rights superior to those which he would have enjoyed if the extensions had not been granted. Stress is here laid upon the point that the plaintiff was not informed of these extensions, at least at the time they were granted; but this is immaterial. The defendant could have declared Bowen's contract forfeited on September 1st, and there was no necessity on its part of notifying the plaintiff of that fact. Of course, if Bowen had paid his money during the time as so extended, then the plaintiff would have been entitled to his commission. In other words, this act of extension, so far from being in contravention of any of the rights of the plaintiff, was distinctly for his benefit. Before a party can complain of any modification to his agreement he must show some prejudice.

The case of Seymour v. St. Luke's Hospital, 28 App. Div. 125, 50 N. Y. Supp. 993, is referred to by plaintiff's counsel in his brief. On the particular points now under discussion that case is against him, because it was there held that the fact that the owner extended the time of the purchaser in which a payment must be made did not give the broker any additional rights, for it is only a change in the contract which puts it out of the power of the owner to convey that would cause injury to the broker. The court said:

> "The extension of the time, while it was a modification of the contract, was one which caused no injury to the plaintiff, but rather tended to benefit him, because the indulgence to Samuel rendered it more likely that he would have been able to carry the entire contract into effect; and when, after the modification, he failed to make any effort to perform the contract as modified, his position with regard to it was precisely the same as it would have been had he failed to perform the whole contract, and entitle himself to a delivery of the deeds on the 2d of January, 1895. In each case the contract was at an end if the defendant chose to consider it so. The plaintiffs surely can have no greater right to insist that the defendant violated its contract with Samuel to his hurt, because he forfeited the contract for failure to perform a part of it on the 2d of January, 1895, than he would have done had he failed to perform the whole of it. * * * The only thing that it [the vendor] bound itself to do by its contract with Seymour was not to do any act which would put it out of its power to carry a contract into effect when Samuel should offer to perform it, and, if it continued able and ready to perform so long as Samuel desired the performance to be had or was willing to perform on his part, it did all that Seymour could require. The modification of the contract therefore, did not affect the rights of the parties."

The Seymour Case was affirmed without opinion, and is reported in 159 N. Y. 524, 53 N. E. 1132. It was cited with approval in Larson v. Burroughs, 131 App. Div. 877, 116 N. Y. Supp. 358, in which the court said:

> "Before the plaintiff could recover, he must show either that the contract was carried out as indicated, or that nonperformance was the fault of the defendant."

The judgment is affirmed.

(35 Cal. App. 724)

GRAZER v. FLANAGAN et al. (Civ. 2241.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 29, 1917. Rehearing Denied Jan. 28, 1918.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT 🔑150(1)—LANDLORD'S LIABILITY—REPAIRS.

At common law, a lessor is not bound to make repairs to a dwelling house, unless so required by express contract or covenant, the tenant taking the premises as they are, and having no right to involve the landlord in expenses for repairs without his consent.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT 🔑106, 150(5) — FAILURE TO MAKE REPAIRS—REMEDIES OF TENANT—STATUTE.

Civ. Code, § 1941, requiring the landlord to make a dwelling house fit for its purpose, which is limited by section 1942, giving the tenant the option, after notice, to make repairs at the landlord's expense, or to vacate the premises, control in the absence of express contract to repair, and thereunder the tenant may treat the landlord's failure to repair as a breach of the lease and vacate, or may himself make the repairs at the landlord's expense, after notice, provided they do not exceed one month's rent.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT 🔑154(2)—FAILURE TO MAKE REPAIRS—PERSONAL INJURY—LIABILITY.

A tenant or any member of his family sustaining personal injury from a breach of the landlord's covenant to repair cannot recover damages therefor in an action for breach of covenant.

4. Landlord and Tenant 🔑169(3)—Failure to Make Repairs—Personal Injury—Sufficiency of Complaint.

Complaint, in an action, construed as an action ex delicto to recover damages for personal injury to a tenant's child resulting from the landlord's negligent failure to make repairs, alleging the defect causing the injury to have been obvious and to have existed when the tenancy began, without alleging facts and circumstances which would relieve the plaintiff of the inference of contributory negligence, was insufficient.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Everett J. Brown, Judge.

Action by Harold F. Grazer, by Annie M. Grazer, his guardian, against Theresa Flanagan and others. From a judgment entered upon an order sustaining the demurrer to plaintiff's amended complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Ostrander, Clark & Carey and A. J. Woolsey, all of Oakland, for appellant. Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, of Oakland, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from the judgment entered upon an order sustaining defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's amended complaint in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries.

The action is through the plaintiff's guardian, and the injuries are alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff as a consequence of an explosion of gas occurring upon certain premises which had been rented to the plaintiff's parents by the owners thereof to be occupied as a dwelling.

Stripped of legal verbiage, it appears from the complaint that on the 23d day of March, 1915, the plaintiff's mother and a real estate agent, one of the defendants, visited the house in question, and after an inspection of the same and some negotiations, it was agreed that the plaintiff's parents should become the tenants of the property at a monthly rental of $18.50; that while the rent should not commence until April the tenant should have the privilege of taking possession on the 25th of March, and it was further agreed that the owners of the property represented by the agent should place the premises in proper repair for habitation, and that they, through their said agent, "in particular did promise to place in proper condition for use a certain gas pipe in said dwelling house * * * which was at the time without a cap or other appliance to prevent the escape of gas." It is also alleged in the amended complaint that on said 25th day of March, while the plaintiff was assisting his parents in moving into the dwelling house, and while in that portion of the house in which said uncapped gaspipe was situated, there was an explosion of escaped gas from the uncapped pipe, which explosion caused the personal injuries set forth in the complaint. The demurrer was general and special, and the question presented by the record and the briefs is, Does the complaint state a cause of action against the defendants?

[1, 2] At the common law a lessor is not liable to make repairs to a structure rented as a dwelling house unless by force of an express contract or covenant; the tenant takes the premises for better or worse, and cannot involve the landlord in expense for repairs without his consent. Van Every v. Ogg, 59 Cal. 563. The Civil Code, however, in section 1941, provides that the lessor of a building intended for the occupation of human beings must, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, put it in a condition fit for such occupation, and repair all subsequent dilapidations thereof which render it untenantable. The succeeding section (1942) gives the option to the tenant, after notice to the landlord, to make repairs not requiring an expenditure of more than one month's rent, the same to be deducted from the rent, or to vacate the premises and be discharged from performance of the conditions of the lease. In the absence of an express contract relating to repairs, sections 1941 and 1942 control; and in such case it is held that the statutory liability of the lessor declared in 1941 is limited by the provisions of 1942, so that for failure to repair the lessee has either one of two remedies, viz.: (a) Treat the failure to repair as a breach of the lease and vacate the premises; or (b) himself make the repairs at the expense of the landlord after notice to him, providing they do not entail an expenditure of more than one month's rent. Van Every v. Ogg, supra; Sieber v. Blanc, 76 Cal. 173, 18 Pac. 260; Gately v. Campbell, 124 Cal. 520, 57 Pac. 567.

[3] If this is to be regarded as an action for damages for breach of the landlord's covenant to repair, the great weight of authority agrees that in such an action on the part of the tenant or any member of his family damages for personal injuries are not recoverable. 2 Underhill on Landlord and Tenant, p. 849; 18 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 234, 235; Jones on Landlord and Tenant, § 592; Anderson v. Robinson, 182 Ala. 615, 62 South. 512, s. c. 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 330, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 829.

[4] On the other hand, if this is to be taken to be an action ex delicto to recover damages resulting from the negligent failure of the landlord to perform his legal duty by making the repair in question, then we are satisfied that the complaint fails to state a cause of action, and hence that the demurrer was properly sustained. The defect to which the plaintiff attributes the injuries complained of is alleged to have been an obvious defect, and to have been known to exist before the tenancy in question began. Having thus averred the defect to have been obvious, it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to have further set forth in the complaint such of the facts and circumstances attending and explaining the accident, if such exist, as would have relieved the plaintiff's case of the inference of contributory negligence, which otherwise would arise from his express averment of the obvious nature of the defect which was the immediate cause of the injuries complained of. Having failed or being unable to do this, the complaint did not state a cause of action. Hatch v. McCloud River L. Co., 150 Cal. 111, 88 Pac. 355; Callahan v. Loughran, 102 Cal. 476, 36 Pac. 835.

It follows that the trial court correctly sustained the demurrer to the amended complaint. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

---

35 Cal. App. 380

TOWN OF SUISUN CITY v. PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC CO. (Civ. 1678.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 6, 1917. On Petition for Rehearing, Sept. 5, 1917. On Rehearing, Nov. 22, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 21, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑285 — FRANCHISE FOR SUPPLYING ELECTRICITY—VALIDITY.

Under St. 1901, p. 265, § 1, as to granting by municipality of privilege to locate poles or wires for transmitting "heat and power" and sections 3 and 5 as to publication of the application for the franchise and percentage to be paid to the municipality, an ordinance, purporting to grant a franchise to construct and maintain poles and wires for the purpose of transmitting and selling electricity for "light and power" was void, in so far as it attempted to confer the privilege of furnishing electricity for lighting purposes, and a charge could only be made for the latter or "power" franchise, in view of Const. art. 11, § 19, granting to public service corporations engaged in the sale of electricity the right to enter the streets of a city and use the same for laying down pipes, etc., for the purpose of supplying electricity to the inhabitants for "illuminating" purposes.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑285—VALIDITY OF ORDINANCE—ESTOPPEL.

As plaintiff town had no power to charge a percentage on the gross annual receipts arising from the operation of an electric system for lighting, defendant, owner of the system, would not be estopped to deny that so much of an ordinance as attempted to impose such charge was unenforceable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; W. T. O'Donnell, Judge.

Action by Town of Suisun City against the Pacific Gas & Electric Company. From the judgment rendered, defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Wm. B. Bosley and Leo H. Susman, both of San Francisco, for appellant. Theodore W. Chester, of Sacramento (George J. Raymond, of Sacramento, of counsel), for respondent.

BURNETT, J. This appeal is from a judgment for $927.84 and interest upon an agreed statement of facts submitted to the superior court of Solano county pursuant to section 1138 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Since 1884 the town of Suisun City has been a municipal corporation of the sixth class, and has never owned nor controlled any public works for supplying artificial light. From September, 1900, until June 1, 1910, one Leonard Prior owned and operated an electric distributing system embracing poles and wires suspended therefrom, constructed on the streets and highways of said town, and used for supplying the town and its inhabitants with electric light and power. On January 3, 1905, the board of trustees adopted an ordinance purporting to grant to Prior and his assigns the franchise to construct and maintain poles and wires upon said streets for the purpose of transmitting electric energy, and to sell and dispose of electricity for light and power. Section 12 of the ordinance provides that the successful bidder and his assigns must, during the life of the franchise, pay to said town 2 per cent. of the gross annual receipts arising from the use, operation, and possession of said electric system. On June 1, 1910, Prior sold to defendant said electric plant and business connected therewith and all the rights granted to him by section 19 of article 11 of the Constitution of this state, and whatever franchise he received by virtue of said ordinance of January 3, 1905. Ever since said June 1, 1910, the defendant has owned and operated all of said property for the purpose of supplying said town and its inhabitants with electric light and power, no poles or wires being used exclusively for light or power purposes, the electricity for power and for light being delivered, measured, and charged for separately, and the receipts therefor being kept in separate accounts.

The contention of defendant, as set forth in said agreed statement of facts, is that said ordinance could and did legally grant only a franchise for the purpose of transmitting electric power, and obligated the holder thereof to pay to said town 2 per cent. only of the gross annual receipts from the sale of said power, and could not, and did not legally, obligate the holder thereof to pay any percentage for the sale of electricity for lighting purposes, as the franchise and privilege of using said streets and highways for the purpose of furnishing illuminating light were granted by section 19 of article 11 of the state Constitution. On the other hand, plaintiff contends that said ordinance could and did legally grant the franchise to construct, erect, and maintain said poles and wires for both of said purposes, and obligated the holder thereof to pay said percentage of the sales for power and light to said town and its inhabitants.

Another position taken by respondent is "that, even if the lighting privilege is covered by the Constitution, the gas company admittedly received a franchise it was not entitled to under the Constitution, to wit, the power privilege, and this is ample consideration for the obligation to pay 2 per cent. of the total receipts, as provided in the franchise, which is a contract between the parties. Furthermore, the gas company is now estopped from attacking the validity of this provision." As indicating the scope and purpose of said provision, reference is made by respondent to the debate in the constitutional convention wherein was no allusion to electricity, but the subject was treated as though the privilege of furnishing gas and water were the only consideration in the minds of the members of the convention. It is claimed, furthermore, that in consonance with a familiar rule of construction, the particular provision in the Constitution—"and of laying down pipes and conduits therein and connections therewith"—is a specific limitation upon the general words, "have the privilege of using the streets," and that "laying down pipes and conduits therein" cannot reasonably be construed as authorizing the construction and maintenance of poles and wires, and to so hold is to read into the Constitution something that its language does not import. In this connection, it is further asserted that "the provisions of the Constitution are mandatory, and the mode prescribed is the measure of power," and in further support of its contention, this general principle of construction is invoked, "that grants of franchises and special privileges by the state to private persons or corporations are to be construed most strongly in favor of the public, and that where the privilege claimed is doubtful, nothing is to be taken by mere implication as against public rights."

[1] The position of respondent is clearly stated, strongly argued, and imposingly supported by respectable authority, and there is much reason for the view that it constitutes a correct exposition of said constitutional provision, but the question has been decided otherwise by the Supreme Court, and we are bound by that decision.

In Pereria v. Wallace, 129 Cal. 397, 62 Pac. 61, the Supreme Court held that said constitutional section included electric lights. It declared unconstitutional the sale of franchise act of 1897 in so far as it attempted to make the right or franchise to erect poles or wires for lighting purposes the subject of competitive bidding; and it affirmed the judgment of the lower court, ordering a writ of mandate to issue, requiring the defendants to grant to plaintiff the privilege of erecting and maintaining poles and wires along the streets of said town for the purpose of conveying electricity for power and lighting purposes to be furnished to the inhabitants thereof.

It is claimed by respondent that the question before us was not raised or discussed in that case, and, therefore, the decision should not be considered as controlling. It is true that appellant claimed a reversal on other grounds, and to them the opinion was specifically addressed, but whether the constitutional provision was broad enough to include the franchise in question was so fundamental and obtrusive as necessarily to challenge the attention of the court. It could hardly be overlooked, and it is altogether probable that of its own accord and for that reason the court would have reversed the cause if it had deemed the franchise not embraced within said provision of the Constitution. In the course of said opinion it is declared:

> "The Legislature, therefore, cannot modify or change the provisions of said section 19, article 11, above quoted, as to the privilege or franchise of supplying the town of Etna with artificial light. The Constitution intended that there should be no restriction upon competition in supplying these prime necessities as would necessarily result if the privilege could only be granted to the highest bidder, for such bidder would necessarily secure an exclusive right to the exercise of the franchise; the only condition imposed by the Constitution being the right of the municipality 'to regulate the charges thereof.'"

If the franchise to erect and maintain poles and wires for the purpose of furnishing electricity for lighting purposes was conferred by said provision of the Constitution, the attempted grant of said privilege by said ordinance of respondent was necessarily ineffective and void, and the only franchise thereby conveyed was for the construction and maintenance of pole and wire lines for transmitting electric power, and it would follow, of course, that a charge could be made by the city only for the latter franchise, and that no burden or obligation could be legally imposed upon appellant for the lighting franchise other than what is permitted by said section of the Constitution, which does not include the payment of any percentage or other sum, but is limited to enacting measures relating to damages to the streets and indemnity therefor. In Re Johnston, 137 Cal. 115, 69 Pac. 973, it is said:

> "The designation of 'damages and indemnity for damages' as the subject upon which the municipality may prescribe regulations in regard to laying the pipes is a limitation upon its authority over the matter, and a prohibition from prescribing regulations upon any other subject connected with the exercise of the privilege. When the sovereign authority of the state, either in its Constitution or through its Legislature, has created a right and expressed and defined the conditions under which it may be enjoyed, it is not within the province of a municipality, where such right is sought to be exercised or enjoyed, to impose additional burdens or terms as a condition to its exercise."

And it was held by this court in Town of St. Helena v. Ewer, 26 Cal. App. 191, 146 Pac. 191, that the rule is not affected by the fact that the applicant for a franchise granted by said section of the Constitution agrees to pay a certain percentage of his gross earnings arising from its use to the municipality which attempted to grant such franchise. Therein it is said:

> "The contention that the claim may be enforced as the subject of private contract between Ewer and the town cannot be maintained. The facts alleged show beyond dispute that in dealing with the public, * * * the municipality was acting in its legislative capacity, and that its action is not referable, for its support, to the power of making contracts. * * * Plaintiff cannot avoid the restraining effect of the Constitution by attempting to convert its legislative acts into the contracts. * * * We cannot escape the fact that the grant was made on condition that the grantee pay for the privilege granted—a condition, as we have seen, which is beyond the power of the municipality to impose."

But it is not disputed that by said ordinance the board of trustees granted to Prior and his assigns a franchise to erect and maintain poles and wires for the purpose of furnishing electric power, and that the right existed to charge for this privilege as provided by the statute in force at the time of said grant, and the inquiry then is whether any part of the receipts from the exercise of the lighting franchise may be included in the consideration for the grant of this power privilege. The statute itself provides the terms and conditions upon which said franchises may be granted, and it will not be disputed that the municipality must be guided and controlled by the provisions found therein. The first of these acts, commonly known as the "Sale of Franchise Acts," was passed by the Legislature in 1893 (St. 1893, p. 288). It is entitled "An act providing for the sale of railroad and other franchises in municipalities, and relative to granting of franchises," and it provided for the public advertising of the fact that an application for a franchise had been made, and that the franchise must be awarded to the highest bidder. This was followed by the enactment of 1897 (St. 1897, p. 135), entitled "An act providing for the sale of street railroad and other franchises in municipalities, and providing conditions for the granting of such franchises by the legislative or other governing bodies, and repealing conflicting acts." This act also provided for public advertising of the fact that an application for a franchise had been made, that no bids will be received of a single sum or amount stated, but that all bids must be for the payment of a stated per cent. of the gross annual receipts of the person to whom the franchise is awarded, arising from its use, operation, or possession, but such percentage shall in no case be less than 3 per cent. per annum of such gross receipts. The statute, in so far as it provided for offering lighting franchises for sale to the highest bidder, was declared in Pereria v. Wallace, supra, to be unconstitutional, as conflicting with said section 19, art. 11, of the Constitution. The next act, and the one under which the sale was made in the present instance, was passed in 1901 (Stats. 1901, p. 265) and is entitled "An act providing for the sale of street railroad and other franchises in municipalities, and providing conditions for the granting of such franchises by legislative or other governing bodies, and repealing conflicting acts."

Section 1 of said act is as follows:

"Every franchise or privilege to erect or lay telegraph or telephone wires, to construct or operate street railroads upon any public street or highway, to lay gas pipes for the purpose of carrying gas for heat and power, to erect poles or wires for transmitting electric heat and power along or upon any public street or highway, or to exercise any other privilege whatever hereafter proposed to be granted by boards of supervisors, boards of trustees or common councils or other governing or other legislative bodies of any city and county, city or town within this state, except steam railroads and except telegraph or telephone lines doing an interstate business, and renewals of franchises for piers, chutes or wharves shall be granted upon the conditions in this act provided, and not otherwise."

It is to be seen that no mention is made therein of any franchise for laying water pipes or laying or erecting pipes or structures for furnishing light. This, no doubt, was in consequence of the decision in the Pereria Case, supra.

Said act provides also for public advertising of the application, and in section 3 thereof is this language:

"The publication must state the character of the franchise or privilege purposed to be granted, * * * and if it be a street railroad, the route to be traversed; that sealed bids therefor will be received up to a certain hour and day named therein, and that the successful bidder and his assigns must, during the life of said franchise, pay to the municipality two per cent. (2%) of the gross annual receipts of the person, partnership or corporation to whom the franchise is awarded, arising from its use, operation or possession. No percentage shall be paid for the first five years succeeding the date of the franchise, but thereafter such percentage shall be payable annually."

Section 5 of said act provides:

"Said advertisement shall also contain a statement that the said franchise will be granted to the person, firm or corporation who shall make the highest cash bid therefor; provided only, that at the time of the opening of said bids any responsible firm or corporation present, or represented, may bid for said franchise or privilege a sum not less than ten per cent. above the highest sealed bid therefor, and said bid, so made, may be raised ten per cent. by any other responsible bidder present, and said franchise or privilege shall finally be struck off, sold and granted by said governing body to the highest bidder therefor, in gold coin of the United States, and said successful bidder shall be required to deposit with said governing body, or such person as it may direct, the full amount of his or its said bid, within twenty-four hours thereafter; and in case he or it shall fail so to do, then the said franchise or privilege shall be granted to the next highest bidder therefor."

From the foregoing, it is quite apparent that the consideration for the sale, as far as it is to be determined by the action of the governing body of the municipality, is to be for a stated amount to be paid in cash immediately. In other words, in case there be competitive bids, the municipal authorities have no discretion as to whom they shall sell the franchise, or upon what basis. They must sell—if they sell at all—for cash and to the highest bidder. Thompson v. Alameda County, 111 Cal. 553, 44 Pac. 230. If there be no competitive bids, however, or no cash offer, they may grant to any applicant the franchise upon such reasonable regulations as they may prescribe, and upon the condition provided by the statute that the applicant pay to the municipality a certain percentage of the gross proceeds arising from the business of operating the franchise. The municipality has no contol over this percentage. It is not the subject of contract, but is fixed at 2 per cent. by the law. The basis upon which it is to be computed is equally clear. It is to be taken from the gross proceeds of the use and exercise of the franchise which is granted by said municipality. This means, of course, from the proceeds of the franchise which is legally granted by the authorities. No percentage can be charged against a franchise which already belongs to the applicant.

It is quite plain though, that by said ordinance the city board of trustees attempted to impose this percentage charge upon the applicant for the privilege of supplying electric light as well as the electric power. But the charge for the power was in excess of the allowance provided by the law, and is therefore void to that extent.

The fact is the sale of the franchise was not made for cash at all. The record does not even show that any bid was received for the same. Prior was and had been for years operating the plant, and there was probably no disposition to exact of him anything more than the percentage provided by the statute.

To recapitulate: The board of trustees attempted to grant two franchises. One of these, however, already belonged to the grantee by virtue of the provision of the Constitution, and, therefore, as to it said ordinance was inoperative. The franchise which was the subject of bargaining between Prior and the municipality was not sold for cash, but was transferred in consideration of the percentage provided by law. It is unimportant that said percentage was recited in the ordinance, as this added nothing to what is fixed by the statute. The case is exactly as though two separate ordinances had been passed, in one of which a franchise was granted to furnish electric light, and in the other, to supply electric power, and in each it was provided that the grantee should pay 2 per cent. of the gross proceeds to the city. Under the authorities, as we have seen, the attempted charge for the first would fail and only the second could be collected.

[2] As we have already intimated, Prior and the trustees no doubt believed that the town had the legal right to grant or withhold the lighting franchise. The parties, in other words, were acting under a mutual mistake as to their legal rights in the premises, and this accounts for the charge attempted to be imposed upon the exercise and operation of the electric light franchise. The mistake, though, would not prevent appellant from taking advantage of its legal rights when they were disclosed unless the doctrine of estoppel could be successfully invoked. But we can see no room for the application of such principle. Respondent cites, in this connection, such cases as Mayor, etc., of Borough of Rutherford v. Hudson River Traction Co., 73 N. J. Law, 227, 63 Atl. 84, wherein a street railroad franchise provided that the railroad company do certain macadamizing, and it was contended that the provision was ultra vires and void. Therein it was said:

> "But in our view it is not open to the traction company to raise the question that the grant of its local privileges and franchises was ultra vires the municipal corporation, while at the same time the company retains and enjoys those privileges and franchises. The plea of ultra vires is not admitted in such circumstances, except where it is practicable to restore the status quo ante, and we therefore think the present respondent is estopped from setting up that plea."

But herein the only privilege secured by Prior through the action of the board of trustees was to operate the plant for the purpose of furnishing electric power, and appellant does not claim that therein was the act ultra vires. If such claim were made, it is probable that it could not be maintained by virtue of the principle of estoppel. The doctrine, however, does not preclude the assertion of a right and privilege obtained from an entirely different source, nor does it affect contracts entered into beyond the range of municipal authority. In City of Arcata v. Green, 156 Cal. 759, 106 Pac. 86, it was said:

> "A party contracting with a city regarding a subject-matter within the scope of the city's powers may, where he has received the benefit of the contract, be precluded from asserting that the contract was not, on the part of the city, executed in the manner required by law. The doctrine, however, cannot be made to cover contracts entirely beyond the range of the municipal authority."

See, also, Foxen v. City of Santa Barbara, 166 Cal. 77, 134 Pac. 1142; Town of St. Helena v. Ewer, supra.

We can see no merit in the last two contentions of respondent, and as to the first, the law has been construed in this state in favor of appellant's claim.

The judgment should be reduced to $57.98, and as thus modified, it is affirmed, appellant to recover its costs.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. For the first time on petition for rehearing our attention has been called to the case of City of Hanford v. Hanford Gas & Power Co., 169 Cal. 749, 147 Pac. 969, L. R. A. 1915E, 165. It is claimed by the respondent that this case is directly in point and is at variance with the opinion heretofore filed by this court in the case at bar. There seems to be merit in the contention; and, in order that the important question herein involved may be further considered, especially in the light of the said recent decision of the Supreme Court, the petition for rehearing is granted.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. A rehearing was granted in this case for the purpose of considering the case of City of Hanford v. Hanford Gas, etc., Co., 169 Cal. 749, 147 Pac. 969, L. R. A. 1915E, 165, which was called to our attention for the first time in the petition for a rehearing. We find nothing in said case which, in our judgment, militates against the views expressed and the conclusion reached in our former opinion. The question as to the right of a municipality to exact from lighting and other like public service corporations the payment of certain sums for a franchise to operate its business in municipalities was not raised, considered, or discussed in the Hanford Case, and it is therefore no authority for the position that municipalities may impose upon such corporations a charge upon gross receipts arising from the use of gas or electricity for lighting purposes. The cases cited in the original opinion filed herein seem clearly enough to hold that no charge for the use of gas or electricity for lighting purposes may, under the terms of section 19 of article 11 of the Constitution, as that section read when the franchise here involved was granted, be exacted from corporations furnishing the same in municipalities. Indeed, since the Constitution itself directly grants to public service corporations engaged in the generation and manufacture and sale of electricity and gas the right to enter the streets and other thoroughfares of a city and use the same for the laying down of their pipes, etc., for the purpose of supplying gas and electricity to the inhabitants of such city for lighting or illuminating purposes, we cannot see how it may or could consistently be held that the right so granted may in any way be hampered or impaired or qualified by any act of such city; and certainly such might well be held would be the effect of a ruling that the city may exact a charge from such corporations for supplying gas or electricity, or both, to the inhabitants of such city for use for illuminating purposes.

Therefore after a full consideration of the whole case, as it is submitted here, the justices of this court are of the opinion that the conclusion heretofore arrived at by this court, as expressed in the former opinion filed herein, is correct, and we, therefore, approve and adopt the opinion prepared by Justice BURNETT, and which was handed down and filed herein.

---

35 Cal. App. 711

REYNOLDS v. E. CLEMENS HORST CO.

(Civ. 1731.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 28, 1917. On Rehearing, Jan. 28, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 25, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑281(7)—INJURY TO SERVANT—OBVIOUS PERIL—EVIDENCE.

In an action by a servant for injuries, due to her dress being caught by a revolving shaft while she was working on a hop-picking machine, held, under evidence, that plaintiff did not voluntarily place herself in way of an obvious and well-understood peril, so that she could not recover.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑204(1)—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—STATUTE.

Under Employers' Liability Act (St. 1911, p. 796), assumption of risk is no defense in an action by a servant for injuries.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑281(1, 8)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action by a servant for injuries, due to her dress being caught by a revolving shaft while she was at work on a hop-picking machine, evidence held to show that plaintiff did not voluntarily select an unsafe place in which to work, or adopt a dangerous method to discharge her duties.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑276(4)—CAUSE OF ACCIDENT—GUARDING SHAFT—EVIDENCE.

In an action for injuries sustained by a servant when her dress caught in a revolving shaft in a hop-picking machine evidence held to show that the accident would not have occurred if the shaft had been suitably protected.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑278(13)—DUTY TO PROTECT SHAFT—EVIDENCE.

In an action by a servant for injuries, due to her dress being caught by a revolving shaft, evidence held to warrant the conclusion that defendant employer should have protected the shaft.

6. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑101, 102(10)—DANGEROUS MACHINERY—DUTY TO GUARD.

That the servant knew that the shaft was unprotected would not affect the duty of the master to properly guard the same; such fact bearing only on questions of contributory negligence and assumption of risk.

7. TRIAL 🔑260(8)—INSTRUCTIONS SUBSTANTIALLY GIVEN—REFUSAL.

Refusal of instruction that, if a witness has willfully and knowingly testified falsely, you may disregard, etc., was not prejudicial, where court instructed, in addition to elaborate instructions on credibility, that a witness false in one part of his testimony is to be distrusted in others.

8. TRIAL 🔑252(11)—INSTRUCTIONS—ASSUMPTION NOT SUPPORTED BY EVIDENCE.

Where there was no room for an inference that plaintiff servant, at the time of the accident, was at a place where she should not have been, an instruction based upon an assumption that such was the case was properly refused.

On Rehearing.

9. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑349—INJURY TO SERVANT—LAW APPLICABLE.

Workmen's Compensation Act 1913 (St. 1913, pp. 279, 320) § 91, providing that the compensation provisions shall not apply to injuries sustained prior to the taking effect of the act, continues existing laws in force as to injuries sustained prior to the date the act became effective.

10. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑106 — MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑347 — VESTED RIGHTS — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

Plaintiff employé's right to compensation under Employers' Liability Act of 1911 for injuries was a vested right, which could not be taken away by a repeal of such act, which constituted a part of plaintiff's contract with her employer.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

Action by Susan M. Reynolds against the E. Clemens Horst Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

H. P. Andrews and W. A. Fish, both of Red Bluff, and Edward C. Harrison and Maurice E. Harrison, both of San Francisco, for appellant. Frank Freeman, of Willows, and James T. Matlock, of Red Bluff, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. Plaintiff had the verdict in an action for damages resulting from personal injuries. The accident was caused by her dress being caught by a revolving iron shaft while she was engaged at work on a hop-picking machine, and she was seriously hurt. We attach hereto a diagram to illustrate the situation and to make clearer the testimony to which we shall refer. "A" represents the platform on which plaintiff stood, "B" the shaft on which her dress was caught, "C" the south post, close to or against which she stood when her clothing came into contact with the shaft, "D" the grate, with its iron bars, on which the hops fell from above, "E" the post at the north end of the platform and distant from "C" nearly eight feet, "F" the brace to post "C." The platform was 20 inches, and the shaft 29¾ inches, from the floor. The south post, "C," was 5½ inches thick, the shaft was 4 inches distant from it, and it was 7 inches to said post from the bottom of the most southern iron rod in said grate.

That plaintiff's version of the accident may be understood, we quote from her testimony as follows:

> "I was standing upon that platform that comes along there in front of that grate, and my job was to pick the sticks and leaves off this grate and throw them behind me on the floor, and the hops was to be left on the grate, and that was my orders, and this stick was furnished to us to poke the hops down when they come on the machinery, and if the hops caught above the machine we were to take the stick and shake it along until the hops went through, and we was to walk up and down on this thing and pick these hops out. We were not pickers, but we was to walk backwards and forwards and see the hops went through, and if any stems or sticks, to throw them off on the floor, and when we got that done, to go back on the other end and clean it out the same way, and so I was walking from this end to this end, and up in the corner sometimes they would fall in bunches as big as that (illustrating), and there was a big bunch sticking there that didn't fall down, and so I took this stick here and was reaching up like that to pull the hops down, and when I came back from pulling the hops down, when the bunch fell in front of me on the grate, I felt something pull on the left-hand side of my dress, and of course you would always think something, and I thought somebody went along there and touched me, and I never thought of the machinery I was tangled up in, and when I felt that, I turned to see who was behind me, and just at that I noticed my dress was on the shaft, and I didn't think then or realize my dress was tangled in the shaft, and just as I felt it pull I looked around and felt myself going, and put my hands up, thinking I would grab something to save myself falling, and I was pitched up in the air and came down on the floor as hard as I could come."

She testified that she had seen this shaft and others, but had no idea that she could ever get connected with it in any way; that she never thought about it, it had never entered her head that there was any danger there; that she thought the foreman who put a lady to work there would not put her where she could get connected with any machinery; that anybody could see the shaft. There was nothing to prevent her from seeing it when she was on the floor, but, when she was working on the platform, she could not see it unless she leaned over, but she could not do that. Being a short woman, she had to come to the end of the platform to reach up and pull the hops down, and sometimes had to "reach quite a bit to take them down." And in answer to the question by appellant's counsel, "Will you explain to me why it was necessary for you to go so close to that revolving shaft at the extreme south end of that bin that your clothing could in any way become caught in that revolving shaft?" she replied:

> "When I was just as far as I could get to the end of these grates here, and had that stick, I couldn't possibly reach this place up here; I had tried it, and even had to get on my tiptoes several times to hammer at a bunch of stuff up there to compel it to come down. I didn't know the distance from there up there, because I never measured it; but when I was standing as near as I could get to this end, I have often stuck my shoulder under that thing—that is how high it was to me—I have often stuck my shoulder under that thing there, and reached this way (indicating) to get those things down, and when I would do that, sometimes I would have to reach four or five times, and hammer at it to get it started down. That is the reason why I had to go up so close to that end."

[1] She also testified that she was not warned of any danger, and that she had to work rapidly at her task to keep the grate clear. We do not think it can be said that respondent "voluntarily placed herself in the way of an obvious and well-understood peril," and must therefore suffer the consequences of her conduct. The case seems quite different from those like Brett v. Frank Co., 153 Cal. 267, 94 Pac. 1051, Ergo v. Merced F. G. & E. Co., 161 Cal. 334, 119 Pac. 101, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 79, Bressette v. Stone, 162 Cal. 74, 121 Pac. 312, and Andrews v. Valley Ice Co., 167 Cal. 11, 138 Pac. 699. The situation here is more like that presented in Davis v. Pacific Power Co., 107 Cal. 563, 40 Pac. 950, 48 Am. St. Rep. 156, and kindred cases. It may indeed be said that the danger here was not so obvious as in the Davis Case. The shaft that caught plaintiff's clothing was not quite an inch and a half in diameter, and it projected about six inches beyond the easterly side of the post "C." It was revolving rather slowly, and it did not present a necessarily dangerous aspect. Indeed, it is quite likely that, if it had been a man whose clothing was brought into contact with the shaft, no injury would have been produced. And it is safe to say that plaintiff might have been placed in a similar position many times without suffering any inconvenience. It is to be remembered that what is called the shaft, as far as the exposed portion is concerned, was a mere rod exhibiting but small centripetal force, and not presenting any complication by reason of cogs or a belt or other mechanical contrivance. The chances were rather against the happening of such an accident, and there would probably be more reason for the contention that appellant was not guilty of negligence in leaving the shaft exposed than for the position upon which so much emphasis is laid that the situation presented "an obvious and well-understood peril." However, as to this, we are satisfied that there was ground for the holding that appellant was derelict in not more carefully guarding against such contingency as was developed. In this connection we may state that the probability of an accident was somewhat increased by the irregularities on the surface of said shaft, it having been "chewed up with a Stilson wrench," as stated by one of the witnesses.

But if we concede that, to one familiar with machinery and the laws appertaining to mechanics, the situation might appear obviously dangerous, it does not follow that plaintiff understood, comprehended, and appreciated the peril. It is a reasonable conclusion from her evidence that her lack of understanding of whatever peril existed was such as to relieve her of the charge of contributory negligence in continuing her employment in such close proximity to the shaft; for at the time plaintiff was injured, in order to charge her with culpable conduct according to the requirement of the existing law, it was necessary for her, not only to know the unsafe condition of the machine, but that she consented to work in the place of danger after full comprehension of the risk which she thereby incurred. Jacobson v. Oakland M. & P. Co., 161 Cal. 425, 119 Pac. 653, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1194.

[2] Again, it is quite apparent that the position which she occupied while employed has an important bearing upon the question of the imminence of the peril. It was manifestly less dangerous than if she had been working nearer or over the shaft. Considering her position on the platform and the innocent appearance of the shaft, the danger should be denominated a hidden rather than an obvious one. But, after all, this contention of appellant resolves itself into the legal proposition that she assumed the risk of a known hazard; but this fact, as pointed out in Crabbe v. Mammouth Channel Gold Mining Co., 168 Cal. 500, 143 Pac. 714, and other cases, affords no defense under the Employers' Liability Act (St. 1911, p. 796) in effect at the time of the accident. Upon the theory that there was an obvious peril, the other important consideration is not whether she assumed the risk, but whether she was chargeable with negligence that contributed to her injury, and this depends upon what she was doing at the time. To determine this question, we must consider the character of the danger and other circumstances as we shall presently see.

We can see no merit in the point that she "voluntarily chose an unusual and more dangerous method to perform her duties when there were two or more safe ways known by and open to her." The declaration of appellant simply amounts to a specification of the manner in which she failed to exercise due care, and displayed a reckless disregard for her own safety. There are many cases illustrating such an exhibition of negligence, and no one would deny that she should not recover if her conduct was thus properly characterized by appellant. But we cannot say that the method employed by her in doing the work was unreasonable or improper or that she was not following in good faith the directions given her by the employer. Her explanation of the occurrence is not improbable, and we must hold that she was acting as an ordinarily careful person would under the circumstances. In considering her account of the affair, we cannot lay out of view the circumstance that she was called upon to work rapidly, and that the emergency of the situation required her to move back and forth upon the platform in order to reach with the short stick which she used the different portions of the grate above. Even if she stationed herself closer to the shaft than appears now to have been necessary, the stress of the circumstances surrounding her would excuse the mistake. As to this, indeed, appellant attempts to demonstrate that she would have been nearer to the hops if she had stood several inches from said south post. This may be true, but, in view of the haste required, we cannot hold her to an exact computation of the respective distances.

[3, 4] Besides, her statement that it was necessary to take advantage of the brace is not unreasonable. We are satisfied it cannot be said that plaintiff voluntarily selected an unsafe place in which to work, or adopted a dangerous method to discharge her duties. Guided by her statements, we must conclude that she was without fault, and that the accident would not have occurred if said shaft had been suitably protected. "Just how this thing occurred," as said in the Davis Case, supra, may not be known. There is no doubt, however, that plaintiff's clothing came in contact with the shaft. This may have been caused by a sudden gust of wind, or by her sudden movement in reaching for the hops, and she may even have been standing close to the last rod on the grate, instead of against the post, as plaintiff thinks; but, at any rate, we cannot say that she did not act with due circumspection.

What has been said is probably a sufficient answer to the next proposition of appellant, that "no obligation rested on appellant to warn its employés of patent and obvious dangers." The principle may be accepted, but its application must be rejected. "The shaft was not a menace, in the sense that the likelihood of its catching her dress while she was at work in her bin was constantly, or occasionally, or ever, before her." The fact is that the position appeared to be safe, but in fact was somewhat hazardous, as shown by the accident. In principle the case is not unlike Crabbe v. M. C. G. M. Co., supra.

[5, 6] Nor do we think there is merit in the contention that, "under the facts established, no duty rested upon appellant to place guards on or around the shaft, and respondent was not unaware that guards had not been so placed." The latter clause may be accepted as true, but whether it was the duty of appellant to so protect the shaft is at least susceptible of an honest difference of opinion, and it is not an unreasonable conclusion, in view of the circumstances, that appellant should have taken this precaution for the safety of its employés. The fact that respondent knew that the shaft was unprotected does not affect the duty of appellant in the premises, but bears upon the consideration of "contributory negligence" or "assumption of risk," and of this nothing more needs to be said.

As to such duty of appellant, it is sufficient to cite Silveira v. Iversen, 128 Cal. 192, 60 Pac. 687; Davis v. Pacific Power Co., supra; Jacobson v. Oakland M. & P. Co., 161 Cal. 425, 119 Pac. 653, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1194; Perry v. Angelus Hospital Ass'n, 172 Cal. 311, 156 Pac. 449. It is quite clear that the accident would not have happened if the shaft had not projected beyond the bearing, or if it had been protected by some simple device. This particular danger could easily have been obviated, and we think it not unjust to hold appellant to the requirement of such care and foresight.

The fifth and sixth contentions of appellant are based upon the theory that respondent is chargeable with contributory negligence. We think it cannot be so held, in view of the evidence on behalf of the plaintiff. This consideration has already received sufficient attention as we conceive it. Of course, if we were bound to accept the testimony of defendant's witnesses as to the accident, the conclusion would follow that the injury was the result of plaintiff's negligence; but we must adopt the theory supported by the evidence for the other side, and that evidence leads inevitably to the conclusion that the only negligence in the case was on the part of appellant. Upon the theory that plaintiff was telling the truth, there is no room even for an application of the doctrine of comparative negligence.

Appellant attaches much importance to the matter of instructions. The court gave this instruction, taken from the Code:

> "You are instructed that a witness false in one part of his testimony is to be distrusted in others."

Appellant requested a more elaborate instruction, containing this amplification:

> "If you believe that a witness has testified falsely, and has done so knowingly and willfully as to any material matter, you may disregard," etc.

In People v. Plyler, 121 Cal. 160, 53 Pac. 553, it was said that an instruction similar to the one herein requested by appellant was an accurate expression of the statute's meaning and should have been given. However, the case was not reversed for that error, as the court declared that a new trial should be had in consequence of the refusal of the lower court to continue the trial on the defendant's motion. Under the circumstances herein, we do not think the action of the court in this particular involves prejudicial error. It was not error at all to give the instruction in the language of the Code. People v. Dobbins, 138 Cal. 694, 72 Pac. 339. Nor would it have been prejudicially erroneous to refuse it. Medlin v. Spazier, 23 Cal. App. 242, 137 Pac. 1078. This follows from the consideration that it pertains to a mere commonplace matter, that juries are presumed to know about and act upon in the absence of such instruction. People v. Delucchi, 17 Cal. App. 96, 118 Pac. 935. But the proposed instruction involved in no less degree a platitudinous truism to which the jury, unless lacking in average intelligence, did not need to have their attention called. And if they were so deficient in mind, the instruction could have been of no value to them. It should certainly not be deemed of vital importance to tell the ordinary man of the world that he should distrust the statements of a witness whom he believes to be a liar. It may be further said that the court gave elaborate instructions upon the credibility of witnesses which were amply sufficient to cover this very consideration.

[8] The court refused the instruction, requested by defendant, of which the important part is as follows:

> "If plaintiff was not at the time of the accident at the place where she was directed or required to be, and where she should have been in the discharge of her duty, but of her own volition was at some other place in the mill, to suit her own convenience or for her own purpose, then I instruct you that plaintiff cannot recover, and your verdict must be for the defendant."

The reason for this was that certain witnesses for appellant testified that the plaintiff, at the time of the accident was not engaged in her work, but was participating on the floor in a playful diversion and heedlessly backed into the shaft. But we think the instruction was properly refused for several reasons, one of which is: It was based upon the assumption that plaintiff was at a place where she should not have been. There is no room for that inference. The only possible conclusion is that she was at work, or else she was away from the bin because there was no work to do at the time. Assuming that it is true, as stated by some of the witnesses for appellant, that the machinery was not in operation by reason of the lack of hops, plaintiff was not required to remain at the bin, but had a right to go upon the floor for rest or recreation. Therefore, if we concede that the instruction embodied a correct statement of the law, it was properly refused as applicable to a theory without support in the evidence. Sill v. Ceschi, 167 Cal. 698, 140 Pac. 949.

Again, if plaintiff was on the floor, it cannot be disputed that she was ready and waiting to take her place at the bin when the hops should arrive and her work begin. In either event, therefore, she was really engaged in the line of her duty and the course of her employment, and the defendant's responsibility for her safety falls within the general rule already stated. Davis v. Pacific Power Co., supra; Cordler v. Keffel, 161 Cal. 475, 119 Pac. 658. Moreover, at the request of appellant, an instruction applicable to the theory that plaintiff was not at work was given by the court as follows:

> "The court instructs you that if an employé sustains injuries while he or she is voluntarily and unnecessarily absent from his or her post of duty, and neglects to exercise ordinary care for his or her own safety, he or she cannot recover damages for said injuries. If, therefore, you find from the evidence that at the time of the injury to plaintiff she was voluntarily and unnecessarily absent from the place where the defendant company had assigned her to work, and that while so absent she neglected to exercise ordinary care for her own safety, by reason of which her dress came in contact with said shaft, resulting in the injuries complained of, then I instruct you that plaintiff cannot recover, and your verdict must be for defendant."

The foregoing is certainly as favorable to appellant along that line as the law would permit.

Appellant is at a loss to understand why the court refused to give this instruction:

> "The court instructs you that persons of such age and experience as to be capable of exercising discretion and of appreciating dangers in the work in which they are engaged cannot recover damages for injuries caused by their inattention to their surroundings, and failure to take due precautions against known or obvious dangers."

We think the instruction was properly refused, for the reasons, among others, that it was based upon the unsupported hypothesis that the danger was known and obvious to the plaintiff, it implied that the doctrine of the "assumption of risk" was applicable to the case, and it ignored the principle of "comparative negligence."

There is some other criticism of the action of the court in reference to the instructions, but we hardly think it advisable to notice it specifically. The court eliminated some redundant matter and corrected some inaccuracies in several instructions that were proposed, and gave them as corrected. Upon an examination of the whole charge, we are satisfied that every necessary legal principle applicable to any just theory of the evidence was presented to the jury, and it appears to us that therein is found no substantial reason for complaint.

The case was tried upon the theory that the so-called Roseberry Act of 1911 and section 1970 of the Civil Code were and are applicable to the cause. This situation was also conceded in the opening brief of counsel for appellant, but in the closing brief of Messrs. Harrison & Harrison, substituted attorneys, the point is made that they were repealed by the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1913, which went into effect before the commencement of this action. There is no question, though, that the accident happened before said act of 1913 became operative, and, without following the argument of appellant in detail, we deem it apparent that section 91 of the act—"the compensation provisions of this act shall not apply to any injury sustained prior to the taking effect thereof"—constitutes a saving clause, and continued in force as far as this case is concerned, the said Roseberry Law and said section of the Code, the last introducing the condition that the employé must "fully understand, comprehend and appreciate" the danger to bar his recovery in case of an obvious peril, and the Roseberry Act having made a part of our liability law the doctrine of "comparative negligence."

There is a contention in the opening brief of appellant that the verdict is excessive, and should be set aside for that reason; but the point does not seem to be insisted upon in the final brief. We may say, however, that a complete answer to the suggestion is found in Zibbell v. Southern Pacific Co., 160 Cal. 237, 116 Pac. 513, and Scragg v. Sallee, 24 Cal. App. 153, 140 Pac. 706.

The case, as we view it, was fairly, conscientiously, and ably tried by the learned judge who presided, and, after an examination of the whole record, we are satisfied that the verdict should not be disturbed.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

On Rehearing.

BURNETT, J. We have given careful attention to the forcible and instructive petition for rehearing filed herein by appellant. The position urged with the strongest reason relates to the effect of the so-called saving clause in the said Workmen's Compensation Act of 1913. It may be admitted that the language was not very happily chosen to express the intention of the Legislature that the law in force at the time should apply to an accident occurring prior to January 1, 1914, but that such was the intention of the Legislature we feel reasonably satisfied. Otherwise, said section 91 of the act of 1913 could have no purposeful and effective operation.

If we adopt the reasoning of appellant, we must hold that there is no statutory law in force in this state whereby respondent may secure any remedy for the wrong that she suffered. The said act of 1913 was intended to present and embody a complete scheme for the enforcement of a cause of action like that before us, and it is apparent that all prior legislation on the subject is inconsistent with the provisions of said act. But this statute manifestly can be of no value or benefit to respondent, since by express provision the vital part of the act can have no application to any negligence occurring prior to January 1, 1914.

[9] We do not think the Legislature intended that there should be no statutory provision whereby persons in the class of the plaintiff might secure redress for their injuries; but that a fair and just construction of said saving clause leads to the conclusion that respondent's case was to be controlled by the law as it existed when she was injured.

[10] We also think it should be held that plaintiff's right of action was a vested right, which could not be taken away by the repeal of said Roseberry Act. At the time the accident happened she was at work under the operation of a law which provided that, if injured by the negligence of her employer, she was entitled to damages for the same, although she might be guilty of slight negligence herself. In other words, the law provided that a certain class of persons was entitled to be compensated by the employer for personal injuries suffered by the former. Plaintiff showed that she belonged to that class, and therefore had a vested right to such compensation. The subject was carefully considered by this court in the case of James v. Oakland Traction Co., 10 Cal. App. 785, 103 Pac. 1082, in which a petition for hearing by the Supreme Court was denied. Therein it was held, in an opinion written by Justice Hart, that:

> "Where section 501 of the Civil Code, as it stood at the time of the injury, regulated the speed of the car so as not to exceed eight miles per hour, such section as it then stood entered into and became part of the contract between the carrier and passengers, which conferred a vested right to recover for breach of such contract, and the subsequent repeal thereof in 1903 cannot operate retroactively to destroy or affect such vested right."

We think the same principle is applicable here. The conditions prescribed in the said Roseberry Act constituted a part of plaintiff's contract with defendant, and the question is not, therefore, one of abrogating or changing a statutory remedy; but the construction upon which appellant insists involves an interference with and the destruction of a vested right of an employé sustaining a certain relation to the employer.

The cases cited by appellant—at least, most of them—can be reconciled with our position herein as they involve a purely statutory right, whereas we are dealing with an obligation based upon the common law which is made definite and enforceable by the provisions of the statute. We may repeat that, if plaintiff's right to recover for damages was derived wholly from the statute, the Legislature, no doubt, while said right was inchoate and not reduced to possession or perfected by final judgment, might repeal the statute and destroy the remedy; but a different rule seems to apply where, as herein, the right is really derived from the common law.

We think the said Roseberry Act and section 1970 of the Civil Code were applicable to the case of the plaintiff, and on the other points we adhere to the views heretofore expressed.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

(35 Cal. App. 744)

MORENO v. NEW GUADALUPE MINING CO. et al. (Civ. 2254.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 31, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 28, 1918.)

1. DEATH 🔑76 — CAUSE OF DEATH — EVIDENCE.
   In action for death, evidence held to warrant a finding that a certain accident, and not typhoid fever, was the cause of death.
2. EVIDENCE 🔑471(24)—OPINION—DECLARATIONS.
   Declarations of deceased as to how an accident happened, made 30 minutes after the accident, were but expressions of opinion.
3. EVIDENCE 🔑126(2)—RES GESTÆ.
   Such declarations were no part of the res gestæ.
4. TRIAL 🔑85—OBJECTIONS—GROUNDS.
   A general objection to admission of evidence cannot be considered unless the evidence was evidently inadmissible for any purpose within any conceivable legitimate view of the case.
5. EVIDENCE 🔑243(4)—ADMISSIONS—DECLARATIONS IN PRESENCE OF ADVERSE PARTY.
   A declaration by a servant, in the presence of one joined as defendant, of the reason for an accident, made 30 minutes after the accident, was admissible, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 3, relating to declarations made within the observation of a party and his conduct in relation thereto.
6. WITNESSES 🔑219(5)—PHYSICIANS—WAIVER OF PRIVILEGE.
   The privilege given by Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subd. 4, before amendment, providing that physicians could not testify as to information acquired from the relationship, is waived in a personal injury or death action by the patient or his administrator putting other witnesses on the stand or going on the stand to testify as to the nature of the injuries.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

Action by Jessie Moreno, as administratrix of the estate of Frederick Moreno, deceased, against the New Guadalupe Mining Company, a corporation, and Fred Porta. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Crittenden & Simmons, of San Francisco, and C. L. Witten and H. W. McComas, both of San Jose, for appellant New Guadalupe Mining Co. William A. Nunlist, of San Francisco, for appellant Porta. George K. Ford, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. In this action, the plaintiff Jessie Moreno, as administratrix of the estate of her husband, Frederick Moreno, deceased, sought and secured a judgment against the defendants, New Guadalupe Mining Company and Fred Porta, one of its employés, for the death of the deceased, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of said defendants. The case was tried with a jury, and a verdict returned in favor of plaintiff and against both defendants in the sum of $8,000. From the judgment entered thereon and from the order denying a new trial, the defendants have appealed.

Briefly stated, the facts of the case are these: The defendant New Guadalupe Mining Company was a corporation engaged in the working of a mine in the county of Santa Clara. On the 3d day of August, 1913, the decedent, Frederick Moreno, was employed by the corporation defendant as a "tool nipper." In such capacity it was his duty to carry powder and the sharpened drills and tools used in the working of the mine down to the various levels of the mine and to bring such tools and drills as had been dulled by use to the surface. The shaft from the surface to the various levels of the mine ran at an angle of about 42 degrees from the horizontal plane of surface, and installed in it were two parallel tracks on which cars or "skips" were operated from the surface by cables attached to a drum, which was in turn operated by an engine. The cars or skips were used by employés of the corporation defendant to enter and leave the mine and also for the lowering of supplies into and the taking of ore from the mine. On August 3, 1913, the decedent, Frederick Moreno, was directed to take certain supplies down into the mine. At about 2 p. m. of that day the defendant Fred Porta, who was employed by the corporation defendant as a shift boss, but who was then operating the mechanism which controlled one of the cars, undertook to let the deceased down into the mine. When the car upon which the decedent was riding had descended about 450 feet into the mine it stopped suddenly, but what actually happened then to the decedent was known to, and witnessed by, no one save himself. The circumstances attending the descent of the decedent into the mine were narrated by one Celaya, who was the "hoistman" regularly employed at the mine to operate the engine which controlled the car, and who was called as a witness for the plaintiff. He testified in part and to the effect that the car in which the decedent was descending, and which at the time was operated and controlled by the defendant Porta, was going down very fast, "at a very rapid rate of speed" and that it was stopped "instantly by the jerk" at about 40 or 50 feet from the station below, because the defendant Porta threw in the clutch which controlled the speed of the car. About 30 minutes after this sudden stop of the car in which the decedent was descending into the mine this witness hoisted the decedent to the surface. The witness said that the decedent was pale, and that upon coming to the surface the decedent in the presence of the defendant Porta narrated how and why the car stopped and what happened to him at the time. Shortly thereafter the decedent went to his home, but returned the next day to his work and again descended into the mine, but remained there only a small portion of the day when he went home.

---

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

The plaintiff, Jessie Moreno, testified:

> That she was the wife of deceased; "that on the day of the accident decedent came home and said he felt pretty bad; that she gave him some salt water, and that he threw up a small quantity of blood, although not very much; that decedent did not return to work that day, but he did the following day; that he did not stay very long; he came back right away and went to bed and did not get out of bed any more; he stayed in bed until he died; that she saw him every day; upon the day of the accident decedent showed witness his left side, which was bruised; that thereafter it became black and remained black until the time of his death; she observed a bruise on his left side; thereafter it kept getting blacker every day; they gave her a little liniment to run on it, which she rubbed on the bruise and side as directed; that from the first day after the accident decedent made frequent exclamations of pain; that he groaned lots and could not keep still in bed, the pain was so bad, and had difficulty in taking a long breath because the pain would hurt him lots."

Other members of the deceased's family and household testified that he had a black and blue bruise on the left side of his body, and that he complained of pain in that side; that on the evening of the day of the accident the left side and back of the deceased showed a big red spot; that there were no scratches or cuts on the body, and that the skin was not torn; that the following day the spot or bruise turned black and blue; that the discolored portion of the deceased's body was about a foot in diameter and extended around on the back about, but not quite, to the spinal column; that the deceased vomited very little and had little fever and no chills; that he was not delirious; that he did not get out of bed and was unable to get out of bed without assistance; that he continually complained of pain in the side and never complained of pain in the head.

Dr. Gober was first in attendance upon the deceased, and later Dr. Blair was called in. Both doctors made an examination of the body and the condition of the deceased. They continued in attendance upon the deceased until the time of his death. But neither doctor was called as a witness for the plaintiff.

[1] The insufficiency of the evidence to show the cause of death of the deceased is the first point made in support of the appeal. In response thereto we deem it sufficient to say that, although the evidence relied upon for the plaintiff to show the cause of death was wholly circumstantial, nevertheless we deem it sufficient to have warranted the court below in submitting the case to the jury, and we are not prepared to say that the jury could not have legitimately drawn from such evidence the inference that the accident in question was the cause of the death of deceased.

The point is made that the trial court erred to the prejudice of the defendants, and particularly the corporation defendant, in its ruling which permitted in evidence, over objection, the declaration of the deceased, made some 30 minutes after the accident in the presence of the plaintiff's witness Celaya and the defendant Porta, and which declaration the record shows was addressed to both the witness and the defendant Porta. With reference to that phase of the case the record shows that Mr. Ford, one of the counsel for plaintiff, questioned the witness as follows:

> "Q. What, if anything, did Mr. Moreno say to Mr. Porta in your presence? A. He said, 'You let me down pretty fast; he almost killed me'; he said, 'You stopped the skip on the jerk and threw on the clutch and dragged me quite a ways;' and he had his clothes all torn.
>
> "Mr. Simmons (counsel for the defendants): That is objected to; merely opinion evidence. I ask that that be stricken out, as to whether or not he almost killed him.
>
> "The Court: There are some expressions of opinion. It is not responsive to your question at all. He asked him what he said and he answered 'he had his clothes all torn.'
>
> "Mr. Ford: The answer generally was referring to the remark that Mr. Moreno said, 'You almost killed me.'
>
> "The Court: That may stand; that is what the conversation was. 'He had his clothes all torn' may go out.
>
> "Mr. Simmons: Even as to the remainder of that answer, as to the words 'you almost killed me,' I object to that also.
>
> "The Court: Did he say that?
>
> "Mr. Simmons: He said, 'You let me down pretty fast; you almost killed me.'
>
> "The Court: It may stand."

[2, 3] It must be conceded, as counsel for the defendants contend, that the statements of the deceased which the trial court permitted in evidence were but the expression of an opinion as to the cause and consequence of the accident, and, having been made some 30 minutes after the accident, were clearly the narrative of a past event, and consequently were no part of the res gestæ.

[4] But, even assuming that it may be said that the trial court considered the objection to the evidence in question as having been seasonably made, still it must be noted that the objection as made was rested solely upon the single ground that the evidence elicited from the witness was "merely opinion evidence." The purpose of the rule which ordinarily requires that an objection to be available must be made upon specific grounds which point to the vice of proffered proof is to call the trial court's attention to the defect in such proof, and thereby enable the court to rule upon the objection with such defect in mind. Ordinarily, therefore, the mere statement by a party that he "objects" to certain evidence is not entitled to consideration unless it can be clearly seen and said that such evidence is utterly incompetent and wholly inadmissible for any purpose within the issues of the case. In other words, when the evidence objected to is plainly prejudicial and palpably incompetent, and so evidently and absolutely inadmissible for any purpose within any conceivable legitimate view of the case, then a general objection should suffice to specify the evidence. Doubtless, if the question objected to in the present case had called for and elicited the personal opinion of the witness on the stand, the objection as made, namely, "that it was merely opinion evidence," would have sufficed. But plainly that was neither the purpose nor the effect of the question, and it cannot be said that the evidence sought and elicited thereby was wholly incompetent and inadmissible for any purpose in the case; for it must be remembered that the question objected to called for a declaration of the deceased made in the presence of and to one of the defendants in the case. It is the rule that:

> "Evidence may be given upon a trial of * * * an act or declaration of another, in the presence and within the observation of a party, and his conduct in relation thereto." Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 3.

[5] Clearly, therefore, the evidence sought and elicited by the question objected to was admissible, at least as against the defendant Porta, for the purpose stated in the statutory rule, and consequently it must be held that the objection relied upon was rightly overruled whether considered as a mere general objection or limited, as perhaps in strictness it should be, to the ground upon which it was made.

That the plaintiff's case was presented upon the theory that the deceased died from "urosepsis" caused by an injury to the kidneys is indicated by plaintiff's cross-examination of the medical witnesses who were called and testified for the defendant. The action was defended in part upon the theory that the deceased died directly as the independent result of typhoid fever, and not as the result, directly or indirectly, of any injuries which he had received as the result of the accident.

In support of this defense Dr. Albert Charles Jayet, a physician and surgeon, was called as a witness, and testified that he saw the body of Frederick Moreno, the deceased, about the 15th or 18th of August, 1913, at the Almaden mines, and assisted Dr. Gerlack in performing an autopsy on the body of the deceased; that such autopsy involved the opening and examining of all of the cavities of the body; that the kidneys were cut open and found to be in a normal condition; that had the kidneys been impaired in such a manner as to cause the death of the deceased it would have been discovered upon the autopsy; that the heart and lungs and all of the vital organs of the deceased were examined and found to be in a normal condition, save and except the brain, which, when removed and sliced, showed the presence of "a large pulpified mass of tissue," which was an abscess of the brain.

Dr. Gober was called as a witness for the defendants, and his testimony as an expert witness was in part and without objection:

> "That he had had experience with typhoid fever during practically every year of the last 30 years; that during the months of July and August, 1913, he had three cases of typhoid fever at the New Guadalupe mine; that each of the cases was normal and ran in the normal and average course of typhoid fever; that one of these cases proved fatal; that in the usual case of typhoid fever the patient complained of being tired and dull, weak and some headache, backache, and occasionally nosebleed; that the patient sometimes vomited; that the temperature is usually one or two degrees higher in the evening than in the morning, and as the disease progresses the temperature each day becomes a little higher; that the disease usually runs a very definite course; that it affects particularly the small intestines which become infected, and the glands of the small intestines become swollen and ulcerated; * * * that the condition of the intestines causes more or less pain, usually referred to as being in the stomach, although it is more probably located on the right-hand side, between the prominence of the pelvic bone and the navel, up midway between the two, and the pain at this point generally continues throughout the whole course of the disease; that the patient sometimes vomits, and occasionally perforation of the intestine takes place where the ulceration eats through the intestine, causing a shock and collapse followed very shortly by death; that the largest majority of perforations take place about the beginning of the third week of the disease, sometimes in the latter part of the second week."

On cross-examination this witness further testified that he had knowledge of a disease "urosepsis," which consists of infection of the urinary tract; that he had never encountered the latter disease; that the disease of urosepsis was to be distinguished from typhoid fever because of the difference in range of temperature; that urosepsis was generally caused by injury to the kidneys; that the symptoms in case the patient died from typhoid fever would be somewhat similar to those of a patient who died from urosepsis, but that there would be sufficient different symptoms to distinguish the two diseases; that peritonitis might set in following the perforation of an intestine in typhoid fever, and might set in as a result of an injury to a kidney.

Dr. Gober further testified, apparently as a fact witness and without objection, that he had attended the deceased four or five times during the month of July, 1913, and a number of times during the month of August, 1913; that he had occasion to visit, and did visit, the deceased once on the 5th and 6th of August, 1913, twice on the 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th of August, 1913, and three times on the 14th and once on the 15th of August, 1913. Ultimately this witness further testified, also without objection:

> "That he usually examined the body of the deceased every day throughout the time he was in attendance upon him, particularly the abdomen; that in making said examination he did not observe any black and blue marks or any spot whatsoever upon the body of the deceased. * * *"

But when counsel for the defendant sought to elicit from this witness whether or not he had taken the temperature of the deceased, objection was made and sustained, in effect, upon the ground that whatever information the witness had obtained concerning the condition of the deceased during his illness was acquired in a professional capacity and for the purpose of enabling the witness to prescribe professionally for the deceased, and could not, under the provisions of subdivision 4 of section 1881 of the Code of Civil Procedure, be revealed without the consent of the plaintiff.

Dr. Blair, called as a witness for the defense, testified apparently in part as an expert and in part as a fact witness. His expert testimony covered the symptoms and results of an injury to the kidneys and the symptoms and results of typhoid fever. With reference to the results of an injury to the kidneys he testified:

> "That in case a kidney were torn loose in the body the injured condition would be indicated by the general symptoms of shock, collapse, and blood in the urine; that if a kidney were torn loose or ruptured or contused, the patient would be practically incapable of carrying any load at all; if a kidney were injured by a blow or otherwise, it would cause pain, and within a day after the accident the pain would be markedly noticeable by the patient; that if a kidney were injured to such an extent as to result in death, the death would probably occur in one of the three following manners: By a severe hemorrhage or a stoppage of the urine, or, in case of a less severe injury, general weakness following lingering sickness; that it would require a very considerable injury to a kidney to cause death within 10 days or 2 weeks after the injury was received; that in case of death resulting 13 days from the injury to a kidney you would expect to find general swelling of the kidney and an entire stoppage of water, together with signs of hemorrhage in the kidney itself; that typhoid fever frequently causes abscesses which might occur in any part of the body; that typhoid fever is a disease of the blood; the chief localization is in the bowel, but might localize in any part of the body and cause an abscess; for instance, it might localize in the brain and cause an abscess there. * * *"

This witness Dr. Blair without objection further testified to the fact:

> That he "called upon and attended Fred Moreno, the deceased, with Dr. Gober about 11 o'clock in the night of August 14, 1913; that Moreno was then in a house at the New Guadalupe mines; that he obtained the history of the case from Dr. Gober and made a thorough physical examination of the deceased, including an examination of the heart and lungs, and a general examination of the body of the deceased; that he failed to find any black and blue marks, bruises, or any discolorations whatever upon any part of the body of the deceased, either upon the left side or on the back or elsewhere; * * * that he found no injury or bruise on the head of deceased."

Finally Dr. Blair was asked by counsel for the defendant if he had determined from his observation and physical examination of the deceased what was the cause of the latter's death, and, if so, to state the cause of death. An objection to this question was sustained upon the ground that it was privileged within the purview of subdivision 4 of section 1881 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is now insisted that this ruling and the ruling rejecting the evidence of Dr. Gober concerning the temperature of the deceased during his last illness were prejudicial error.

[6] This contention, we think, must be sustained. The statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subd. 4) relied upon to support the rulings complained of, as it was written at the time of the trial of the present case, provided that:

> "A licensed physician or surgeon cannot without the consent of his patient, be examined in a civil action as to any information acquired in attending the patient, which was necessary to enable him to prescribe * * * for the patient: Provided, however, that after the death of the patient * * * the administrator * * * or the surviving spouse of the deceased * * * may give such consent, in any action or proceeding brought to recover damages on account of the death of the patient, caused by the negligent or wrongful act of another."

The purpose of the privilege thus granted by the statute is to protect the patient against the disclosure and consequent publicity of his bodily ailments, and thereby safeguard him against the humiliation and annoyance which would often follow such disclosure. Therefore the privilege given by the statute is purely personal to the patient and may be waived by him.

Admittedly the deceased, if he had been alive, could have consented to the giving of the testimony objected to, and clearly such consent might have been expressly or impliedly given. It has been said in effect by a recognized and respected authority upon the law of evidence that:

> "Waiver of the privilege may be implied from the conduct of the patient, and that a finding of such waiver must depend upon two considerations: (1) The interpretation to be placed upon the actual conduct of the patient with reference to the exercise of the privilege and the fairness of the situation created by that conduct. In other words, as the author referred to puts it, 'a waiver is to be predicated not only when the conduct indicates a plain intention to abandon the privilege, but also when the conduct (though not evincing that intention) places the claimant in such a position with reference to the evidence that it would be unfair and inconsistent to permit the retention of the privilege. It is not to be both a sword and a shield.'" 4 Wig. on Evidence, § 2388, p. 3558.

In keeping with this enunciation of the principles underlying the privilege it has been judicially declared that the privilege granted by statutes analogous in spirit, purpose, and phrase to the statute under consideration here is waived by the patient taking the witness stand and voluntarily testifying in detail concerning the facts, the nature and the extent of his ailments, or by calling other persons as witnesses in his behalf and requiring them to testify to the same facts. Woods v. Incorp. Town of Lisbon, 150 Iowa, 433, 130 N. W. 372; Lane v. Boicourt, 128 Ind. 420, 27 N. E. 1111, 25 Am. St. Rep. 442; Epstein v. Pa. Ry. Co., 250 Mo. 1, 156 S. W. 699, 49 L. R. A. (N. S.) 394, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 423. This is so because:

> "It is only the secrets of the sick room or of the consultation * * * that the physician is forbidden to reveal, and what is made public by pleadings and by evidence in a court of justice can by no possibility be privileged to benefit the party who thus gives it such wide publicity." Lane v. Boicourt, supra.

We are aware that there are to be found authorities dealing with the doctrine of waiver which declare a rule contrary to the rule declared in the authorities here cited and relied upon, but in our opinion the latter rule is more in consonance with the spirit and purpose of the privilege, and certainly more in accord with the exact administration of justice, for clearly a patient should not be permitted to describe—

> "at length to the jury in a crowded courtroom the details of his supposed ailment and then neatly suppress the available proof of his falsities by wielding a weapon, nominally termed a privilege." 4 Wig. § 2389, p. 3360.

Any other construction and application of the privilege would, as is aptly illustrated by the author last cited, permit a patient suing for damages for personal injuries to make and sustain a claim obviously unfair somewhat as follows:

> "One month ago I was by the defendant's negligence severely injured in the spine and am consequently unable to walk; I tender witnesses A., B., and C., who will openly prove the severe nature of my injury. But stay! Witness D., a physician, is now I perceive called by the opponent to prove that my injury is not so severe as I claim. I object to his testimony because it is extremely repugnant to me that my neighbors should learn of my injury, and I can keep it secure if the court will forbid his testimony." 4 Wig. § 2389, p. 3359.

This brings us now to a consideration of the question as to whether or not the plaintiff in the present case was permitted and by her conduct did impliedly waive the privilege granted by the statute. It will be noted that the statute under consideration as it existed at the time of the trial of the present case provided that in actions brought to recover damages on account of the death of the patient caused by the negligence or wrongful act of another the administrator of his estate or his surviving spouse may consent to the testimony of a physician or surgeon who attended the patient. Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subd. 4. The statute itself therefore in terms expressly and affirmatively answers the query as to whether or not the plaintiff was permitted to waive the privilege, and if, as we believe we have shown, the deceased himself might had he lived have waived the privilege by taking the witness stand and voluntarily narrating the nature, extent, and results of his injuries or by calling other persons to testify to the same effect, then by a parity of reasoning it must be held that the plaintiff here, in the dual capacity of surviving spouse and administratrix of the estate of the deceased, by taking the witness stand and in conjunction with other persons whom she called as witnesses in her behalf voluntarily testifying to the nature and extent of the deceased's injuries and all of the facts and circumstances occurring in the sick room and attending the last illness of the deceased, likewise impliedly waived the statutory privilege which had been transmitted and committed to her care and keeping. And it cannot be said that by so testifying herself and calling other persons to testify likewise she did not thereby open wide the door to the testimony of the physicians merely because she did not in so many words tell or attempt to tell the cause of the death of the deceased.

This must be so, for it would be indeed inconsistent and unfair to refuse to permit the physicians to testify concerning the temperature of the deceased during his illness and the cause of his death after permitting the plaintiff and her witnesses to narrate not only the physical signs and symptoms of the last illness of the deceased, including the condition of his temperature, but also all of the facts and circumstances attending his illness which, by indirection, were intended and tended to show the cause of the death of the deceased.

The plaintiff and her witnesses by so testifying fully and freely gave publicity to all that ailed the deceased, and thereby, it seems clear to us, broke the seal of privacy privileged by the statute. The procedure thus pursued by the plaintiff being a voluntary exploitation of the condition of the deceased and the claimed cause of his death, we are constrained to hold that the inquiry into the symptoms exhibited by the deceased and the cause of his death thus initiated by the plaintiff could have legitimately been brought to a close only by the testimony of the attending physicians concerning the same subject-matter.

Our conclusion upon this phase of the case makes it unnecessary for us to discuss the effect upon the rulings referred to of the amendment to the statute in question (Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subd. 4), made after the trial of the case in the court below and pending the perfection of an appeal from the judgment to this court, which expressly provides:

"That the bringing of an action, to recover for the death of a patient, * * * by the administrator of his estate, or the surviving spouse of the deceased, * * * shall constitute a consent by such * * * administrator, surviving spouse * * * to the testimony of any physician who attended deceased." Stats. 1917, c. 611, p. 954.

Of course, upon the going down of the case for a new trial, the amendment to the statute just quoted will be the statute in force at the time of the trial, and therefore will cover and control the question of the admissibility of the evidence of the physicians who attended the deceased. It may not be amiss, however, to say that the amendment last referred to indicates that the Legislature has finally concluded that:

"In actions for personal injury the permission to claim the privilege is a burlesque upon logic and justice." 4 Wig. § 2389, p. 3359.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

(35 Cal. App. 757)

HUBBARD et al. v. JURIAN et al.

(Civ. 2150.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 31, 1917. On Petitions for Rehearing, Jan. 12 and 29, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 28, 1918.)

1. Mechanics' Liens 🔑125—Liability of Owner for Money Prematurely Paid.

Under St. 1911, p. 1315, amending Code Civ. Proc. § 1184, so as to provide that it shall be lawful for the owner to withhold from his contractor sufficient money due or that may become due to answer any lien that may be filed for labor or material, where there was furnished a bond equal to one-half of the purchase price, the owners of the building were not liable to laborers or materialmen for premature payments made to contractor after notice to withhold.

2. Mechanics' Liens 🔑132(4)—Claim of Lien—Time for Filing.

Under mechanic's lien statute, the time for filing liens, where no notice of completion or cessation from labor has been filed, is 90 days after actual completion.

3. Mechanics' Liens 🔑132(7)—Time for Filing.

Under statute providing that continued cessation from labor for 30 days is deemed equivalent to actual completion for purpose of fixing time within which liens may be filed, where labor on a building ceased for 30 days, the time for filing liens was limited to 90 days after expiration of the 30 days.

4. Mechanics' Liens 🔑279—Burden of Proof—Indefinite Allegation.

Where plaintiff alleged that the building was completed on June 20th, and defendant squarely denied such allegation, that defendant also alleged that work was abandoned "on or about March 10th" would not relieve plaintiff from the burden of showing that his lien filed on July 2d was filed in time, or within 120 days.

5. Mechanics' Liens 🔑132(8)—Filing—Time.

Under mechanic's lien statute, the subsequent completion of a building by the owner after 30 days' cessation from labor thereon by the contractor does not operate as an extension of time for filing liens.

6. Mechanics' Liens 🔑161(4)—Interest—Time of Accrual.

Where all the claims were for labor and materials furnished under contracts fixing no time for payment, interest should be allowed from commencement of actions to foreclose liens.

7. Constitutional Law 🔑89(3)—Freedom of Contract—Liability of Sureties.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, providing that no modification of a building contract between the owner and contractor shall relieve any surety on the bond required to secure payment of claims, is not unconstitutional, in that it is impossible for the owner, contractor, and surety to enter into a contract, the obligation of which is definitely established in advance.

8. Mechanics' Liens 🔑74—Contracts—"Modification"—Filing.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, requiring the filing of the original building contract, together with the bond to secure payment of claims to relieve the owner from liability in excess of the contract price, a contract for the construction of a second story to be "added to the building in course of construction" was a modification of the original contract not required to be filed.

9. Principal and Surety 🔑117—Bonds—Release of Surety—"Modification."

Under bond given to secure performance of building contract and containing a covenant that the owners would keep and perform the contract, the premature payment of an installment by the owners to the contractor would not release the surety as to lien claimants in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, providing that no modification of the contract between the owner and the contractor shall relieve the surety; a premature payment being no more than a modification of the contract.

10. Mechanics' Liens 🔑128—Failure to File Claim—Release of Surety.

Only those laborers and materialmen who have perfected their claims by filing verified liens within the time specified by Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, are entitled to recover upon bond given pursuant to section 1183 as to bond conditioned to pay claims of laborers and materialmen, in view of the rule that parties claiming the benefit of a statutory bond must show a substantial compliance with the statute under which the bond was given.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; W. A. Beasly, Judge.

Consolidated actions by T. B. Hubbard and others against A. Jurian and others. From the judgment rendered, and from an order denying motion for new trial, defendants appeal. Modified and affirmed.

Rogers & Bloomingdale, of San Jose, for appellants Jurian and others. James Walter Scott, of San Francisco, for appellant Maryland Casualty Co. Beggs & McComish, of San Jose, for respondents Hubbard and others. R. V. Burns, of Mountain View, and C. L. Witten and H. W. McComas, both of San Jose, for respondent Guth. John W. Sullivan, of San Jose, for respondent Mathewson. Owen D. Richardson, of San Jose, for respondent Minton.

LENNON, P. J. These are consolidated actions for the foreclosure of several liens, claimed for labor and materials furnished in the erection and construction of a building upon the premises of the defendants Odell and Jurian.

The facts are as follows: On the 23d day of September, 1912, the defendants Odell and Jurian entered into a written contract with one H. A. Spreen for the erection by the latter of a one-story concrete building upon the premises of said defendants for the contract price of $5,260 payable in four installments, as follows: First payment of $1,315 when the first floor joists were in place and wall one-half story high; second payment of $1,315 when the plastering was completed on the inside; third installment of $1,315 35 days after completion of the building. The contract further provided that the building should be constructed under the supervision of an architect, and payments made upon certificates from him. In connection with this contract, a bond was executed by the contractor, Spreen, as principal, with the defendant Maryland Casualty Company as surety, in the sum of $2,630 (being one-half of the contract price), conditioned for the faithful performance of the contract on the part of the contractor, and for payment in full of claims for labor and materials furnished in the construction of the building, and further stipulating that if the act of the Legislature of 1911, amending the lien laws, should be held invalid, then the bond should remain in full force and effect for the protection of the obligee. This bond was attached to the contract, and by its terms refers to and makes said contract a part thereof. Said contract and bond were duly filed on the 30th of September, 1912. Work was commenced under this contract about the middle of October, 1912.

On the 10th day of December, 1912, while said building was in course of construction, the defendants Odell and Jurian entered into a further contract with the contractor, Spreen, for the construction of a second story to be "added to the building [then] in course of construction." The contract price for this second story was $3,600, payable in four equal installments of $900 each as the work progressed. In connection with this contract a bond was executed by the contractor, Spreen, with the defendant Maryland Casualty Company as surety for the sum of $1,800 (being one-half the contract price), and containing provisions substantially the same as the first bond. This supplemental contract and bond were filed in the office of the county recorder of Santa Clara county on the 26th of December, 1912.

It appeared from the evidence that the defendants Odell and Jurian paid, on November 25, 1912, the contractor the first installment of $1,315 called for by the original contract, and on February 26, 1913, the second installment of $1,315 called for by said contract. They paid the first installment of $900 called for by the contract for the erection of the second story on or about the 30th of December, 1912. All of these payments were made upon certificates of the architect to the effect that they were due and payable, and no contention is made on the part of the lien claimants as to the propriety of any of these payments, except as to the second payment of $1,315 upon the original contract on February 26, 1913, which payment the lien claimants contend, and the trial court found, "was prematurely made."

The court further found that on the 1st day of March, 1913, the contractor, Spreen, abandoned work upon the building and ceased labor thereon for more than 30 days thereafter. On April 21, 1913, the defendants Odell and Jurian began the work of completing the building, and did complete it about the 16th of June 1913, at an expenditure of $4,744.59, which the court found to be the reasonable cost of such completion. The court also found that there was extra work upon the building amounting to $362.60, thus making the amount of the contract price actually remaining in the hands of the owners, Odell and Jurian, including the amount due for extras, $948.01. The court charged the account of said defendants with the $1,315 paid as the second installment upon the first contract, upon the theory that such payment had been prematurely made, and determined that the lien claimants were entitled to personal judgment against said Odell and Jurian in the sum of $2,263 with interest, "to be ratably distributed among them according to their respective claims."

The evidence showed, and the court found, that the several claims of lien involved in the consolidated actions were filed upon the dates following, viz.: The claim of O'Brien Lumber Company, June 25, 1913; the claim of Hubbard & Carmichael, July 2, 1913 (embraced in the Hubbard action); the claims of G. J. Guth, Fred L. Peterson, Dudfield Lumber Company, and McDonald and Burke (embraced in the suit of G. J. Guth), April 1, 1913; the several claims involved in the suit of Walter G. Mathewson (Ayrer, Peterson, Graybill, Conti, Judson, McDaniel, and Taylor) were filed partly on the 28th and partly on the 29th of March, 1913; the claim of E. C. Power, July 19, 1913, and the claim of Charles C. Minton, July 23, 1913.

From the findings made the trial court deduced the conclusion of law that the several parties plaintiff were entitled to judgment foreclosing their respective claims of lien in the following amounts, viz.: T. B. Hubbard, $1,972.28; E. C. Power, $125; G. J. Guth, $627.55; W. G. Mathewson, $678.60; C. C. Minton, $337.90. It was further adjudged that the several parties plaintiff were entitled to interest upon their respective claims of lien from the 10th day of April, 1913. Judgment was also entered against the defendant Maryland Casualty Company for the full amount of each and all of the claims, with interest, which aggregated the sum of $2,522.27, and the judgment provided that the liens should be first satisfied to the extent of that sum by sale of the premises, and that execution should thereupon issue against the surety for the deficiency, if any, remaining.

The appeal is from the judgment and from the order denying motion for a new trial by the defendants Odell and Jurian, as owners, and the Maryland Casualty Company, as surety.

[1] The contention made upon behalf of the owners, Odell and Jurian, that the judgment is against law in so far as it charges the owners, defendants Odell and Jurian, with the sum of $1,315 found to have been "prematurely" paid to the contractor in advance of the time stipulated therefor in the contract and after notice to withhold payment had been served upon the defendants is based upon the fact that section 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not now, as it did prior to its amendment in 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 1315), expressly make it "the duty of the person who contracted with the contractor to * * * withhold from his contractor * * * sufficient money due, or that may become due such contractor, * * to answer" the claim of any person and any lien that might be filed therefor for labor or material or both furnished to the contractor, when such claim was evidenced by a written notice to the owner showing the character and value of the material or labor furnished the contractor. Instead of making it the duty of the owner upon receipt of such notice to withold a sufficient sum out of the money due or to become due to the contractor to satisfy the claim, the statute now provides that "upon such notice being given it shall be lawful for the owner to withhold," etc. Because of this change in the wording of the statute, it is argued that it was not the legislative intent to make it mandatory upon the owner to withhold payment after notice, and that therefore the doctrine of "premature payments" as formerly applied in mechanic's lien cases has no application to the facts of the present case. This contention, we think, must be sustained.

Construing the statute in question as amended in 1911, our Supreme Court, in the case of Roystone v. Darling, 171 Cal. 526, 154 Pac. 15, declares that it permits the owner "to contract freely" for such improvements as he desires to make upon his property "upon such terms as he may deem to his best interest. All it exacts from him as an exemption from such liability, and in order to make his contract effective, is that it shall provide a reasonable security for the constitutional lien given for labor and materials furnished to his contractor." In short, as pointed out by Mr. Justice Henshaw in a concurring opinion in the case last cited, the owner is not prohibited by the statute as it exists to-day, and as it existed at the time of the execution of the contract and the furnishing of the labor and materials, from paying the whole amount of the contract price in advance of the completion of the work. This being so, it follows that the statute as amended does not now, save at the option of the owner, secure unto persons giving the requisite notice an equitable garnishment upon the moneys due or to become due to the contractor, and consequently it must be held that the trial court erred when, in effect, it adjudged that the defendants Odell and Jurian, as owners, were as a matter of law estopped from asserting that they did not have in their hands the sum of $1,315, which they had in fact paid to the contractor, even though the same was not due at the time of its payment or at the time of the service of the notice to withhold. As previously pointed out, the claim of lien of Hubbard & Carmichael was filed for record on July 2, 1913, that of E. C. Power on July 19, 1913, and that of C. C. Minton on July 23, 1913. It is contended that the trial court erred in allowing these particular claims because it was shown that they were not filed within the time limited by law.

[2, 3] The plaintiff Hubbard sues as assignor to foreclose two liens, one the Hubbard & Carmichael claim for $557, and the other the O'Brien Lumber Company claim for $1,415.28. It will be noted that no attack is made upon the O'Brien claim. The limit of time fixed by statute for the filing of liens where no notice of completion or cessation from labor has been filed is 90 days after the actual completion of the building, and continued cessation from labor for a period of 30 days is deemed to be equivalent to completion for the purpose of fixing the time within which liens may be filed. It has been held that this time allowance for the filing of liens as prescribed by the section last cited is limited to 90 days after the expiration of 30 days from the date of cessation of labor. In other words, the lien claimant has 120 days from the cessation of labor within which to file his lien. Sunset Lumber Co. v. Bachelder, 167 Cal. 512, 140 Pac. 35, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 664.

The plaintiff Hubbard's complaint, in so far as it concerned the claim of lien of Hubbard & Carmichael, alleged that the building was completed on June 20, 1913. The answer of the defendants squarely denied the allegation of the complaint that the building was completed on June 20, 1913, and then averred "the fact to be that on or about March 10, 1913, both of the contracts theretofore entered into by said contractor * * * were abandoned by said contractor, and that said contractor * * * ceased work upon said building and that the defendants A. Jurian and G. W. Odell were compelled to, and did proceed to, complete the erection and construction of said building." The evidence, however, shows, and the trial court found, that work ceased upon the building on March 1, 1913.

[4] It is contended upon behalf of the respondent Hubbard that the claim of lien of Hubbard & Carmichael which was filed on July 2, 1913, was within time because it was filed within 120 days from March 10, 1913, "on or about" which date the answer alleged work on the building was abandoned. In this behalf it is urged that this date, by reason of the averments of the answer, was admitted by the defendants to be the date when work ceased upon the building, and that as a consequence the trial court should have accepted that date as the time of cessation of labor despite evidence to the contrary, and that the finding of the trial court that work ceased upon the building on March 1, 1913, was, in so far as the Hubbard & Carmichael claim was concerned, unauthorized, and cannot therefore be permitted to prevail over the admitted fact.

In support of this contention we are cited to the familiar rule that an admission made in the pleading is binding on the party making it; that a fact admitted by the pleadings of an opponent need not be proved; and that any evidence introduced contrary to such admission must be disregarded by the trial court when making its finding. In our opinion this rule has no application of the situation presented by the pleadings in the present case. The burden of proof was upon the plaintiff to show that his assignor, Hubbard & Carmichael, had filed their claim of lien within the statutory time after constructive completion of the building. Bloom's Law of Mechanics, Supp. p. 258. The answer of the defendants squarely and sufficiently denied the allegation of the complaint that the building was completed on June 20, 1913. This denial made it incumbent upon the plaintiff to proffer proof showing that the claim of lien had been filed within time. Moreover, the phrase "on or about March 10th," as used in the answer, is indefinite and uncertain, and might therefore consistently mean several days before or after that date, and, inasmuch as the exact date of the completion of the building or the cessation of work thereon was a material fact to be determined by the court below as a foundation for the allowance or rejection of the claims of lien, it cannot be said that the allegation in question was such a definite admission of fact as would preclude the necessity for the taking of evidence or the making a finding thereon.

The finding of the trial court that work on the building ceased on March 1, 1913, and that such cessation continued for more than a period of 30 days, being sufficiently supported by evidence, it follows that the Hubbard & Carmichael lien, which was filed July 2, 1913 (123 days after March 1, 1913), was just 3 days too late, and therefore should not have been allowed. The condition of the pleadings, evidence, and findings with reference to the Power and Minton claim of lien is identical with the condition of the pleadings, evidence, and findings concerning the Hubbard & Carmichael claim of lien, and, inasmuch as the Power and Minton claim were filed for record respectively on July 19 and July 23, 1913, manifestly they were respectively filed 20 and 24 days too late, and should not therefore have been allowed.

It is claimed that because the building was actually completed by the owners, Odell and Jurian, after the abandonment by the contractor, and no notice of completion having been filed, that the three claims of lien of Hubbard & Carmichael, Power, and Minton, having been filed within 90 days after actual completion of the building by the owners, were filed in time, notwithstanding the fact as shown by the evidence and found by the court, that there had been a continued and uninterrupted cessation of labor on the building commencing March 1, 1913.

[5] In response to this contention, it will suffice to say that it has been held that a subsequent completion of the building by the owner after a 30 days' cessation from labor thereon by the contractor does not operate as an extension of time for the filing of liens claimed under and created by the original contract. Johnson v. La Grave, 102 Cal. 324, 36 Pac. 651.

If our conclusion concerning the status of the several claims of lien and stop notices be correct, it follows that the judgment was correct only to the extent of allowing and foreclosing the liens included in the Mathewson suit, aggregating the sum of $678, and the several claims of lien involved in the Guth action aggregating $627, and the claim of lien of O'Brien included in the Hubbard action, amounting to $1,415.28, all of which make the sum total of $2,720.28. Incidentally it should be noted that defendants Odell and Jurian make some contention that the Minton claims should not have been allowed in full because the evidence shows that only a part of the materials furnished by Minton was used in the construction and completion of the building. The record shows that all of the materials included in this claim were furnished to be used in the building, and that the portion which was not used in the building was left on the premises at the time of the abandonment of the work by the contractor, and that the owners refused to permit Minton to remove them. Therefore it may be fairly said that to all intents and purposes all of the materials included in the Minton claim were not only furnished to be used, but were retained by the owners in the completion of the building.

It is contended upon behalf of the defendants Odell and Jurian that the claim of lien filed by Fred L. Peterson and embraced in the suit of Guth is insufficient in form and substance, and should not therefore have been allowed. This particular claim of lien states that "said claimant furnished plumbing work and materials at the agreed price of $130; * * * that said plumbing work and materials amount to the sum of $130." The evidence shows that the agreed price of that work was $165, but that Power was prevented from finishing his contract because of the abandonment of the original contract and that the reasonable value of the labor and material furnished by Power up to the time of the cessation of labor was $130. The statement of the character and value of the materials furnished in Power's claim of lien was substantially true, and that is all that is required to give it validity. Barrett-Hicks v. Glas, 14 Cal. App. 289, 111 Pac. 760.

[6] It is contended that the trial court erred in allowing interest upon the several claims of lien commencing April 10, 1913. We think the point is well taken. Counsel for the respective parties have not indicated to us in their briefs why interest was allowed from this particular date, and our investigation of the record has not disclosed the reason for fixing that date as the time from which interest should commence to run, and so far as we have been able to ascertain, all of the claims were for labor or materials furnished under contracts where no time of payment was fixed other than that which might be implied from the transaction itself. Interest, therefore, should have been allowed upon the several claims of lien which were properly proved only from the time each action was commenced to foreclose the several liens. And this is so because at the time the several actions were commenced to foreclose the several claims of lien, the lien claimants' right to recover upon the open account upon which the liens rested was vested in them, and was capable of being made certain by calculation. Consequently they were entitled to recover interest upon their several claims from the date of the commencement of the several actions. Pacific Mutual, etc., Co. v. Fisher, 106 Cal. 224, 39 Pac. 758.

A cursory examination of the record shows that the several actions were not all instituted on one and the same day, and we do not feel called upon to make a detailed search of a voluminous and poorly indexed record for the purpose of ascertaining when the several actions were respectively instituted. In view of the fact that the judgment must be modified, as will be hereinafter indicated, the task of ascertaining the exact date of the institution of the several actions for the purpose of computing interest upon the liens which were properly allowed, and the character of the contract upon which they depend, will be more readily and perhaps more accurately performed by the court below and counsel for the respective parties.

[7] Upon behalf of the defendant Maryland Casualty Company it is urged that the provisions of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure require that a bond be given to secure the payment of claims arising under a building contract in order to relieve the owner from liability to lienors in excess of the stipulated contract price is unconstitutional in that the Legislature has not only exacted a bond, but it has gone further and prescribed as well that:

> "No change or alteration of the work or modification of any such contract between the owner and his contractor shall release or exonerate any surety or sureties upon a bond given under this section."

In other words, the surety must give a bond conditioned that lienors will be paid irrespective of what changes may be made in the original contract. Counsel argues that if this law is held to be valid, there is then one contractual field in which it is impossible for three persons, owner, contractor, and surety, to enter into a contract the obligations of which are definitely established in advance. The constitutionality of this section was upheld in the case of Roystone Co. v. Darling, 171 Cal. 526, 154 Pac. 15, and while this particular point was not discussed, what was there said will, we think, answer the objection made here, viz.:

> "The penalty of the bond is to be not less than one-half the amount of the contract price. This measures the obligation and the liability of the surety."

Clearly this removes any doubt as to the definite character of the surety's obligation.

[8] Another point urged by counsel for the surety company is that the bond given in connection with the contract for the erection of the second story of the building is void upon the ground that work was commenced upon this second story before the bond and contract were filed. This point is determined adversely to the contention of counsel in the case of Hammond Lumber Co. v. Willis, 171 Cal. 565, 153 Pac. 947. In that case neither the bond nor the contract was filed. The court held that the burden of the surety is not increased by the omission of the owner to record the bond, nor is the bond rendered void by such omission. Upon this phase of the case, also, it is contended that the two building contracts, dated, respectively, September 23, 1912, and December 10, 1912, were separate and distinct contracts and the two bonds given to secure the same were equally separate and distinct obligations on the part of the Maryland Casualty Company, and the trial court erred in refusing to treat them as separate contracts.

The contract for the second story is, we think, a modification of the original contract. In Barrett-Hicks Co. v. Glas, 9 Cal. App. 491, 99 Pac. 856, the facts were similar to the present case. In that case a contract was made for adding a second story to a building in course of construction, and, this having been done without the consent of the surety, the court held it to be such an alteration of the original contract as to discharge the surety from liability. It is manifest that if the court had regarded this contract for the second story as an entirely separate and independent contract, it would not have affected the liability of the surety upon the original contract in any manner. It was for the very reason that the court considered it an alteration or modification of the original contract that the surety was held to be discharged from liability. In the case at bar, the surety company did consent to this alteration or modification of the original contract and signified its assent thereto by uniting in the execution of the contract for the second story. This contract for the second story being simply a modification of the original contract, it was not required to be filed at all, and therefore it is inconsequential whether it was filed before or after work on the second story was commenced, as it is only the original contract which the statute requires to be filed. Section 1183, Code Civ. Proc.

[9] It is contended that the surety was released by the owner from all obligation under its bond given to secure the performance of the contract dated September 23, 1912, by reason of the alleged premature payment of the installment of $1,315 by the owners to the contractor, which money was used by the contractor to pay his own personal debts, and that such payment was in contravention of the terms of the contract, and resulted in prejudice to the surety. This contention is based upon the fact that the bond in suit contained a covenant that the obligee (defendants Odell and Jurian) would "keep and perform each and every of the matters and things set forth in said contract to be by the obligee kept or performed, at the times and in the manner as in said contract specified."

It is the rule generally that a surety has the right to stand upon the terms of his contract of suretyship, and that he will be exonerated to the extent that he has been prejudiced by any violation of the covenants of the contract, but we are forced to the conclusion that this general rule cannot be made to apply to the contract of suretyship in suit here. And this is so, we think, because of the fact that the bond in question was executed pursuant and in obedience to the requirements of a statute which, although it permits such a bond to contain conditions for the performance of the contract, nevertheless also expressly provides that:

> "No * * * modification of any * * * contract between the owner and his contractor shall release or exonerate any surety * * * upon any bond given under this section." Code Civ. Proc. § 1183.

It will thus be seen that the covenant of the bond in suit concerning premature payments by the owner was, in so far as it may have been intended to limit the right of lien claimants to recover on the bond, in excess of and contrary to the letter and spirit of the statute. Therefore, in so far as the lien claimants are concerned, it must be regarded as surplusage. Assuming that the evidence shows a premature payment, as found by the trial court, still such payment was, in effect, no more nor less than a modification of the terms of the contract, and consequently will not avail in the face of the express statutory inhibition, as against the lien claimants to defeat the bond. The surety attacks the judgment on the ground that it is made liable for any deficiency arising after the sale of the property. This is expressly provided for in the Code (section 1194, Code Civ. Proc.). Spreen, the contractor, was personally liable for the whole amount due, and it follows that the surety is liable to the same extent.

[10] Finally it is contended upon behalf of the surety company defendant that only those persons who have perfected claims of lien are entitled to recover upon the bond. This contention, we think, must be sustained. The bond in suit was executed in response to the requirements of the statute. It is therefore a statutory bond in the strictest sense, and under the familiar and well-settled rule parties claiming the benefit of the obligation of the bond must show a substantial compliance with the conditions of the statute under which the bond was given. Section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure, under which the bond was given, is part and parcel of title 4, chapter 2, of that Code, which relates exclusively to "liens of mechanics and others upon real property," and section 1187 of the same Code and chapter requires that every person claiming the benefits of the provisions of the designated chapter must file a verified lien within the time specified by that section. Obviously, the several Code sections of the chapter in question must be considered and construed together, and when so considered and construed, it must be held that the provision of section 1183 that the required bond shall "in addition to any conditions for the performance of the contract, be also conditioned for the payment in full of the claims of all persons performing labor, or furnishing materials," etc., has reference to the "claims" of lien specified in section 1187 and required to be filed for record within a designated time and to the "claims" which the statute further says must be verified by the oath of the claimant or some other person. Richardson, etc., Co. v. Chicago, etc., Co., 170 Pac. 856.

The bond exacted by the statute in question has direct relation to the lien provided for and permitted in the fundamental law of the state (Roystone v. Darling, 171 Cal. 542, 154 Pac. 15), and the requirement of the statute that the bond shall be so conditioned as to give "any and all persons who perform labor upon or furnish materials * * * a right of action to recover upon said bond in any suit brought to foreclose the liens provided for in this chapter or in a separate suit * * * on said bond" evidently was intended to give to the lien claimant the right to resort to the sum secured by the bond as an additional lien fund or security for the satisfaction of the lien. That such was the legislative intent and purpose is indicated, we think, by the remainder of the sentence just quoted from the Code section last referred to, which declares that:

> "Then [upon the giving of the required bond] the court must, where it would be equitable so to do, restrict the recovery under such liens to an aggregate amount equal to the amount found to be due from the owner to the contractor, and render judgment against the contractor and his sureties on said bond for any deficiency or difference there may remain between said amount so found to be due to the contractor and the whole amount found to be due to claimants for such labor or materials or both."

While the first portion of the quoted sentence of the Code section under consideration makes mention only of the "claims" of persons performing labor, etc., nevertheless, when read and construed in its entirety, it is manifest that the "claims" referred to are claims of lien, and contemplate only the claims of lien created in the manner and within the time specified by section 1187. It must be conceded, of course, that the mere furnishing of labor or material to be used in the construction of a building while giving the right to claim a lien will not alone suffice to create the lien, for until the claim of lien is perfected in compliance with the statute "it is a mere inchoate right personal to the individual, which he may choose to perfect or not at his pleasure, and which, until perfected, has no tangible existence. * * *" Mills v. La Verne Land Co., 97 Cal. 254, 32 Pac. 169, 33 Am. St. Rep. 168. This being so, then the proviso of the statute that the required bond shall be conditioned for the payment in full of "claims" of all persons who furnish labor or material and to give to such persons a right of action to recover in any suit brought to foreclose the liens provided for or in a separate suit brought on the bond must mean that only perfected claims of lien may be litigated either in a single suit against the property and the bond, or in a separate suit against the bond alone. In other words, the statute contemplates that the plaintiff may at his option embrace within an action to foreclose his lien against the property a cause of action resting upon the claim of lien against the bond; or at his option he may institute separate actions—one to foreclose his lien against the property, and the other for the satisfaction of his lien against the bond—but whether combined or separately instituted, the fundamental basis of the cause of action in each instance is the existence of a perfected claim of lien.

Under this construction of the statute the surety will be liable only for the excess of the amount of the lien, if any, over the sum found to be due to the contractor. Any other construction would ignore the settled constitutional and statutory conception of the scope, purpose, and effect of the mechanic's lien law of this state; would violate the familiar equitable rules regulating the relative rights of principal and surety, and also offer opportunity and incentive to collusion between materialmen, etc., and the contractor whereby, if so minded, they could readily and without fear of redress agree to the obvious detriment of the surety that no liens would be perfected against the property to the end that the contractor might be paid in full and the surety alone resorted to for the satisfaction of outstanding claims.

Our conclusion, therefore, is that the failure of the several lien claimants in the present case to perfect their liens within the statutory time operated to defeat their right to recover upon the bond in suit just as effectively as such failure operated to defeat their right to recover upon the claim of lien itself.

It follows from what we have said that the judgment must be and it is hereby modified by striking therefrom the sum of $1,019.90, which is the aggregate sum of the several claims of lien which we have found were filed too late, and also by striking therefrom the sum of $1,315, which the court erroneously charged to the defendants Odell and Jurian as a premature payment. As thus modified the judgment will stand affirmed in favor of the plaintiff Guth in the sum of $627, the plaintiff Mathewson $678, and in favor of the plaintiff Hubbard & Carmichael in the sum of $1,415.28, which is the amount of the O'Brien Lumber Company's lien. Interest, of course, is to be computed upon the claims of lien to have been duly perfected from the date of the institution of the action in each instance.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

On Petition for Rehearing, Jan. 12, 1918.

PER CURIAM. In the original opinion heretofore filed in this case it was stated that:

> "The condition of the pleadings, evidence, and findings with reference to the Power and Minton claims of lien is identical with the condition of the pleadings, evidence, and findings concerning the Hubbard & Carmichael claim of lien, and inasmuch as the Power and Minton claims were filed for record respectively on July 19 and July 23, 1913, manifestly they were respectively filed 20 and 24 days too late, and should not therefore have been allowed."

This statement was inaccurate in so far as it applies to the Minton case.

A further investigation of the record shows that Minton filed a claim of lien on July 23, 1913, for the sum of $337.90, which recited that the lien was claimed for materials furnished to Odell and Jurian, the owners, on or about March 31, 1913. This claim of lien against the owners was made and based, apparently, upon the fact that the owners had used a portion of the material which had been furnished in the first instance to the contractor and left upon the premises when the building was abandoned by the contractor, and which the owners subsequently refused to return to Minton upon demand. The theory of this claim of lien, in other words, was that it was founded upon an implied contract directly with the owners.

The record apparently sustains this theory, and there is some evidence that the materials remaining upon the abandonment of the building and retained by the owners were valued at $126.50. The record shows that the building was actually completed by the owners June 15, 1913, and therefore, upon the theory stated, the claim of lien in question, filed July 23, 1913, was perfected within time and to the extent of the established value of the materials shown to have been retained, namely, $126.50, was properly allowed and should be included in the judgment against the owners, but not in the judgment against the surety company defendant, because Minton did not sue said defendant on this claim.

On Petition for Rehearing, Jan. 29, 1918.

PER CURIAM. In the above-entitled action the lien claimants Mathewson and Guth, whose actions to foreclose their respective liens were consolidated with those of several other lien claimants, have filed a petition for rehearing in which the only point made is that the opinion as originally filed failed to directly make any award for costs incurred upon the appeal, and that, inasmuch as the judgment of the lower court was materially modified as to some of the lien claimants, the costs of appeal, unless otherwise directed, would fall upon all of the respondents under the provisions of the rules of the Supreme Court and District Court of Appeal, which provide that:

> "In all cases in which the judgment or order appealed from is reversed or modified and the order of reversal or modification contains no directions as to the costs of appeal, the clerk will enter upon the record and insert in the remittitur a judgment that the appellant recover the costs of appeal." Rule 23 (119 Pac. xiii).

While it is true that the judgment appealed from was materially modified by the original opinion in so far as certain designated lien claimants were concerned, nevertheless it was the intent and purpose of the opinion to affirm the judgment in so far as it related to the claims of Guth, Mathewson, and the O'Brien Lumber Company, and while that intent and purpose is fairly inferable from the concluding paragraph of the opinion, nevertheless to the end that there may be no doubt upon that point we will say that the judgment allowing the Guth, Mathewson, and O'Brien Lumber Company claims was affirmed in all of its substantial features, and therefore it is directed that these particular claimants should be and they are hereby relieved from the costs of appeal.

The petition for rehearing is denied, as is also the petition of the defendant Maryland Casualty Company.

---

175 Cal. 51; 177 Cal. 93

In re McCOWAN. (Cr. 1988.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 3, 1917. On the Merits. Dec. 28, 1917.)

1. Courts 🔑485 — Supreme Court — Jurisdiction of Disbarment Proceedings on Transfer from District Court of Appeal.

On transfer from a District Court of Appeal, the Supreme Court has jurisdiction of disbarment proceedings against an attorney.

On the Merits.

2. Courts 🔑488(1)—Disbarment Proceedings—Transfer from District Court of Appeal to Supreme Court—Acceptance of Determination of Issues of Fact.

The Supreme Court, on transfer from a District Court of Appeal of disbarment proceedings against an attorney, will accept the opinion of the Court of Appeal as a correct determination of the issues of fact.

3. Attorney and Client 🔑42—Suspension of District Attorney—Hampering Administration of Criminal Law — Abusive Language Regarding Judge—Statutes.

Where a district attorney, instead of prosecuting for rape, exerted his best efforts to secure provision for prosecutrix and her child from defendant on the promise that he would use his influence to have defendant put on probation, thus hampering and subverting the administration of the criminal law, and also used abusive and offensive language regarding the judge of the superior court without a shadow of justification, for such violation of his duties as attorney, as defined by Code Civ. Proc. § 282, subds. 1, 2, he will be suspended from practice for a year, section 287, subd. 2, specifying as a ground for disbarment any violation of the oath taken by an attorney or of his duties as such, the extreme penalty of disbarment not being called for, because the misconduct arose rather from ignorance of fundamental legal ethics than from deliberate intention to accomplish evil ends.

Shaw, J., dissenting.

In Bank. In the matter of the disbarment of Barclay McCowan. On transfer from the District Court of Appeal. Ordered that respondent be suspended from practicing in any of the courts of the state for a year from final judgment.

C. V. Anderson, C. L. Claflin, Geo. E. Whitaker, F. E. Borton, and C. E. Arnold, all of Bakersfield (John S. Partridge, of San Francisco, of counsel), for petitioner. Barclay McCowan, of Bakersfield, in pro. per. James F. Farraher, Francis J. Heney, and Marshall Stimson, all of Los Angeles (Alfred Siemon, of Bakersfield, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM. [1] This matter was first presented to this court for its hearing and determination. By this court it was transferred to the Court of Appeal of the Second Appellate District. There it was heard and decided. Thereafter application was made that the matter be transferred to this court for hearing and determination, which application was granted. At the time set for hearing respondent interposed a preliminary objection to this court proceeding with the hearing, based on the contention that it was without jurisdiction so to do. The matter was submitted upon briefs of the respective parties to be filed. While the matter was thus pending this court had occasion to consider and determine it in the matter of the admission of Alonzo Wells to practice law. 163 Pac. 657. The detailed and exhaustive treatment there given to the question relieves from the necessity of doing more than making a reference to that decision. For the reasons therein expressed the preliminary objection to the jurisdiction of this court to hear and determine the matter is overruled, and the cause is ordered placed upon the July, 1917, calendar of the court for hearing and determination on the merits.

On the Merits.

SLOSS, J. This is a disbarment proceeding which was heard by the District Court of Appeal for the Second Appellate District. In the course of a trial consuming several days a great mass of testimony was presented to that court, which thereafter rendered its judgment denying the relief prayed for in the accusation. On the application of the Kern County Bar Association, which had preferred the charges, the proceeding was transferred to this court. A preliminary objection to our jurisdiction was overruled, and the matter was brought on for hearing on its merits. Both parties agreed to submit the proceeding upon the testimony introduced before the District Court of Appeal.

The opinion filed by that court reads as follows:

"An accusation filed in the Supreme Court and later transferred to this court for hearing charged the respondent with having been guilty of acts and conduct which were not only in violation of his duty as an attorney at law, but also such as involved moral turpitude on his part while holding the office of district attorney of the county of Kern. The accusation first charged that respondent solicited money from the defendant in a criminal case pending in the superior court, which money was to be paid in consideration that the official conduct of the respondent as district attorney should be influenced thereby. It is further charged that when the matter of the alleged misconduct of respondent was brought to the attention of the grand jury, and while the matter was under investigation, respondent attempted to intimidate, coerce, and control the members of the grand jury with reference to the action that they should take therein; that he charged that one of the jurors had been indicted for a felony in the state of New Mexico and was not a fit or proper person to sit on the jury, notwithstanding that respondent knew that the juror referred to had been acquitted of the charge in New Mexico; that he attempted to influence others of the jurors by statements designed to intimidate them; that he stated to the foreman of the grand jury that four of the jury members were in a conspiracy to deprive him of his office; that that conspiracy was made with one of the judges of the superior court; that during the time that charges against him were being investigated the respondent insisted upon being present in person or by deputy before the grand jury, and that he or his deputy caused to be prepared certain reports which it was urged that the grand jury should adopt in exoneration of respondent, and that as a result of the intimidation and coercion a report of the jury was finally made as prepared by the deputy of respondent. Another of the charges made in its specifications alleged that while the grand jury was investigating the McCowan matter respondent stated and charged that one of the judges of the superior court was 'nothing but a crook'; that at a later date respondent caused to be published and circulated a certain paper called the Kern County Liberator, which was owned and published by the said respondent, and which paper in the issue of July 31, 1915, contained slanderous references to the judge of the superior court and his action in the matter of the case of People v. E. W. McCutchen, which was the case wherein respondent was accused of having solicited money. The particular details of these charges were fully set out in the accusation, to which an answer was filed raising issue by denial as to any improper act having been committed in connection with the McCutchen Case, and setting forth various statements by way of claimed justification as the same appear more particularly illustrated by the testimony of respondent, which is hereinafter in general substance set out.

"Preliminarily, the following facts may be stated as to which there was no dispute either in the pleadings or testimony: In August, 1914, one E. W. McCutchen was indicted by the grand jury of Kern county for the crime of rape alleged to have been committed with a girl named Effie Thompson, who was at that time about the age of fifteen years; that the said McCutchen left the state of California and remained away from the state about six or seven months; that his whereabouts were unknown to the district attorney; that he returned to Bakersfield about the 20th of April, 1915; that both he, his brothers and wife, had several conferences with respondent as district attorney; that McCutchen was released on bail acceptable to the district attorney; that before McCutchen made any appearance in court for arraignment or other proceedings on the indictment, the father of Effie Thompson brought a civil action as guardian ad litem for the girl, claiming a large amount of damages alleged to have been suffered by reason of the criminal act of the said McCutchen; that respondent consulted with the attorneys in the civil action with the end in view that they should abandon that cause; that the defendant McCutchen made his appearance in the criminal action, and that thereafter copies of certain affidavits were presented to the judge of the superior court, in which it was charged on behalf of the McCutchens that the respondent had solicited money from them as a condition to favorable action being taken in the McCutchen Case; that the grand jury proceeded to investigate the matter; that during the investigation the deputy of respondent insisted that it was the right of the district attorney to be present at the hearing, and that such deputy did remain during all of the time that testimony was being taken; that thereafter a new indictment was presented against McCutchen for the same charge, and that, after two trials had resulted in a disagreement of the juries, defendant on his third trial was acquitted.

"The foregoing matters, as mentioned, were among the facts about which there was no dispute. It may be added that there was no denial made by the respondent as to the statement attributed to him as having been uttered against the judge of the superior court. In support of the accusation, the testimony of J. B. McCutchen, a brother of E. W. McCutchen, was in substance as follows: That some time in the spring of 1915 he had a conversation with respondent, the district attorney of Kern county, when respondent asked him if he knew where his brother E. W. McCutchen was; that upon his replying that he did not know of his whereabouts respondent had said that E. W. McCutchen was a good man, a friend of his, and ought to be there, as it was his place and home, and that if he did return he would make it as easy for him as he could; that the witness had told the wife of E. W. McCutchen of this conversation; that at a later time, in an interview had with the district attorney, the latter had said that he needed money and that the McCutchen brothers would all have to 'dig up'; that he wanted money from them. The testimony of at least one other brother of McCutchen was corroborative of this testimony, and all suggesting directly the inference that the respondent proposed to assist E. W. McCutchen to escape punishment for the crime with which he was charged in consideration that money should be paid for the service.

"Mrs. Kate McCutchen, wife of E. W. McCutchen, testified that about the 1st of April, 1915, she telephoned to the district attorney and arranged for an appointment with him at 3 o'clock on the following day; that when she called at his office at the appointed time he said he was glad to see her and asked what the trouble was; that she replied that she had come to see about her husband, because, after what J. B. McCutchen had told her, she thought the district attorney would befriend her husband and help him get out of the 'blackmailing business'; that Mr. McCowan replied that he had 'tried to give J. B. the hint, but that he didn't take it'; that he said he was a friend of the witness' husband and would do all he could for him; that the witness asked him how he would do that, and he replied that there were various ways; that he told her she need not tell him about the 'rotten bunch' that her husband had gotten into; that he knew all about them, and was going to help him get out of it; that he then asked where the husband was, and the witness had told him that she did not know; that along about the 20th of April the accused McCutchen returned to Bakersfield, and the witness called up McCowan on the phone; that he told her to come to the office at 3 o'clock, which she did; that she there told him that Ed, her husband, was at home, and he said, 'I am awfully glad,' and seemed overjoyed with the news; that he then said, 'I am going to fix this all up for him as soon as I can; you people must be patient; this is a serious matter and it is going to take a little time; you go home and tell Ed to lay low until you hear further from me;' that the next day he called up the witness on the 'phone, and had some conversation, and told her she would hear from him again; that he called up the next day and told her to get her husband's brothers in to go on her husband's bond; that a few weeks later, while she was in the country, Mr. McCowan called her on the phone and said, 'Don't you know your good friend Barclay McCowan? I have good news for you; I can settle that suit for $500;' that he told her to tell Ed to trust him and that everything would be fixed up; that she knew at that time the civil suit had been filed on behalf of the Thompson girl against her husband.

"A. A. De Ligne, a witness called on behalf of petitioner, testified that on or about the 19th day of June, 1915, he had a conversation with Barclay McCowan in which reference was made to Judge Farmer; that the conversation took place in a restaurant on the main street of Bakersfield, 'the French Restaurant, I think they call it'; that he was sitting at one of the tables alone, and that Mr. McCowan and Mr. Farraher came over to his table after they had finished their luncheon; that Mr. McCowan introduced Mr. Farraher to him, and that Mr. McCowan stated to Mr. Farraher, 'I have been telling De Ligne what a crook his friend Judge Farmer is;' that he resented the statement made by McCowan and that there was a little altercation about it.

"The accused, Barclay McCowan, testifying in his own behalf, denied that he had ever offered or suggested that money should be paid to him for services in the McCutchen Case or as a condition to his favorable action in that matter as district attorney. He testified that Mrs. McCutchen had come to him and told him that she had taken the child in the matter and wanted to keep it and wanted to get her husband back to help raise it; that he had replied, 'If Ed will come back here and adopt this child and will provide for Effie Thompson and will plead guilty, I will do anything I can legally do to get him probation;' that about two weeks after that time Mrs. McCutchen came to his office again and gave him to understand, not in direct words, that her husband had come home; that he had instructed her to have McCutchen come to his office and arrange to give bond; that the next day that proceeding was carried out; that following that he had a conversation in a downtown office with E. W. McCutchen regarding the charge against the latter; that upon that occasion McCutchen had made a complete disclosure of his relations with the Thompson girl; that McCutchen had said, 'I will do anything you say,' and that he (McCowan) had replied, 'All right; you plead guilty, adopt the child, and provide for the girl;' that very soon after this John W. Thompson, the father of Effie Thompson, commenced a civil action against McCutchen for a large amount of damages on behalf of Effie Thompson; that he (McCowan) was irritated because this suit had been brought, and that he told McCutchen he would go to the firm of attorneys appearing in the action and talk over the matter and see what he could do toward getting the suit dismissed; that he did go to these attorneys and 'told them of the terms on which I had got McCutchen to come back to Kern county; I told them that he was out of the state and they could not find him, that two sheriffs had failed to find him; that he had come back on the understanding that he was to adopt the child, that he was to provide for the girl, and that he would plead guilty;' that the attorneys agreed they would dismiss the suit if security was given for the provision to be made for the girl. The witness testified: 'It was suggested, I believe, that the girl be put in Notre Dame Convent until she was 21 years old, and receive a reasonable sum of money at that time. I said, "Suppose the four brothers will sign an agreement to this effect." Foster said, "All right."' That an understanding was arrived at in accordance with the suggestions he had made, but that McCutchen did not at any time provide or carry out what he had agreed to do respecting the making of provision for the girl; that McCutchen continually said that he had no money, and that McCowan told him that he must get money, saying, 'You have promised to take care of this girl and you must get some money; the court must be a party to the making of whatever agreement we make, and it cannot be made unless the court does approve of it; and if you apply for probation you must show the court you are worthy of it, and if you are not worthy of it the court will not accord it to you;' that McCutchen had said he would see what he could do, and later came back and said he could raise a thousand dollars; that he (McCowan) had replied, 'You better find you can raise another thousand; you seem to be imposing upon my friendship, upon my kindness; if you had been thrown into jail when you came back here, as the ordinary course would be, perhaps you would realize the seriousness of your position;' that he (McCowan) obtained an extension of time within which an answer might be filed in the civil action, but that McCutchen made an appearance in that action and employed certain attorneys with whom the witness stated he was not willing to have negotiations; that one of the McCutchen brothers had offered to give him a $100, which he had refused, and had said, 'Ed McCutchen could not give me a million dollars;' that after McCutchen employed attorneys no further negotiations looking toward securing for him a probationary sentence were had; that the matter was taken before the grand jury for the purpose of having a new indictment returned because of a defect in the proceedings of a previous grand jury which had returned the first indictment. The witness further testified regarding statements affecting the judge of the superior court; that he had said to Mr. De Ligne, on an occasion prior to that referred to as the restaurant talk by the witness De Ligne, 'I don't want to talk to you. If the testimony of H. E. Johnstone is true, that you and Judge Farmer have been traveling around this state in collusion with an ex-convict for the purpose of liberating a child-rapist and of destroying my efficiency as district attorney, and ruining me and my character, I think you are a pair of crooks; I don't want to talk to you.' Further, that he had told De Ligne that Judge Farmer had been the bitterest enemy he had in the world; that his bias and prejudice had blinded him to take unjust and outrageous action. The witness made no denial of the conversation having occurred in the restaurant in terms as stated by De Ligne. He said that in all of his actions in the McCutchen Case he was not prompted by any motive except to cause reparation to be made by McCutchen for the wrong he had done to Effie Thompson. At another point in his testimony he stated that his purpose was to save from wreck four lives, to wit, McCutchen's, Mrs. McCutchen's, Effie Thompson's, and the child of the latter. It appeared from this testimony that McCutchen had afterwards had two trials on the charge, in both of which the jury disagreed, and that he was finally acquitted. He further said: 'At the same time I deemed it my duty as district attorney and in the interest of justice to do exactly what I was doing, in view of the circumstances and conditions in Kern county at that time; and I would believe it to be my duty to do exactly the same thing if the same circumstances and conditions confronted me again.' He added, in another answer, that the character of the Thompsons also influenced him in his action in the McCutchen Case. He also added, in response to a question of his counsel, that he had never practiced law in the state of California, except that he had in some cases rendered gratuitous services.

"In considering the testimony in support of the charge that respondent solicited money with the intent that it should be paid to influence him in his official conduct, it must be remembered that the testimony was given by witnesses whose interest in the matter at the time the affidavits were made and presented to the grand jury was of the greatest. E. W. McCutchen himself testified that his purpose in making the affidavit accusing McCowan of soliciting a bribe, a certified copy of which formed the basis of the inquiry made by the grand jury, was to affect the action of the jury and court in the matter of his own case. In view of the interest of the witnesses whose sworn statements were embodied in the affidavits and whose testimony was reproduced at the hearing herein, it best comports with fairness to conclude, which we do, that the district attorney, in his negotiations with the McCutchens having reference to the payment of money by them, was acting solely with a view to securing that money for the purpose of aiding the Thompson girl. That his action, taken upon his own statement of the matter, was to the highest degree improper, in our opinion, admits of no question. Indeed, the lack of his appreciation of the impropriety of his course in the McCutchen Case seems inexplicable and deserving of the severest censure. Closely analyzed, we find from the evidence that the whole purpose of the district attorney in the inducement which he offered to secure the return of McCutchen to the state of California and as a consideration for the recommendation which he promised to make to the court that McCutchen should be released on probation, was to secure a settlement in favor of the girl in the case wherein he was charged with committing rape. In his testimony he stated that McCutchen, the accused, asked him what he should do, to which he replied that McCutchen should provide for the girl and plead guilty. He seems to have assumed the entire responsibility for the making of the settlement on behalf of the girl, for he says that when the father of the former had an action brought for civil damages after McCutchen returned, that he (McCowan) was irritated thereat and visited the attorneys for Thompson with the idea of getting them to withdraw the action. He said he told them the 'terms' upon which he had secured the return of McCutchen. These terms, it was very clear, were that McCutchen should make monetary provision for the girl and enter a plea of guilty, upon which the district attorney would use his influence with the court to secure a probationary order. McCutchen was to provide for the girl, and was then to escape a prison sentence, if it were within the power of McCowan so to procure such a result for him. We can find no words of approval for the action of any district attorney exercised in the direction of settling felony cases out of court. The duty of every prosecuting officer is, where sufficient evidence is obtainable to warrant a well-founded belief in his mind that the person accused is guilty, to present such evidence to a court or jury, and not use his position and power in negotiating with the defendant for an adjustment of damages to the prosecutrix in consideration of promised favorable action. The latter remedy belongs to the civil side of the tribunal and one altogether outside the cognizance of a district attorney. The prosecuting officer here accused acted with an entire and complete misconception of what his official duty required of him in attempting to 'trade' with the defendant in a criminal case. However, we have stated that we think his action was not that described by the prosecuting witnesses, to wit, designed to secure money for his own use, and so acquit him of such criminal intent. Neither can it be concluded that any action of his taken before the grand jury was of influence in determining a report to be made other than as it was intended by the jury that report should be. We regret, however, that we are compelled to characterize the acts of the accused before the grand jury as highly improper. The common ethics of the profession would, we think, suggest to the average lawyer that the district attorney should have refrained from appearing before the grand jury while the matter of his own alleged misconduct was under investigation. With our understanding of the law, we would deny that he had any right to be present at the sessions of the grand jury, either in person or by deputy, while charges against him of a criminal nature were under investigation. The law, it is true, does permit the district attorney to be present where criminal matters are being investigated; but that provision, we can readily see, is for the purpose of enabling the district attorney to present his evidence against the accused whose indictment is sought or is being considered. It would hardly be supposed that the district attorney would prosecute himself, and that the provision of law which we have referred to is wholly inapplicable must suggest itself most convincingly. The statement made by respondent before the grand jury that one of their number had been indicted for some crime, where the juror referred to had been acquitted, was a thing which savored not of fair practice. In his reference to the judge of the superior court, the accused, without justification so far as appears, used language harsh in the extreme, for which, to say the least, he is deserving of most severe criticism and reprimand. It appears that these statements were made, however, after all action had been taken in the McCutchen and McCowan matters by the grand jury and Judge Farmer. The respondent seems to have been obsessed with the idea that he was being combated on every pretext by the court and practically the entire bar of Kern county, and in this attitude of mind was inclined to characterize the opposition in terms implying a want of any honesty on the part of those against whom he was arrayed. The judge of the superior court would have been remiss in his duty, where such a serious charge as that preferred against the district attorney was brought to his ears, not to have required an investigation of the matter. We would have imagined that such an investigation would not only have been sought on the part of an accused official conscious of his innocence, but untrammeled by his advice to the grand jury in the matter, would have been demanded and insisted upon. The attitude of the respondent herein, however, was not so intentional or expressed. A question asked him by his own counsel and the answer thereto may be mentioned in palliation of his conduct in this regard. We quote from the transcript: 'Q. By the way, right in this connection, did you ever practice law in Bakersfield? A. I never practiced law in the state of California.' We may properly express the hope that as time passes the respondent, with advancing years and more practice, will acquire an appreciation of the demands which the ethics of the profession impose. So learning, he will no doubt avoid like acts of impropriety and vehement characterization of individuals which the evidence here ascribes to him. While condemning in the strongest terms the acts of impropriety with the commission of which we find respondent guilty, we are not prepared, however, to find that the facts require a judgment of disbarment or suspension from practice, and exercising justly, as we believe, the discretionary power confided to this court.

"The judgment prayed for in the accusation is denied."

[2] We are not disposed to question the correctness of the conclusions reached on the facts by the District Court of Appeal. That court heard the testimony as it fell from the lips of the witnesses themselves, and was in a far better position to weigh the evidence than we, after a reading of the bare record, could be. For reasons analogous to those which have always led reviewing courts to treat as conclusive findings of trial courts on conflicting evidence, we accept the opinion of the District Court of Appeal as a correct determination of the issues of fact.

[3] We are, however, not in accord with the legal conclusions drawn by that court from the facts. While the opinion filed declares in terms that the conduct of the respondent was "highly improper" and "deserving of most severe criticism and reprimand," the judgment finally announced was merely one denying the relief prayed for in the accusation. In effect, the respondent was found guilty of professional misconduct, and was then discharged without the infliction of any penalty whatever. Even the mild punishment of a reprimand, which the opinion declares to be merited by the respondent's conduct, is not administered by the terms of the judgment itself.

But, apart from the mere form of the judgment, we are satisfied that a simple censure or reprimand would not be an adequate or appropriate penalty. Accepting the conclusion of the district court that the respondent did not, in any of the transactions complained of, seek any pecuniary advantage for himself, it still remains that he was, in various matters under examination, guilty of most serious improprieties. As district attorney, charged with the high duty of promoting the efficient and impartial administration of the criminal law, he indulged in practices having a direct tendency to hamper and subvert such administration. In addition, his use of abusive and offensive language regarding the judge of the superior court was without a shadow of justification.

It has been held here that there is in this state no authority to disbar (or suspend) an attorney for any ground other than those enumerated in section 287 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In re Collins, 147 Cal. 8, 13, 81 Pac. 220. But one of the grounds specified in that section is "any violation of the oath taken by him, or of his duties as such attorney and counselor." Subdivision 2. The acts committed by the respondent were in violation of his duties, as the same are defined in subdivisions 1 and 2 of section 282 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Such acts were, we think, too grave to justify a court in dismissing the accusation with an announcement of its disapproval of the conduct of the accused. Some substantial punishment should be imposed. We think, however, under all the circumstances of the case, that the extreme penalty of disbarment is not called for. Taking into account the entire history of the proceedings, we are inclined to the belief that the respondent's misconduct arose rather from ignorance of fundamental legal ethics than from any deliberate intention to accomplish evil ends. It seems probable that it was a mistaken and excessive zeal that led him into the use of unjustifiable methods. Of course, ignorance of the law does not excuse misconduct in any one, least of all in a sworn officer of the law. But this is a quasi criminal action, and in fixing the penalty to be imposed the court should properly take into account the motives and purposes which actuated the accused. Applying these considerations, we think the requirements of the situation will be satisfied by a judgment suspending the respondent from practice for a limited time.

It is ordered that the respondent, Barclay McCowan, be suspended from practice in any of the courts in this state for the period of one year from and after the date upon which this judgment shall become final.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. (concurring). I concur in the judgment and in the views expressed by Mr. Justice SLOSS. There is ample support in the record for the conclusion that whatever of misconception of the proper scope of his functions as district attorney in his endeavor to adjust the McCutchen matter there was on the part of the accused, there was no attempt or intent to profit personally thereby, but simply a desire to see some provision made for the injured girl and the child. According to the evidence on which this conclusion was based, the undertaking of the accused was that if McCutchen would return to the state, submit himself to the jurisdiction of the court, make reasonable provision for the girl and the care of the child, and plead guilty to the charge against him, he would recommend probation. Surely it cannot be said that there is anything of moral turpitude in this. The dissenting opinion does not suggest that the conclusion of the District Court of Appeal on this matter is not fully sustained by the evidence.

The investigation by the grand jury was one concerning this matter, based on an accusation made by McCutchen to the effect that the accused as district attorney demanded money for himself in consideration of his proposed action in the matter. The matter was very properly referred by the judge of the superior court to the grand jury for investigation. Of course, the charge was such as to demand the most thorough investigation, and, if well based, not only the removal of the district attorney from his office, but also his punishment for a grave felony. And it goes without saying that in the matter of the investigation the accused had no right to be present, either in person or by deputy, and that it was altogether improper for him to attempt to influence that body to bring in a report favorable to him, either by persuasion or threat, and especially by any assault on the character of any member of the jury. I do not for a moment justify the conduct of accused in this matter. But I do think the language of my learned Associate in his dissenting opinion regarding this matter is too harsh, and hardly presents the case of accused in as fair a light as the record warrants. There is evidence indicating that there was a bitter factional fight in Kern county, political in nature, the district attorney being the special object of hatred of one of the fractions. With the merits of that conflict we have here no concern. The accused probably had every reason to believe that this accusation, which we must take as absolutely false in fact, was a means by which the opposing faction was seeking to obtain his removal from office. It appears that prior to any attempt to influence the jury to bring in a report favorable to him, that body had already voted to ignore the charge. It is quite probable that the accused feared that improper influences were being brought to bear on the jury to prevent the presentation of the favorable report to which, if innocent, he was entitled, and that it was for this reason that he resorted to the methods complained of. Censurable as his conduct was in this regard, I am not prepared to hold that there was anything of moral turpitude in it.

His reflections on the judge of the superior court were entirely without basis in fact, and so far as I can see accused had no good reason whatever for believing otherwise.

On the whole I believe the ends of justice will be fully subserved by the penalty imposed.

I concur: LAWLOR, J.

SHAW, J. I dissent. The statements in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal regarding the first charge against McCowan —that is, that he attempted to intimidate and coerce the grand jury with reference to the action that body would take upon certain charges against McCowan then pending before it—do not state the case fully or adequately, but gloss it over, apparently for the purpose of palliating the conduct of McCowan, which I think the evidence shows to have been a gross offense against morals and decency, and to establish moral turpitude, as well as an attempt to corrupt and coerce the members of the grand jury. The evidence shows that while the investigation of affidavits against McCowan himself, making charges which, if true, would tend to show that he was guilty of soliciting a bribe or of an attempt at official extortion or compounding a felony, was pending before the grand jury, McCowan, then the district attorney of the county, insisted on being present, and was present, at its deliberations upon the matter; that he repeatedly, during said time, threatened members of the grand jury that he would make charges against them of a nature which would expose them to obloquy and disgrace, and that he presented to said body a certified copy of an Arizona indictment charging a member of said grand jury with a felony, he then well knowing that there had been a trial thereof and that said member had been acquitted of the charge, and that with this knowledge he read the indictment to the grand jury, but did not inform the jury of said acquittal; that he frequently during said investigation talked to members of the jury about the charges against himself, both while the jury was in session and during adjournments, endeavoring to induce, persuade, and threaten them in respect to their action upon the charges against himself. His conduct in this matter alone calls for the severest punishment that can be given in this proceeding, his removal as an attorney, his final disbarment.

To say that this conduct was due to his ignorance of fundamental legal ethics is to palter with a gross offense and to shut our eyes and minds to all the reasonable inferences arising from the facts. They fully establish the proposition that he was using these means, this intimidation and coercion, in the endeavor to prevent the grand jury from bringing an accusation to remove him from his office, or from making a report unfavorable to him. The fact, if it be a fact, that the grand jury would have refrained from bringing any such accusation, or from making an unfavorable report, even if he had not made these unseemly and immoral efforts to have it so, and that it did so refrain, does not in the least excuse him. It is obvious that it was not ignorance of right and wrong, but his own personal interests, that moved him thus to violate his official duty as district attorney, his official oath as attorney at law, and the laws of morality and propriety. If he was obtuse and so devoid of moral sense that he believed such conduct to be rightful and lawful, then he is certainly unfit, by reason of his depraved moral character, to hold the honorable and highly confidential office of attorney and counselor at law. It is my opinion that the judgment of the court should be that he be removed from that high office, and that the punishment of suspending him for one year is wholly inadequate to the gravity of the offense and to the protection of the profession of law and of the people who must resort to lawyers for advice, against the evils of having unworthy persons hold such station.

177 Cal. 477

HOGAN LUMBER CO. v. NICHOLS et al.

(S. F. 8470.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1918.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS 🔑281(5)—TIME FOR FILING—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to show that building was completed on a certain date, so that plaintiff materialman's lien, not filed within 90 days thereafter, was filed too late.

2. MECHANICS' LIENS 🔑132(7)—TIME FOR FILING—ACCRUAL OF WRITING.

Where cessation of work began August 20th, and continued for over 30 days, plaintiff materialman's 90 days within which to file his lien commenced to run on September 19th in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, providing that cessation from labor for 30 days upon a building shall be deemed equivalent to completion for the purpose of filing liens.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Stanley A. Smith, Judge.

Action by the Hogan Lumber Company against Leo L. Nichols, Hugh A. Boyle, and others. Judgment and decree for plaintiff, and defendants Hugh A. Boyle and others appeal. Reversed.

O'Neill & O'Neill, of Oakland, and Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, of San Francisco, for appellants. B. D. Marx Greene, of Berkeley, for respondent.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal by defendants other than Leo L. Nichols from a judgment and decree in favor of plaintiff foreclosing a lien upon real property for a sum found due for material furnished by plaintiff to defendant Nichols for use by him in the construction of a dwelling house upon real estate of which he was the owner.

It was conceded at the trial of the case by all parties that the defendant Leo L. Nichols and his wife were at all times up to November 8, 1915, the owners of the lot of land upon which the building was erected; that on the last-mentioned date they sold and conveyed the property to the defendants Hugh A. and Ida M. Boyle, who ever since have been the owners thereof; that between February 18 and July 6, 1915, plaintiff furnished to the defendant Nichols building material of the value sued for which was actually used in the construction of the building; that said sum had not been paid; and that on December 22, 1915, plaintiff filed for record his claim of lien.

[1] Claiming the same to be contrary to the evidence, appellants attack the finding that the building was completed subsequent to September 24, 1915, and that the lien was filed within 90 days after completion of the house. They insist that the evidence shows that the building was completed on August 20th; hence, when the lien was filed on December 22d, the 90 days within which plaintiff was entitled to file the same had expired. This contention must be sustained.

It appears from the evidence that defendant Nichols was a "speculative house builder," having for years been engaged in constructing houses for sale; that it was his custom in building houses for such purpose to omit therefrom the installation of electric fixtures, leaving the same to be selected by the purchaser; that "he never put the fixtures in a building until it was occupied or sold" for the reason that "they deteriorate, go to pieces, and are stolen." While admitting that he had no independent knowledge as to when the building was completed, Nichols testified without contradiction that, other than installing the furnace and putting in the fixtures, nothing was done on the house after the hardwood contractor completed the hardwood floors, which date, as conclusively shown, was on August 20th. On November 8th Nichols sold the property to the defendants Boyle, who selected fixtures, for the cost of which an allowance was made them on the purchase price of the property, and Nichols bought and installed a hot air furnace for use in connection with the pipes and radiators with which the house was equipped. Upon this showing it clearly appears that the house, except as to installing the furnace and electric fixtures, was fully completed on August 20th. It further appears without controversy that while the building was to be heated with a furnace and lighted by electricity, it was not the purpose and design of the owner to put in these fixtures as a part of the completed structure, but that in this case, as was his custom, he intended to and did omit the same until after a sale of the property, allowing the purchaser to select fixtures, which, at his expense, were installed.

No plans and specifications with which to measure the work of completion were offered in evidence, and since, as appears from the evidence, it was not the intention and design of the owner to install these fixtures as part of the completed house, they should not be deemed necessary to the completion thereof. Santa Monica L. & M. Co. v. Hege, 119 Cal. 378, 51 Pac. 555. Had the lien been filed before they were installed, it could not under the circumstances shown be said the filing thereof was premature.

[2] Moreover, even should it be held that the installation of the furnace and fixtures were necessary to constitute a completion of the building, such fact could not aid respondent, for the reason that there was a cessation of work upon the house on August 20th which continued until after November 8th. Section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a cessation from labor for 30 days upon any building shall be deemed equivalent to a completion for the purpose of filing liens. Hence, by reason of such cessation and continuance thereof for 30 days, plaintiff's 90 days within which to file its lien commenced to run on September 19th and expired prior to the filing thereof on December 22d. In Sunset Lumber Co. v. Batchelder, 167 Cal. 512, 140 Pac. 35, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 664, it is held that materialmen do not have an unlimited time in which to file their liens, but must file them at all events within 120 days after actual cessation from labor.

There is no merit in respondent's contention that the evidence of Nichols to the effect that no work was done on the building after the completion of the hardwood floors was stricken out as hearsay. This evidence was not subject to the objection that it was hearsay, nor was the motion directed to the same, but to testimony of the witness that the house was completed about August 1st, as to the truth of which fact he had no independent knowledge.

The case is here by virtue of an order made upon respondent's petition for transfer after decision by the Court of Appeal reversing the judgment. It appears that in the last-named court counsel for respondent in his oral argument, notwithstanding there was evidence adduced as disclosed by the record tending to show that defendants were estopped from claiming that the building was completed prior to September 24th, expressly waived any right of recovery based upon such facts. This concession was made upon the theory that since plaintiff had not affirmatively pleaded the facts constituting the estoppel, it could not avail itself thereof. Since the court made no finding of any facts constituting estoppel, we must assume that the case was tried upon the same theory in the lower court. In this court, however, respondent, seeking to avail itself of these facts in support of the judgment, now for the first time directs our attention to the evidence tending to prove that Nichols, while owner of the property and as late as October, repeatedly represented to plaintiff that the house was not completed and that he was still engaged in work thereon, and upon the authority of Hubbard v. Lee, 6 Cal. App. 602, 92 Pac. 744, and Donnelly v. S. F. Bridge Co., 117 Cal. 421, 49 Pac. 559, it contends that, conceding the building was in fact completed on August 20th, defendants by reason of such representations are estopped from urging such fact in defense of the action. No finding of facts, however, which such evidence tended to prove was made by the court, without which, since as we have held the finding as to date of completion was without support of evidence, there are no findings to support the judgment.

As presented in the Court of Appeal the decision was correct, and the new theory adopted by counsel for respondent in presenting his case in this court is, in the absence of findings of fact, inapplicable to the case.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.; MELVIN, J.; SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

---

177 Cal. 430

CAMPBELL et al. v. KENNEDY.

(Sac. 2444.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 2, 1918.)

1. Vendor and Purchaser 🔑75 — Conveyance — Agreement for Resale — Implied Term.

As a term of the agreement, on which plaintiffs conveyed land to defendant for an advance of money with which to clear it of judgment, that when he sold it he would give them half of the proceeds above the amount of the advancement, the law implies that the sale, or reasonable efforts to sell, shall be made in a reasonable time, breached by refusal for years to sell, notwithstanding offers of a fair price.

2. Vendor and Purchaser 🔑15 — Rescission of Conveyance — Part Failure of Consideration.

The consideration for plaintiff's conveyance consisting of defendant's advance of money for clearing the property of judgment and his agreement to sell and divide the proceeds in excess of advancement, refusal to sell is ground for rescission, under Civ. Code, § 1689, subd. 2, authorizing a party to rescind a contract if the consideration of his obligation fails in whole or in part through the fault of the party as to whom he rescinds.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⚷98 — CONVEYANCE—RESCISSION—TENDER OF REPAYMENT.

In case of conveyance by plaintiffs in consideration of money advanced and defendant's agreement to sell the property and divide the proceeds in excess of the advancement, the requirement of Civ. Code, § 1691, that plaintiffs as a condition to right to rescind "restore to the other party everything of value * * * received from him under the contract," is satisfied, where, defendant refusing to sell, plaintiffs tender to him repayment of the amounts advanced with interest.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action by J. S. Campbell and another against Guy R. Kennedy. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Guy R. Kennedy, of Chico, and W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, for appellant. Frank Freeman, of Willows, and George F. Gardner, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. In August, 1900, the plaintiffs, who were the owners of certain mining property in the county of Butte, gave to one Steifer a working bond or option, entitling him to work the property, and to receive a conveyance upon payment of $19,000. Except for a relatively small amount, the entire purchase price was to be paid out of the net proceeds of the mining operations to be conducted. Steifer's rights under the agreement passed to a corporation which he organized for that purpose. This corporation operated the mine, but nothing was ever paid to the plaintiffs from the net proceeds, if any were realized.

In 1906, the property, which remained in the possession of the holder of the option, was about to be sold under an execution issued upon a judgment against the plaintiffs. Being without means, they approached the defendant, Guy R. Kennedy, and applied to him for assistance, with the result that the parties entered into the transaction which forms the basis of the present litigation. Kennedy advanced $1,200, the amount necessary to pay the judgment, and an additional $72 for taxes. The Campbells conveyed the property to Kennedy, and he gave them in return a writing whereby he agreed that whenever he sold the property he would, after deducting and retaining the amounts advanced by him, give one-half of the balance of the purchase price to the plaintiffs. The complaint alleges that thereafter the defendant had numerous opportunities to sell the property to various persons who had offered to purchase the same for reasonable sums, but that he had refused to accept any of such offers, or to make any sale of the property. It is further alleged that shortly before the commencement of the action the plaintiff J. S. Campbell made a tender to the defendant of the full amount advanced by him, with interest, and demanded a reconveyance of the property, which offer was refused. The complaint asks judgment for the cancellation of the agreement and deed between the plaintiffs and Kennedy, and for a reconveyance, upon payment to Kennedy of his advances, with interest.

The answer put in issue various of the allegations of the complaint, and set up affirmative matter which is not material to the present consideration. The findings of the court were, in the main, in favor of the plaintiffs, and judgment was entered giving them the relief for which they asked. The defendant appeals from the judgment, and thus presents for review the correctness of the order denying his motion for a new trial, as well as that of the judgment itself. Code Civ. Proc. § 956, amended 1915.

While the complaint contains, in addition to what we have set forth, allegations designed to show fraud on the part of the defendant in obtaining the conveyance, the findings do not support this charge, and it need not be further considered. Nor is it necessary to discuss the appellant's claim that the conveyance from the Campbells to him was not a mortgage. The respondents have never contended that it was.

[1] The consideration of the appeal may well proceed upon the theory advanced by the appellant himself, namely, that the conveyance was made to him in trust to sell the property and to divide the proceeds between the grantors and himself, after first deducting the amount of his advances. The writings did not specify any time within which the sale was to be made. But the law implies, as one of the terms of the agreement, that the sale should be made within a reasonable time, or, at least, that the defendant would make reasonable efforts to sell within such time. Elliott, Contr. § 1877. The allegations of the complaint, found by the court to be true, are that the defendant had refused to sell the property, although offers of a fair price had been made to him. Between the date of the deed to defendant and the demand for a reconveyance, seven or eight years had elapsed. There is no specific averment or finding that this was more than a reasonable time for sale, but the circumstances alleged and found make this conclusion inevitable. While the evidence is conflicting, there was ample support for the material findings. The testimony of the plaintiff J. S. Campbell, corroborated to some extent by that of other witnesses, was that, in 1912, six years after the making of the deed, he had transmitted to the defendant an offer of $10,000 for the property, and had pleaded with him to accept the proposal, but that the defendant had refused.

---

[2, 3] Under the Civil Code (section 1689), a party may rescind a contract:

> "2. If, through the fault of the party as to whom he rescinds, the consideration for his obligation fails, in whole or in part."

The plaintiffs made out a case entitling them to rescind under this provision. The consideration for their conveyance consisted, first, of the defendant's advance of the money necessary to clear the property; and, second, of his agreement to sell, and to distribute the proceeds. The refusal to perform the obligation to sell constituted a partial failure of consideration, justifying a rescission. Richter v. Union Land, etc., Co., 129 Cal. 367, 372, 62 Pac. 39; Sterling v. Gregory, 149 Cal. 117, 85 Pac. 305. The plaintiffs were required, as a condition of the right to rescind, to "restore to the other party everything of value * * * received from him under the contract." Civ. Code, § 1691. This requirement they fulfilled when they tendered repayment of the amounts advanced by the defendant, together with interest. The judgment, which makes the cancellation of the agreement and the reconveyance of the property conditional upon payment of the sum so tendered, is entirely equitable, and gives to the defendant all that he is entitled to ask.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.

---

177 Cal. 455

CUSTIS v. GEHELE. (Sac. 2463.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1918. Rehearing Denied March 7, 1918.)

1. Appeal and Error ⊂⇒934(2) — Presumptions—Appeal on Judgment Roll.

In a suit to establish plaintiff's right to the use of waters from certain springs, where the court found and decreed that plaintiff was entitled to the ownership and use of a designated proportion of the waters, and plaintiff appealed on the judgment roll alone, he must be deemed to have received by the terms of the judgment all that the proofs in the case showed him to be entitled to, either as an appropriator of the water, or as a riparian owner.

2. Appeal and Error ⊂⇒151(5)—Right to Appeal—Aggrieved Parties.

In a suit to establish plaintiff's right to the use of the waters of certain springs, the court found and decreed that plaintiff was entitled to the ownership and use of a designated proportion of the waters and no more, and enjoined defendant from interfering with the flow and free use of such part of the waters. The court further found that defendant had cleaned, enlarged, and developed the springs, as a result of which an additional amount of water not theretofore flowing therefrom had been developed and had used such water for irrigation, and decreed that defendant might take and use any waters from the springs in excess of the amount described as belonging to plaintiff. Held that, conceding that this last provision of the decree was outside the pleadings and issues and unwarranted by the evidence, plaintiff, who was satisfied with the court's definition of the extent of his own rights, was not aggrieved thereby, and not entitled to appeal under Code Civ. Proc. § 938, authorizing appeals by any party aggrieved.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

Action by John W. Custis against W. F. Gehele. From a judgment for plaintiff for insufficient relief, he appeals. Affirmed.

N. J. Barry, of Susanville, and Dodge & Barry, of Reno, Nev., for appellant. R. M. Rankin and Grove C. Julian, both of Susanville, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal on the part of the plaintiff from a judgment which, in the main, is in his favor, but which he seeks to have modified in one respect only. The action was brought to establish plaintiff's right to the use of the waters of five certain springs, having their source upon lands adjoining those of the plaintiff. The complaint is in two counts, the first alleging an appropriation and adverse use of the waters of said springs for many years by the plaintiff's predecessor in the ownership of his own lands; the second alleging that the waters of said springs flow by defined courses down to and upon the plaintiff's land, and that his rights to said waters are riparian. The defendant's answer consisted of specific denials of practically all the allegations of the plaintiff's complaint except those relating to his attempted use of said waters in opposition to the plaintiff's asserted right therein, but without any affirmative averments of any kind in the defendant to the use of any part of said waters upon land of his own, and without any prayer for affirmative relief. The cause was tried upon the issues thus presented. The court found that the plaintiff was entitled to the ownership and use of a certain designated proportion of the waters of said springs and no more, and that defendant's threatened diversion or obstruction of the flow of said waters to the extent of any interference with the right of the plaintiff to the flow and free use of so much of said waters as the plaintiff was thus held entitled to would be wrongful and should be enjoined. The court further found that a year or two before the commencement of this action the defendant had entered upon said springs and each of them, and cleaned, enlarged, and developed the same, as a result of which an additional amount of water not theretofore flowing from said springs had been developed, and that ever since said time the defendant had used said additional water so developed for necessary irrigation upon lands of which he was in possession. In the judgment following such findings the court decreed that the plaintiff had the right to the use of the amount of said waters to which by its findings he had been found entitled, and that the defendant should be enjoined from any interference therewith. The court then added to its aforesaid judgment the following clause:

> "But that the defendant may take and use upon his own land any waters from said springs in excess of the amount hereinabove described."

It is this addendum to the judgment in his favor that the appellant asks to have stricken from this judgment by an order of said court modifying the same.

[1, 2] The appeal herein is upon the judgment roll alone. The plaintiff must therefore be held to have received by the terms of the judgment appealed from all that the proofs in the case show him to be entitled to, in so far as the amount of the waters of said springs to which he claimed the use is involved, either as an original appropriator thereof or as a riparian owner in the waters naturally and originally derived from said springs. The findings of the court are susceptible of the construction that the waters which the defendant developed through his operations in connection with said springs were waters not naturally or originally derivable therefrom, and in which the plaintiff had no ownership, either as an appropriator or by virtue of any riparian rights therein. The plaintiff is satisfied with the court's definition of the extent of his own rights in the waters of said springs in either capacity, and is only dissatisfied with that portion of the judgment which attempts to deal with the defendant's use of the excess waters of said spring in which the plaintiff has admittedly no interest or concern. Conceding for the sake of argument that the clause in said judgment to which the plaintiff objects is outside of the pleadings and issues, and even of the evidence, in the case, still the plaintiff is in no wise aggrieved thereby, and hence is in no position to prosecute this appeal. Code Civ. Proc. § 938.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.

---

177 Cal. 450

OVERTON v. NOYES et al. (S. F. 7737.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 5, 1918.)

1. MINES AND MINERALS 🔑104 — MINING CORPORATIONS—STATUTORY REGULATION.

Civ. Code, § 588, provides that it is the duty of the secretary of every corporation formed for the purpose of mining or conducting mining in California, whether formed and organized under the laws of California, or of any other state to keep an office within the state, and a complete set of books, and that each month it shall be the duty of the directors to cause an itemized account or balance sheet to be made and posted in some conspicuous place in the company's office. Held, that in view of the history of this law and the purposes for which it was enacted, it applies to corporations organized in this state for the purpose of conducting mining in another state.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑682—RECORD—MATTERS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW.

An order provided that defendants' motion to strike out parts of plaintiff's amended complaint was thereby denied, as to assignments 1 and 2, and granted as to assignment 3 of the motion. The third specification in the motion to strike out designated the matter sought to be stricken out by reference to the lines and pages of the complaint, but the complaint was printed in the transcript, without reference to the original paging and lines. Held, that it being obviously impossible to ascertain from the record what portion of the complaint was stricken out, the court was not called upon to review the order.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑518(6)—RECORD—MATTERS INCLUDED.

While under Code Civ. Proc. § 670, as amended by St. 1907, p. 720, all orders striking out any pleading in whole or in part are a part of the judgment roll, a motion to strike out is not a part of the judgment roll, though printed in the transcript.

4. PLEADING 🔑365(3)—STRIKING OUT MATTER—FORM OF ORDER.

As orders striking out parts of the pleadings are now a part of the judgment roll, it is the better practice to incorporate in the order itself the portions so stricken out, so that the judgment roll will show unmistakeably the matter stricken out.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by W. S. Overton against Wm. S. Noyes and others. From a judgment for defendants on demurrer, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Wm. F. Rose and Bruce Glidden, both of San Francisco, for appellant. Harding & Monroe, of San Francisco, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. [1] This is an appeal from a judgment rendered on demurrer upon the ground that the complaint "does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action." The plaintiff, a stockholder in a mining corporation, organized under the laws of the state of California, and operating a mine in the state of Texas, but none in this state, sued to recover the penalty provided in section 588 of the Civil Code for failure to post in a conspicuous place in the office of the company the balance sheet therein required to be so posted. The question raised here is whether or not the section applies to the corporation in question. The statute reads as follows:

> "It is the duty of the secretary of every corporation formed for the purpose of mining, or conducting mining in California, whether such corporation be formed and organized under the laws of the state of California or of any other state, territory, or foreign country, to keep at some place within the state of California," etc.

It is claimed by respondent that the words "in California" modify the phrase "corporation formed for the purpose of mining," as well as the phrase "or conducting mining in California." An examination of the history and purpose of this law will assist in its construction. The first statute on this subject was enacted in 1874 (Stats. 1873–74, p. 866), and was entitled, "An act for the better protection of the stockholders in corporations, formed under the laws of the state of California, for the purpose of carrying on and conducting the business of mining." Section 1 thereof provided :

> "It shall be the duty of the secretary of every corporation formed under the laws of the state of California, for the purpose of mining, to keep," etc.

Then follow various requirements, amongst others, "and shall make out a balance sheet showing the correct financial condition of the corporation." This balance sheet is required to be "open to examination and inspection upon demand by any such stockholder." In 1880 this statute was again amended (Stats. 1880, p. 134), and it was there required that:

> "Such account or balance sheet shall be verified under oath by the president and secretary, and posted in some conspicuous place in the office of the company."

In 1897 this statute was again amended (St. 1897, p. 38), and for the first time the phrase "or conducting mining in California" was introduced into the statute. The amendment read:

> "Sec. 1. It shall be the duty of the secretary of every corporation formed for the purpose of mining, or conducting mining in California, to keep," etc.

The phrase "or conducting mining in California" added nothing to the section as it theretofore read, unless it applied to corporations organized outside of the state of California and "conducting mining in California," for as the section previously read it covered the activities of all corporations organized in the state of California for the purpose of mining, whether within or without the state of California; unless, of course, as contended by the respondent, the phrase "in California" thus added related back to and modified the phrase "formed for the purpose of mining," as well as the newly added phrase "conducting mining." If the latter contention is correct, the purpose of the amendment was to limit the provisions of the statute to corporations "mining in California," thereby excluding from the provisions of the act corporations theretofore controlled thereby, viz. those organized in California for conducting mining outside of California. If that were the purpose it would have been simple to have said: "Sec. 1. It shall be the duty of every corporation mining in California to," etc. The fair inference seems to be that the Legislature intended to broaden the scope of the law by the added words "or conducting mining in California," rather than to limit its effect. This latter view is strengthened by the fact that the phrase "or conducting mining in California" is separated by commas from the phrase "purpose of mining," and is made clear by a proviso showing that the evil sought to be remedied was the sale of mining stock in public exchanges in California, where the stockholders were not furnished the information in that section provided for their benefit. This proviso is as follows, viz.:

> "Provided, that this section shall apply only to mining corporations whose stock is listed and offered for sale at public exchange, and shall not apply to mining corporations whose stock is not listed in the public exchange and is not offered for public sale."

It was obviously in furtherance of this legislative plan to make the same requirements of mining corporations, whether formed outside of or within California, if the stock of such corporation was sold in public exchange in California. Bearing in mind that the words "mining" and "conducting mining" are synonymous, it is evident that, at the time of the codification of this law in 1905 (Stats. 1905, p. 585), the Legislature in examining the first clause of this section, "It shall be the duty of the secretary of every corporation formed for the purpose of mining, or conducting mining in California," etc., observed that the statute was susceptible of the construction that it only fixed the duty of the secretary of mining corporations organized under the laws of California, and to make it perfectly clear that it was intended to assert jurisdiction over those "conducting mining in California," no matter where organized, the codifier added the words "whether such corporation be formed and organized under the laws of the state of California, or of any other state, territory, or foreign country," so that we now have the language of the section as first hereinabove quoted. The history of this section then shows that, for the protection of stockholders and the public in California against fraud and misrepresentation in the sale and manipulation of stocks, the Legislature first passed a law applicable to all mining corporations formed in the state; that they subsequently so modified the language as to include corporations "conducting mining in California" even if organized outside the state, and that to make this more definite and clear finally enacted the section in the form in which we now have it. Taking into consideration the history of the law and the purposes for which it is enacted, it is evident that it applies to corporations organized in this state for the purpose of conducting mining in another state. As the appellate court of the first district well said:

> "We think a consideration both of the object of the act, namely, the better protection of stockholders in mining corporations, and the grammatical construction of the provision, leads to the conclusion that a corporation, conducting its business as the one here, is included within the scope of the section" —and the history of this legislation makes this conclusion even more certain.

[2-4] Appellant complains of an order striking out a portion of his complaint. This order, under section 670, Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1907 (Stats. 1907, p. 720), is a part of the judgment roll. The order is a minute order, sustaining the demurrer and granting the motion to strike out in part, and reads as follows:

> "It is further ordered that said defendants' motion for order striking out parts of plaintiff's first amended complaint be and the same is hereby denied as to assignments 1 and 2, and granted as to assignment 3 of said defendants' motion."

It is impossible, of course, to determine from this order what portions of the complaint were stricken out. The motion to strike out is not a part of the judgment roll, though it is printed in the transcript in this case. If we refer to that motion, the third specification is as follows:

> "Commencing with the word 'that' in line 7 on page 6, down to and including the word 'damage' in line 29 on page 7 of said complaint."

If, then, we turn to the complaint we find that it is printed in the transcript without any reference to the original paging and lines. It is obviously impossible to ascertain from the record what portion of the complaint was stricken out. In view of the fact that orders striking out parts of the pleadings are now a part of the judgment roll, the better practice would be to incorporate in the order itself all the portions so stricken out, so that the judgment roll as a whole would show unmistakably the matter stricken out. Of course, this would not be necessary where whole paragraphs are stricken out. Under these circumstances we do not feel called upon to review the order striking out portions of the complaint, especially in view of the fact that the complaint may be amended, if necessary, in order to present the various elements entering into the damage alleged to have been suffered by the plaintiff.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer, with leave to plaintiff to amend his complaint if so advised.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SLOSS, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.; SHAW, J.

---

177 Cal. 472

FIDELITY & CASUALTY CO. OF NEW YORK et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA et al. (S. F. 8534.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1918.)

MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑398—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACTS—LIMITATION OF CLAIMS.

Filling out and filing a blank presenting the employé's request for a permanent disability rating to the department of the Industrial Accident Commission authorized to issue such rating is not a sufficient written application for compensation to bring the employé within Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 287) § 16a, declaring that, unless compensation is paid or the agreement for its payment is made within six months, the right to institute such proceedings shall be wholly barred.

In Bank. Application by Lawrence Knudsen for workmen's compensation opposed by C. A. Kallstrom, employer, and the Fidelity & Casualty Company of New York, insurer. To review an award of two members of the Commission in favor of the applicant, the insurer brings certiorari. Award annulled.

Brittain & Kuhl, of San Francisco, for petitioner. Christopher M. Bradley, of San Francisco, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. A writ of certiorari issued from this court to review the action of the Industrial Accident Commission, by judgment of two of the members thereof, awarding compensation to one Lawrence Knudsen against the petitioner here, the insurance carrier for the employers for said Knudsen.

There is no dispute concerning the essential facts, the one question being whether or not the claim of Knudsen was barred by the limiting section of the Industrial Compensation Law. The majority of the commissioners found that the applicant was injured on June 29, 1916; that formal application for compensation was filed with the commission April 21, 1917, more than six months from the date of the injury and more than six months from the payment of any disability indemnity or agreement therefor by the employer or the surety, but that in October, 1916, and before the expiration of six months from the date of the accident, applicant prepared and filed with the commission a document described in the findings as "his application setting forth all the necessary facts as to his said injury and requesting the decision and award of the commission for a permanent partial disability caused by the said injury"; that said application was "a proceeding for the collection of compensation"; and that therefore the claim was not barred by the provisions of section 16 of the Workmen's Compensation Insurance and Safety Act (St. 1913, p. 279).

In the prevailing opinion of the learned commissioners the document first filed by the applicant is thus described:

> "This form has never been considered heretofore as a formal application for adjustment of claim, being intended only as a request for advice to be used in negotiations between the parties leading to informal settlements. This commission maintains a permanent disability rating department, the function of which is to rate permanent disabilities, assist by conciliation in permanent injury cases in a purely informal and advisory capacity, and to gather and compile statistics leading to a more accurate rating of permanent injuries. It was a form used by this department for the gathering of statistical information and the furnishing of an estimate for the use of parties in informal settlement that was used by the applicant in this case."

But, notwithstanding the use to which the request for a rating was usually applied, the majority of the commissioners were of the opinion that it contained all the requisites for a valid application, and that the filing of the paper gave them jurisdiction of the claim, although absolutely no action was taken in regard to it until many months later. The form is addressed to the Industrial Accident Commission, and is headed:

> "Industrial Accident Commission of the State of California, Permanent Disability Rating Department. * * * Employé's Request for Permanent Disability Rating."

The user is warned parenthetically not to attempt to execute the blank without first carefully reading the instructions. The important sentence of said instructions is as follows:

> "This blank, when properly executed and filed with the Industrial Accident Commission of the state of California, presents your request for a permanent disability rating."

The decision was based upon the proposition that the document presented a controversy in that the commission was requested to fix the percentage of permanent partial disability sustained; that it further appeals to the commission for action of one of its departments; that it contains the names of those from whom compensation, if any, would be due the applicant; and that following the expressed policy of the law to encourage informality in proceedings for workmen's compensation it should properly be considered as an application for compensation.

While this court fully agrees with the conclusion that a wise policy of the law encourages simplicity in proceedings before the Industrial Accident Commission, we are unable to agree with the learned commissioners who pronounced this a sufficient written application for compensation bringing the person who filed it within the terms of section 16(a) of the Workmen's Compensation Insurance and Safety Act, which declared that:

> "Unless compensation is paid or an agreement for its payment made within the time limited in this section for the institution of proceedings for its collection (six months), the right to institute such proceedings shall be wholly barred."

At least one of the reasons for limiting the time for making formal application for adjudication of the extent of the injuries and the proper relief is set forth in the opinion in Ehrhart v. Industrial Accident Commission, 172 Cal. 621, 158 Pac. 193, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 465, wherein the following language was used, at pages 625, 626 of 172 Cal., at pages 193, 194 of 158 Pac. (Ann. Cas. 1917E, 465):

> "One of the purposes of the time limit imposed by the various subdivisions of section 16 was to cause an early submission to the commissioners of the injuries to the employé, so that the commissioners by their own observation and with the aid of expert testimony might determine not only the condition of the applicant at that time, but the probable future results of the accident. This policy is manifest from the fact that, where no disability has occurred at the time of the hearing, but is likely to do so in the future, the commission may retain jurisdiction. Section 25(c). In other words, prompt inquiry regarding the injuries in all their details by the commission was evidently intended by the lawmakers."

And further in that opinion this was said:

> "Another object of a prompt investigation of the results of an accident is to put the commission and the indemnitor in a position to discover any attempt either unduly to extend the period of payment or to fix upon the employer the burden of paying for the results of a later casualty."

In the matter now before us the commission was asked to do nothing judicially by the request for a rating. That request sought no action on the part of the commissioners whereby they might bring the adverse parties into court or might acquaint themselves with the facts either from personal examination or by reports of their own trained experts. It did not ask that the employer or the surety be required to present any defense either might have, and, as a matter of fact, neither was called upon to appear and defend until many months later. In an able dissenting opinion, Mr. Commissioner Pillsbury quoted from section 22 of the act, as follows:

> "Upon filing with the commission by any party in interest of an application in writing stating the general nature of any dispute or controversy concerning compensation, or concerning any right or liability arising out of, or incident thereto, jurisdiction over which is vested by this act in the commission, including any controversy relating to or arising out of the provisions of subsection (a) of section fifteen of this act, a time and place shall be fixed for the hearing thereof, which shall be not less than ten days nor more than forty days after the filing of such application."

Further he wrote as follows:

> "In my judgment, the filing with the permanent disability rating department of the application for the rating of the permanent disability of Knudsen did not meet the requirements of either of these provisions of the act. It did not constitute a beginning of proceedings for the collection of compensation and it did not 'state the nature of any dispute or controversy' concerning compensation, as provided in section 22. For these reasons it did not amount to an 'application' within the meaning of the act and did not bar the operation of the statute of limitations.
>
> "I am little disposed to regard any such proceeding with technical or exacting eyes, but I cannot bring myself to believe that every letter of inquiry sent to this commission, or every report of an injury referable to the statistical department, or every request for rating of permanent disability must be treated as an application for adjustment of controversy merely because an injured person has stupidly so regarded it and thereby slept upon his rights until he has lost them.
>
> "In this case Knudsen had every opportunity, if he did not get the information he sought, to write to the commission for instructions or in some other way make it manifest that there was a controversy to be adjusted, whereupon the commission would have sent him the necessary blanks and have given him the necessary information to safeguard his interests.
>
> "Nor do I think that the employer or insurance carrier are without rights in the premises. They have a right to know if any application for adjustment of controversy has been made, and they also have a right to demand that any pretended application, so in essence whether in form or not, be a real application for such adjustment. Such was not the fact in this case. No issue was placed in controversy. Neither the employer nor insurance carrier were advised that there was any controversy."

With this statement of the law on the subject we fully agree.

There is nothing in the opinion in Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 168 Pac. 1051, cited by counsel for respondent, which is at all at variance with the views expressed above. It was held in that case that any notice or method of procedure which does not transgress the constitutional mandate regarding due process of law is proper, but it was so held upon objection to a notice which did not specify a time for a hearing, but required a showing of good cause within ten days why a proposed amendment to a judgment should not be made. The statute of limitations was not invoked in that case, and therefore was not discussed in the opinion.

The award under review is annulled.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SLOSS, J.; WILBUR, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.; SHAW, J.

---

177 Cal. 411

PAPADAKOS v. SOARES. (S. F. 8545.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 2, 1918.)

MORTGAGES ⊶407 — AGREEMENT BETWEEN MORTGAGEES—"CONSIDERATION."

Under Civ. Code, § 1605, declaring that any benefit conferred or agreed to be conferred upon the promisor by any other person to which the promisor is not lawfully entitled, or any prejudice suffered, or agreed to be suffered, by such person other than such as he is at the time of consent lawfully bound to suffer, as an inducement to the promisor, is a good consideration, and in connection with the well-established rule that forbearance to sue is a sufficient consideration to support a contract, an agreement by the holder of a second mortgage which was due that he would not sue for a period of time, is a sufficient consideration to support an agreement by the holder of the first deed of trust that he would not foreclose before a fixed date, and would make the second mortgagee a party to any proceedings instituted.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Consideration.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Stanley Smith, Judge.

Action by Samuel Papadakos against J. M. Soares. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Henry B. Lister, of San Francisco, for appellant. F. I. Lewis, and Rose & Silverstein, of Oakland, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. Plaintiff seeks to recover $750 damages for breach of contract. This is an appeal from a judgment of dismissal, made upon the ground that the complaint in the case failed to state a cause of action for the reason that the complaint failed to allege a sufficient consideration for the agreement sued upon. The plaintiff and the defendant each owned obligations secured by certain real property. Defendant's obligation was secured by deed of trust made to secure an indebtedness of $3,000. The plaintiff's obligation was a note for $1,500, upon which $750 had been paid, leaving a balance of $750 due March 15, 1915. This was secured by a mortgage subject to said deed of trust. It is alleged:

> That on the 30th day of March, 1915, "plaintiff and defendant entered into a verbal agreement whereby the plaintiff promised and agreed not to commence any action to foreclose said mortgage, until June, 1915, and in consideration of said promise the defendant promised and agreed that he would not take any proceedings under his deed of trust before the 1st day of June, 1915, and the said defendant further promised to foreclose under said deed of trust, after the 31st day of May, 1915, and promised to make plaintiff a party to the action, for the purpose of enabling him to protect his equity in the property."

It is alleged that in violation of the terms of said promise the defendant, without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff, proceeded to advertise said property for sale on May 15, 1915, and on the 29th of May, 1915, caused the property to be sold, and purchased the same for the sum of $3,000, plus the amount due to defendant for interest and costs of sale, thereby causing plaintiff to lose his claim to his damage in the sum of $750. The question presented by the record is this: Did the promise of the plaintiff to forbear bringing a foreclosure proceeding upon his mortgage then due constitute a sufficient consideration for the agreement of the defendant?

> "The rule on this subject is thus stated in Story on Contracts, § 447: 'Mutual promises are concurrent considerations, and will support each other, unless one or the other be void; in which case, there being no consideration on the one side, no contract can arise.'" Siddall v. Clark, 89 Cal. 321, 26 Pac. 829.
>
> "As was stated in Belloc v. Davis, 38 Cal. 256: 'It is well settled that forbearance to sue is a sufficient consideration to support a contract.' What may constitute a valuable consideration 'may be the surrender, suspension, or forbearance of a legal right to process for the enforcement of the collection of the debt'—citing Frey v. Clifford, 44 Cal. 335, 341." Wells Fargo & Co. v. Enright, 127 Cal. 669, 673, 60 Pac. 439, 441 (49 L. R. A. 647).

Our Code provides that:

> "Any benefit conferred, or agreed to be conferred, upon the promisor, by any other person, to which the promisor is not lawfully entitled, or any prejudice suffered, or agreed to be suffered, by such person, other than such as he is at the time of consent lawfully bound to suffer, as an inducement to the promisor, is a good consideration for a promise." Civ. Code, § 1605.

The agreement to forbear suit on the part of the plaintiff in this case is a "prejudice suffered or agreed to be suffered, by such person, other than such as he is at the time of consent, lawfully bound to suffer." It is immaterial whether the court is able to discover any actual benefit derived by the defendant or any substantial prejudice suffered by the plaintiff by such forbearance. The question of whether or not the plaintiff may be able to establish the allegations of his complaint as to damage is not involved on this appeal.

Judgment is reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.

(177 Cal. 414)

GARTLAN v. C. A. HOOPER & CO.

(S. F. 7733.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 2, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑959(3)—REVIEW—DISCRETION OF COURT — AMENDMENT OF PLEADING.

Discretion of Court, under Code Civ. Proc. § 470, in permitting the pleadings of the parties to be amended at any stage of the trial of the cause, will not be interfered with on appeal in the absence of manifest abuse.

2. PLEADING 🔑420(2) — AMENDMENTS — OBJECTIONS.

Where defendant made no request that the submission of the cause be set aside, or that it be permitted to offer further pleadings or proofs, respecting the subject-matter of trial amendments conforming the pleadings to the proof, defendant cannot object to such amendments.

3. PLEADING 🔑8(11)—AVERMENTS—OWNERSHIP.

The averment of ownership of real estate or of any specified interest therein is an averment of an ultimate fact. Therefore an allegation that plaintiff under his deed from defendant's predecessor entered into possession of a certain tract, together with the water then being developed and conveyed as appurtenant to said tract, and ever since then has been the owner in fee of all such water as appurtenant thereto, is an allegation of an ultimate fact.

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT 🔑119(1)—"TENANCY AT SUFFERANCE"—NATURE OF.

A tenancy at sufferance arises when a person goes into possession of land lawfully and occupies it afterward without any title at all. Therefore one who entered into possession of land under a contract with a mortgagor for its purchase upon installments becomes, on remaining in possession after foreclosure of the mortgage, a tenant at sufferance.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Tenant at Sufferance.]

5. WATERS AND WATER COURSES 🔑154(1)—CONSTRUCTION—"APPURTENANCE."

Civ. Code, § 662, declares that a thing is deemed to be incidental or appurtenant to land when it is by right used with the land for its benefit, as in the case of a way or a water course. Plaintiff entered into possession of a parcel of land under a contract with the mortgagor for its purchase on installments. Finding no water on the land which he contracted to purchase, he constructed a tunnel on an adjoining parcel of land which was owned by the mortgagor subject to the same mortgage, and by means of a pipe conducted water developed thereon to his own premises. This was consented to by the mortgagor. After foreclosure of the mortgage, plaintiff represented to the mortgagee, defendant's predecessor, that he had paid the major portion of the consideration for the parcel of land of which he had possession and requested relief, also proposing to purchase the land from which he derived water. Defendant's predecessor on plaintiff's payment of the remainder of the consideration executed to him a quitclaim deed, which described the land, together with "all and singular the tenements, hereditaments, and appurtenances thereunto belonging." The agent of defendant's predecessor who executed the deed and knew of plaintiff's desire to obtain the water had been shown the tunnel and pipe leading the water from the adjoining parcel to plaintiff's land. Held, that as plaintiff who was in possession at the time of the execution of the quitclaim deed was at least a tenant by sufferance, having entered lawfully, and the pipe and tunnel were used for the benefit of the land of which he had possession, such pipe and tunnel, together with the right to the water conducted, passed as an "appurtenance."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Appurtenance.]

6. PLEADING 🔑388—TRIAL—VARIANCE—MATERIALITY.

In such case, as the pipe, tunnel, and waters passed as an appurtenance to plaintiff, an averment in plaintiff's amended complaint that, at the date of the conveyance to him, he had for a long time openly used the waters under a contract of purchase from the mortgagor, while a variance from the exact facts, was immaterial.

7. WATERS AND WATER COURSES 🔑154(1) — APPURTENANCES — QUITCLAIM DEEDS—CONSTRUCTION.

In such case, as plaintiff notified the agent of defendant's predecessor of the existence of the tunnel and pipe line by means of which he conducted water from the adjoining lands to his own parcel, and suggested that he be allowed to purchase the adjoining parcel, and the agent informed him that having the waters he needed nothing more, the deed though a quitclaim conveyance must be construed to include the waters, tunnel, etc., as an appurtenance.

8. QUIETING TITLE 🔑10(2) — ACTIONS — GROUNDS.

Plaintiff who sought to quiet title to a tunnel, pipe line, and waters conducted by means thereof from adjoining lands to his own premises, may set up not only a claim of title as an appurtenance but an adverse title acquired by open and adverse user.

9. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT 🔑177(3)—KNOWLEDGE OF AGENT—IMPUTATION TO PRINCIPAL.

Knowledge of an agent who had charge of a parcel of land and as attorney in fact executed conveyances for the principal as to the appurtenances of the land conveyed is imputable to the principal.

10. ADVERSE POSSESSION 🔑55—REVERSIONER—RENEWAL OF LEASE.

The rule that limitations do not run against a reversioner has no application where the landlord demised premises for one year and annually renewed the lease during the period of plaintiff's adverse user of a water tunnel he had built on the leased land to carry water to his adjoining land, for the landlord came constructively into possession of his own at the annual expiration of the lease and prior to the annual renewal thereof, and hence might have exercised an owner's right to put an end to the adverse user.

11. TAXATION 🔑430—ASSESSMENT—SPECIFICATION.

Where use of water is appurtenant to a parcel of land and contributes to its value, it must be considered as included in the assessment without a separate specification.

12. EASEMENTS 🔑36(1)—ADVERSE TITLE — PAYMENT OF TAXES.

Title by adverse possession to an easement in water conducted by plaintiff from adjoining land cannot be denied on the theory that, as the water was not separately assessed to plaintiff, he paid no taxes thereon, for it must be assumed that such water was included in the assessment of his land on which it was used.

13. JUDGES 🔑32—RENDITION OF JUDGMENT AFTER RE-ELECTION.

Where, pending the submission of a case to a judge of the superior court, his term of office expired and a new term to which he had been re-elected began, no interregnum between terms intervened; and, the superior court being a continuing judicial tribunal, a judgment rendered after the beginning of the new term is not open to attack.

14. WATERS AND WATER COURSES 🔑158½(1) —APPURTENANCES—SCOPE.

Where plaintiff acquired title to waters from adjoining land either as an easement or appurtenance, he is entitled only to the amount of waters previously used, and the judgment quieting his title to the waters, pipe line, and tunnel should not give him any broader rights than those he was exercising at the time of the commencement of the action.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; R. H. Latimer, Judge.

Action by James Gartlan against C. A. Hooper & Co., a corporation. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Modified.

Thos. S. Molloy, of San Francisco, for appellant. A. F. Bray, of Martinez, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action to quiet title to a tract of land designated in the record as tract No. 1, portion of the Moraga Rancho, in the county of Contra Costa, and also to quiet title to certain water having its source upon an adjoining portion of said rancho designated as tract No. 2, which said water is developed and collected in a tunnel on said tract No. 2, and conveyed thence through a pipe to and upon the first-mentioned tract of land. No controversy exists as to the right of the plaintiff to have his title quieted to tract No. 1, for in its answer the defendant disclaims all interest therein. The issues herein arise over the contested right of the plaintiff to the water which has its origin upon the lands of the defendant, designated as tract No. 2, and to have the same developed and conducted to his own land by means of such tunnel and pipe, as an appurtenance thereto. The facts of the case are in the main undisputed. Prior to the year 1889 one Horace W. Carpentier was the owner of 12,600 acres of land comprising the greater portion of the Moraga Rancho. In that year he conveyed his said holdings therein to Angus A. Grant and James A. Williamson, taking back from his said grantees a mortgage thereon as security for a portion of the purchase price. A little later in the same year his said grantees conveyed all of said land to the Moraga Land Association, a corporation, subject to said mortgage. In 1894 a second mortgage thereon was executed to Carpentier by the Moraga Land Association, and this was followed in the year 1895 by a third mortgage between the same parties, all of which mortgages were duly recorded. In June, 1894, while said property was subject to the terms of the first two of said mortgages, the Moraga Land Association entered into an agreement with the plaintiff herein, for the purchase by him of the ten acres in said rancho which is designated as tract No. 1, for an agreed price of $1,350. The agreement was in the nature of a conditional sale contract, by which the would-be purchaser was to be given immediate possession of the premises, paying the purchase price therefor in installments covering a number of years; the contract providing that he was to be considered as a tenant of the property until such installments were fully paid, and that such installments as were from time to time so paid were to be regarded as rental of the premises, and were to be forfeited in the event of his failure to continue the payment of such installments according to the terms of his agreement. This contract was not recorded, but the plaintiff went into possession of tract No. 1, under it, in the year 1894, and proceeded in the course of the following year to improve the same by building fences and by the erection of a house and barn thereon. He also endeavored to find water upon the tract, but failed to do so, whereupon he applied to the Moraga Land Association for permission to go upon the adjoining tract No. 2, and prospect for water to be used upon his own land. He was given such permission, and acting in pursuance thereof, and in the year 1896, he dug a tunnel upon tract No. 2, in which water gathered, forming a pool, which he proceeded to connect by a pipe 2 inches in diameter at the pool, but narrowing to 1½ inches in the course of its extension to and upon tract No. 1, and by means of which he conducted said water thereto.

In the year 1896 Carpentier commenced an action against the Moraga Land Association for the foreclosure of the three mortgages above referred to. The plaintiff herein was not made a party to said action, but it is conceded that it was not necessary that he should have been made a party thereto, his agreement not having been recorded, but that he was bound by the decree of foreclosure therein. Such decree was entered in August, 1899, and in due time thereafter the entire property covered by said mortgages, including both of said tracts Nos. 1 and 2, was sold by the commissioner to said Carpentier, and, the property not having been redeemed, it was, on September 6, 1901, conveyed by said commissioner to Carpentier. In the meantime the plaintiff had continued to pay his regular installments to his vendor, the Moraga Land Association, until he had paid the sum of $1,150 on account of the purchase price of tract No. 1. He had also expended considerable money in the improvement of said tract, and, in addition thereto, he had laid out about $1,000 in the development of the water which he had discovered and collected on tract No. 2, and in the conveyance of the same to his own tract. There is evidence tending to show that the plaintiff was unaware of the pendency of the proceedings in foreclosure until after the judgment therein had been entered, and that it was only after he had gone to the office of the Moraga Land Association in the latter part of the year 1901, to pay another installment upon his contract, that he learned that Carpentier had become the owner of the property. During all of the years of the plaintiff's connection with the property Carpentier had been an absentee owner, residing in an eastern state, and having as his local agent, one Leviston, an attorney with his offices in the city of San Francisco, who held a general power of attorney from Carpentier in relation to his interests in the Moraga Rancho. In the early days of February, 1902, the plaintiff went to see said Leviston for the purpose of explaining to him the hardship he was under by reason of having lost his whole interest and investment in the property through the foreclosure proceedings, and with a view to seeking relief therefrom. Mr. Leviston assured him that Mr. Carpentier wanted to do the right thing by him, but that, before any action was taken, he (Leviston) wished to see the premises. A day or two later the plaintiff and Leviston went together to the premises, looking over tract No. 1, and then going upon tract No. 2, inspecting the tunnel and pipe thereon, and following the course of the latter to its outlet on tract No. 1, and there observing the distribution of the water upon said tract. While there, according to the plaintiff's undisputed testimony, he applied to said Leviston to purchase tract No. 2, for the purpose of protecting his use of the waters which he had been deriving therefrom, from possible interference on the part of some later purchaser of said tract. Mr. Leviston stated that Mr. Carpentier would not sell any more of said land in small tracts, and that if he sold at all he would sell the whole rancho. "But," he said, "you have the water now, what more do you want?" Thereupon it was agreed that, if the plaintiff would pay the sum of $200, the remaining balance of the installments due upon his original agreement, Mr. Carpentier would give him a deed. On February 5, 1902, the plaintiff, having made such payment, Leviston, as the attorney in fact for Carpentier, executed and delivered to the plaintiff a quitclaim deed, conveying to him by proper description tract No. 1. This deed contained the following provision:

> "Together with all and singular, the tenements, hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging. * * * To have and to hold, all and singular, the said premises, together with the appurtenances, unto the said party of the second part and to his heirs and assigns forever."

Upon receipt of this conveyance, the plaintiff continued in the possession of the premises specifically described therein, and also continued in the open and undisputed use and enjoyment of the waters derived from the tunnel and pipe upon tract No. 2. These conditions continued uninterruptedly until shortly before the commencement of this action, on November 28, 1911. In the meantime, and during the years intervening between the inception of Carpentier's reinvestment of ownership of the Moraga Rancho, as the purchaser thereof under the foreclosure sale, until the date of the commencement of this action, one John Devlin had been in possession of tract No. 2 as a tenant under annual leases thereof, which expired in October of each year and were yearly renewed. Devlin was at all times aware of the uses the plaintiff was making of the water which he was deriving by means of said tunnel and pipe upon said tract No. 2, and never made any sort of objection thereto. In the summer of the year 1911 the plaintiff learned that Mr. Carpentier was about to make a sale of his entire holdings in the Moraga Rancho, and desiring to better his title to tract No. 1 by procuring a grant, bargain, and sale deed thereto, and also desiring to further protect himself against any possible interference with what he claimed to be his rights in the water developed upon and issuing from tract No. 2, he applied to the then agent of Mr. Carpentier for the issuance to him of such grant deed. Not being able to procure the same upon satisfactory terms, he instituted the present action. Thereafter and on July 19, 1912, the entire interest of Mr. Carpentier in the Moraga Rancho was conveyed by him to one Charles A. Hooper, who, on August 29, 1912, conveyed the same to one C. A. Hooper & Co., a corporation, the defendant and appellant herein.

The plaintiff appears to have had some difficulty with the law or with the court in setting forth his cause of action herein. Just what the difficulty was does not appear, but it was not until the plaintiff had filed his sixth amended complaint that he succeeded in passing the ordeal of demurrer. The sixth amended complaint counted upon two causes of action; the first an alleged cause of action based upon the plaintiff's claim of right to the use of the water developed upon and derived from tract No. 2 as an appurtenant for tract No. 1, and as having passed to him as such under the terms of his aforesaid quitclaim deed. The second alleged cause of action was predicated upon his claim of right to the use of such water acquired by adverse possession since the date of said deed. The defendant's demurrer to this sixth amended complaint having been overruled, it answered, disclaiming title to tract

No. 1, but denying specifically the averments of both counts of the plaintiff's said complaint as to his right to the water derived from tract No. 2, or to any interest whatever in said tract or the waters thereof. Upon the trial of the cause and at some time after the submission of the same for decision, the plaintiff moved the court for leave to amend his sixth amended complaint so as to make the allegations thereof conform to the proof. The court granted this motion, but declined to accept or permit such amendments in the form in which the plaintiff presented them, and thereupon proceeded to formulate what the court deemed to be the proper phrasing of such amendments so as to make the same conform to the proofs, and, having done so, ordered such amendments to be made. The subdivisions of the plaintiff's said complaint affected by these amendments were the third paragraph of both counts and the sixth paragraph of the first count thereof. These as amended read as follows:

> "Third. That at the date of said conveyance from Carpentier to plaintiff there was being used, and for a long time prior thereto had been used, obviously and permanently by plaintiff under a contract of purchase from the Moraga Land Association, Carpentier's predecessor in title, for the benefit of the lands contained in said tract No. 1, all the waters then and theretofore developed in and issuing out of the tunnel constructed on said tract No. 2, said waters being conveyed across the lands of tract No. 2 a distance northeasterly of 175 feet, more or less, from the mouth of said tunnel to the land of tract No. 1 by means of 2-inch and 1½-inch pipe. That said water is still being developed in said tunnel and is flowing therefrom as aforesaid."
>
> "Sixth. That under said deed of conveyance of February 5, 1902, and on said day, plaintiff took and entered into the actual possession of the whole of the lands contained in said tract No. 1, together with the water then being developed and conveyed as aforesaid as appurtenant to said tract, and ever since said 5th day of February, 1902, plaintiff has been and is now the owner in fee and in the actual possession of all of said tract No. 1 and all of the said water as appurtenant thereto."

The findings of the trial court followed and held to be true the averments of the plaintiff's sixth amended complaint as thus further amended. The judgment follows the findings in its recitals, and then proceeds to adjudge:

> "That plaintiff is the owner of all the water now being developed in and issuing from, or that may hereafter be developed in and issue from, the tunnel constructed on that portion of the Rancho Laguna de Los Palos Colorados, or Moraga Rancho, described in this judgment, and in plaintiff's complaint, under the designation of tract No. 2; with the right to the conveyance of said water across the lands of said tract No. 2 to aforesaid tract No. 1, by means of 2-inch and 1½-inch pipe. That defendant has no right, title, interest, or estate whatever in or to the lands contained in said tract No. 1, or in any part or portion thereof, or in or to the water developed in and issuing from, or that may hereafter be developed in and issue from the tunnel constructed on said tract No. 2."

[1] The appellant urges numerous contentions upon this appeal as grounds for a reversal, but these upon an examination are reducible to the few essential propositions which we shall proceed to consider. The appellant's first contention is that the trial court erred in permitting further amendments to be made to the plaintiff's sixth amended complaint after the submission of the cause for decision; and it particularly complains that the court erred in drafting, or at least directing, the form of such amendment. These contentions are without merit. Under the provisions of section 470 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the trial court is invested with discretionary power to permit and even to order the pleadings of the parties to be amended at any stage of the trial of the cause, and even after its submission, so as to make such pleadings conform to the proofs, and it has been uniformly held that this discretion will not be interfered with upon appeal except in cases of its manifest abuse. Graham v. Stewart, 68 Cal. 374, 9 Pac. 555; Firebaugh v. Burbank, 121 Cal. 186, 53 Pac. 560; Andrus v. Smith, 133 Cal. 78, 65 Pac. 320; Stohlman v. Martin, 28 Cal. App. 338, 152 Pac. 319.

[2] In the instant case, after the court had permitted and directed the form of the amendments in question, the defendant made no request that the submission of the cause be set aside, or that it be permitted to offer further pleadings or proofs respecting the subject-matter of these amendments. It is apparent, therefore, that it was in no wise prejudiced by the action of the trial court in directing the amendments in question to be made. The appellant, however, in this connection, insists that, as to the amendment of the third paragraph of the plaintiff's sixth amended complaint, it did not in fact correspond to the proofs in an important particular and was therefore improperly made. The particular in which the appellant contends that this amendment fails to conform to the proofs is the inclusion therein of the clause which states that the waters developed in and derived from tract No. 2 were being at the date of the plaintiff's conveyance from Carpentier, and for a long time prior thereto had been, used "obviously and permanently by plaintiff under a contract of purchase from the Moraga Land Association." Technically speaking, this contention of the appellant as to the phrase above quoted is correct. The proofs show that the waters in question were prior to and at the date of the Carpentier deed to plaintiff, being used by the latter under the original permission so to do orally given to plaintiff by the Moraga Land Association, at some time after his contract for the purchase of tract No. 1 was entered into, and that the right to the use thereof was therefore not referable to said contract. This variance, however, we hold to be immaterial for reasons which will hereafter appear.

[3] As to the amendment to paragraph 6 of the plaintiff's sixth amended complaint, to the effect that the plaintiff, under his deed from Carpentier, entered into the possession of tract No. 1, "together with the water then being developed and conveyed as appurtenant to said tract," and that ever since the date of said deed the plaintiff had been the owner in fee "of all of said water as appurtenant thereto," the appellant contends that these quoted clauses do not constitute statements of ultimate facts, but merely conclusions of law, and hence were not the proper subjects of inclusion in said complaint by way of an amendment thereof. But the averments above quoted as having been added to the sixth paragraph of plaintiff's complaint amount to something more than mere conclusions of law. They are averments of the ownership in the plaintiff of the water in question, as appurtenant to tract No. 1, of which he became the admitted owner by virtue of the deed from Carpentier. The averment of ownership of real estate or of any specified interest therein was very early in the history of our jurisprudence held to be the averment of an ultimate fact. Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 221. And this decision has been adopted in numberless pleadings and approved and followed in numerous subsequent cases, until it has become and long been a settled rule of law. The latest case affirming it is that of McArthur v. Goodwin, 173 Cal. 500, 160 Pac. 679. Whether or not these averments to which appellant objects conform to the proofs will be later considered.

This brings us to the real pivotal points of controversy of the case at bar. They are these: First, was the water as developed and used by the plaintiff under his oral permission so to do given him by the Moraga Land Association and thereafter continuously used by him in connection with and for the benefit of said tract No. 1, up to the time when his rights to the purchase and ownership of said tract ceased under the foreclosure proceedings instituted by Carpentier, and under which he became the absolute owner of said rancho, and thereafter until the date of the execution of Carpentier's deed to said plaintiff, an appurtenance to tract No. 1, so as to have passed as such under the deed of Carpentier to plaintiff of said last-named tract? Second, did such use of said waters in fact pass as an appurtenance to tract No. 1 under the form of the deed from Carpentier to the plaintiff and under the circumstances preceding and attending the making of said deed? Third, if the easement covering the use of said waters did not pass as an appurtenance to said tract No. 1, under the Carpentier deed thereof to plaintiff, has the plaintiff subsequently acquired the right to such easement by adverse possession? Fourth, is the judgment confirming such easement in the plaintiff valid, and, if so, is it not broader than the proofs would justify in defining the plaintiff's present and future right to the use of said waters?

[4, 5] As to the first of these contentions, the appellant insists that the permissive use which the plaintiff was making of the tunnel and conduit upon tract No. 2, and of the waters developed upon said tract and conveyed to tract No. 1, could not have ripened into an easement during the ownership by the Moraga Land Association of the entire tract, so as to be in any way binding upon Carpentier as the prior mortgagee thereof, and that, as to Carpentier, whatever rights or privileges the plaintiff had acquired from his mortgagor in relation to both contracts were absolutely terminated by the commissioner's deed to Carpentier upon the foreclosure of his mortgages thereon. Conceding this much to be true, it does not necessarily follow that the use of such water by the plaintiff during the period prior to the issuing of the commissioner's deed to Carpentier would not have been such an appurtenance to tract No. 1, as to have passed under a grant of said tract from the Moraga Land Association to the plaintiff, had the latter continued to be the owner of said entire tract and had such grant been made. The Code defines an appurtenance as follows:

> "A thing is deemed to be incidental or appurtenant to land when it is by right used with the land for its benefit, as in the case of a way, or water course, or of a passage for light, air, or heat from or across the land of another." Civ. Code, § 662.

The uncontradicted evidence in this case discloses that the plaintiff's rights to the use of the waters in question, while they had their inception in the oral permission of the Moraga Land Association to develop and conduct the same on tract No. 2, and thence to his own tract, were exercised and matured through the expenditure of a considerable sum of money, and were attended with the assertion of certain exclusive acts of apparent ownership in connection with the development and use of said water, such as the diversion of the whole thereof, and the maintenance of a door and lock upon the entrance to the tunnel wherein the waters were collected. Whether these facts would have sufficed to support the plaintiff's claim of an acquired easement against the Moraga Land Association, it is not necessary here to decide. But at least they go to show that the plaintiff's use of said water in connection and for the benefit of tract No. 1 was not unlawful up to the fact and date of the commissioner's deed to Carpentier; and while it is also true, as the appellant contends, that whatever rights the plaintiff had to become the purchaser of tract No. 1, under his contract with the Moraga Land Association, and whatever rights he had acquired to the use of the waters in question as an appurtenance to said tract, ceased upon the making of the commissioner's deed to Carpentier, it does not necessarily follow, as appellant contends, that the plaintiff's holding of tract No. 1, and use of the waters developed on tract No. 2, became unlawful upon the execution of said commissioner's deed, as to its grantee, Carpentier. The plaintiff was a tenant of the Moraga Land Association prior to the making of said deed, under a strict construction of the terms of said contract. How much more than this he had become by reason of the facts that he had almost entirely paid the amount to be paid as the purchase price of tract No. 1, and that he had also expended considerable sums in the improvement of said tract and in the development and conduct of the waters derived from tract No. 2, with the knowledge and consent of his vendor, may not be material to this inquiry. He was at least in the position of a tenant holding over after the termination of his tenancy, and he was thus not a trespasser, as the appellant would have us hold, but a tenant at sufferance of Carpentier, as the successor in interest of the plaintiff's former landlord, by virtue of the purchase by Carpentier of the entire premises at the foreclosure sale thereof. A tenancy at sufferance arises when a person goes into possession of land lawfully and occupies it afterward without any title at all. 2 Blackstone, Commentaries, 150; Uridias v. Morrell, 25 Cal. 31; Moore v. Morrow, 28 Cal. 551; Hauxhurst v. Lobree, 38 Cal. 563.

The rights of Carpentier date from the purchase of the rancho at the foreclosure sale, and not from his former ownership of the rancho, or from the fact that he had been the mortgagee thereof. At the date of such purchase the plaintiff was in possession of tract No. 1, lawfully, and was also lawfully, and hence by right, using the waters in question as an appurtenance or servitude upon tract No. 2 for the benefit of the former tract. Mr. Carpentier unquestionably would have had the right upon coming into the ownership of the entire rancho by virtue of his commissioner's deed to have ejected the plaintiff therefrom; but he did not do so, but, on the contrary, for several months knowingly, through his local agent, permitted the plaintiff to remain in possession of tract No. 1, and in the open use of the waters derived from tract No. 2, for the benefit of the former tract. The plaintiff was therefore in the lawful exercise of such possession and use as a tenant at sufferance of Carpentier in the early days of the month of February, 1902, when he sought and received the conveyance from Carpentier which took the form of the quitclaim deed of the date of February 5, 1902.

The possession of said tract No. 1 by the plaintiff, and the lawful use by him of the waters in question upon and for the benefit of said tract as such tenant at sufferance of Carpentier, during the months intervening between the 6th day of September, 1901, and the 5th day of February, 1902, was the possession and use thereof by his landlord, Carpentier. Had a quitclaim deed, in the form in which the plaintiff's deed was phrased, conveying tract No. 1, and also expressly conveying the appurtenances thereto, been made by Carpentier to a stranger during said period, it cannot be seriously contended that it would not have transferred the waters here in question as appurtenant to tract No. 1. This being so, we can perceive no reason why the deed to the plaintiff should not be given the same effect, and we are cited to no authority holding that it should be given a different effect because executed to a tenant of the grantor occupying the premises and using the waters, as the plaintiff herein was occupying and using the same at the time of receiving his said deed from Carpentier. If such effect is to be given to that deed, it follows that the amendment to paragraph 6 of the plaintiff's sixth amended complaint, and the finding of the trial court which follows the form of such amendment, were an averment and finding of an ultimate fact in the case, conforming to the proofs, and were not therefore subject to appellant's criticism of the court for ordering such amendment or making such finding.

[6] It will also be apparent from what has heretofore been said that the defendants' objection to the amendment of paragraph 3, of said complaint, and to the finding based thereon, is also without substantial merit, since it is quite immaterial under what particular contract or permission the plaintiff originally acquired the right to enter upon said tract No. 2 and to develop and use the waters thereon for the benefit of tract No. 1.

[7] This disposes of all of the appellant's contentions, so far as they relate to the first cause of action, save one, and that is the appellant's contention that the quitclaim deed of February 5, 1902, is not to be construed as intending to convey anything other than the bare land of tract No. 1, without appurtenances, for the reason that all that the plaintiff paid as the consideration for such deed was the sum of $200, the balance remaining due upon his contract with the Moraga Land Association for the purchase of said tract. This contention might have weight, were that the only circumstance casting light upon the intent of the parties in the making of said deed; but the evidence further discloses that, a day or two prior to the execution of said deed, the authorized agent of the grantor, and the person who actually executed the same on his principal's behalf, went with the plaintiff over the premises to be affected by said deed, and practically agreed that it should cover and convey the waters in question. The trial court, in determining the scope of said conveyance, had before it both of these circumstances, and was entitled to give its own weight to each of them in construing said deed, and with its determination of the issue thus raised, in plaintiff's favor, we shall not interfere.

[8-10] With respect to the plaintiff's second cause of action, and to the findings and conclusions of the court based thereon, but little need be said. The plaintiff had a right to plead and to rely upon both his claim to the ownership of an easement in said waters by virtue of his deed of February 5, 1902, and by virtue of his open and adverse use thereof under claim of right subsequent to the date of said deed, and for the period requisite under the statute to acquire a right thereto by adverse possession. Had he failed in establishing his right to the use of said waters as an appurtenance to tract No. 1, expressly conveyed by said deed, he could still show title by adverse user for the statutory time. We shall not attempt to discuss the evidence which was adduced by the plaintiff in support of the second count of his complaint further than to say that in our opinion it abundantly shows that the use which the plaintiff has made of the waters in question since February 5, 1902, was open, sufficiently continuous, and under a claim of right so to do; and that such use was fully within the knowledge and observation of the tenants and local agents of Carpentier. Such knowledge was therefore his own. The defendant's contention that the statute of limitations does not run against a reversioner has no application to the facts of this case, for the reason that the tenancy of the tenant or tenants, of the rancho, of which tract No. 2 was a part, expired annually, and was annually renewed during the entire period of the plaintiff's adverse user of the waters in question. The landlord as reversioner came constructively into possession of his own at the annual expiration of his tenant's term and prior to the annual renewal thereof, and hence was in a position to exercise, and should have exercised, an owner's right to put an end to an adverse user of any portion of his property before the same ripened into a title through lapse of time. Failing to do this for the statutory period, he would lose that right by an adverse possession on the part of the plaintiff, which would otherwise have satisfied the requirements of the statute.

[11, 12] The appellant urges, however, that the plaintiff's adverse user and claim of these waters did not otherwise satisfy the requirements of the statute because he paid no taxes upon the easement claimed; but in this behalf the evidence shows that no taxes were separately assessed upon such easement, but that the plaintiff paid all of the taxes which were assessed against tract No. 1, since his acquisition of title thereto. This court has held that, where the use of water is appurtenant to a tract of land and contributes to its value, it must be considered as included in the assessment of such land without a separate specification. Coonradt v. Hill, 79 Cal. 593, 21 Pac. 1099; Frederick v. Dickey, 91 Cal. 358, 27 Pac. 742.

[13] With respect to the judgment herein, the appellant makes two contentions: First, that the judgment is void for the reason that Judge Latimer's term of office expired while he held this cause under submission, and that, being re-elected, he decided it after the commencement of his new term. The point has no merit, even if it can be presented upon a record which does not disclose these facts, and even if it can be urged in this court for the first time upon appeal. The cause was pending in the superior court which is a continuing judicial tribunal. It was decided by the same superior judge who tried it. There was no interregnum between his term, and hence the holding by the individual of the office must be held to be a continuous holding in so far as the duties of his office may be involved. The cases cited by appellant have no application to the facts of this case, since they refer to the power of a newly elected judge to decide matters in which he had not heard the evidence in his judicial capacity.

[14] The next and final contention of the appellant is that the terms of the judgment defining the plaintiff's right to the waters in question are too broad. A reference to the portion of the judgment hereinabove set forth will show that this contention has merit. The plaintiff's right to the use of the waters in question should be limited to the extent of his use thereof prior to and at the time of the commencement of this action. He is entitled to maintain a tunnel and pipe upon tract No. 2 for the purpose of developing and transmitting so much of said waters as may be measured by the capacity of the 2-inch and 1½-inch pipe which has heretofore served to conduct said waters to his own premises. But he is entitled to no more than this, and hence those portions of the judgment which declare the plaintiff to be the owner, not only of all the water "now being developed and issuing from" said tunnel, but also of all such waters "as may hereafter be developed in and issuing from the tunnel," etc., and which further decree that the defendant has no right, title, interest, or estate in or to such waters "as may hereafter be developed and issue from the tunnel constructed on said tract No. 2," are susceptible of a construction giving the plaintiff a much greater right and ownership in such waters as may hereafter be developed upon tract No. 2, than he would be entitled to under his previous or present use of such waters, and also to a construction which might give him a larger right to the development of waters upon tract No. 2, through the extension of said tunnel or the enlargement of said pipe, than he has heretofore claimed or exercised.

The judgment of the court should therefore be modified in these respects, and the trial court is hereby directed to modify the same so as to conform to the views expressed in this opinion; each party to pay their own costs on appeal. So ordered.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

177 Cal. 458

BARANOV v. SCUDDER. (L. A. 3941.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1918.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT 🔑78(1) — SUBLEASES—SUFFICIENCY OF INSTRUMENT.

A sublease read: "This indenture shows that B. has my room No. 936 Fifth St. for two years from this date for $150 per month in advance, with one exception, and that is that in case of fire where I am now located that he gives me possession in thirty days. At the expiration of two years, I have option of two years longer at same proportionate length as the Western Union will have to pay and the same rate will be extended to B." Held, that this instrument, though not formal in character, was legally sufficient as a lease for two years, and it was not an objection that the property was not described by reference to a map, or in any other manner usually employed, where it appeared that the parties knew where the room was located and acted upon the theory that the document properly located and described it, nor was it insufficient because of the failure to use the words "let" or "demise," as no particular or set language is necessary to constitute a lease.

2. EVIDENCE 🔑594 — CONCLUSIVENESS — UNCONTROVERTED EVIDENCE.

In a sublessee's action for damages sustained from an eviction by the overlandlord, where notices from the overlandlord, terminating the lease, introduced in evidence, stated that the lease contained a covenant against subleasing, and this evidence was uncontradicted, it was conclusive.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT 🔑80(3)—RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF SUBTENANTS—NOTICE.

A sublessee, knowing that his lessor was only a lessee of a third party, was charged with knowledge of the contents of the overlease.

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT 🔑80(3) — COVENANT OF QUIET ENJOYMENT—ACTIONS FOR BREACH.

In an action by a sublessee ejected by the overlandlord, against his immediate lessor, to recover for breach of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment, the complaint failed to state a cause of action, where it was silent as to the basis of the overlandlord's action, whereby plaintiff was ousted from the premises.

5. LANDLORD AND TENANT 🔑80(3) — COVENANT OF QUIET ENJOYMENT—SUBLEASES.

Under Civ. Code, § 1927, providing that an agreement to let upon hire binds the letter to secure to the hirer the quiet possession of the thing hired during the term of the hiring, there was an implied covenant of quiet enjoyment in a sublease, entitling the sublessee to sue the sublessor for damages from his eviction by the overlessor, because of the breach of the covenant in the overlease against subletting, though the sublessee knew of the covenant against subletting, as he had a right to assume that the sublessor would procure, if he had not already procured, the overlessor's consent to the sublease.

6. STATUTES 🔑222—CONSTRUCTION AS CONTINUATION OF COMMON LAW.

Civ. Code, § 1927, raising an implied covenant of quiet enjoyment of a thing hired during the term of the hiring, is not subject to the common-law exception that a covenant of quiet enjoyment, not expressed in the lease, but merely implied by law, endures only during the continuance of the estate of the lessor, notwithstanding section 5, providing that the provisions of such Code as far as they are substantially the same as existing statutes, or the common law, must be construed as continuations thereof, and not as new enactments, since section 1927 is not substantially the same as the common-law rule, as it does not provide for such exception, but, on the contrary, provides that the obligation to secure the quiet possession of the thing hired continues during the entire term of the hiring, and moreover section 1927 was apparently borrowed from the civil law, and not intended as a re-enactment of the common law.

7. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑70(3)—JUDICIAL FUNCTIONS—INQUIRY INTO JUSTICE OF LEGISLATION.

While it would probably be more conducive to justice if the common-law exception were incorporated into Civ. Code, § 1927, this was not done, and, the Legislature having spoken on the subject, the courts must follow its mandates without regard to the justice or injustice of the results.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by Max Baranov against Hewlett Scudder. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. H. Lamme, of San Diego, for appellant. Binnard & Weinberger and W. P. Cary, all of San Diego, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This cause comes before us on rehearing after the decision by the District Court of Appeal. After further consideration of the cause, we approve the opinion of that court prepared by Mr. Justice Works. It is as follows:

"This is an appeal from the judgment and from an order denying appellant's motion for a new trial.

"On September 11, 1912, appellant executed to respondent a sublease of a storeroom held by the former under a lease from the Western Union Telegraph Company. Respondent remained in possession of the property until he was evicted through process of law, in August or September, 1913, in an action brought by the telegraph company for the purpose of ousting him. The present action was commenced to procure a judgment against the appellant for the damages suffered by respondent because of the eviction, on the theory that a covenant for quiet enjoyment was incident to the sublease. The case was tried by jury, and the respondent recovered judgment.

"Appellant claims that the writing which we have termed a sublease is not one. The instrument is as follows: 'This indenture shows that Mr. Max Baranov has my room No. 936 Fifth St., for two years from this date for $150 per month in advance, with one exception, and that is, that in case of fire where I am now located that he gives me possession in thirty days. At the expiration of two years, I have option of two years longer at same proportionate length as the Western Union will have to pay and same rate will be extended to Mr. Baranov.'

[1] "While the paper is not formal in character, it is legally sufficient as a lease for a term of two years. It is no objection that the property was not described by reference to a map, or in any other manner usually employed in legal descriptions of realty. The evidence shows that the parties knew where the room was located and at all times acted upon the theory that the document properly located and described it.

"The point is urged that the paper is lacking in the usual words of hiring of real property, such as 'let' or 'demise.' But it is not necessary to use these words nor any particular or set language to constitute a given writing a lease. The Supreme Court has adopted the following language of a text-book on this subject: 'Whatever words are sufficient to explain the intent of the parties, that one shall divest himself of the possession, and the other come into it, for such a determinate time, such words, whether they run in the form of a license, covenant, or agreement, are of themselves sufficient, and will, in construction of law, amount to a lease.' Williams v. Miller, 68 Cal. 290, 292, 9 Pac. 166. See, also, Dodd v. Pasch, 5 Cal. App. 686, 91 Pac. 166; Morris v. Iden, 23 Cal. App. 388, 138 Pac. 120.

"Appellant's next claim is that no covenant for quiet enjoyment went with the sublease, and that the evidence did not justify the finding, necessarily merged in the verdict, that it did. The evidence plainly shows, without dispute, that respondent knew, at the time he took the sublease from appellant, that the latter was but a tenant of the Western Union Telegraph Company, and that the lease between appellant and respondent was but a sublease. The lease from the telegraph company was in writing. The answer alleges, by way of affirmative defense, that in the instrument 'it was provided that said premises described in plaintiff's second amended complaint should not be sublet or the lease assigned except by the written consent of the said Western Union Telegraph Company and the existence of said lease and the contents thereof was as fully known to the said plaintiff as to this defendant.'

"The respondent offered in evidence in the trial court no part of the record or proceedings in the action brought by the telegraph company, probably because of the admissions of the answer; but he did offer two notices served by the company upon appellant before the commencement of the action, each of which, as the testimony of both parties shows, Scudder delivered to Baranov immediately after its service. The first of these contains the assertion: 'We are informed that in violation of our lease to you of the premises No. 955 Fifth St., San Diego, Cal., you have sublet to one Max Baranov. Under the terms of said lease, we are entitled to declare a forfeiture thereto, which we hereby do.'

"The second notice was served a short time later, doubtless because the first designated the property by a street number different from that of the premises actually occupied by Baranov, and was as follows: 'Under the terms of the lease of this company to you dated October 16, 1911, you expressly covenanted not to assign, let, or underlet any portion of the demised premises. Because of your violation of this covenant by subletting to Max Baranov, you are hereby advised that the Western Union Telegraph Company elects to terminate said lease, and you are hereby notified to vacate said premises on or before the 1st day of July, 1913, and in case of your failure so to vacate, the necessary steps will be taken to evict you.'

[2-4] "Neither of the parties offered the lease in evidence, but these notices show that it contained a covenant not to sublet, and that a forfeiture might be declared if a subletting was attempted. The evidence was uncontradicted, and therefore conclusive. As respondent knew that Scudder, his sublessor, was but a lessee of the telegraph company, he also knew the contents of the lease. Peer v. Wadsworth, 67 N. J. Eq. 191, 58 Atl. 379; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Keahy, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 330, 83 S. W. 1102; Gorgeous v. Lewis, 20 Cal. App. 255, 128 Pac. 768. Notwithstanding this knowledge, the respondent elected to take the sublease. Under the circumstances surrounding the execution of the sublease, was it accompanied by a covenant for quiet enjoyment, for the breach of which the appellant may be required to respond in damages? This question is to be solved upon the fact, which we will assume for the appellant, that the action brought by the telegraph company was grounded upon the matter of the subletting to Baranov as a breach of the covenant not to sublet. The pleadings in this case are silent upon the question as to what the basis of that action was. The complaint fails to state a cause of action, because of the omission, but the defect is cured by the manner in which the answer joins issue with the conclusions of law stated in the complaint. Nevertheless the action was tried upon the theory that the subletting was at the bottom of the litigation, and the two notices from the company show that the action was threatened on that account.

[5] "The respondent claims that a covenant for quiet enjoyment was secured to him by the language of section 1927 of the Civil Code, which provides that, 'An agreement to let upon hire binds the letter to secure to the hirer the quiet possession of the thing hired during the term of the hiring, against all persons lawfully claiming the same.'

"The opinion in Gorgeous v. Lewis, supra, contains language, in addition to the point to which it is cited above, to the effect that a subtenant is bound by the terms and conditions of the overlease; that, accordingly, the term of the sublease in question there was measured by the term of the overlease, although the sublease on its face demised the property for a longer period; and that the covenant for quiet enjoyment which accompanied the sublease was ended with the conclusion of the term limited in the overlease. It is to be noted that Gorgeous v. Lewis was exactly like this case in that it was an action by the sublessee against the sublessor for damages for an eviction by the overlandlord. Section 1927 is not cited nor mentioned in the opinion, and respondent asserts that the case, in so far as it bears upon the question now presented to us, is dictum; and such it appears to be, for there the sublease contained the express provision that it was 'to hold only to the conditions of the original lease.' The case is not, therefore, authority upon the point now under review.

"We turn to a consideration of the language of section 1927. Its letter seems plainly to cover the case presented here. If its spirit does not, it can only be for the reason that Baranov knew, as well as did Scudder, of the prohibition in the lease of the right to sublet. But that circumstance does not seem to afford an escape from the effect of the section. It is well settled that one may agree, in future, to convey property to which he has no title, and the other party to the pact, knowing of the lack, may expect that the day fixed for performance will bring to him that title. Is it not as logical to say that Baranov had the right to assume that Scudder would procure, if not, in fact, that he had already procured the telegraph company's consent to the sublease? Again, according to Wilmington Trans. Co. v. O'Neil, 98 Cal. 1, 5, 32 Pac. 705: 'Where a party has expressly undertaken, without any qualification to do anything not naturally or necessarily impossible under all circumstances, and does not do it, he must make compensation in damages, though the performance was rendered impracticable, or even impossible, by some unforeseen cause over which he had no control, but against which he might have provided in his contract.' See, also, Carlson v. Sheehan, 157 Cal. 692, 109 Pac. 29; Mineral Park Land Co. v. Howard, 172 Cal. 289, 156 Pac. 458, L. R. A. 1916F, 1. The reason of this rule applies as well to a foreseen possible cause over which the party might exercise control. Scudder could have readily protected himself against the effects of an eviction such as later resulted to Baranov, by a clause in the sublease, but omitted to do so.

"The doctrine of Gorgeous v. Lewis, followed to its legitimate conclusion, amounts to this: That no sublessee, knowing that he is a sublessee, is protected under section 1927 against a breach of any condition in the overlease, that is, if no act of omission or commission on the part of the sublessor occasions the breach. But such a rule meets with dissent in many cases. Geer v. Boston Little Circle Zinc Co., 126 Mo. App. 173, 103 S. W. 151, and cases cited; Griesheimer v. Bothman, 105 Ill. App. 585. The latter case is a counterpart of the present one, except that there the covenant for quiet enjoyment was expressed in the sublease instead of being secured by statute.

"While, as we have above indicated, a sublessee takes notice of the provisions of the overlease, it does not follow that such notice concludes his rights under his contract with his immediate lessor. He cannot, for instance, hold against the overlandlord for a term longer than that limited in the overlease. There may be other respects in which his knowledge might affect his relations with the overlandlord, or, perhaps, even with his immediate landlord; but that is far from saying that such knowledge deprives him of his right to damages against his lessor for an eviction at the hands of the landlord superior to them both, under some provision of the overlease.

"We are of the opinion that plaintiff is within the provisions of section 1927 of the Civil Code."

[6] The rehearing from that court was granted in order that we might give further consideration to the question of the meaning and effect of section 1927 of the Civil Code. The appellant contends that its construction is governed by section 5 of the Civil Code, which provides that:

"The provisions of this Code, so far as they are substantially the same as existing statutes or the common law, must be construed as continuations thereof, and not as new enactments."

In support of this theory he presents additional authorities to the effect that at common law a covenant for quiet enjoyment, which was not expressed in the lease, but was merely implied by law, did not endure longer than during the continuance of the estate of the lessor, or, as applied to this case, that the covenant for quiet enjoyment implied from the lease by Scudder to Baranov did not bind Scudder to secure the quiet possession to Baranov after the term of Scudder in the premises had terminated. The argument is that section 1927 of the Civil Code must be construed as a continuation of the common law, and therefore that it must be subject to this exception, as was the rule at common law. The trouble with this theory is that section 5, aforesaid. destroys it. The Code provisions are continuations of the common law only "so far as they are substantially the same." Section 1927 on this point is not substantially the same as the common-law rule. Instead of providing for an exception in case the lessor's estate does not endure for the entire period of the sublease, that section provides that the obligation of the letter to secure the quiet possession of the thing hired continues during the entire term of the hiring. The section declares the terms of the implied covenant which it creates from the acts of the parties. The obligation of the sublessor is not thereby limited by the duration of his own term or right of possession. The exception prevailing at common law is excluded. The section is therefore opposed to the common law, and is not governed by the rule of construction of section 5. The notes of the commissioners who prepared the Civil Code indicate that the section was not intended to be a re-enactment of the common law, but that it was borrowed from the civil law. This may explain the reason why nothing is said in the section which would allow an exception in case the sublessor's term ended before the expiration of the sublease.

[7] One of the evils of the Code system is that the law as thus enacted is seldom as elastic as was the common law, which it was in the main intended to declare. It would probably be more conducive to justice, upon the whole, if the exception here involved had been incorporated into the Code provision, but as this was not done, and the Legislature has spoken on the subject, the courts cannot do otherwise than to follow its mandates without regard to the justice or injustice of the results.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.; SLOSS, J.; WILBUR, J.; MELVIN, J.

(177 Cal. 31)

PASSOW & SONS v. UNITED STATES FIDELITY & GUARANTY CO.

(S. F. 8136.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 24, 1917. On Petition for Rehearing, Jan. 22, 1918.)

1. ATTACHMENT 🔑192—RELEASE ON SECURITY — FORM AND REQUISITES OF UNDERTAKING.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 540, providing that a writ of attachment shall direct the sheriff to attach enough of defendant's property to satisfy plaintiff's demand unless defendant gives an undertaking, and in such case to take such undertaking, an undertaking given, to secure the release of an attachment and providing that, if plaintiff recovered judgment, the surety would on demand pay the amount thereof to plaintiff, was a statutory undertaking, and not a mere obligation to pay the debt in consideration of the release of the attachment.

2. ATTACHMENT 🔑344—ACTIONS ON BONDS—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 552, providing that, if an execution be returned unsatisfied in whole or in part, plaintiff may prosecute any undertaking given pursuant to section 540, or proceed as in other cases upon the return of an execution, the regular issuance and return of an execution unsatisfied in whole or in part is a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action on an undertaking given under section 540 to procure the release of an attachment.

3. EXECUTION 🔑333—RETURN—TIME FOR RETURN.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 683, providing that an execution may be made returnable at any time not less than 10 nor more than 60 days after its receipt by the sheriff, an execution made returnable within 60 days cannot be regularly returned before the expiration of 10 days from its receipt by the sheriff.

4. ATTACHMENT 🔑344—ACTIONS ON BONDS—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.

The return of an execution unsatisfied before it has been held by the sheriff for at least the minimum period prescribed by law cannot be made the basis of an action on a bond given to procure the release of an attachment unless it appears that the judgment debtor had no property subject to levy or means wherewith to satisfy the execution at any time during the period between its issuance and the earliest lawful return day, in which case the return, though premature in point of time, will support the action.

5. ATTACHMENT 🔑349—ACTIONS ON BONDS—PLEADING.

In an action on a bond given to release an attachment, a complaint showing that the execution against the judgment debtor was returned prematurely, but not showing whether at that or any other time the judgment debtor had any property or means, was fatally defective, as, when the execution is returned prematurely, the party suing on the undertaking must allege and prove that the execution could not have been satisfied during the minimum lawful period for its return.

6. ATTACHMENT 🔑337—BONDS—DISCHARGE OF SURETIES—COLLUSION.

Collusion between defendant and plaintiff whereby judgment is given for a larger amount than plaintiff is entitled to will release a surety on a bond given to release an attachment and conditioned for the payment of any judgment recovered.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1011(1)—REVIEW—FINDINGS ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

In an action on a bond given to release an attachment, the court's finding on conflicting evidence against the surety's claim that plaintiff encouraged and permitted the principal to dispose of his property without applying it to the satisfaction of an execution against him could not be disturbed.

8. ATTACHMENT 🔑337—BONDS—DISCHARGE OF SURETIES.

Plaintiff sold goods to B. by a contract which reserved title in plaintiff, but provided that, if B. failed to pay any installment of the purchase price, the entire balance of the price should become due, and that thereupon plaintiff at its option could either sue for the whole price or cancel the contract and take possession. B. failed to pay, and plaintiff sued for the price, and attached the property on an affidavit stating as required by law that the debt was unsecured by any lien. B., without attacking the judgment, procured its release by giving an undertaking conditioned for the payment of any judgment recovered by plaintiff. Subsequently B. consented to judgment on condition that title to the property should pass to him, and judgment was rendered accordingly, and full delivery made to him. The surety claimed that, when judgment was rendered, plaintiff had a lien on the property, and by failing to enforce it plaintiff released the surety from liability. Held, that the surety was in no position to complain of plaintiff's conduct in bringing action on the debt instead of enforcing whatever lien he had as it must be presumed to have been aware of the facts when the undertaking was made and to have made its contract accordingly.

9. ATTACHMENT 🔑350—BONDS—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

In an action on such undertaking, evidence of the disposition made by B. of the goods of which complete delivery was made to him at the time of the judgment was admissible, provided its purpose was to show that the property was disposed of after the issuance of the execution against B., but not if the goods were disposed of before execution was issued without collusion between him and plaintiff.

On Petition for Rehearing.

10. ATTACHMENT 🔑192—RELEASE ON SECURITY—DELIVERY OF BOND.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 540, providing that a writ of attachment shall direct the sheriff to attach the defendant's property unless defendant gives an undertaking and in such case to take such undertaking, the mere fact that an undertaking, whereby the surety promised that if plaintiff recovered judgment it would on demand pay the amount thereof to plaintiff, was delivered to plaintiff instead of to the sheriff, did not change its character and make it a common-law, rather than a statutory, undertaking, where such delivery was for convenience only and the property was thereupon released by the sheriff in the usual way and not by plaintiff.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Passow & Sons against the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Leon E. Morris, of San Francisco (M. C. Lynch, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant. Keogh & Olds and W. H. Morrissey, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The defendant has appealed from the judgment, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

Plaintiff sued to recover judgment upon an undertaking given by the defendant, as surety for one Charles Bowman, to obtain the release of an attachment issued out of the superior court of Merced county, in an action wherein Passow & Sons was the plaintiff, and Charles Bowman was defendant. The undertaking was given in pursuance of section 540 of the Code of Civil Procedure. By its terms it bound the defendant to the effect that, if the plaintiff in that action recovered judgment, the defendant would on demand pay the amount thereof to said plaintiff. Passow & Sons is a corporation.

[1-5] 1. There was a general demurrer to the complaint, which was overruled. In this ruling we think the court erred.

The complaint alleged the beginning of the action against Bowman for the recovery of money, the execution of the undertaking herein sued on, for the purpose of releasing the attachment issued at the time of the beginning of said action, and the subsequent recovery on January 28, 1913, of judgment in that action against Bowman for $923.27. The undertaking was made a part of the complaint. We cannot agree with the plaintiff's contention that the undertaking is a mere obligation to pay the debt in consideration of the release of the attachment, and was not an undertaking authorized by section 540. It was in the form prescribed by that section, and was in all substantial respects the same in form as the undertakings considered in Preston v. Hood, 64 Cal. 406, 1

Pac. 487, McCutcheon v. Weston, 65 Cal. 37, 2 Pac. 727, and Gardner v. Donnelly, 86 Cal. 372, 24 Pac. 1072, and which were held to be statutory bonds under that section. Section 552 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that:

> "If the execution be returned, unsatisfied, in whole or in part, the plaintiff may prosecute any undertaking given pursuant to section five hundred and forty or section five hundred and fifty-five, or he may proceed, as in other cases, upon the return of an execution."

In alleging compliance with this section the complaint stated that an execution was issued on February 14, 1913, which was returned wholly unsatisfied on February 19, 1913. The effect of section 552 is to make the regular issuance and return of an execution unsatisfied in whole or in part a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action upon the undertaking. Brownlee v. Riffenburg, 95 Cal. 449, 30 Pac. 587. The thing contemplated and required by section 552 is that the plaintiff in the attachment suit shall exhaust his remedy by execution before proceeding against the surety on the undertaking. It is therefore necessary that he shall show in his complaint upon the undertaking that the remedy by execution has been regularly pursued, and that a return of the execution unsatisfied in whole or in part was regularly made before the action was begun. The Code provides that:

> "The execution may be made returnable, at any time not less than ten nor more than sixty days after its receipt by the sheriff." Code Civ. Proc. § 683.

The execution in this case was made returnable within 60 days after the sheriff's receipt thereof. Under section 683 it could not be regularly returned before the expiration of 10 days from its receipt by the sheriff. The complaint shows that it was returned within 5 days thereafter. Where a third person, standing in the relation of a surety for the principal debtor, is entitled to have the remedy on execution exhausted before an action lies against him, such execution must be held by the sheriff for at least the minimum period prescribed by the law, before its return unsatisfied can be made the basis of such action, at least unless it is shown that during the minimum period the execution defendant was without means or property wherewith to satisfy it.

> "The trustee cannot be held liable to a scire facias before the return day, because the execution may be 'otherwise satisfied,' at any time whilst it remains in force, although he has refused to pay over, to the officer goods, effects or credits sufficient to satisfy it." Adams v. Cummiskey, 4 Cush. (58 Mass.) 422.

In Austin v. Goodale, 58 Me. 109, the same principle was declared, the court stating that until the return day had expired the debtor might voluntarily pay the judgment, and thereby relieve the third party from his contingent liability, saying:

> "It is only when the officer has used the powers conferred by the process during the whole time given to him that he can return it unsatisfied within the meaning of the statute," and that the other party cannot be subjected to further process "until it is shown by a return of nulla bona that the execution could not be satisfied otherwise during the time it was in force."

In Dillon v. Rash, 27 Mo. 243, the court said:

> "Regularly, an execution cannot be returned before the return day. If search is made and no property is found, it does not follow but that the defendant may have property before the return day of the execution. He may acquire it after the return is made."

The provisions of section 683 as to the period for the return of an execution allow an execution made returnable within 60 days to be returned after the expiration of 10 days from its receipt by the sheriff. 3 Freeman on Executions (3d Ed.) § 353, p. 2016. There is a qualification of this rule in other states to the effect that, where the issuance and return of an execution are necessary as a foundation for further proceedings against the judgment debtor, as, for example, proceedings supplementary to execution, or a creditors' bill, a premature return unsatisfied may be cured by proof that the execution debtor in fact had no leviable property. In our opinion, the reasons in favor of this rule justify its application to a premature return, where the return is necessary as a foundation for an action upon an undertaking to release an attachment. It is obvious that, if in fact the judgment debtor had no property subject to levy, or means wherewith to satisfy the execution, at any time during the period between its issuance and the earliest lawful return day thereof, a premature return could not cause any loss or prejudice to the surety upon the undertaking. It would appear to be just and reasonable that, if these facts be clearly established the return unsatisfied, though premature in point of time, may still be available to support a subsequent suit or proceeding. The effect of this, however, is that the party instituting the suit on the undertaking must allege and prove that the execution could not have been satisfied during the minimum lawful period for its return. In the present case the complaint contains no such allegation. It alleges a premature return, but is silent upon the question whether at that time or at any other time the judgment debtor, Bowman, had any property or means. There was no attempt by the plaintiff at the trial to prove that Bowman had no property during that period. Because of the failure to allege these facts the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

In Preston v. Hood, 64 Cal. 408, 1 Pac. 487, the court says that "a direction to the sheriff to return an execution without levy" will not discharge the surety. As a general remark concerning the law of suretyship there is no objection to this statement. It was not intended to be applicable to a premature return of the execution required by section 552. That question was not involved in the case. It cannot be deemed to be contrary to the authorities above mentioned.

[6, 7] 2. The defendant in its answer, among other things, alleged that by collision between Bowman and the plaintiff in the trial of the main action judgment was given for a larger amount than the plaintiff was entitled to upon the cause of action sued on. If this were true, the defendant would be released from liability upon the undertaking. But the evidence of collusion was not satisfactory, and there was evidence from which the court may have justly believed that the plaintiff was acting in good faith. It is also alleged in the answer that upon the issuance of the execution the plaintiff encouraged and permitted Bowman to dispose of such property as he had without applying the same to the satisfaction of the execution, by reason whereof the defendant claims to be exonerated from liability. The evidence on this subject is also conflicting, and we cannot disturb the finding concerning it.

[8] 3. Another claim, which is rather obscurely alleged in the answer, is to the effect that at the time the execution against Bowman was begun the plaintiff had a lien upon certain property for the payment of the debt sued for, and that by its conduct in the prosecution of the action and at the trial thereof it released this lien, and thereby discharged the surety on the undertaking. The action was for the recovery of the price of certain goods sold by the plaintiff to Bowman. The price agreed on was $1,000, of which $200 was to be paid before delivery, and $40 per month during each month thereafter. The agreement was in writing, signed by the parties, and it acknowledged the receipt of the goods by Bowman. It further provided that until the price was fully paid the property should belong to the plaintiffs, without right in Bowman to sell or incumber the same. There was a further provision, however, that if Bowman failed to pay any installment when due, or should refuse to accept delivery or return the goods, then the entire balance of the price should at once become due and payable, and that thereupon the plaintiff at its option could either sue for the whole price or cancel the contract and take possession of the goods. Bowman failed to pay the price, and the plaintiff thereupon began the main action. In suing out the attachment the affidavit on behalf of the plaintiff stated, as the law required, that the debt was not secured by any lien. On the trial of that action Bowman appeared and consented to a judgment for the whole price unpaid, on condition that the title to the property should pass to him. Thereupon judgment was rendered accordingly, and full delivery was made to him in accordance with his proposal. It is claimed by the defendant that at that time the plaintiff had a lien upon the property for the security of the price which might have been enforced, and that by releasing the same to Bowman it impaired the surety's rights and exonerated it from liability on the undertaking. No attack was made upon the attachment by Bowman in the main action. Instead of moving that it be dissolved on the ground that the affidavit that the debt was not secured by a lien was false, he procured the exemption of his property from the levy by giving the undertaking here sued on. In this condition of affairs the present defendant executed the undertaking sued on. It must be presumed to have accepted the conditions then existing as the measure of its rights, and to have executed the undertaking with that understanding. The principle is settled in this state that a surety upon an undertaking given under section 540 to release an attachment cannot interpose the objection, in a suit upon such undertaking, that the property attached, if any, was not subject to levy, or that the attachment was irregularly issued because of a false affidavit filed by the plaintiff to procure it. In McMillan v. Dana, 18 Cal. 349, the court said of such an undertaking that:

> The sureties promise, "in consideration of the release of the property from the attachment, that in the event of a recovery of the judgment by the plaintiff, they will pay the amount of the judgment. * * * The object of giving the undertaking was to procure this release, and this release was had in consequence of the undertaking; and the consideration of the undertaking therefore is the release so procured. In consideration of this release, the obligors agree to pay the judgment. Whether the property was redelivered to Vischer or not was wholly immaterial. * * * Nor does it matter whether the property was subject to attachment or not. That matter cannot be tried in this collateral way. It is enough that the plaintiff had this property levied on as subject to his debt, and that these sureties procured its release upon the stipulation that, in consideration of such release, they would pay the amount of the judgment to be recovered by the plaintiff in the attachment suit. Nor was any proof necessary of the preliminary proceedings connected with or preceding the levy; for these defendants admit the levy of the attachment on this property, and this is enough."

On petition for rehearing the court said that "by the contract the parties have bound themselves to pay in an event independent of all considerations of this sort," referring to the fact that they had bound themselves to pay the judgment in consideration of the discharge. This decision was cited and followed in Gardner v. Donnelly, 86 Cal. 367, 24 Pac. 1072, where it was held that, when the undertaking was issued to procure the release of property already attached, and was accepted by the sheriff, it was immaterial whether he thereupon redelivered the property to the judgment debtor or not, so far as the liability of the sureties on the undertaking was concerned. So in Preston v. Hood, 64 Cal. 405, 1 Pac. 487, the court held that sureties upon such an undertaking were not released by the fact that the sheriff, after accepting the undertaking, released the property previously levied on, nor by the fact that the judgment in the attachment suit was entered by consent and execution stayed by agreement for 60 days thereafter. In McCormick v. National Surety Co., 134 Cal. 511, 66 Pac. 741, there were two defendants in the main action; the property of one only being attached. The undertaking was thereupon given for the release of the attachment. Upon the trial of that action judgment was given in favor of the plaintiff against the other defendant, and in favor of the defendant whose property had been attached. It was held that the ownership of the property attached was of no concern to the surety, and that he was liable on the undertaking for the full amount of the judgment recovered against the other defendant, the court saying:

> "Whether it belongs to a third party or for any reason is not lawfully subject to the attachment is a question to be litigated between plaintiff and the adverse claimant, and in no way affects the surety's express covenant to restore."

The undertaking in that case was given for the redelivery of the property, or the payment of the debt, as provided in sections 554 and 555, Code of Civil Procedure, but the principle is the same whether the undertaking is in the alternative, as in that case, or is positive, to pay the judgment when rendered, as in the present case. In McCutcheon v. Weston, 65 Cal. 39, 2 Pac. 727, the court decided that the surety was liable in such undertaking, although there were two defendants to the attachment suit, and the judgment was against one only. To the same effect see Ferguson v. Glidewell, 48 Ark. 195, 2 S. W. 711; Coleman v. Bean, 14 Abb. Prac. (N. Y.) 38; Haggart v. Morgan, 5 N. Y. 428, 55 Am. Dec. 350; Myers v. Smith, 29 Ohio St. 120; McAllister v. Eichengreen, 34 Md. 54; Austin v. Burgett, 10 Iowa, 302; Inman v. Strattan, 4 Bush (67 Ky.) 445. In view of these authorities, we are of the opinion that the defendant here is not in a position to complain of the conduct of the plaintiff in bringing the action upon a debt which was previously secured by some sort of lien upon property, which he might have enforced instead of waiving it and bringing suit for the debt. The surety must be presumed to have been aware of the facts and to have made its contract accordingly. It was an unconditional agreement to pay the amount of the judgment when rendered.

[9] 4. The court should have admitted the evidence offered by the defendant, tending to show the disposition made by Bowman of the goods which he purchased from the plaintiff, and of which complete delivery was made to him at the time the judgment was rendered against him, provided the purpose of the evidence was to show that Bowman had disposed of this property after the issuance of the execution against him. If he had disposed of the goods before the execution was issued, and no collusion were proven between him and the plaintiff relating thereto, the evidence would have been immaterial; but, if the transfer by Bowman did not occur until afterward, the evidence was material and competent. There are no other points that require discussion.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

SHAW, J. In a petition for rehearing, the plaintiff contends that the undertaking sued on is a common-law undertaking, and not an undertaking given pursuant to section 540, Code of Civil Procedure. The petition states two grounds for this claim: First, that the language of the undertaking is precisely similar to the undertaking under consideration in Smith v. Fargo, 57 Cal. 157, which was there held to be good as a common-law undertaking; second, that section 540, Code of Civil Procedure, does not authorize the sheriff to release the property "unless the defendant give him security by the undertaking of at least two sufficient sureties, in an amount sufficient to satisfy such demand, besides costs, or in an amount equal to the value of the property which has been, or is about to be. attached, in which case, to take such undertaking," and that this means that the undertaking must first be delivered personally to the sheriff, and that no undertaking can be considered as given under its provisions where it is passed directly to the plaintiff.

The first ground is disposed of by the cases cited in the original opinion herein. While the language of the undertaking in Smith v. Fargo is substantially identical with that of the undertaking in the case at bar, the decision there, holding it good as a common-law undertaking, was not based upon that ground, as will presently be seen.

[10] The second ground was not argued in the briefs. It is true the plaintiff's brief stated that the undertaking was delivered directly to the plaintiff, and that this was an admitted fact in the case, but there is no argument to the effect that the delivery direct to plaintiff had the effect of making it a common-law undertaking rather than one given under the statute. The only argument upon the question was a reference to Smith v. Fargo, supra, followed by the statement that "in that case the court was considering a bond containing the same language as the bond in the case at bar, and held such a bond to be a common-law bond," and by a citation to Kanouse v. Brand, 11 Cal. App. 669, 106 Pac. 120, and Bailey v. Ætna I. Co., 5 Cal. App. 740, 91 Pac. 416. The decision in Smith v. Fargo was not put upon the ground that the undertaking was delivered directly to the plaintiff. The fact was that after the attachment was levied, the defendant appeared in the action and applied to the court for a discharge of the attachment. This he could only do under the provisions of sections 554 and 555, whereby the release could only be obtained by giving an undertaking in a sum to be fixed by the court and for the redelivery of the property or payment of the judgment. Instead of doing this, the defendant gave the undertaking there in question, not for a redelivery, but in the form required for an undertaking under section 540. This court in that case very properly held that the undertaking was not given under section 540, because the defendant was not pursuing the remedy there provided, and that it was not good under section 555 because it did not conform to the proceeding there laid down, but that notwithstanding these facts, a recovery thereon could be sustained on the ground that it was a promise supported by a sufficient consideration to pay the debt due to the plaintiff as ascertained and fixed by the judgment, and that it was therefore good as a common-law undertaking or promise. The decision does not hold, and was not intended to hold, that an undertaking given before the sheriff has returned the writ of attachment, and following the terms required by section 540, is not a good statutory undertaking because of the mere fact that it was delivered directly to the plaintiff instead of being given to the sheriff for the plaintiff. Kanouse v. Brand, supra, was also entirely different from the present case. There writs of attachment had been levied in two counties and the sheriffs had made returns of the writs. In this situation, the defendant executed directly to the plaintiff the undertaking sued on in the case, and thereupon the plaintiff himself released the attachments. For these reasons it was held that the undertaking was not authorized by either section 540 or sections 554 and 555, but that being given upon a sufficient consideration, the release of the attachment, it was a good common-law promise and bound the surety to its performance. The Bailey case has no particular application and need not be noticed.

In the present case all that appears is that the undertaking was "executed and delivered" to the plaintiff and that thereupon the attachment was discharged and the property released. The undertaking is set out in full in the complaint, and in the findings. It is entitled in the action and merely promises that if the plaintiff recover judgment the surety will on demand pay the amount thereof to the plaintiff. It was executed and delivered to the plaintiff only in the sense that it was passed to the plaintiff instead of to the sheriff. It does not appear that the plaintiff himself released the property, but only that upon such delivery the property was released. So far as appears, the delivery to the plaintiff was for convenience only, and the property was released by the sheriff in the usual way as upon the giving of the undertaking provided in section 540. This being the case, it should be regarded as an undertaking given in pursuance of that section, and as governed, with respect to a suit thereon, by the provisions of section 552. If anything further occurred between the parties at the time of its execution which would operate to change its character in this regard, it can be developed upon another trial. It does not appear from the record before us.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

We concur: RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.; MELVIN, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.; WILBUR, J.

(177 Cal. 434)

ANDREWS v. ROBERTSON et al.
(L. A. 3858–3898.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 4, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑715(1) — FILING TRANSCRIPT WITHIN TIME—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to warrant conclusion that notice to clerk of intention to appeal and request for transcript was filed within 10 days after time notice of entry of judgment as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, was actually served upon appellant's counsel, who inadvertently failed to change an incorrect date stated in his acknowledgment of service.

2. MORTGAGES 🔑277—ASSUMPTION—PERSONAL LIABILITY.

Personal liability of the owner was essential to give to any transaction between the owner and defendant purchaser the effect of making defendant personally liable for the mortgage.

3. MORTGAGES 🔑282(1)—SALE OF MORTGAGED PROPERTY—ASSIGNMENT OF MORTGAGE.

Reference in the deed to the mortgage is not essential to the creation of a personal liability of the purchaser for the mortgage debt, where an understanding exists that the purchaser shall assume such liability.

4. MORTGAGES 🔑282(1)—ASSUMPTIONS—PERSONAL LIABILITY.

The conveyance of property subject to a specified mortgage does not in itself render the grantee personally liable.

5. MORTGAGES 🔑282(1)—ASSUMPTION—CONSIDERATION.

A promise at the time the parties met to carry out an existing enforceable agreement by exchange of deeds on the part of one that he would protect the other against a certain mortgage constituted no part of the consideration for the grant, and imposed no personal liability for the mortgage debt; there being no new consideration.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑16 — DISMISSAL—UNNECESSARY APPEAL.

An appeal by a purchaser of mortgaged property from a deficiency judgment in foreclosure proceedings as docketed by the clerk, though unnecessary in view of his appeal from the foreclosure decree, cannot be dismissed as one not authorized by law, especially where appellant in his brief stipulates that he will waive costs on the deficiency judgment appeal in the event of reversal.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; E. P. Unangst, Judge.

Action by George H. Andrews, as executor of the will of J. P. Andrews, deceased, substituted as plaintiff, against Catherine F. Robertson, William Mann, and others. From the judgment rendered William Mann appeals. Reversed in part and in part affirmed.

Clinton G. Dodge and Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, all of San Francisco, for appellant. Wm. Shipsey, of San Luis Obispo, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is an action for foreclosure of two mortgages. Plaintiff prevailed, the judgment decreeing a sale of the mortgaged premises, and the docketing of judgment for any deficiency after application of the proceeds of the sale, against several of the defendants, including defendant Mann. Said Mann appealed both from the judgment, and from the subsequent docketing by the clerk of a deficiency judgment against him.

[1] There is no force whatever in the contention of learned counsel for respondent that the transcript, prepared and settled by the trial judge under the provisions of section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure, cannot be considered on these appeals. In so far as the appeal from the judgment is concerned, the sole point is that the notice to the clerk of intention to appeal and request for transcript specified in said section was not filed with the clerk "within ten days after notice of entry of the judgment," as required by the section. Objection to the settlement by the trial judge of such transcript on this ground was made at the time of settlement and overruled. In support of the objection the whole showing was a notice of entry of the judgment on April 7, 1914, bearing acknowledgment of service "this April 9, 1914. Anson Hilton, Attorney for Defendants Percival, Pizmo Beach Resort Co., and Lowell. Clinton G. Dodge, Attorney for Defendants Wm. Mann, Chas. H. Mann, and Agnes G. Mann"—and proof of the fact that the request for transcript was not filed until April 21, 1914. It was solely upon this acknowledgment of service by Mr. Dodge that respondent based his claim that the notice was served on April 9, 1914; no attempt being made to show any other service. In reply Mr. Dodge filed an affidavit to the effect that he never saw any notice of entry of judgment until he found this notice on his desk in his office in Oakland, Alameda county, on April 13, 1914, inclosed in an envelope addressed to the attorney for respondent at San Luis Obispo; that he thereupon signed the acknowledgment, neglecting to observe the date already there (April 9th), and forwarded the same by mail in said envelope to the attorney for the respondent; and that on the same day (April 13th) he made a note in his office register of the fact of such service on April 13th. Manifestly this showing by Mr. Dodge furnished ample support for the conclusion of the trial judge that service of notice of entry was not made prior to April 13th, and that the request for the transcript filed April 21st was therefore in time. If accepted by the trial judge as true, this evidence entirely destroyed the effect of the admission of service as of April 9th. As to the appeal from the deficiency judgment, the stipulation of the respective parties fully authorizes the use of this transcript, provided, as we hold, that the proceeding therefor was initiated in time.

On the appeal from the judgment the principal question on the merits is whether the facts warranted a deficiency judgment against appellant Mann, the judgment not being otherwise assailed. The mortgages were made March 10, 1909, by Catherine F. and John E. Robertson to the Andrews Banking Company (plaintiff's assignor) to secure a loan of $43,400 and interest at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum, evidenced by their promissory note of even date with the mortgages to said company. This note was payable $5,000 on March 10, 1912, and $5,000 on March 10th of each year thereafter until paid. On February 25, 1910, the Robertsons (mortgagors) conveyed the mortgaged property to T. B. Draper and W. W. Percival. It is conceded that these grantees did not assume the mortgage debt. On April 8, 1910, they executed a trust deed of the property to secure performance of an obligation in favor of defendant A. J. Lowell, and in accordance with the terms of this trust deed the property was sold to said Lowell on December 29, 1911, by the trustees, who executed their conveyance therefor to Lowell on April 13, 1912. Concededly there was in his purchase of the premises no assumption of the mortgage debt But about the time of the trustee's sale Lowell entered into a written agreement with the Andrews Banking Company, whereby, in consideration of the acceptance by the company of $4,500 in full payment of all interest to January 1, 1912, the payment by the company of one-half the state and county taxes on the property for the year 1911–12, and the reduction of interest on the debt from January 12, 1912, to 6 per cent., Lowell was to pay the debt secured by the mortgages. On April 17, 1912, Lowell conveyed the mortgaged property to Charles Mann, a son of appellant. The deed was an ordinary bargain and sale deed, with an expressed consideration of $10, and no mention was made therein of any mortgage or mortgage debt. The deed was made to Charles Mann at the request of appellant, who conducted all the negotiations and who, we may assume, was the real purchaser. Plaintiff's theory, in so far as the question of the personal liability of appellant is concerned, is that by virtue of his agreement with the banking company Lowell became personally liable to the company for the mortgage debt—that the result of the transaction was to create what in effect was a new undertaking from Lowell to the company, and that when appellant purchased the mortgaged property from Lowell, he agreed to assume and pay the debt. The trial court so found, the finding as to appellant being that:

> "At the time of acquiring the same and as a part of the same transaction, said Wm. Mann agreed with said Lowell that he (Mann) would assume and pay said debt and other matters secured by said mortgages."

This finding is assailed as being without sufficient support in the evidence.

[2] To give to any transaction between Lowell and Mann the effect of creating any personal liability on the part of Mann to the mortgagee for the mortgage debt, it was essential, of course, that there should have been such a personal liability on the part of Lowell. See Ward v. De Oca, 120 Cal. 102, 52 Pac. 130. We can see no reason why, by virtue of the new agreement between Lowell and the bank, such a personal liability was not created. The same principle which renders the grantee of the mortgagor personally liable to the mortgagee for the mortgage debt in the event that in purchasing he assumes the same (see Hopkins v. Warner, 109 Cal. 136, 41 Pac. 868; Ward v. De Oca, supra), would therefore render Mann personally liable to the banking company here, if he agreed with Lowell to assume the debt. He could be so liable only in the event of such assumption of the debt. As we have seen, the trial court found that he did so agree. If this finding is not sufficiently sustained by the evidence, the judgment must be reversed in so far as it awards a deficiency judgment against Mann. We are of the opinion that the finding has no substantial support in the evidence.

[3] As we have seen, the deed to Mann contained no reference whatever to any mortgage or mortgage debt. Such mention, however, is not essential to the creation of a personal liability, although, where an understanding or agreement exists that the grantee shall assume such liability, it is ordinarily the custom of careful persons to express it in the deed or in some other writing. The well-settled rule in this regard was stated in Hopkins v. Warner, 109 Cal. 133, 41 Pac. 868, as follows:

> "It is not necessary that there should be a formal promise, on the part of the grantee, to pay the mortgage debt, in order to render him liable therefor, if his intention to assume the debt appears from a consideration of the entire instrument. The obligation may be made orally or in a separate instrument; it may be implied from the transaction of the parties, or it may be shown by the circumstances under which the purchase was made, as well as by the language used in the agreement."

In the case at the bar the conveyance was preceded by a written agreement, which the evidence without substantial conflict shows was carefully prepared, and fully expressed the agreement of the parties. This agreement was entered into April 8, 1912, and was one for the exchange of certain properties of Lowell and Mann, the property of Lowell being the mortgaged property. It recited that the parties were making an exchange of said properties, "each conveying to the other * * * the properties hereinabove described, free and clear of all liens and incumbrances of every kind and nature, save and except only" that Mann's property "may be incumbered as follows: Telegraph Ave. & 43rd St. property is subject to an incumbrance of $10,000, bearing interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, which can remain. Pacific Ave. & 6th St. property, Alameda, is subject to a first mortgage of $7,000, * * * interest 6 per cent. per annum, and a second loan of $3,000 interest six per cent. per annum for a period of two years, and the Watsonville property is subject to an incumbrance of $5,000, bearing interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum." Also that Lowell's property (the mortgaged property) "is subject to an incumbrance of $43,400, from the Andrews Bank of San Luis Obispo * * * bearing interest at the rate of 6 per cent., and a loan of $1,600 from H. H. Carpenter of San Luis Obispo county. And no other liens shall be on any of the above-described properties." It was further agreed that "interest, insurance, taxes, water bills, electric bills, and all other accounts against the properties shall be prorated up to date of closing deal by said exchange of deeds."

[4] It is too clear for question that nothing in this agreement imports any assumption by either party of any mortgage debt. It is practically elementary law that a deed which is merely made subject to a specified mortgage does not alone render the grantee personally liable for the mortgage debt. See Jones on Mortgages, § 748; Hibernia Sav. & Loan Society v. Dickinson, 167 Cal. 616, 621, 140 Pac. 265. The language in this agreement was apparently carefully adopted to exclude all idea of the assumption of any debt by either grantee, and for the purpose of showing simply that each party was to take his property subject to the lien of the specified incumbrances. Lowell agreed to convey to Mann his property subject to the lien of the specified incumbrances in return for a conveyance from Mann of his property subject to the lien of the specified incumbrances thereon, interest on all incumbrances to be "prorated" up to date of closing deal by said exchange of deeds. In this connection it is only necessary to refer to the opinion in Hibernia Sav. & Loan Society v. Dickinson, supra, where the court, after considering the effect of somewhat similar language and saying that it did not import an assumption of the debt said:

> "On the contrary it raised a strong inference, if not a conclusive presumption, that Montgomery [the purchaser] did not assume payment of the mortgage as part of the price, but merely bought the land as it was with incumbrances."

Admittedly it was in execution of this agreement by the parties that the conveyances were subsequently exchanged.

[5] A careful analysis of the evidence discloses that no one claims that after the making of this written agreement Mann said a word or did an act importing any assumption of the debt until the parties met on April 17, 1912, to carry the existing agreement into effect by the exchange of deeds. Lowell testified substantially that he delivered the deed to Mann at the same time that he delivered to him his written agreement with the Andrews Banking Company, reducing the rate of interest to 6 per cent., and also paid him $1,619.95, which was the amount then found due him on the "prorating" of interest, etc., provided for in the agreement. It was at this time, Lowell testified, when the fact that a $5,000 installment of the $43,400 had become due and that payment had been demanded was spoken of, that Mann said that "he would protect me against this mortgage." Mann's testimony substantially denies any promise to this effect. It is on this alone that the claim of an agreement between Lowell and Mann that Mann would assume the mortgage debt is founded. We regard it as entirely immaterial whether the fact was as testified to by Lowell or not. If Mann did then make the statement attributed to him by Lowell it was a mere voluntary promise without binding force. The validity of a promise by a grantee of a mortgagor to such mortgagor to assume the mortgage debt, where there is no new and independent consideration, is based on the theory that such assumption in some way constitutes a part of the consideration for the grant. Here clearly it constituted no part of the consideration, and there was no new consideration. The terms of the exchange of properties had been carefully and precisely specified in the written agreement in such a way as to exclude the idea of any such assumption, and the parties had met to carry into effect the written agreement. By the terms thereof Lowell was then legally bound, in consideration of Mann delivering to him a deed of his specified properties subject to the lien of the specified incumbrances thereon, to deliver to Mann a deed conveying the property herein involved, subject only to the lien of the specified incumbrances. He could not require as a condition precedent to such delivery, in view of the terms of the agreement, any undertaking by Mann to assume the debt secured by the incumbrance, and his testimony does not indicate that he claimed otherwise. Under the circumstances there was no consideration whatever for any such promise on the part of Mann as is testified to by Lowell. As already said, it was a mere voluntary promise without binding force, because of absolute want of consideration therefor. Learned counsel for respondent has in no way attempted to reply to this claim of appellant, which was made both in his opening and closing brief.

Some reliance is placed upon acts and statements of Mann subsequent to the conveyance as indicating that he regarded himself as personally obligated for the mortgage debt, and that he dealt with the mortgagee, upon that theory. We have carefully examined all the testimony in this connection, and it will suffice to say that we find no word or act of his which is inconsistent with the theory that he held this property subject to the lien of the mortgages and without any assumption of the mortgage debt. There was never any valid personal undertaking or agreement on the part of Mann to personally pay this debt, and the finding of the trial court in regard thereto is without substantial support in the evidence. Taking the property subject to the lien of the mortgages as he did, such property was liable, for the debt, but there was no personal liability on his part. In so far as the judgment declares any such personal liability and attempts its enforcement, it must be reversed.

In view of our conclusion on this question it is unnecessary to consider any other of the many points made for reversal.

[6] As to the appeal from the deficiency judgment docketed by the clerk, the whole claim is the same as the claim on the appeal from the judgment, viz., that a deficiency judgment against Mann was not warranted for the reason that there had not been on his part any assumption of the mortgage debt. Respondent claims that the appeal from the deficiency judgment docketed by the clerk, even if authorized by law, was entirely unnecessary, that a party may not maintain two separate appeals for the purpose of reviewing the same matter, and that one or the other of the appeals should be dismissed. Of course, the appeal from the judgment of the court, which appellant had the right to take and maintain, cannot be dismissed. Indeed, such appeal is essential to the protection of appellant against the clerk's docketed judgment, for the latter was entered in strict conformity, with the terms of the judgment of the court, and cannot be disturbed if that part of the court's judgment remains in force. We recently held that an appeal lies from a deficiency judgment as docketed by the clerk. See Ewing v. Richvale Land Co., 167 Pac. 876. So such appeal cannot be dismissed as one not authorized by law. It was perhaps an unnecessary appeal, for without a reversal of that portion of the judgment requiring the docketing, such docketing could not be disturbed, and the reversal of that part of the judgment of the court would necessarily deprive the docketed judgment for the deficiency of all force. We do not, however, feel warranted in dismissing the appeal for this reason. The only practical question involved is one of costs of appeal, and appellant stipulates in his brief that in the event of reversal he waives all costs on the appeal from the docketed deficiency.

In so far as the judgment holds appellant personally liable for any deficiency existing after the sale of the mortgaged property and application of the proceeds of such sale, and directs the docketing of a judgment against him for such deficiency, it is reversed, and in all other respects it is affirmed. Appellant shall recover his costs on the appeal from such judgment. The deficiency judgment subsequently docketed against appellant is reversed. Appellant shall recover no costs on his appeal therefrom.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.; MELVIN, J.; WILBUR, J.

(177 Cal. 465)

DULUZ v. ALASKA PACKERS' ASS'N.

(S. F. 8248.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1918. Rehearing Denied March 7, 1918.)

1. Appeal and Error 🔑930(1) — Review — Construction of Evidence.

On appeal from a judgment on a verdict for plaintiff, where it is claimed that there is no evidence to support the verdict and judgment, respondent is entitled to the most favorable view of the evidence, and all reasonable inferences therefrom.

2. Master and Servant 🔑219(2)—Assumption of Risk—Obvious Dangers.

Plaintiff was engaged in moving crates of salmon over a vat of lye, the top of which was about at the waist line, and sousing them up and down therein. He was injured by slipping on the wet floor, so that his arm went into the vat and was severely burned. The injury was governed by the law of Alaska, under which an employé assumes all the risks and dangers incident to his employment that were at the time of the employment open, obvious, and apparent, and respecting which he had the same knowledge and opportunity to observe as his employer. Held, that where plaintiff knew the possibility of slipping, and knew the dangerous condition of the vat, he assumed the risk of injury from the absence of guard rails around the vat, from the slippery condition of the floor from water and grease, from the absence of cleats to prevent slipping, and from the floor being springy and somewhat sunken, so that it sloped towards the vat, as these were obvious conditions which plaintiff had as good an opportunity to observe as the employer.

3. Master and Servant 🔑97(2)—Liability for Injuries—Place to Work.

If, as claimed, a person of ordinary prudence would not have believed that the servant could, in the regular discharge of his duties, be injured by the defective conditions, then the employer was not negligent in failing to exercise ordinary care to furnish a safe place to work; since, where the employer exercises his judgment in the selection and maintenance of a safe place to work, and the employé exercises his judgment in working there, if the situation is equally obvious to all of ordinary comprehension, either the employer is negligent and the employé assumes the risk, or the employer is not negligent.

4. Appeal and Error 🔑1052(5)—Harmless Error—Effect of Correct Conclusion.

In an action governed by the laws of Alaska, if such law was correctly stated to the jury by the trial court, appellant could not complain that the court adopted a wrong method of reaching a conclusion as to what such law was.

5. Appeal and Error 🔑1057(1)—Harmless Error—Exclusion of Evidence.

Though Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1900–1902, provides, among other things, that the oral testimony of witnesses skilled therein is admissible as evidence of the unwritten law of a sister state, the published reports of decisions are more satisfactory, and where by consent of both parties such reports are offered in evidence, it is not prejudicial error to refuse the testimony of a witness.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Manuel Duluz against the Alaska Packers' Association. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Chickering & Gregory, George H. Whipple, and Evan Williams, all of San Francisco, for appellant. James W. Cochran and S. L. Mash, of San Francisco, and Manuel Duluz (Walter J. Thompson, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

WILBUR, J. This is an appeal from a judgment after verdict in favor of plaintiff for personal injuries received by him while employed by the defendant at its fish cannery in Alaska. Plaintiff relies upon defendant's negligence in failing to supply him a safe place to work, and defendant denies such negligence, and also relies upon the defense of assumption of risk.

It is conceded that the law of Alaska, the place of the injury, controls. This proposition was thus stated by the trial court in its instructions:

> "You are instructed that as far as the liability of the defendant Alaska Packers' Association is concerned the law of Alaska will govern in this case; and you are further instructed that under that law Manuel Duluz, the employé in this case, assumed all the risks and dangers incident to his employment that were at the time of his employment open, obvious, and apparent, and respecting which he had the same knowledge and opportunity to observe as his employer."

[1-3] Appellant claims that under this law there is no evidence to support the verdict and judgment. Respondent is entitled on this appeal to the most favorable view of the evidence and all reasonable inferences therefrom. There is, however, no substantial disagreement in the evidence. The plaintiff, at the time of his injury, was engaged with others in dipping steel crates containing 144 one-pound cans of salmon into a 4′ x 4′ vat of boiling lye, filled to within three inches of the top, resting on the floor on which he stood and three feet in height. The crates were moved over the vat and soused up and down therein by means of a trolley and lifting device operated by other employés. Plaintiff's duty was to hook two lifting chains hanging from the trolley into the crate, and his associate on the other side hooked a third chain thereto They then guided the crate over the lye vat, and, after sousing therein, guided it to another vat filled with water, afterward unhooking the chains and returning therewith for the next crate. In so doing plaintiff slipped on the wet floor so that his arm went into the lye vat and was severely burned. The top of the vat, it will be observed, was about at the waist line. Plaintiff testifies:

> "There was a good deal of water on the floor, and I slipped, and that is how I came to fall. The board on which I stood was about a foot wide. I was working three days at the vat prior to the accident."

He testified that it was wet and slippery when he first started to work at the wash lye tank, and so continued all the time he worked there, and that, although he knew it was wet and slippery, he made no complaint. It is shown that the nature of the work caused the lye and water to splash over the sides of the tank; that the lye had softened the smooth surface of the board on which plaintiff worked so that if struck a hard blow its smooth surface would be dented. It will be observed that the duties of the employer and of the employé, under the law of Alaska, and under the common law, are correlative. Taking the instruction of the court as given in this case as a correct statement of employer's duty, he "is not required to furnish appliances which are absolutely safe, nor is he bound to furnish the best that can possibly be had. He is, however, under an obligation to exercise reasonable and ordinary diligence in their selection, and to furnish to his servant such as are reasonably safe and adapted to perform the work for which they are designed, and which with ordinary care and prudence on the part of the servant render it reasonably probable that they can be used by him in the ordinary exercise of his employment without danger to himself," etc. The respondent points out several alleged defects in the place and appliances furnished him: First. That there were no guards around the lye vat. If we assume that a man of ordinary prudence would in the exercise of ordinary prudence furnish such guard rail, the danger from its absence "was open, obvious, and apparent" and the plaintiff "had the same knowledge and opportunity to observe as his employer." Second. That the floor was slippery from water and grease. But this must have been as apparent to a man who had walked over it for three days as to his employer. Third. That no cleats were nailed on the boards. This, too, must have been as obvious to plaintiff as to his employer. Indeed, if he had stumbled over a cleat instead of slipping on a board without a cleat, it might with equal force be claimed to be an act of negligence to provide cleats. But in either case the answer is that plaintiff knew the conditions, and assumed the risk. Fourth. It is claimed that the floor had sunk somewhat so that it sloped sufficiently toward the vat, so that water ran toward it, and that it was "springy." There is no evidence that either the slope of the floor or the softness of the floor caused plaintiff's fall, but in any event the condition was so obvious that plaintiff could not fail to observe it. Certainly he had as good an opportunity as his employer. Respondent claims, however, that the rule of assumption of risk does not apply, and cites the rule in Shearman and Redfield on Negligence, § 95, viz.:

> "This rule has, however, been very properly held to be applicable only to such defects as the servant ought reasonably to have foreseen might endanger his safety. If a person of ordinary prudence would not have believed that the servant could in the regular discharge of his duties be injured by the defect, the servant may properly disregard it without losing his right to complain if while pursuing his ordinary course he suffers from such defect."

But here, where the entire situation is open to the observation and understanding of the employé as well as the employer, it is fatal to plaintiff's case to hold that a "person of ordinary prudence would not have believed that the servant could, in the regular discharge of his duties, be injured by the defect," for under the rule hereinbefore given it would establish that the employer was not guilty of negligence in failing to exercise ordinary care to furnish the plaintiff a safe place to work; in short, where the employer exercises his judgment in the selection and maintenance of a safe place to work, and the employé exercises his judgment in working there, if the situation is equally obvious to all of ordinary comprehension, either the employer is negligent and the employé assumes the risk, or the employer is not negligent. In a somewhat similar case (Carrigan v. Washburn & Moen Mfg. Co., 170 Mass. 79, 48 N. E. 1079), plaintiff fell into a vat containing vitriol. This vat was in the floor of the room in which plaintiff worked, as was another vat containing water. Hot wire was dipped into the vitriol vat and then into the water. It was in the evening, and some of the arc lamps had gone out, and the steam rising from the vats with the hot wire dipped into them obscured the light. The court there said:

> "It is evident that he understood the danger which there was of falling into the vats, and he also knew that he might fall into the one containing vitriol. He appreciated the risk, and must be held, we think, to have assumed it. If the want of a railing was a defect, it was an obvious one which he knew and understood, and so with the obscurity, whether it arose from a want of light or from the steam, or both. It is not contended that the vats themselves were defects, or that they could have been used without removing the covers. * * * He knew that they were there, and that there was no railing, and that when the covers were off there was danger of falling into them; and he continued in the defendant's employment, without any objection on account of the additional risk to which he was subjected by them."

In Labatt on Master and Servant (2d Ed.) vol. 3, p. 3130, note, it is said:

> "A servant assumes the risk of danger from the floor being slippery where the condition is obvious. Omaha Packing Co. v. Sanduski, 155 Fed. 897, 84 C. C. A. 89, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.)

355 (ice formed as necessary result of work done); Swift & Co. v. Campbell, 97 Ill. App. 360 (brine on floor in packing plant); Steffen v. Illinois Steel Co., 140 Ill. App. 551 (floor in rolling mill greasy); Wilson v. Chess & W. Co., 117 Ky. 567, 78 S. W. 453 (slippery floor around vat of water); Goudie v. Foster, 202 Mass. 226, 88 N. E. 663 (floor in laundry). A servant assumes the risk of the danger of slipping on the wet and slimy floor of a meat-packing establishment. Saversnick v. Schwarzschild & S. Co., 141 Mo. App. 509, 125 S. W. 1192. A baggageman assumes the risk of the floor being slippery due to the spilling of a can of oil kept in the car. Schultz v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 145 Mo. App. 262, 129 S. W. 1051. An employer is not liable for an injury to a servant resulting from the floor being wet and slippery, if such is its normal condition. Murphy v. American Rubber Co., 159 Mass. 266, 34 N. E. 268. An employé in a mill assumes the obvious risk of slipping on a wet floor while turning a lever and being thus brought into contact with an uncovered gearing. Scharenbroich v. St. Cloud Fiber-Ware Co., 59 Minn. 116, 60 N. W. 1093."

In the case at bar plaintiff knew the possibility of slipping upon the wet floor, and knew the dangerous contents of the vat of boiling lye. It is evident, we think, under the law of assumption of risk, as is found by the lower court to obtain in Alaska, that under the admitted facts plaintiff must be held to have assumed the risk, and is thereby precluded from recovery.

[4, 5] With reference to the method of proving the law of Alaska, it seems to be conceded by the parties that the instruction given by the court was a correct statement of the law. The law of Alaska was to be proved by competent and proper evidence to the satisfaction of the trial court, and by him stated to the jury in its application to the facts of the particular case. If the law was so correctly stated, the appellant cannot complain that the court adopted a wrong method of reaching a right conclusion. The respondent does not complain. Two decisions of the United States District Court of Alaska were read in evidence on the trial, viz., Seittn v. Alaska Treadwell Gold Mining Co., 2 Alaska, 8, 30, and Allen v. Knight's Island Consolidated Copper Co., 3 Alaska, 651. A statute of Alaska was also read in evidence (Session Laws of Alaska 1913, pp. 84, 85). Testimony was also introduced by the defendant, showing that there is no statutory law in Alaska with reference to the assumption of risk and fellow-servant rule. The method of proving a law in a foreign state is regulated by sections 1900, 1901, and 1902 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is there provided, among other things, that "the oral testimony of witnesses skilled therein is admissible as evidence of the unwritten law of a sister state," but the method of using the published reports of decisions is more satisfactory, and where, by the consent of both parties, such reports are offered in evidence, it is not prejudicial error to refuse the testimony of a witness. It being conceded that the conclusion of the court was correct upon the subject of what constituted the law of Alaska and that the jury were correctly instructed thereon, we are not called upon to pass on the correctness of that decision and do not do so, leaving that question, in the event of a new trial, to be determined by the trial court upon the evidence that may at that time be produced. It is conceded that evidence as to the customary method of maintaining lye vats in other establishments was admissible. It is therefore unnecessary to consider the question whether or not the objections to questions asked on that subject were properly overruled.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.

(177 Cal. 442)

HENRICI v. SOUTH FEATHER LAND & WATER CO. (Sac. 2461.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 5, 1918. Rehearing Denied March 9, 1918.)

1. Waters and Water Courses 🔑232—Records—Acknowledgment.

An unacknowledged contract to furnish water for irrigation, although filed, is not record notice of such fact to a successor of the water company, under Civ. Code, § 1213.

2. Waters and Water Courses 🔑232 — Constructive Notice — Easements and Servitudes.

A purchaser of the properties of a water company has constructive notice of rights of a landowner to water, where lateral ditches to such landowner could be seen from an inspection of the system.

3. Waters and Water Courses 🔑232—Purchaser of Water Company—Prior Contracts.

A purchaser of a water company with notice, actual or constructive, of prior contracts to furnish water is bound by such contracts.

4. Specific Performance 🔑29(1) — Contracts—Certainty.

An agreement "to furnish water for irrigation on the lands described in the within agreement" is not too uncertain to be capable of enforcement, the fair meaning being to furnish that reasonably necessary.

5. Waters and Water Courses 🔑257(1)—Contracts—Limit as to Time.

A contract for water, without stating any time, is binding as to rate until superseded by order of a public body vested with the power of regulating the service.

6. Waters and Water Courses 🔑254 — Demand for Water—Sufficiency.

Where a water company declares that it will not furnish water except at a particular rate, a landowner entitled to water at a lower rate need not demand any specific amount or tender payment, especially where his contract does not require payment in advance.

7. Damages 🔑62(4)—Mitigation—Refusal to Furnish Water.

Although a landowner is entitled to water at a certain rate, he cannot stand by and recover more than nominal damages for loss of crops and trees from lack of water because the defendant refuses to furnish water at such rate, but he should pay the excess rate without conceding its correctness and sue for the difference.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action by John Alfred Henrici against the South Feather Land & Water Company, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

C. E. McLaughlin, of Sacramento, and C. P. McLaughlin, of San Francisco, for appellant. W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff, owner of a tract of land in Butte county, containing about 20 acres, brought this action to recover damages for the failure and refusal of the defendant, a water company, to furnish water for the irrigation of his land. The trial was had before the court sitting without a jury, and the court rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $1,176. The defendant appeals from the judgment, bringing up the evidence by means of a typewritten transcript.

The defendant is the successor in interest of South Feather Water & Union Mining Company (hereinafter termed the "old corporation"), which was engaged, among other things, in the business of furnishing and supplying water to the public for hire. On the 9th day of October, 1884, the old corporation, then the owner of the 20-acre tract above mentioned, made an agreement with the plaintiff for the sale of said land to him, conveyance to be made upon the completion of the deferred payments provided for. Upon the paper containing the contract of sale, and following the signatures of the vendor and vendee, there was appended an additional agreement, executed at the same time by the same parties, and reading, except for the signatures, as follows:

"ADDENDA. The South Feather Water & Union Mining Company hereby agrees to furnish water for irrigation on the lands described in the within agreement at the rate of ten cents per inch per day of twenty-four hours each, whenever water is flowing in its ditch adjacent to said lands, and said John Alfred Henrici or his assigns hereby agree to pay for all water so furnished by said company for said purposes, said sum of ten cents per inch per day of twenty-four hours monthly on demand.

"Witness the hands and seals of said parties this ninth day of October A. D. 1884."

The plaintiff went into possession under his contract of sale. The main ditch of the old corporation then ran within about 1,000 feet of the land so contracted to be sold. A lateral ditch and pipes were constructed to connect the main ditch with the land. The old corporation thereupon commenced to supply water to the plaintiff upon the terms stated in the agreement above quoted. The plaintiff completed his payments on the land, and in October, 1888, received from the old corporation a deed conveying to him the land described, with its appurtenances. The deed made no specific reference to any agreement for the furnishing of water. After the making of the deed, as before, the old corporation furnished water to plaintiff's land upon the terms stated in the agreement. The plaintiff had planted his land to fruit trees and vines, and applied for water as he needed it for irrigation, paying 10 cents for each inch served for the number of days during which the use continued. In 1909 the old corporation conveyed all of its water system and other property to the defendant, which has ever since been carrying on the business of a public service corporation supplying water to the public for hire. When the defendant came into possession of the system, it undertook to establish a new system of rates, under which it made a flat charge of $36.50 per annum for one inch of water, allowing the user to cumulate the use during any month, e. g., to use five inches for six days in the month, or three inches for ten days, or ten inches for three days, and so on. The effect of the new rule, however, was to require a consumer to pay a minimum of 10 cents for every day in the year, whether he used water or not. The plaintiff demanded the right to have water served to him upon the terms on which he had received it during the 25 years from 1884 to 1909. The defendant refused to furnish water except upon payment of the new rate. In consequence, no water was furnished to the land, and plaintiff brought this action in 1914 to recover damages for the refusal to furnish him water during the four preceding seasons.

[1] The main question is whether the defendant was bound to furnish water at the rates agreed upon between its predecessor and the plaintiff. Underlying this is the preliminary inquiry whether the defendant, in purchasing the water system of the old corporation, took with constructive notice of plaintiff's rights under his contract. It did not have such notice from the records, since the contract, though copied in a book of the records of Butte county, had not been acknowledged. There was therefore no such legal recordation as would impart constructive notice. Civ. Code, § 1213; McMinn v. O'Connor, 27 Cal. 239, 245; Lee v. Murphy, 119 Cal. 364, 370, 51 Pac. 549, 955.

[2] But the purchaser of real property is bound to take notice of all easements or servitudes which are "apparent," upon an inspection of the property. Rubio Cañon L. & W. Ass'n v. Everett, 154 Cal. 29, 96 Pac. 811. As between the plaintiff and the old corporation, the right to the flow and use of the water constituted an easement in favor of plaintiff's land. Civ. Code, § 552; Farmer v. Ukiah W. Co., 56 Cal. 11; Franscioni v. Soledad L. & W. Co., 170 Cal. 221, 224, 149 Pac. 161; S. P. Co. v. S. V. W. Co., 173 Cal. 291, 159 Pac. 865, L. R. A. 1917E, 680. At the time of the defendant's purchase, the water system was connected by lateral ditches and pipes with the plaintiff's land. The trial court was warranted in drawing the inference that the physical conditions were such as to indicate to any one inspecting the system that water had been, and could be, furnished therefrom to such land. Undoubtedly the defendant knew that its grantor had been engaged in the sale or rental of water as a public service, and that those who were receiving water from it had a right to demand continued service on proper terms. The law charged it with notice of all further facts which it might have ascertained by proper inquiry. Civ. Code, § 19; Tynan v. Kerns, 119 Cal. 447, 451, 51 Pac. 693. Knowing then, that plaintiff's land had some kind of a right to receive water from the system which it was buying, the defendant was put on inquiry as to the nature, extent, and conditions of such right. Under the law, the water might have been furnished under rates fixed by public authority. In the absence of any such regulation (and there had been none during the period here involved), the service might have been rendered either on rates fixed by the corporation or on terms agreed upon by it with the customer. S. P. Co. v. S. V. W. Co., supra. The purchaser of the system had no right to assume either that water had been furnished under an agreed rate, or that it had not. The fact could as well be one way as the other. The court was authorized to conclude, therefore, that the dictates of prudence required the defendant, on purchasing the system, to make inquiry to ascertain the terms upon which any prior consumer was receiving the service. Such inquiry would have disclosed that the water had been furnished to the plaintiff under a rate fixed by contract.

[3] If the defendant had notice of the contract of the old corporation, it was bound by the terms of that contract. The case is governed by the principles laid down in Stanislaus Water Company v. Bachman, 152 Cal. 716, 93 Pac. 858, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 359. There the court, in speaking of a similar situation, said:

> "The agreement is, in legal effect, an agreement to sell a right or interest in real property. * * * Hence the agreement to furnish the necessary water from the canal from year to year, during the times specified, and to deliver it upon the * * * lands for the irrigation thereof, for an agreed price, was, in substance and effect, an agreement for the sale of real property of the canal company. Such an agreement, with all its terms, is binding, not only upon the maker, but upon all persons who subsequently acquire the maker's title to the property agreed to be sold, with notice of the agreement. The plaintiff [water company], as we have seen, bought with notice, and it is therefore as much bound to comply with this part of the agreement according to its terms as if it had executed the same."

This reasoning is equally applicable to the present case. It is true that the contract before us does not provide, as did that considered in the Stanislaus Case, that it should have "the force and effect of a covenant running to and with" the land of the consumer and the canal of the water company. But, as was held in the case cited, the language quoted was not effective to make the covenant one running with the land, nor did it create a lien on the canal. See Fresno Canal, etc., Co. v. Rowell, 80 Cal. 114, 22 Pac. 53, 13 Am. St. Rep. 112. The real ground of decision was that the agreement to furnish water conferred upon the landowner a specific right or interest in real property, affecting the system of the water company, and that any one purchasing such system with notice, actual or constructive, of the landowner's interest, took subject to it. This, as we have seen, is the precise situation here.

[4] It is argued that the agreement is too uncertain to be capable of enforcement. But we think there is no merit in this contention. No specific amount of water was mentioned, but the company agreed "to furnish water for irrigation on the lands described in the within agreement." The fair meaning of this language is that the amount to be supplied was that reasonably necessary for irrigating the lands. This, apparently, was the interpretation put upon the contract by the parties to it, and they had no difficulty in acting on such interpretation for 25 years. In Stanislaus Water Company v. Bachman, supra, the contract merely bound the company to furnish "a flow of water sufficient to fully irrigate said land as often as necessary during each year." It was held to be sufficiently certain.

[5] The obligation to furnish water at the agreed rate was unlimited in time, and continued until the rate was superseded by order of a public body vested with the power of regulating the service.

[6] There is no force in the claim that the defendant was excused from the obligation to furnish water because plaintiff had not made a demand for a specific amount, and had not tendered payment in advance at the contract rate. The position of the defendant, plainly and unequivocally declared, was that it would not furnish water except upon the rates prescribed by it. It is perfectly apparent that a demand, however specific as to amount, would have been unavailing so long as plaintiff was not willing to pay the rates demanded. On familiar and well-settled principles the defendant cannot therefore avail himself of any indefiniteness in the demand, or of a failure to offer the contract price. Furthermore, so far as tender is concerned, the contract did not require the plaintiff to pay or offer to pay in advance. The provision was that payment should be made "monthly on demand." If defendant was, as we have seen it was, bound to furnish water under the terms of the contract, it could not refuse plaintiff's demand for want of an offer to make payment before he was required to make it.

[7] The defendant makes the further contention that the evidence does not support the finding with respect to damage. We think this position is well taken. The land had been without water for 4 years. The plaintiff introduced testimony to the effect that the lack of water had greatly diminished both the quantity and the value of his crops of fruit and grapes, and had caused many of his trees and vines to die. The damage claimed consisted of the loss on these items, and the finding represented the conclusion of the court with respect thereto. It is manifest, from the record, that the defendant did not at any time refuse absolutely to furnish water. It was always ready to supply plaintiff's land upon payment of the rates demanded by it. This was perfectly understood by the plaintiff, who was well aware that he could get the water by complying with the defendant's demands. His right to water was not disputed. The one point of controversy was whether he should pay the rates which he had been paying theretofore, or the rates fixed by the defendant. If the plaintiff had continued to use a quantity of water approximating that received by him in prior years, paying the defendant what it asked, the cost to him would have amounted, in each year, to only a few dollars more than the sum payable under the contract. By paying the excessive price without conceding its correctness, he could have saved his trees, vines, and crops, and reduced his damage to a comparatively trifling sum. This it was plainly his duty to do. "The law imposes upon a party injured by another's breach of contract or tort the active duty of using all ordinary care and making all reasonable exertions to render the injury as light as possible. If by his negligence or willfulness he allows the damages to be unnecessarily enhanced, the increased loss, that which was avoidable by the performance of his duty, falls upon him." 1 Sutherland on Damages (4th Ed.) § 88; Ash v. Soo Sing Lung, 170 Pac. 843, decided January 29, 1918; Cullerton v. Miller, 26 Ont. 36, 45; Dillon v. Anderson, 43 N. Y. 231, 237. The principle has been applied by this court in a case similar to the one at bar. Mabb v. Stewart, 147 Cal. 413, 418, 81 Pac. 1073. There, as here, the action was to recover damages for the withholding of water from plaintiff's land. It appeared that the plaintiff, Mrs. Mabb, could have obtained the water by paying a small sum which was not in reality due from her. The decision was that she could not, in this state of facts, hold the defendant for the loss of crops due to lack of water. The court referred to the passage from Sutherland on Damages, quoted above, and went on to say that:

> "Under this rule the measure of damages in this case was the amount that it would have been necessary for her to pay to obtain sufficient water to replace that of which she was deprived."

So, in this case, the plaintiff could not hold the defendant responsible for the ruin caused by his own act in allowing his trees and vines to go without water for four years, when, as he well knew, he might, at slight cost, have secured the water and reduced his damage to almost nominal proportions. The rule under discussion is not rendered inapplicable by the circumstance that the defendant itself demanded the excessive payment. This was the situation in Cullerton v. Miller, supra, a case cited with approval in Mabb v. Stewart.

We find no other point requiring discussion.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.

---

176 Cal. 771

In re SEILER'S ESTATE. (S. F. 8189.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 18, 1917. Rehearing Denied Jan. 17, 1918.)

1. WILLS 🔑199—REVOCATION BY MARRIAGE—REPUBLISHING—CODICIL.

While marriage revokes a prior will under Civ. Code, § 1299, the making of a codicil after marriage, stating that the provisions of the former will "now in full force and effect" should continue, was a sufficient republishing to reinstate the old will.

2. WILLS 🔑302(7)—CODICIL—EXECUTION—INSTRUCTION—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to show that a codicil referring to a former will referred to testator's first will and not his subsequent writing, executed but destroyed.

3. WILLS 🔑55(1)—CAPACITY—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to sustain finding that testator had sufficient capacity to execute a will.

4. WILLS 🔑166(1)—UNDUE INFLUENCE—QUANTUM OF PROOF.

To set aside a will for undue influence clear proof is required.

5. WILLS 🔑91—TRUSTS—CONSTRUCTION.

A memorandum accompanying a deposit of money in a bank, providing that "in the event of my death, the amount of my deposit shall be divided among my children equally," is not a will, but merely the creation of a trust in the moneys deposited.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Will.]

6. WILLS 🔑353—PROBATE—TESTIMONY OF A SUBSCRIBING WITNESS—NECESSITY OF FILING.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1314, requiring that the testimony of the subscribing witness to a will be filed with the order admitting the will to probate, is directory, and it is sufficient if the testimony is subsequently reduced to writing and filed.

7. WILLS 🔑384—PROBATE—INTERLINEATION—HARMLESS ERROR.

Exclusion from probate of interlineation in a will of names descriptive of banks wherein trust funds were deposited, showing that the banks' names had been changed, was not harmful.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Proceedings in the matter of the probate of the will of Paul Seiler, deceased, wherein his widow appeals from a judgment admitting two instruments to probate. Affirmed.

See, also, 164 Pac. 401.

A. G. Kazebeer and J. E. Pemberton, both of San Francisco, for appellant. Cullinan & Hickey, Wilson & Haines, and Hugh K. McKevitt, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. The widow of Paul Seiler, deceased, appeals from a judgment admitting to probate two certain instruments as the last will and testament of said Paul Seiler. One of the documents admitted to probate was dated July 6, 1909. The latter which is dated October 8, 1914, is in form a codicil to the testator's "last will." By it he announces the republication "in every particular" of the said will theretofore made by him and then "in full force and effect," subject to certain exceptions which we quote below:

> "Because of the death of my son Adolph, I give one-third (1/3) of the business known as the Paul Seiler Electrical Works to his mother Hulda Seiler, and also give one-third (1/3) of said business to Frank Herrguth, and, also, because of my recent marriage I give one-third (1/3) of the said business to my present wife, Alice C. Seiler."

[1] Appellant seeks a reversal upon numerous grounds, the first being that the will of July 6, 1909, was revoked. It appears that Mr. Seiler married contestant after the execution of the will of 1909, and it is argued that since thereby that writing was revoked (section 1299, Civ. Code), the reference in the codicil to a will "now in full force and effect" could not have been intended as applicable to said instrument. If the will of 1909 was otherwise sufficiently identified as the one to which the testator referred in the codicil, although his marriage left the former instrument, if standing alone, without effect because of the provisions of section 1299 of the Civil Code, it does not follow that it had no testamentary force in making the postnuptial will. Indeed, a codicil may operate entirely to republish such an instrument in every particular. Estate of Cutting, 172 Cal. 191, 155 Pac. 1002, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 1171. Upon the execution of the codicil the testator might say with truth, therefore, that a former will was "now in full force and effect."

[2] But it is argued that a few days before the execution of this codicil, Paul Seiler had executed another testamentary instrument which better fitted the description of the will sought to be republished than the writing of July 6, 1909. The testimony regarding this instrument is conflicting. Mrs. Alice C. Seiler, the contestant, said that it was brought to Mr. Seiler by his trusted employé, Mr. Herrguth. She looked over the latter's shoulder while he was reading it. Regarding the document she testified as follows:

> "The substance of it, as nearly as my memory will serve me, was, 'On account of the death of my son, Adolph Seiler, I give the Paul Seiler Electrical Works to Frank Herrguth, and on account of my recent marriage to Alice C. Seiler, I give her one-fourth,' and below that there was a space, and below that it said, 'I appoint Frank Herrguth executor without bonds.' There was no reference made therein to any other older will. Mr. Seiler signed that paper. I was present when he signed it. Mr. Guthrie, Mr. Herrguth and Mr. Seiler signed it as witnesses. They were all in the room when it was signed. Mrs. Malone was standing in the door. Mr. Seiler did not refer to it as his will at that time."

That some sort of a document was signed by Mr. Seiler appears in the testimony, but there was no showing that it was executed with due formality. Whatever it was, it was destroyed. According to the testimony of Mrs. Malone, one of the daughters of Paul Seiler, this instrument was prepared by an attorney at her request. After its execution Mr. Seiler told her that he had changed his mind and another writing was finally drafted, submitted to Mr. Seiler, and signed. There was no sufficient proof that the so-called "Herrguth will" had been properly executed, and there was testimony to the effect that when the codicil of October 8, 1914, was drawn at Mrs. Malone's request, while she, according to her testimony, was acting under her father's direction, the attorney who prepared it had before him the will of July 6, 1909, which, according to her father's orders, she had procured from a safe. We are satisfied that, notwithstanding the fact that the earlier document was not physically affixed to the codicil, there was sufficient proof to justify the finding that the codicil referred to the will of July 6, 1909.

[3] Upon the questions of alleged unsoundness of mind and undue influence there was a conflict of testimony which prevents us from disturbing the court's conclusions. It is undeniably true that Mr. Seiler was a very sick man when he executed the codicil, and that he was under treatment which involved the use of sedatives. But the attending physician testified that between the 1st and the 15th of October, 1914, the patient was of sound mind when awake and not greatly under the influence of morphine. Speaking of Mr. Seiler, the physician said:

> "When he was awake he was sound, and he would listen attentively to what you were telling him, and he would answer clearly and intelligently any questions that were addressed to him."

Mr. Borden, one of the witnesses to the codicil, testified that Mr. Seiler was of sound mind when it was signed, and that prior to the signing of the document the testator read it aloud in the presence of the two witnesses and Mrs. Seiler (the contestant here). Mr. Schulze testified to the same general effect. There were other witnesses who were of the opinion that the testator was of disposing mind, and while there was some testimony the other way, there was ample support for the finding that he was competent.

[4] As the contestant was present with her husband on the 8th of October, 1914, there can be little doubt that he was not acting under undue influence, unless it previously had been exerted and had persisted up to the moment of the testamentary act. There was no proof of any such sinister pressure upon the mind and volition of Mr. Seiler. Clear proof of such influence is required in order that a solemnly executed testament may be set aside for undue influence. Estate of Clark, 170 Cal. 418, 149 Pac. 828; Estate of Gleason, 164 Cal. 756, 130 Pac. 872; Estate of Carithers, 156 Cal. 428, 105 Pac. 127; Estate of Lavinburg, 161 Cal. 543, 119 Pac. 915; Estate of Kilborn, 162 Cal. 11, 120 Pac. 762.

[5] The motion for a new trial was based principally upon the discovery after trial of the contest of a document asserted by appellant to be testamentary in its nature. It was a memorandum accompanying a deposit of money in the Bank of Italy by testator. It was as follows:

> " 'Oct. 1, 1911.
>
> " 'In the event of my death, the amount of my deposit shall be divided between my children equally in four parts, to wit: Louise Malone, Clara Pape, Adolph Seiler, Hazel Vallejo.
>
> " 'Paul Seiler, Trustee.' "

This was not a will, but merely the creation of a trust in the moneys deposited. Cahlan v. Bank of Lassen Co., 11 Cal. App. 533, 105 Pac. 765; Booth v. Oakland Bank of Savings, 122 Cal. 19, 54 Pac. 370; McCloskey v. Tierney, 141 Cal. 101, 74 Pac. 699, 99 Am. St. Rep. 33; Bell v. Moloney, 165 Pac. 917.

In the will of July 6, 1909, the testator bequeathed to his lawful children (naming them) "all the money deposited in their names in the various savings banks; I myself being trustee (self-appointed) and said amounts being deposited by me with the understanding that the money shall be divided in equal parts."

[6] There is no force in the contention that the judgment should be reversed because of failure of proponents to comply with section 1314, Code of Civil Procedure, by filing the testimony of the subscribing witnesses to the will with the order admitting the will to probate. The section is directory, and it is admitted that the testimony was subsequently reduced to writing and filed.

[7] In the will of 1909 there were two interlineations which the court expressly excluded from probate. After the name of one of the banks specified as containing deposits of trust funds were the words "now Bank of Italy," and the words "First Savings Bank of Oakland" also appeared. Both titles were written after the execution of the will. We cannot see how appellant could be harmed either by the inclusion or omission of these interlineations.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(176 Cal. 671)

BOYLE et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. et al. (WESTERN MAGNESITE DEVELOPMENT CO. et al., Interveners). (S. F. 8411.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 12, 1917. On Petition for Rehearing, Jan. 10, 1918.)

CORPORATIONS ⟹553(5) — RECEIVERS — APPOINTMENT—PROPRIETY.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 564, subd. 6, providing for appointment of receivers, a receiver may be appointed for a corporation with four directors at a deadlock, from which it was impossible to do business, with resultant damage to the corporation and stockholders.

In Bank. Mandamus by L. E. Boyle, receiver, and others, against the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco and others, wherein the Western Magnesite Development Company and others intervened. Writ awarded. On rehearing execution of writ stayed pending determination of proceeding for prohibition.

Joseph E. O'Donnell, Keyes & Erskine, Thomas R. White, George A. Connolly, and R. W. Cantrell, all of San Francisco (Herbert W. Erskine, of San Francisco, of counsel), for petitioners. Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, of San Francisco, for interveners.

HENSHAW, J. Certain stockholders of the Western Magnesite Development Company, a corporation, appealed to equity, charging fraud, dereliction of duty, and violation of trust against two of the directors of the corporation, and prayed for a removal of these directors and for an appointment of a receiver to take possession and charge of the assets and property of the corporation. It was alleged that the Western Magnesite Development Company was a mining corporation owning magnesite claims of large value; that dissension had arisen in the board of directors, which board consisted of but four persons, of whom the defendants Cummings and Wolfe were two; that, because of these dissensions and the mutual hostility underlying them, no business of the corporation was performed. The corporation had entirely ceased operations and no longer prosecuted its mining operations. On account of the disputed ownership of over two-thirds of the capital stock, it was alleged that it was impossible to hold a stockholders' meeting for the purpose of electing a new board of directors; that litigation was pending to determine the true ownership of this disputed capital stock. Other allegations going to the trouble and confusion in the affairs of the corporation, the enforced suspension of all its business activities, and improper conduct on the part of the directors Cummings and Wolfe, were set forth. Trial upon the issues joined was had. Application was made for the appointment of a receiver to preserve the assets and property of the corporation pendente lite and until the directorate was able to act. At the conclusion of the taking of the evidence at the trial and before decision upon the merits of the case, the trial court appointed a receiver pendente lite to take charge of the assets and continue the business of the corporation. The receiver was directed, first, to execute to the state of California an adequate undertaking in the sum of fifty thousand dollars. The order declared that it was made "without determining the merits of this cause as between plaintiffs and defendants and upon the sole ground that there is now and ever since the commencement of this action has been a deadlock in the board of directors of said corporation, as a consequence of which the business of said corporation is not carried on and the mine of said corporation is not operated." The parties litigant, dissatisfied with this order, sought and obtained an alternative writ of prohibition issued out of the District Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District, by which alternative writ action of the judge of the court and of the receiver so named was stayed until further order of the District Court of Appeal. On the 27th day of June, 1917, the District Court of Appeal made its order dismissing the proceeding and quashing the alternative writ.

Following this came an application to this court for mandate directed to the trial judge of the superior court for his refusal to approve the bond and undertaking of the receiver whom he had appointed, and to allow this receiver to qualify. In the petition and in the alternative writ of mandate which issued from this court, it is declared that the sole ground of the trial court's refusal is "that the decision of the District Court of Appeal of the State of California in the action of Western Magnesite Development Company, a Corporation, et al. v. The Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco et al., will not become final for 30 days."

Were this the sole ground, no consideration here would be necessary, since the 30 days have elapsed and the trial judge doubtless would not longer withhold action for the reason indicated. In passing it may be said that Noel v. Smith, 2 Cal. App. 158, 83 Pac. 167, affords justification for the court's refusal to act until the expiration of the 30 days, only after which the decision of the District Court of Appeal became final.

The serious contention is over the jurisdiction of the trial court to appoint a receiver under the indicated circumstances, and it is declared that under the decisions of this court such an appointment, based upon the stated ground, is in excess of the jurisdiction of the court and therefore void. With this contention, however, we cannot agree. Section 564, subd. 6, of the Code of Civil Procedure, declares that a receiver may be appointed by the court in which an action is pending, or by the judge thereof "in all other cases where receivers have heretofore been appointed by the usages of courts of equity." That courts of equity, English and American, have appointed receivers under precisely the situation here presented, is beyond all controversy. These receivers are not appointed to close up the affairs of a corporation, to work its dissolution, but to preserve its properties, and, where possible, continue its corporate functions. Says Pomeroy (5 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 124):

> "The power of a court of equity to appoint a receiver of a corporation either because it has no properly constituted governing body, or because there are such dissensions in its governing body as to make it impossible for the corporation to carry on its business with advantage to its stockholders, appears to be settled; but it is equally well settled that this power is subject to certain limitations, namely, it must always be exercised with great caution, and only for such time and to such an extent as may be necessary to preserve the property of the corporation and protect the rights and interests of its stockholders. As soon as a lawfully constituted and competent governing body comes into existence, whether it is brought into existence by an adjustment of the dissensions or by the election of a new body, and such body is ready to take possession of the property of the corporation, and proceed in the proper discharge of its duties, the court must lift its hand and retire."

It is to be noted from this and from the citations which will follow that fraud is not a necessary basis for the procurement of such an appointment. Dissensions, honest differences of opinion, which result in making it impossible for the corporation to carry on its business to advantage, or, as here, to carry it on at all, are sufficient to invoke the action of a court of equity. In California Fruit Growers' Ass'n v. Superior Court, 8 Cal. App. 711, 97 Pac. 769, where a receiver was asked for upon the ground of fraudulent mismanagement, the court declared that the trial court had jurisdiction to appoint a receiver under the allegations of the complaint, and pointed out that the proceeding was not directed toward the closing of the affairs of the corporation or toward an attempt to dissolve it, but was designed merely to place the assets of the corporation in safe hands. In Sternberg v. Wolff, 56 N. J. Eq. 389, 39 Atl. 397, 39 L. R. A. 762, 67 Am. St. Rep. 494, difficulties had arisen, as here, in a board of directors consisting of four members. The lower court refused to appoint a receiver. On appeal its order so doing was reversed and a receiver appointed upon the ground that injunction was inadequate, and the court based its decision solely upon the fact that dissensions existed between the two factions which had brought the affairs of the company to a deadlock "so far as any corporate action by the board of directors is concerned"; and proceeded to say that, while the court of chancery had no jurisdiction to dissolve a solvent corporation under such circumstances, its jurisdiction "to control the business of a company, especially a trading company, pending a litigation over the management and conduct of its business, must necessarily exist." Without multiplying quotations upon this point, further reference may be made to Featherstone v. Cooke, L. R. 16 Eq. 298; Auxiliary Co. v. Vickers, L. R. 16 Eq. 303; Archer v. Waterworks, 50 N. J. Eq. 33, 24 Atl. 508; Jasper Land Co. v. Wallis, 123 Ala. 652, 26 South. 659; Sheridan Brick Works v. Marion Trust Co., 157 Ind. 292, 61 N. E. 666, 87 Am. St. Rep. 207; Powers v. Blue Grass Building & Loan Ass'n (C. C.) 86 Fed. 705; Boothe v. Summit Coal Co., 55 Wash. 167, 104 Pac. 207, 19 Ann. Cas. 1255; Gibbs v. Morgan, 9 Idaho, 100, 72 Pac. 733; Alabama Coal & Coke Co. v. Shackelford, 137 Ala. 224, 34 South. 833, 97 Am. St. Rep. 23; State v. District Court, 15 Mont. 324, 39 Pac. 316, 27 L. R. A. 392, 48 Am. St. Rep. 682; Ritchie v. People's Telephone Co., 22 S. D. 598, 119 N. W. 990; In re Lewis, 52 Kan. 660, 35 Pac. 287.

An examination of our own cases has been made under the adverse contention that this equitable doctrine has been refused recognition in this state. It would unduly and unnecessarily prolong this discussion to review those cases at length. One and all, however, they were cases susceptible of broad differentiation. They were cases where the receiver was appointed to wind up the affairs of the corporation—in effect to dissolve it and to distribute its assets, a power which under our laws equity does not possess, and a power which equity in the case at bar did not attempt to exercise. The distinction is well recognized, as a consideration of any of the foregoing citations will amply demonstrate.

Let mandate issue accordingly.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. On petition for rehearing, it is called to our attention that on August 23, 1917, we made an order, transferring the proceeding for prohibition, referred to in the opinion of Mr. Justice HENSHAW, to this court for hearing and determination. The order revived the alternative writ of prohibition issued by the District Court of Appeal, and the restraining effect of such writ will remain in force until this court shall dispose of the proceeding thus transferred, and now pending here. On the merits, the two proceedings—that in prohibition and the present one in mandate—turn on the same legal questions. We are entirely satisfied with the manner in which these questions are disposed of by our opinion herein. But, since the alternative writ of prohibition is still in force, the respondent judge is confronted by two orders; one commanding, and the other prohibiting, certain action. To avoid technical difficulties which may arise, it is ordered that execution of our writ of mandate be stayed until the disposition of the pending proceeding for prohibition.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

MEMORANDUM DECISIONS

176 Cal. 648

In re JEPSON'S ESTATE. (L. A. 5055, 5056.) (Supreme Court of California. Dec. 12, 1917.) Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge. In the matter of the estate of Frederick Emile Jepson, deceased. From orders setting apart a homestead to the widow and dismissing contests, deceased's nephews and nieces appeal. Reversed. Fred N. Arnoldy, of Los Angeles, for appellants Jepson and Miller. Stewart & Stewart, of Los Angeles, for appellants Nielsen. Frank Stewart and J. W. Howell, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner and administratrix.

SHAW, J. In this case the widow of the decedent applied to the court in probate to have set apart to her a homestead. The nephews and nieces of the decedent filed a contest to the application. The court below dismissed the contest, on the ground that the nephews and nieces had no interest in the estate as heirs or otherwise, and thereupon made an order setting apart to the widow a homestead out of the property of the decedent. From this order two appeals have been taken; one being an appeal from the part of the order setting apart the homestead, the other an appeal from the part of the order declaring that the nephews and nieces are not heirs at law of the decedent. The decedent died intestate. A motion to dismiss these appeals was heretofore made in this court, based upon the ground that the nephews and nieces were not heirs, and consequently had no interest in the property of the decedent. Upon the decision of this motion the court held that the nephews and nieces, who were also the next of kin, were heirs, and were therefore entitled to present a contest to the application of the widow for a homestead. Estate of Jepson, 164 Pac. 1. The discussion of the subject in that case renders it unnecessary to state either the facts or the law in the disposition of the case on the merits. As the decision of the court below dismissing the contest, on the ground that the nephews and nieces were not heirs, was erroneous, it follows that the order must be set aside, and the cause remanded for a new trial. The order is reversed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; LAWLOR, J.

35 Cal. App. 513

JOHNSON SERVICE CO. v. LATOURRETTE-FICAL CO. (Civ. 2258.) (District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 10, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court. Feb. 7, 1918.) Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge. Action by the Johnson Service Company against the Latourrette-Fical Company and another. From the judgment rendered, and from an order denying motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed. Houghton & Houghton, of San Francisco, for appellant. John C. March and De Ligne & Jones, all of Sacramento, for respondents.

LENNON, P. J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from the judgment and the order denying its motion for a new trial. The plaintiff, Johnson Service Company, furnished and installed what is known as the Johnson system of temperature regulation in the county courthouse at Sacramento. The original defendant, Latourrette-Fical Company, held a contract to furnish and install the heating system of the courthouse, including the temperature regulation apparatus, and became obligated to pay the sum of $6,600 for the labor and work so furnished. It was admitted by all persons concerned in the litigation that $3,700 of the $6,600 had been paid, and that there was a balance of $2,900 due at the time plaintiff brought this action against the Latourrette-Fical Company to recover the latter amount. The defendant answered, admitting its obligation, but averred that the Scott, Lyman & Stack Company claimed to be entitled to the money. Therefore it deposited the disputed moneys in court and interpleaded the Scott Company. Upon trial of the action the plaintiff claimed to have furnished the work for Latourrette-Fical Company under and in pursuance of an alleged contract with it, while the Scott Company claimed to have furnished the work under and in pursuance of a contract entered into between the Latourrette-Fical Company and R. B. Lindsay, the Pacific Coast manager of plaintiff's business at the time, which contract was transferred and assigned to the Scott Company by Lindsay. The Scott Company further claimed that, while the work was actually done by plaintiff, it was done by it as the subcontractor and agent of the Scott Company. The court below found that plaintiff furnished the labor and material under and in pursuance of a contract entered into between plaintiff, Johnson Service Company, and the defendant Scott, Lyman & Stack Company, and that the latter furnished the same labor and material, through plaintiff as its subcontractor, to the Latourrette-Fical Company under and in pursuance of the contract originally entered into between the Latourrette-Fical Company and R. B. Lindsay, which was thereafter transferred and assigned to the Scott Company, and that the Scott Company was entitled to the moneys in dispute less $500, of which it was admitted $50 was due and $450 would become due from the Scott Company to plaintiff when the former should receive its money for the work. Plaintiff's main attack upon the judgment appealed from is based on the alleged insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings, and some 16 assignments of insufficiency are designated in support of this contention. In response to these various objections it will suffice for us to say that we have read the record and find ample evidence to support the findings, which in turn support the judgment. Upon the oral argument of the case in this court it was conceded by counsel for plaintiff that the attack made in the opening briefs upon the findings of the court, because of an alleged irregularity in their preparation and entry, was not well taken, and therefore we will not now discuss that point. The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; RICHARDS, J.

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

171 PACIFIC REPORTER

177 Cal. 493

ASATO v. EMIRZIAN. (S. F. 7464.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 13, 1918.)

1. Appeal and Error 🔑1208(1) — Trover and Conversion 🔑5 — Reversal — Restitution—What Constitutes Taking.

Where plaintiff in action for specific performance of contract to sell orange trees got judgment, and defendant appealed without filing a stay bond, and receiver was appointed for defendant, and delivered the trees to plaintiff, plaintiff's taking the trees was not an unlawful taking, though when the judgment was reversed he was bound to account to the defendant for the property.

2. Appeal and Error 🔑1208(8)—Reversal—Restitution.

In such case, if he was unable to make restitution, plaintiff was bound to show that loss of the trees was not due to want of good faith or lack of common skill, prudence, and diligence.

3. Trover and Conversion 🔑5 — What Constitutes.

In such case, where plaintiff took the trees and planted them in his orchard, there was a conversion which rendered him liable for the value of the trees.

4. Appeal and Error 🔑1064(1)—Review—Harmless Error—Instruction.

Where defendant gave no stay bond, and plaintiff under order of court which appointed receiver for defendant went on defendant's land and removed trees, and planted them on his own land, and the judgment was reversed, instruction to consider value of trees at the time of conversion, without confining time of conversion to the time when the trees were planted, was not prejudicial, the trees having been transplanted in June, and presumptively, therefore, the conversion occurred at about the same time as the removal from defendant's land.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by Sosei Asato against Karl Emirzian. From an order denying motion for new trial after judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

C. K. Bonestell, of Fresno, for appellant. Geo. Cosgrave, of Fresno, for respondent.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. This action for conversion grew out of the following facts: On June 8, 1909, the parties entered into a contract whereby for a specified consideration plaintiff, Asato, agreed to grow and deliver to defendant, Emirzian, 4,000 orange trees, delivery thereof to be made in June, 1911. For some reason not material to the issues in this case, the trees were not delivered and Emirzian instituted suit for the specific performance of the contract, the result of which was a decree entered in his favor on March 28, 1912. After an appeal from this judgment by Asato without giving an undertaking to stay execution thereon, the court upon application of Emirzian appointed a receiver, who, in accordance with the terms of the decree and under order of the court, made delivery of the trees to Emirzian, who planted the same on his land as a part of his orange orchard, where prior to the commencement of this action, they died.

The appeal so taken by Asato from the judgment in the former action resulted in a reversal of the judgment. Emirzian v. Asato, 23 Cal. App. 251, 137 Pac. 1072. Thereupon, plaintiff brought this action alleging that on May 13, 1912, he was the owner, entitled to, and in the exclusive possession of 2,600 orange trees then and there of the value of $2,600, which trees defendant unlawfully took and carried away and converted to his own use, all of which allegations were denied by defendant's answer. The case was tried by a jury which rendered a verdict as prayed for by plaintiff in accordance with which judgment was entered. Defendant appeals from an order of the court denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] In effect, the several provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure declare that where no undertaking on appeal is given by defendant in cases of this character to stay execution of the judgment, the same may be enforced as though no appeal were had. Hence the taking of the trees by defendant in this action under the terms of the decree as to the execution of which there was no stay could not be deemed an unlawful or wrongful taking. "A judgment, although it may be erroneous, nevertheless is the act of the court, and, until reversed, unless superseded, which was not done in the instant case, constitutes a sufficient justification for all acts done in its enforcement, and afforded complete protection for the defendant who acted in reliance upon the adjudication." State Nat. Bank v. Ladd, 162 Pac. 684, L. R. A. 1917C, 1176, and cases there cited. Nevertheless, where a plaintiff by virtue of a judgment rendered in an action obtains possession of money or specific property of the defendant therein, the latter upon a reversal of the judgment on appeal therefrom is entitled to restitution of the property or proceeds of the sale thereof under execution. Section 957, Code Civ. Proc.;

Dowdell v. Carpy, 137 Cal. 333, 70 Pac. 167; Ashton v. Heydenfeldt, 124 Cal. 14, 56 Pac. 624. As to such defendant "the courts will, where justice requires it, place him as nearly as may be in the condition in which he stood previously." Ward v. Sherman, 155 Cal. 287, 100 Pac. 864.

Since, under the decree, the possession of the trees taken by Emirzian was lawful, and Asato's right thereto did not attach until after the reversal, it follows that until the judgment was reversed defendant herein was lawfully in possession of the property so acquired. When, however, the judgment was reversed, he was in duty bound to account to Asato for the property which he had theretofore received, and, as said in Ward v. Sherman, supra, the rule governing the extent of defendant's liability is that applicable to a trustee which in 28 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 1059, is stated as follows:

> "The general doctrine being that trustees ought to conduct the business of the trust in the same manner as an ordinarily prudent man of business would conduct his own, they will not be chargeable with more than they have received nor held responsible for losses that may arise, when they have acted in good faith and with common skill, prudence and diligence."

[2, 3] While pending the appeal Emirzian, under the principle stated, was entitled to the possession of the property, his title thereto was contingent upon the determination of the case, and if, as such trustee, he was unable to make restitution of the trees, it devolved upon him in order to escape liability to show that such fact was not due to the want of good faith, or the lack of common skill, prudence, and diligence in the care thereof. The only evidence touching the subject is that of defendant who stated that upon receiving the trees he planted them in his orchard as part thereof, thus changing their character from nursery stock, which constituted personal property, to a part of his real property, thereby placing it beyond his power to make restitution. By such act, in the absence of any evidence showing necessity therefor, or that in so doing he exercised common prudence, he, in violation of his duty as trustee, appropriated the property and converted it to his own use as fully and to the same extent as though the subject of controversy had been a lot of hay, upon the taking of which defendant had thereupon fed it to is cattle. "In such cases the true rule would seem to be that the trustee is liable to the extent of the actual value of the property at the time of the conversion, * * * with interest." Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 1062. If he had retained the trees as personal property, in which character they were received by him, he could at any time thereafter have made restitution to Asato, in which case, under the rule applied in Ward v. Sherman, supra, his liability for loss would have been that due to want of common prudence and care. Had the trees been sold under execution, the proceeds thereof coming into the hands of Emirzian would, in the absence of fraud, have fixed the amount of his liability (section 957, Code Civ. Proc.), and since he converted them to his own use his liability should be measured by the value of the trees at the time of the conversion. The fact that the trees thereafter died is immaterial, unless such loss could be attributed to some cause for which defendant was not responsible existing prior to the conversion, evidence bearing upon which question was in fact introduced by both parties as affecting the value of the trees, which the jury found to be $1 per tree at the time they were delivered to defendant.

[4] At the trial plaintiff's theory of the case was that the receiver's delivery of the trees to defendant constituted the conversion, while that of defendant was that, since the taking by defendant was lawful, and the capacity in which he held the property that of a trustee, there could be no conversion thereof by him. The trial court instructed the jury that in ascertaining the value of the trees they were governed by the evidence as to value as of the time of the taking and refused defendant's requested instruction fixing the value as of the time of the conversion. In this the court erred, but in view of the evidence disclosed by the record we are unable to perceive how defendant was prejudiced by the ruling. It was not the taking, which appears to have been about June 1st, but the appropriation made by defendant in planting the trees as part of his orange grove that constituted the conversion, and barring any lack of proper care of the trees on his part prior to such conversion, their value at such time was the measure of defendant's liability. Nevertheless, in the absence of any evidence as to the time when the trees were so planted other than that of defendant, who said upon receiving the trees he planted them in his orchard, we may indulge the presumption, based upon common knowledge, that the trees, upon being taken from the nursery in June, were permanently set in the ground about the same time, hence the error could not have been prejudicial.

The gist of appellant's whole claim and argument is that there was no conversion since defendant held the trees as trustee; that the permanent setting of the trees on his land in orchard form, thus appropriating them for all time to his own use, was, in itself, in the absence of other evidence of such fact, proof that he, as trustee, exercised proper skill and diligence in the care and management of the trust property, and hence, though shown to be in good merchantable condition when he got them, nevertheless, since they died, he is not responsible for the loss to plaintiff. We cannot assent to this contention.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SLOSS, J.; WILBUR, J.; MELVIN, J.; SHAW, J.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.

177 Cal. 481

GRIFFIN v. SMITH. (S. F. 7915.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 11, 1918.)

1. BANKRUPTCY 🔑188(1) — EFFECT AS TO LIENS.

Under Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 67d, 30 Stat. 564 (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 9651), providing that liens given or accepted in good faith, and not in contemplation of, or in fraud upon, that act, and for a present consideration, which have been recorded, if necessary, shall, to the extent of such present consideration only, not be affected thereby, a pledge of stock, created more than four months before the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against the pledgor, was not affected by the bankruptcy proceeding.

2. BANKRUPTCY 🔑151—TITLE ACQUIRED BY TRUSTEE.

Where a bankrupt had pledged stock more than four months before the filing of the petition, the trustee would take only such interest in the stock as the debtor had; that is, a title subject to the interest of the pledgee.

3. BANKRUPTCY 🔑214 — LIENS — ENFORCEMENT.

Under a pledge of stock created more than four months before bankruptcy, the pledgee's right to sell the stock and apply the proceeds to the payment of his debt was not affected by the bankruptcy proceeding.

4. BANKRUPTCY 🔑214 — LIENS — ENFORCEMENT.

The filing of a petition in bankruptcy did not oust a state court of jurisdiction to entertain an action by the pledgee to foreclose his lien, but at most authorized the bankruptcy court to enjoin the prosecution, or the state court to stay it.

5. BANKRUPTCY 🔑214 — CORPORATIONS 🔑123(24)—PLEDGE OF STOCK—ENFORCEMENT.

A pledgor of stock, or his creditors on his bankruptcy, were not entitled to ask that the pledgee, who had a matured and present right to realize upon his security should be required to defer the exercise of such right indefinitely, to await a purely problematical increase in the price which might be realized at a sale.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Donahue, Judge.

Action by Henry T. Griffin against F. M. Smith. From a decree in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, of San Francisco, for appellant. St. Sure & Rose, of Oakland, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. On June 12, 1912, the defendant executed and delivered to plaintiff a demand note for $3,000, secured by a pledge of certain shares of stock. A collateral agreement, made at the same time, authorized the holder of the note, in case of default, to sell the pledged property at public or private sale, with or without notice to the pledgor. This action was brought in January, 1914, to foreclose the lien of the pledge. The court found that $750 of the principal and $150.05 of the interest due on the note was unpaid, and that the plaintiff had waived any right to a deficiency or personal judgment against the defendant. A decree was accordingly entered for the sale of the pledged property by a commissioner and for the foreclosure of defendant's right of redemption. The defendant appeals from the judgment.

His sole contention is that the court below should have stayed its hand because of the pendency of bankruptcy proceedings. It was alleged in the answer, and found by the court, that on July 24, 1913, there was filed in the United States District Court, in and for the Northern District of California, a petition praying that the defendant herein be declared an involuntary bankrupt; that said defendant had appeared in said proceeding, but no adjudication with respect to his bankruptcy had been made.

[1-3] The plaintiff's pledge was valid under the laws of this state, it was created more than four months before the filing of the petition against the defendant, and its validity was in no way affected by the bankruptcy proceeding. Bankruptcy Act, § 67, subd. "d" (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 9651). The trustee appointed upon an adjudication of bankruptcy, if there had been such adjudication, would have taken only such interest in the stock as the debtor had—that is, a title subject to the interest of the plaintiff under his pledge. 7 C. J. 185. Since the judgment under review did not decree any personal liability, it gave to plaintiff no more than he had by the terms of the collateral agreement, viz., the right to sell and apply the proceeds to the payment of his debt. This right, which might have been exercised without resort to any court, was not affected by the bankruptcy proceedings. Hiscock v. Varick, 206 U. S. 28, 27 Sup. Ct. 681, 51 L. Ed. 945.

[4, 5] The filing of the petition in bankruptcy did not oust the state court of jurisdiction to entertain the present action. 7 C. J. 204, 205. The most that could possibly be claimed is that bankruptcy court might have enjoined the prosecution, in a state court, of an action which might interfere with its own administration of the estate, and that, on like grounds, the state court itself should have granted a stay. But no case was made calling for the intervention of the bankruptcy court. The answer avers that the pledged shares of stock had no "market value," and that, if they were sold under the most favorable circumstances, they would not bring enough to satisfy plaintiff's demand. If this were so, there would be no surplus available to the appellant's other creditors, and the estate in bankruptcy would have no interest in seeking to control the foreclosure sale. In re Holloway (D. C.) 93 Fed. 638. The answer alleges further, on information and belief, that "the actual value of the stock is in excess of the amount due to the plaintiff." There is no attempt to state what value the stock has above the amount of the debt. But if, overlooking the defective form of the pleading, we take it as intended to aver that a substantial surplus above plaintiff's claim might be realized if the sale were postponed, the allegation is still insufficient. The plaintiff, as pledgee, has a matured and present right to realize upon his security. The pledgor is not justified in asking that the exercise of this right be deferred indefinitely to await a purely problematical increase in the price which might be realized at a sale. Nor are the general creditors of the alleged bankrupt entitled to this indulgence.

The answer showed no ground, therefore, for staying the proceedings, or otherwise interfering with the plaintiff in the pursuit of his remedy. In this view, the further points made by the appellant become immaterial.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.

---

177 Cal. 498

HUDSON v. UKIAH WATER & IMPROVEMENT CO. (S. F. 7680.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 15, 1918. Rehearing Denied March 14, 1918.)

1. Waters and Water Courses 🔑152(11)—Appropriation—Limiting by Decree.

An old decree limiting a water right to what could be conveyed from defendant's pipes through a half-inch pipe means the quantity that could then be conveyed, and a later decree, attempting such limitation, but not providing for increased pressure and lessened friction, enlarges such right to include water hereafter acquired by defendant, which is error.

2. Waters and Water Courses 🔑152(11)—Decree—Enlarging Right Appurtenant to Land.

A decree erroneously enlarging a water right limited by contract and former decree from its being appurtenant to four acres of land to include an additional tract, and ignoring a limitation to what may be used in sprinkling with a hose, requires reversal.

3. Waters and Water Courses 🔑143—Appropriation—Quantity of Water.

Plaintiff's right to establish her private water right as against the public served by defendant corporation would be measured not by the amount claimed by her predecessors, but by the amount which had been actually taken for beneficial use on the land to which appurtenant.

4. Waters and Water Courses 🔑152(11)—Rights—Successor in Interest Bound by Decree.

In so far as a company is bound by a judgment against its predecessors confirming the rights of plaintiff's predecessors to preferential right in water appropriated to public use, it is estopped from claiming such rights unlawful.

5. Waters and Water Courses 🔑130—Appropriation—Public Use.

While plaintiff might enlarge her right to use a certain quantity of water from defendant's pipes by prescription or implied grant, yet no such right can be acquired against waters appropriated or acquired by defendant for public use.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by Grace Hudson against the Ukiah Water & Improvement Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Robert Duncan, of Ukiah, for appellant. Preston & Preston, of Ukiah, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. Defendant appeals from the judgment establishing plaintiff's water right.

[1, 2] The water right in question was before this court in Farmer v. Ukiah Water Co., 56 Cal. 11. Plaintiff claims as the successor to the plaintiff in that case by mesne conveyances of the land owned by Farmer, and seeks to bind the defendant as the successor of the defendant corporation, the Ukiah Water Company. Assuming, without deciding, that the parties hereto are bound by the decree in the case of Farmer v. Ukiah Water Co., the judgment must, nevertheless, be reversed for the reason that the water right described therein is entirely different from the water right confirmed in the decree in Farmer v. Ukiah Water Co. To make this apparent, it will be necessary to state some of the facts and to compare the provisions of the decree in the former case and in this case. At the time of the rendition of the decision in Farmer v. Ukiah Water Co., supra, the defendant corporation therein was appropriating a portion of the water of Gibson creek by means of a dam, diverting the water into its reservoir, and conducting the same therefrom in a two-inch pipe, to which plaintiff's predecessors attached a half-inch pipe, and it was to this water of Gibson creek so diverted that the decree declared plaintiff's right. That decree was entered on retrial after reversal, and described the water right of plaintiff therein with reference to the amount of water that would flow through a half-inch pipe, as does the decree in this case. That amount varies with supply, pressure, and friction. Since the decree in Farmer v. Ukiah Water Co., the defendant has increased the supply by diverting all the water of Gibson creek, by diverting water from Orr creek, and by pumping water from wells on Russian river. It has increased the pressure by diverting the water a mile higher up Gibson creek and constructing reservoirs at a higher elevation, and it has decreased the friction in the pipes by increasing to six inches the diameter of the pipe to which plaintiff's one-half inch pipe is attached. It is evident that the plaintiff will receive a vastly greater quantity of water through a half-inch pipe under the circumstances stated than under the system as established at the time her right was granted to her predecessor. But the decree also confirms in plaintiff a right for all future time to use the pipes and water of the defendant corporation. If it erects new reservoirs at greater elevation and establishes larger pipe lines, the plaintiff under this decree would be entitled to the increased flow in her one-half inch pipe due to such increased supply, for the decree herein provides that:

> "Plaintiff is the owner of so much of the water of the defendant corporation as may now or hereafter at any time flow in or through their aqueducts, reservoirs, or pipes, as may or can be conveyed in, through or by a pipe or aqueduct one-half inch in diameter. Also the right to draw such supply of water from the main pipes, aqueducts, or reservoirs, of the said defendant corporation."

Thus, it will be observed, the decree secures to plaintiff and her successors an undivided interest not only in all waters now owned by the defendant, or passing through its pipes, but all water that may from any source subsequently be diverted into said pipes, and this without regard to the question as to whether or not the waters of Gibson creek have become exhausted for any reason. In the former decree there were also limitations upon the amount of water plaintiff's predecessors were entitled to receive through their half-inch pipe, which are entirely ignored in the decree in this case. The right to irrigate was restricted "to water that may be used in sprinkling by means of a hose," etc., and it was therein provided "that nothing herein contained shall authorize the plaintiff to use said right and privilege for purposes of speculation," probably meaning that plaintiff was not allowed to sell water for use by others. But, for an even more obvious enlargement of the plaintiff's water right, it is necessary that the judgment be reversed. The water right which plaintiff claims by mesne conveyances of land as aforesaid is appurtenant to a piece of land about four acres in extent, known as the Fox property. Since the acquisition of that land she has also acquired an adjoining piece of property, known as the Bennett property. By the terms of this decree, perhaps by an inadvertence, the water is made appurtenant to both properties. This enlargement of the right is particularly important because of the above-mentioned limitations imposed in the decree in Farmer v. Ukiah Water Co. upon the right to irrigate, etc., even upon the Fox property.

[3] Plaintiff claims her right under La Mar, one of three partners who originally formed the copartnership known as the Ukiah Water Company, succeeded by the Ukiah Water Company, a public service corporation, defendant in Farmer v. Ukiah Water Co. The defendant in the case at bar is a public service corporation in charge of a public utility, organized since the Constitution of 1879, and supplying the inhabitants of the city of Ukiah with water purchased or appropriated by it since its organization. Where the plaintiff seeks to establish her private right to water as against the right of the public served by the defendant, her right would be measured not by the amount of water which La Mar claimed, nor by the amount which would flow through a half-inch pipe, but by the amount which had been actually taken and applied to a beneficial use upon that land. The "right to priority in the use of water would also be measured according to these facts and limited to this quantity." Leavitt v. Lassen Irr. Co., 157 Cal. 82, 86, 106 Pac. 404, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 213. It is because the water was used with the land for its benefit that it was held to be appurtenant to the land in question. Farmer v. Ukiah Water Co., supra. There should be no difficulty upon a new trial in fixing the quantity of water to which plaintiff is entitled, if any, in terms of gallons per month, based upon the amount that was used upon the Fox property during the time that the Ukiah Water Company, a corporation, defendant in said Farmer Case, was furnishing such water (1872–1895).

[4] Appellant claims that the conveyance, if any, to the plaintiff or her predecessors gives her such a preferential right in waters devoted to public use as is void under the law, citing such cases as Leavitt v. Lassen Irr. Co., supra, People v. Kerber, 152 Cal. 732, 93 Pac. 878, 125 Am. St. Rep. 93, City of South Pasadena v. Pasadena Water Co., 152 Cal. 579, 93 Pac. 490, Byington v. Sacramento Valley, etc., Co., 170 Cal. 124, 148 Pac. 791, arising under article 11, § 19, of the Constitution, and Price v. Riverside Land & Irr. Co., 56 Cal. 432, under the law and the Constitution previous to the Constitution of 1879. But this principle does not apply in this case except with reference to the statute of limitations, which will be hereafter discussed, for, as was held in City & County of San Francisco v. Itsell, 80 Cal. 57, 22 Pac. 74, even though there is no power in the first instance to make such conveyance, a judgment establishing a private right, although erroneous in law, is nevertheless binding upon the company and its successors, so that in so far as the defendant here is bound by the decree in Farmer v. Ukiah Water Co., it is, to that extent, barred from claiming that the right therein confirmed is violative of the law against creating preferential rights in water appropriated to public use.

[5] The findings and decree herein are based in part upon a prescriptive right in the plaintiff. Whether during the 42 years that plaintiff and her predecessors have used water from the pipes of the Ukiah Water Company (1872–1895) and of the defendant (1895–1914) the use has been enlarged does not appear from the findings or decree, but the evidence would seem to indicate that the use had been about the same. If this question arises upon a new trial, it is sufficient to say that in so far as any right to water is claimed by the plaintiff by reason of prescription or implied grant, no such right can thus be created against the waters appropriated or acquired for public use by the defendant. Leavitt v. Lassen Irr. Co., supra; People v. Kerber, supra; Holladay v. San Francisco, 124 Cal. 352, 57 Pac. 146; County of Yolo v. Barney, 79 Cal. 375, 21 Pac. 833, 12 Am. St. Rep. 152.

Appellant makes the point that the Ukiah Water Company could not and did not transfer all its properties to the defendant company. On a new trial other and different evidence as to the relation of the defendant to the Ukiah Water Company, a corporation, and the properties, may be presented, so that we deem it unnecessary to discuss this question, as the general question has been discussed in recent cases by this court, as well as those cited by counsel. Byington v. Sacramento Valley, etc., Co., supra; Southern Pacific Co. et al. v. Spring Valley Water Works et al., 173 Cal. 291, 150 Pac. 865, L. R. A. 1917E, 680; Limoneira Co., Farmers' Ditch Irr. Co. et al. v. Railroad Comm. of California, 174 Cal. 232, 162 Pac. 1033.

The complaint states a cause of action.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.

(177 Cal. 484)

AVERY v. WILTSEE. (S. F. 7564.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 13, 1918.)

1. TRIAL 🔑48—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY FOR PARTICULAR PURPOSES.

In an attorney's action for services in various matters, a verified complaint filed against defendant in an action brought by third parties, charging him with fraud, was properly admitted to show the nature and character of the services performed by plaintiff in warding off the filing of the complaint, in negotiating with the attorneys for the plaintiff in such suit, and in securing its dismissal, though it might be suspected that the jury was improperly influenced by the charge of fraud, and though it might have been more just to have excluded the evidence, especially where the court and counsel made every possible effort to prevent the jury from giving it any other effect than that for which it was offered.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1170(7)—REVERSAL—STATUTE—HARMLESS ERROR.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1854, provides that when part of an act, declaration, conversation, or writing is given in evidence by one party, the whole on the same subject may be inquired into by the other, and that when a detached act, etc., is given in evidence, any other act, etc., which is necessary to make it understood may also be given in evidence. Held that, where in an attorney's action for services he introduced letters written by defendant to third parties, the exclusion of the letters written by the third parties in reply which had not been communicated to plaintiff, and which contained hearsay statements that plaintiff had neglected his duty, was not prejudicial under Const. art. 6, § 4½, prohibiting the setting aside of judgments for errors not resulting in a miscarriage of justice.

3. EVIDENCE 🔑155(1) — ADMISSIBILITY BY REASON OF ADMISSION OF SIMILAR EVIDENCE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1854, where evidence otherwise incompetent is relevant, if at all, only because connected with other evidence in the case, and would have little, if any, weight, but would be prejudicial if erroneous, any doubt as to its connection with the evidence already admitted should be resolved against its admission.

4. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT 🔑116(1)—AUTHORITY—UNDISCLOSED LIMITATION.

Defendant's instructions to his agent with reference to the scope of his employment were inadmissible against an attorney to whom they were never communicated, and who had been notified by defendant that the agent represented him, and was thereby fully justified in conferring with the agent concerning the various matters on which he was employed.

5. EVIDENCE 🔑368(7) — DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE—COMPELLING PRODUCTION.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1855, subd. 2, provides that there can be no evidence of the contents of a writing other than the writing itself, except in the case, among others, when the original is in the possession of the party against whom the evidence is offered, and he fails to produce it after reasonable notice. Section 1938 provides that, if a writing be in the custody of the adverse party, he must first have reasonable notice to produce it, and that, if he then fail to do so, its contents may be proved as in case of its loss. Section 454 provides that the items of an account need not be pleaded, but that the pleader must deliver to the adverse party within five days after demand a copy of the account or be precluded from giving evidence thereof. Section 1000 authorizes any court or judge to order either party to give to the other an inspection and copy, or permission to take a copy of entries of accounts in any book, etc. Held that, where the trial of an action by an attorney for services began April 28th, and the jury were instructed June 4th, and the action had been pending for more than a year when defendant on the 16th day of the trial demanded the production of plaintiff's books, which were then in New York, the court did not err in refusing to order the production of the books, as plaintiff was entitled to reasonable notice to produce them.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Bernard J. Flood, Judge.

Action by Brainard Avery against Ernest A. Wiltsee. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Charles S. Wheeler and John F. Bowie, both of San Francisco (Charles S. Wheeler, Jr., of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant. Wise & O'Connor, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment, after verdict, for the sum of $7,500, in an action for attorney's fees. The main proposition urged is that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict. The typewritten transcript, containing the testimony of only two witnesses, plaintiff and defendant, with exhibits, covers 3,000 pages; the printed briefs 380 pages. Plaintiff claims that for more than two years he was actively engaged as attorney for the defendant in an endeavor to combine certain mining properties in Mexico, to adjust the claims against said properties, to settle a lawsuit growing out of the transactions involved therein, and in so doing participated in the organization of a corporation in Canada to take over said properties and issued its stock and debentures, the same to be sold for the purpose of paying off certain judgments and claims against the Mexican mining properties. The amount involved in these various transactions was $4,000,000. Plaintiff sued for $25,000 attorney's fees. The contentions of the respective parties were submitted to the jury under instructions which are conceded to be correct. Defendant contends that certain services performed by the plaintiff were not authorized by him and were without any value, etc. All the evidence for and against these claims was submitted to the jury. It is sufficient to say that there was substantial evidence to justify the verdict.

[1] Certain rulings of the trial court on the admissibility of documentary evidence are complained of by defendant. In each instance the contents of the documents were confessedly incompetent as hearsay declarations of third parties. Each was offered because of its more or less remote connection with the issues in the case. The plaintiff offered in evidence a verified complaint filed against defendant in an action brought by certain stockholders in one of the mining companies involved in the proposed organization, charging the defendant with fraud. It was conceded that the defendant was not guilty of the fraud therein charged, but the ground upon which the complaint was offered was to show the nature and character of the services performed by the plaintiff in warding off the filing of the complaint, and in negotiating with the attorneys for the plaintiff in that fraud suit, and finally in securing its dismissal. Court and counsel made every possible effort to prevent the jury from giving the evidence any other effect than that for which it was offered. Notwithstanding this, appellant claims that the ruling is prejudicially erroneous because "accusations of misrepresentations and fraud attached to any person's name are calculated to create prejudice against such person." But where, as here, the evidence is clearly admissible for one purpose, its reception in evidence is not error, even though we may suspect that the jury was improperly influenced thereby, and even though it would have been more just to have excluded the evidence.

[2, 3] The defendant offered in evidence certain letters written by third parties to him. None of these letters nor any information contained therein had been communicated to the plaintiff. They contained statements, confessedly hearsay, that the plaintiff had neglected his duty. The defendant offered these letters as a part of the correspondence between defendant and the said third parties, to explain certain letters of the defendant in reply thereto already introduced in evidence by the plaintiff. The rule upon that subject is that:

> "When part of an act, declaration, conversation, or writing is given in evidence by one party, the whole on the same subject may be inquired into by the other; * * * and when a detached act, declaration, conversation, or writing is given in evidence, any other act, declaration, conversation, or writing which is necessary to make it understood may also be given in evidence." Section 1854, Code Civ. Proc.

It is by no means easy to apply this rule to all the ramifications of the evidence in a trial. In passing upon the admissibility of such evidence, where the connection is doubtful, it is a safe rule to exclude evidence otherwise incompetent, where its admission would be prejudicial if erroneous. A court should be reluctant to admit evidence which in itself is incompetent, because of a more or less remote or inferential connection with evidence that is properly admitted. The purpose of a trial is to do justice between the parties, and even though such evidence, by reason of some slender thread of connection, is technically admissible under the above rule, it is not prejudicial error to reject it, unless its rejection results in a "miscarriage of justice." Const. Cal. art. 6, § 4½. Where a party seeks to introduce incompetent evidence, relevant, if at all, only because connected with other evidence already in the case, and admissible solely because of such connection, and where, if erroneously admitted, it would be prejudicial to one of the parties, and would have little, if any, proper weight with the jury, the trial court, if in doubt as to the sufficiency of the connection shown, should resolve the doubt in favor of the exclusion of the evidence, for the error in its exclusion, if any, would not be prejudicial to either party, while the error in its reception, if any, would be prejudicial to the party against whom it is offered. Suffice it to say that no prejudicial error was committed in the exclusion of these letters. It is therefore unnecessary to enter into an elaborate discussion of the situation which defendant claims sufficiently connects these letters with the evidence to make them competent.

[4] Appellant offered evidence of his instructions given to an agent named Mayer with reference to the scope of his employment. These instructions were never communicated to the plaintiff, who had been notified by the defendant that Mayer represented him and was thereby fully justified in conferring with Mayer concerning the various matters on which he was employed. Plaintiff did not base his claim of employment upon the authority of Mayer at all, but upon direct employment by the defendant.

No error was committed in excluding this testimony.

[5] Appellant complains that the court refused to make an order during the trial directing the plaintiff to produce his account books showing the expenditures made by plaintiff on behalf of the defendant. The demand for the production of these books was made on the 16th day of the trial. The case had been pending for more than a year. The trial began April 28, 1915, and the jury were instructed June 4, 1915. At the time the demand was made the books were in New York. Plaintiff was entitled to reasonable notice to produce said books. Section 1855, subd. 2, and section 1938, Code Civ. Proc. Defendant could have demanded a bill of particulars (section 454, Code Civ. Proc.), or an inspection of these books (section 1000, Code Civ. Proc.). Not having done so, there was no error in refusing the demand made at the trial under the circumstances indicated.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.; MELVIN, J.

(177 Cal. 504)

YOUNGBERG v. SOUTH END WAREHOUSE CO. (S. F. 7904.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 15, 1918. Rehearing Denied March 14, 1918.)

1. CONTRACTS ⇨245(1)—EXTINGUISHMENT—SUBSEQUENT CONTRACT.

A contract by a warehouse company to deliver to plaintiff one-fourth of its net income in payment for his services as specified in the contract was extinguished by subsequent written contract, made when the company was insolvent, providing that plaintiff and another should assume the company's indebtedness, and that plaintiff should draw no money except his salary as fixed by such contract.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1052(8)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In such case, the admission of evidence as to the oral understanding of the parties as to the later contract, if improper, was an immaterial error, where the court was bound to decide that the later contract prevented plaintiff's recovery.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Charles J. Youngberg against the South End Warehouse Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. M. Sims, of San Francisco (F. A. Plank, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant. W. C. Sharpstein, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendant in an action brought by the plaintiff to recover the sum of $12,301.33, claimed to have become due to him under a certain written agreement made and entered into between the parties hereto on February 1, 1909, and which provided for the delivery by defendant to plaintiff of one-fourth of its net income and profits, in payment for the rendition by the plaintiff of certain services to the defendant, as set forth in said agreement. The defendant in its answer admits the making of said original agreement, and the performance for a time of certain services by the plaintiff thereunder, but denies that there was ever any greater sum than $2,400 due or owing to said plaintiff under such agreement; and by way of further answer and defense avers that by a subsequent agreement in writing, entered into between the parties on April 15, 1911, the said plaintiff waived and released his claims against the defendant for whatever share of its profits was due under the terms of the former agreement, for the consideration of the transfer to him of one-half of the capital stock of the defendant corporation, and of the payment to him thereafter of a stated salary of $100 a month for all future services to be performed by him. Upon the trial of the cause upon the issues thus tendered, both of these agreements were presented in evidence. There were also certain other facts admitted by the pleadings or referred to in the writings, which were the subject of proper consideration by the trial court in determining its rulings as to the effect of the later writing in respect to the obligations of the former one. One of these facts, as admitted by the express terms of the plaintiff's complaint, was the fact that shortly after the date of the first agreement between the parties, one G. W. Thomas was employed by the defendant, pursuant to an oral understanding with the plaintiff, to perform certain of the services which the plaintiff had engaged to perform by the terms of said writing. Another fact, shown in evidence at the trial and found by the court, was the fact that the defendant was in an insolvent condition on April 15, 1911, the date of the second written agreement. This later agreement contained a clause providing that the plaintiff, as one of the parties thereto, together with one George W. Lamb, also a party thereto, "hereby agree to assume, and hereby assume, all of the indebtedness due and owing from the South End Warehouse Company. * * *" Said agreement also contained a clause providing that:

> "None of the parties of the third part [which included plaintiff] shall draw any money except their respective salaries, which are hereby fixed at $250.00 a month for said George W. Lamb, and $100.00 a month for said Charles J. Youngberg."

Upon the trial of the cause the defendant offered certain oral evidence for the purpose, as it was claimed, of explaining these two clauses of the later agreement by showing that at the time of its execution it was orally understood and agreed between the parties to it that it should have the effect of extinguishing whatever liability the defendant might be under to pay any share of its previous profits to the plaintiff. To the introduction of this oral evidence the plaintiff objected, upon the ground that it operated to change the terms of the written agreement and was inadmissible under the provisions of sections 1625 and 1639 of the Civil Code. The court overruled the objection and admitted the evidence, and upon the strength of this admission, in effect, construed the later agreement of the parties, in its findings, to amount to an extinction of the obligation and liability created by the earlier agreement for a division of the defendant's profits with the plaintiff. It is this alleged erroneous ruling of the trial court which underlies the several assignments of error which are urged upon this appeal.

[1, 2] We are entirely satisfied from an examination of the terms of the written contract between the parties, dated April 15, 1911, and particularly of the above-quoted clause of it, that said writing required no explanation or aid from oral evidence to make clear its meaning. The agreement of the plaintiff, that he, together with another of the parties to it, would assume all of the indebtedness of the South End Warehouse Company, and his further agreement not to draw any money except his salary, then for the first time fixed at the definite sum of $100 a month, can be given no other meaning than that his former contract with the corporation, and all obligations which had accrued thereunder, was to be at an end. The fact, shown in evidence without objection and found by the court, that the defendant corporation was at the date of this second agreement with the plaintiff in an insolvent condition would add further certainty to this interpretation if that were necessary, but it did not require the aid of the oral evidence which the court heard over the objection of the plaintiff, to explain uncertainties or ambiguities which did not exist. The ruling of the court, however, in the admission of such evidence, if improper, was nevertheless an immaterial error, since it was bound to decide in any event that the plaintiff was foreclosed by the express terms of his written agreement from a recovery in this action.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.

(177 Cal. 520)

HARDING et al. v. LIBERTY HOSPITAL CORP. (S. F. 7488.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 16, 1918.)

1. ACTION 🔑27(1)—COMPLAINT—CONSTRUCTION.

An amended complaint, alleging that plaintiff entered into a contract with defendant, a corporation operating a hospital and carrying on therein the general business of furnishing medicine and medical and surgical treatment, ambulance, and hospital care to the sick and injured, by which defendant agreed to furnish plaintiff medical and surgical treatment when the same should be necessary; that plaintiff suffered a fracture of certain bones of her leg, rendering surgical treatment necessary; that defendant undertook through it chief surgeon to render and furnish such treatment; that the surgeon was incompetent, and failed and neglected to use proper care, diligence, and skill in reducing the fracture; and that by reason thereof plaintiff's leg was shortened and its use impaired—shows that the gist of plaintiff's action, notwithstanding statements as to the contracts, was the negligence of defendant's chief surgeon and not breach of contract.

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS 🔑31—RUNNING OF STATUTE—NEGLIGENCE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 340, subd. 3, requiring actions for libel, slander, etc., or for injury to or death of one caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, to be begun within a year, applies to an action against a hospital corporation for injuries resulting from the negligence of its chief surgeon, who failed to properly set plaintiff's broken leg, this being true notwithstanding the parties stood in contractual relations, and the hospital corporation had agreed to furnish plaintiff with medical and surgical attention; and hence an action against such corporation must be commenced within one year after the negligent act.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Margaret A. Harding and George K. Harding, her husband, against the Liberty Hospital Corporation, a corporation. From a judgment for defendant, after demurrer had been sustained to plaintiffs' amended complaint, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Edwin T. McMurray and H. Clyde Harms, both of San Francisco, for appellants. John A. Percy, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendant after its demurrer had been sustained to the plaintiffs' first amended complaint, the latter declining to further amend. The first amended complaint alleged, in substance, that at some date prior to October 11, 1913, the plaintiff Margaret A. Harding had entered into a contract with the defendant, a corporation operating a hospital and carrying on therein "the general business of furnishing medicines and medical and surgical treatment, ambulance and hospital care to the sick and injured," by the terms of which contract said corporation agreed to furnish to the said plaintiff medical and surgical treatment "when the same may be rendered necessary by any accidental injury or in sickness or disease"; that on the 11th day of October, 1913, the said plaintiff suffered a fracture of certain bones of her left leg at the knee joint, which rendered it necessary for her to have medical and surgical treatment under the terms of said contract, and that on or about said last-named day the defendant undertook the treatment of said plaintiff for said injury and did through its chief surgeon render and furnish all surgical and medical treatment received by said plaintiff therefor; that the said chief surgeon of defendant was incompetent by reason of a lack of skill and experience to give plaintiff and to her said injury the medical and surgical treatment necessary and proper therefor, and that in treating said plaintiff for said injury the said chief surgeon of defendant wholly failed and neglected to use and exercise reasonable and ordinary care, diligence, and skill in reducing the fracture of said limb and in treating the same, and carelessly, negligently, improperly, and unskillfully set the bones thereof, and negligently, carelessly and unskillfully failed and omitted to use and employ the necessary, ordinary, proper, and approved methods in the reduction and treatment of said fracture, and negligently, carelessly, and unskillfully failed and omitted to remedy and correct the defects resulting from said negligent, careless, and unskillful reduction and treatment, at a time when said defects could reasonably have been corrected and remedied by the exercise of ordinary care, skill, and diligence, although he well knew that said defects existed. By reason whereof, and solely on account of defendant's failure to furnish a competent and skilled surgeon to treat plaintiff for said injury as aforesaid, and the aforesaid negligent, careless, and unskillful treatment of said injury by the aforesaid chief surgeon of said defendant, said plaintiff's left leg has become and is short, weak, crooked, and deformed, and the usual and proper use thereof permanently impaired, and said plaintiff rendered permanently lame, crippled, and deformed, to her damage in the sum of $25,000, for which sum the plaintiffs prayed judgment in their favor and for their costs.

This action was commenced on April 12, 1915. The defendant demurred to the plaintiffs' first amended complaint upon the usual grounds, and also upon the ground that the plaintiffs' cause of action as set forth therein was barred by the provisions of subdivision 3 of section 340 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The court sustained the defendant's demurrer upon this latter ground, and thereafter entered judgment in defendant's favor, upon the plaintiffs' refusal to further amend. The sole question presented upon this appeal is as to whether or not the plaintiffs' cause of action, as above set forth, is barred by the provisions of subdivision 3 of section 340 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The chapter of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to the periods prescribed for the commencement of actions other than for the recovery of real property contains the above section and subdivision, which reads in part as follows:

> "Sec. 340. Within one year. * * *
>
> "3. An action for libel, slander, assault, battery, false imprisonment, seduction or for injury to or for the death of one caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another."

[1, 2] The appellants herein contend that the cause of action set forth in their complaint is one arising out of the breach of the plaintiff Margaret A. Harding's contract with the defendant, such breach consisting in its failure to furnish adequate and competent surgical treatment for her injured limb, and hence that her cause of action, being one for the breach of a written contract, does not come within the scope or effect of subdivision 3 of section 340 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Notwithstanding the elaboration with which the plaintiffs have undertaken to set forth the terms and provisions of their said contract, we are of the opinion that the gravamen of this action consists in the alleged negligent acts of the chief surgeon of the defendant, consisting in his unskillful setting of the said plaintiff's injured limb, by reason solely of which the plaintiff's alleged injury and damage arose.

No distinction in principle can be discovered between this case and the case of Basler v. Sacramento, etc., Ry. Co., 166 Cal. 33, 134 Pac. 993. That was an action brought to recover damages for injuries suffered by one of the plaintiffs while a passenger on a street car operated by the defendant in the city of Sacramento. There, as here, the plaintiffs pleaded the terms of the contract out of which the relation between the parties arose. In that case the relation was the contractual one of carrier and passenger. In this the relation was the contractual one of hospital and patient. In that case this court held that the pleading of the contract by the plaintiffs was merely matter of inducement, out of the existence of which the definite legal duty of the defendant arose; and in that case, as in the instant one, the breach of that definite legal duty consisted in the alleged negligent acts and omissions of the agent of the defendant and consequent injury directly and solely caused thereby. The court there held that this was the gravamen of the action, citing numerous authorities in support of its view.

In the later case of Krebenios v. Lindauer, 166 Pac. 17, the same question arose, and was similarly decided. There the injury complained of was the alleged negligence of the defendant in failing to provide the plaintiff with a safe place to work, in violation of its contract of employment, and the court there held the action to be one arising ex delicto and to be barred by the provision of the section and subdivision of the Code above quoted. In this latter case the court refers to and disposes of the case of Gillette v. Tucker, 67 Ohio St. 106, 65 N. E. 865, 93 Am. St. Rep. 639, upon which the appellant herein particularly relies. That was a case of malpractice on the part of a physician, which consisted in the careless leaving of a sponge in the patient's wound after an operation.

The court called attention to the fact, adverted to by the Ohio tribunal in its decision of said case, that the neglect of the physician was that of leaving the sponge in the wound until a period within the statute, during which his treatment of the case continued, but that in that case the Ohio tribunal held the action to be one ex delicto. In the case at bar, while it is true that the complaint alleges that the relation of hospital and patient continued for some time after the date of the alleged negligent acts of the physician and up to a time within one year prior to the commencement of the action, this cannot be held to negative the direct and positive averments of the complaint that the negligent acts of the physician which caused the immediate injury complained of occurred on October 11, 1913, and that said plaintiff's damage was solely referable thereto.

In the earlier case of Denning v. State, 123 Cal. 316, 55 Pac. 1000, cited with approval in Krebenios v. Lindauer, supra, the court, in discussing the question involved in all of these cases, says:

> "The contract of employment has nothing whatever to do with the liability except to create a duty on the part of the employer, a duty not expressed in the contract and for the violation of which the contract of employment furnishes no rule or standard for the estimation of damages; nor is the action grounded upon the contract, but upon the duties springing from the relation created by it, namely, that of employer and employé, and under the old system of pleading was always classed as an action ex delicto."

In the recent case of Marty v. Somers, 169 Pac. 411, in which a rehearing has been denied by this court, the precise question presented in the instant case upon almost an identical state of facts arose. There the contract of employment was directly with the physician, who was alleged to have negligently performed the operation which caused the plaintiff's injury; and upon the authority of Basler v. Sacramento, etc., Ry. Co., supra, the court there held that subdivision 3 of section 340 operated as a bar to the action. The authorities cited herein from other jurisdictions, dealing with cases of alleged malpractice on the part of physicians, are not uniform in their rulings as to whether the action is one arising upon contract or tort. But the case of Lotten v. O'Brien, 146 Wis. 213, 131 N. W. 362, bears instructively upon the case at bar. Its facts are similar. It appears that the employment of the physician continued for some time after the date of the negligent setting of the plaintiff's broken arm. The court held that the action sounded in tort, and that the cause of action accrued when the negligent acts were committed, without reference to the time of the physician's discharge. Notwithstanding the conflict of authority from other jurisdictions, we are satisfied that it has become the settled rule in California that actions for injuries caused by the negligent acts of another or his agent must be commenced within the period of one year from the date of the alleged injury, and that the fact that the parties stand in contractual relation to each other does not operate to change the rule or extend the time for the commencement of such actions.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.; WILBUR, J.; MELVIN, J.

177 Cal. 513

J. M. HOWELL CO. et al. v. CORNING IRR. CO. et al. (Sac. 2459.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 16, 1918.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟹49—RIPARIAN RIGHTS—PROTECTION—FORM OF ACTION.

An action will lie to quiet title to riparian rights in a stream, and a new action is the appropriate remedy to clear up and remove the uncertainty on the face of a former judgment involving such rights.

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟹79—IRRIGATION COMPANY—PUBLIC SERVICE.

A mutual water company which diverts water from a stream and devotes it exclusively to the use of its own stockholders and not to the general public is not engaged in public service, and is not a public utility.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Public Utility.]

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟹49—RIPARIAN RIGHTS—EXTENT.

A judgment depriving a riparian owner of the right to a certain surface flow, and permitting an irrigation company to take the surplus not necessary for such owner's use, was an invasion of the owner's technical right to the full flow of the stream.

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟹49—RIPARIAN RIGHTS — JUDGMENT — CONCLUSIVENESS.

A judgment adjudicating the water rights as between a riparian owner and an irrigation company is conclusive on the parties and their successors in interest.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

Action by the J. M. Howell Company and others against the Corning Irrigation Company and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Frank Freeman, of Willows, for appellants. McCoy & Gans, of Red Bluff (P. H. Coffman, of Red Bluff, of counsel), for respondents.

SHAW, J. The defendants appeal from the judgment. The plaintiffs, respectively, own tracts of land which are riparian to a stream known as Thomas creek, in Tehama county. The defendant Corning Irrigation Company is, and for many years has been, diverting water from said creek, and carrying the same to nonriparian lands belonging to its stockholders, and there distributing the same to such stockholders for their use on such nonriparian lands. The object of the present action is to ascertain and determine the respective rights of the plaintiffs and the defendants in the waters of said stream, and to quiet the plaintiffs' title to such part thereof as they are entitled to have flow down to their lands. The principal defendant is the Corning Irrigation Company, the other defendants being directors of said company and not otherwise interested in the action.

The complaint alleges that on May 14, 1894, in an action by the predecessors in interest of the plaintiffs, against the said corporation defendant, judgment was duly given, determining the respective rights of the parties in the creek; that the defendants have no right therein or thereto except as set forth and adjudged in said action, but that they have nevertheless diverted therefrom quantities of water greatly in excess of their rights under said judgment, and that they have violated the conditions of said judgment as to the manner of diverting water therefrom, greatly to the injury of the plaintiffs, and that unless they are restrained they will continue to do so, and that said defendants claim the right to take said waters in excess of the rights given to them by said judgment.

The judgment mentioned is made a part of the complaint. It declares that the defendant Corning Irrigation Company shall be perpetually enjoined from taking any of the waters of said creek to the lands of its stockholders, or at all, except to the extent and in the manner therein set forth. It fixes the point of diversion at which the defendant is allowed to take water, and the kind of ditch and diverting works by which it may do so, forbids the alteration of such diverting works, and further provides:

> "That when there is an abundance and surplus of water in the said creek for all the uses and purposes of the riparian owners below the said point of diversion, including the use for the purposes of irrigation by ditches now constructed, then and at such time the defendant the Corning Irrigation Company may divert by and through the said ditch any amount of surplus water and convey and discharge the same into the water course known as Squaw Hollow."

It further provides that when the water is low and insufficient for the uses of the said riparian owners, the defendant company shall not take or divert from the creek more than 100 inches of water measured under a 4-inch pressure, which quantity of water the judgment further provides, in effect, may be taken by said defendant at any time, provided the same is taken from the surface water flowing in the stream and not otherwise.

For answer, the defendants alleged that since the rendition of the said judgment of 1894, the defendant company has acquired by prescription the right to divert from said stream a quantity of water amounting to 4,000 miner's inches, measured under a 4-inch pressure. The answer also alleges by way of estoppel that during the interval between said judgment of 1894 and the beginning of this action, the plaintiffs have stood by, with full knowledge of the diversion by said defendant, and of the fact that said water has been distributed and used on nonriparian land, and of the fact that said defendant has expended large sums of money in the erection of works for conveying same, and have made no protest against such diversion or expenditure.

The findings of the court were that the defendant company has acquired no prescriptive right, and has no rights in the waters of the stream, except such as are given to it by the judgment of 1894; that the said defendant has at divers times diverted quantities of water from the creek greatly in excess of the amount permitted to it by said judgment, and has claimed the right to do so. It will be observed that the judgment of 1894 does not state the quantity of water necessary for the plaintiffs' use upon their riparian land, nor the amount, the excess of which may be deemed a surplus subject to diversion by said defendant. In its findings in the present action the court determined that the quantity necessary for plaintiffs' use was 2,500 inches, measured under a 4-inch pressure, and that the facts alleged in the answer as an estoppel against the plaintiffs, are not true, but that said defendant has been accustomed to take from the surplus waters of the stream not necessary for the use of the plaintiffs, the quantity of 3,100 miner's inches, measured under a 4-inch pressure.

The judgment appealed from declares that the defendant company shall be at all times entitled to take 100 miner's inches of water at the place of diversion described, provided that amount is flowing on the surface; that after that amount shall have been taken by said defendant, 2,500 miner's inches shall be allowed to flow down the stream for the use of the plaintiffs; and that the defendant Corning Irrigation Company may take through its diversion works and ditches, all the surplus not exceeding 3,100 miner's inches, measured under a 4-inch pressure.

The defendants claim that the finding against the prescriptive right to the water the company has been taking, over and above that allowed by the judgment of 1894, is not sustained by the evidence. It is sufficient to say that at most there is a conflict in the evidence, with sufficient substantial evidence in favor of the finding of the court to support it. The excessive diversions of the defendant were interrupted by the plaintiffs from time to time, and so often that no adverse use thereof for a period of five years has occurred. Hence no prescriptive right to such water could accrue.

Even if it were true, as appellants claim, that this action is nothing more than an action upon the former judgment, we are not prepared to say that such a judgment could not be enforced by a new action as well as by proceedings in contempt. Rowe v. Blake, 99 Cal. 167, 33 Pac. 864, 37 Am. St. Rep. 45; Ames v. Hoy, 12 Cal. 11; Stuart v. Lander, 16 Cal. 373, 76 Am. Dec. 538. The present action, however, is more than a mere action to enforce the former judgment. That judgment contained elements of uncertainty. It allowed the defendant to take the surplus water not required for the use of the lands of the plaintiffs riparian to the stream. Whether this should be construed to mean the surplus over and above that required at the time of its rendition for use upon said lands, or the surplus in excess of what might from time to time thereafter be necessary therefor, is somewhat doubtful. The court below in the present action construed it to mean the surplus in excess of the quantity necessary in 1894 for plaintiffs' use, and the plaintiffs do not complain of this construction. It is clearly more favorable to the defendants than the opposite construction. But with that construction, the amount necessary for plaintiffs' use at that time is not stated with precision, and no facts are stated in that judgment from which it could be ascertained. Subsequent changes in physical conditions had increased the difficulty. The defendants had asserted the right to take from the stream a quantity of water that would deprive the plaintiffs of water necessary for their use, and their claims had been successfully resisted from time to time by the plaintiffs. This was the assertion of rights to water in excess of those given it by the judgment. The complaint asks not only for the enforcement of the former judgment, but for the quieting of their title against the new and additional claims of the defendants, and for an injunction against the taking of water by the defendants in violation of the former judgment, or in excess of the amount allowed thereby.

[1] It is obvious that an action will lie to quiet title to riparian rights in a stream, and it seems equally clear that a new action is the appropriate remedy to clear up and remove the uncertainty existing on the face of the former judgment, and by reason of subsequent events, as to the quantity to be allowed to run down to plaintiffs' land, so that the surplus available to defendants can be more readily determined than it could be by an inquiry as to plaintiffs' needs in 1894, or at any other time when the surplus was in question, in case the former judgment should have been construed so as to make that the test.

[2] The defendant company claims that it is a public service corporation; that it has been taking the excess water over and above that allowed by the judgment of 1894, and applying the same to public use; that it has done this for many years with the knowledge of the plaintiffs, who have allowed a large community to be built up by the use of said water, and that consequently an estoppel arises under the doctrine established by numerous cases in this court. This doctrine is reviewed and stated at length in Miller v. Enterprise, etc., Co., 169 Cal. 415, 147 Pac. 567. The defendant has not brought itself within the doctrine. It has nowhere alleged that it is using its water in public service. On the contrary, the answer alleges, and it is not disputed, that it is a mutual water company, devoting the water which it diverts exclusively to the use of its own stockholders, and not to the general public. Such a corporation is not engaged in public service, and is not a public utility McFadden v. Board, 74 Cal. 571, 16 Pac. 397; Hildreth v. Montecito, 139 Cal. 29, 72 Pac. 395; Barton v. Riverside Water Co., 155 Cal. 518, 101 Pac. 790, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 331. It appears that the case was fairly and thoroughly tried by the learned judge of the superior court, and that the conclusions at which he arrived are eminently reasonable and fair to the defendants. We find no cause for interfering therewith.

[3, 4] The former judgment, it may be well to add, constituted a limitation upon the riparian rights which were parcel of plaintiffs' lands bordering upon the stream. It deprived them absolutely of the right to 100 miner's inches of the surface flow, and so far as it permitted the defendant company to take the surplus not necessary for plaintiffs' use, it was an invasion of the technical right of a riparian owner to the full flow of the stream. It is conclusive on the parties and their successors in interest. The defendants in this action do not complain of the limitation of the amount to be taken of the surplus water to 3,100 miner's inches.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.

---

177 Cal. 529

PEOPLE v. KINGS COUNTY DEVELOPMENT CO. (Sac. 2372.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 18, 1918.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS 🔑144(1)—SALE—AGRICULTURAL LANDS.

Under Const. art. 17, § 3, as to sale of state lands suitable for cultivation, and Act March 24, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 341), providing for sale of land uncovered by the recession of inland lakes, the surveyor general before selling such land must ascertain whether it is suitable for cultivation, and can make sales only to actual settlers, in tracts not exceeding 320 acres, if the land is suitable for cultivation.

2. PUBLIC LANDS 🔑144(1)—SALE—SURVEYOR GENERAL—AGENCY FOR STATE.

The surveyor general in selling lands uncovered by recession of inland lakes under Const. art. 17, § 3, and Act March 24, 1893, acts as the agent of the state, and, in the absence of fraud or mistake, the state is bound by his determination.

3. PUBLIC LANDS 🔑144(4)—PATENTS—CANCELLATION—PLEADING—SUFFICIENCY.

Count of petition for cancellation of patent to lands uncovered by recession of inland lakes, failing to allege mistake of the surveyor general in selling the land, and based solely on the theory that no state officer may grant such land to one not an actual settler, nor in excess of the prescribed area, is insufficient; the state being entitled to such remedy only for mistake or fraud.

4. Public Lands 🔑144(4)—Patents—Cancellation—Pleading—Sufficiency.

A count alleging that the patentee was not an actual settler, and procured the patent at the instance of the defendant development company, which knew of the fraud, was sufficient as alleging actual fraud.

5. Limitation of Actions 🔑11(1) — Statutes Applicable — Actions by State — "Right or Title."

An action by the state to declare illegal a patent and certificate of purchase, and to declare the state the owner of the lands, is barred only after ten years under Code Civ. Proc. § 315, limiting actions by the state in respect to real property to ten years after the accrual of the state's "right or title," such words meaning "cause of action," and not under section 338, subd. 4, limiting actions for relief on the ground of fraud or mistake to three years, although the basis of the action was fraud in procuring the patent.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Right; Title.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; M. L. Short, Judge.

Suit by the People against the Kings County Development Company. Judgment for defendant after demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Jones & Weller, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, of Los Angeles, and T. T. C. Gregory and D. Hadsell, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHAW, J. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained by the court below, and thereupon judgment was given for the defendant. From this judgment the plaintiff appeals.

The prayer of the complaint is that a certificate of purchase and patent issued by the state to Amelia C. Johnson for the lands described be declared illegal and void, and canceled, that the conveyance of the lands afterwards made by Johnson to the defendant be declared void, and that the plaintiff be adjudged to be the owner of the lands, free of any right or claim of defendant thereto, and for such further relief as may seem proper.

The complaint consists of two counts, each relating to the same subject-matter. The facts stated in the first count are as follows: The land described consisted of 507.45 acres and belonged to the state. It was a part of the land uncovered by the recession of the inland lake known as Tulare Lake, and was subject to sale under the provisions of the act of March 24, 1893, providing for the sale of land uncovered by the recession of inland lakes. On December 3, 1904, a certificate of purchase of said land was issued to Amelia C. Johnson in pursuance of said act. Said land was then suitable for cultivation, that is, it was ready for and susceptible of immediate occupation, and was by ordinary farming processes fit for agricultural purposes. Amelia C. Johnson was not then and never had been an actual settler on said land or any part thereof. When she made her application and received the certificate therefor, she knew that said land was suitable for cultivation. On June 13, 1906, a patent was issued to her for said land in pursuance of said certificate, and on July 23, 1907, without any valuable consideration, she conveyed said lands to the defendant herein. Defendant and its directors and officers at the time of receiving said deed well knew that then, and at the time said land was so applied for by Johnson and patented to her, it was suitable for cultivation, as aforesaid.

The second count of the complaint relates to the same purchase, and alleges the same facts. It adds thereto the further statement that with her said application Amelia C. Johnson made an affidavit stating that she desired to purchase said land for her own use and benefit and for no other person or persons whatsoever, and that she had made no contract to sell the same to any person, but that in truth and in fact she made said application and affidavit at the instance and for the use of a syndicate of several persons, then organized for the purpose of acquiring in that manner from the state of California, without any settlement thereon, the said lands and other lands, which were then, and at all times referred to, suitable for cultivation; that said syndicate, with full knowledge of all of said facts, aided the applicant in procuring her certificate of purchase, and thereafter, in pursuance of said purpose, procured the making of said conveyance by said Johnson to the defendant; and that the defendant claims said land by virtue of said conveyance and not otherwise.

The complaint was filed on May 22, 1914. This was less than ten years after the issuance of the patent. The demurrer was based on the grounds that neither count of the complaint stated facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that each of the causes of action set forth therein are barred by sections 315, 318, 319, and subdivision 4 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Section 3 of article 17 of the Constitution is as follows:

> "Lands belonging to this state, which are suitable for cultivation, shall be granted only to actual settlers, and in quantities not exceeding three hundred and twenty acres to each settler, under such conditions as shall be prescribed by law."

The act of 1893 required that the applicant for such land should accompany his application with an affidavit stating that he desires to purchase the same for his own use and benefit, and for the use and benefit of no other person, and that he has made no contract to sell the same; that upon the filing of said application the surveyor general should cause the county surveyor of the county in which the land lies to make an actual survey thereof, and establish the corners connecting the same with the United States survey, and should file with the surveyor general a copy of his field notes and plats, and a statement under oath showing whether or not the land is occupied by any actual settler, and that, if the lands are suitable for cultivation without reclamation, such lands shall be sold only to actual settlers, in tracts not exceeding 320 acres. It provides for the formation of reclamation districts to reclaim such of said lands as should not be suitable for cultivation without reclamation.

[1, 2] It will be observed that the Legislature has followed the constitutional mandate and has authorized sales of such lands only when the conditions of the Constitution are fulfilled. The surveyor general is given authority to sell land suitable for cultivation, in tracts not exceeding 320 acres to one person, and to persons who are actual settlers thereon, and not otherwise. Before making a sale of such land the duty rests upon him to ascertain its character, and, if it is suitable for cultivation to make the sales only to the persons and in quantities authorized by the statute. In making this inquiry he is acting as the agent of the state with authority to determine the fact. It would seem to follow, therefore, that in the absence of fraud or mistake such as would authorize an application for relief in equity, the state is bound by his decision thereon. Such is the uniform rule of decision regarding patents issued by the officers of the United States in pursuance of acts of Congress giving them similar authority. Gage v. Gunther, 136 Cal. 338, 344, 68 Pac. 710, 89 Am. St. Rep. 141. We perceive no reason why the same rule should not be applied to the decisions of the surveyor general of the state regarding land subject to sale under this act. The power to sell depends upon the determination of a fact, as in the cases relating to the United States officers, and the determination of the fact by an officer authorized to make it, should be binding to the same extent. On the other hand, if we hold that the constitutional provision deprives the Legislature of the state of power to sell or authorize officers to sell such land in quantities exceeding 320 acres to a single person, or to those not actual settlers, unless it is in fact unsuitable for cultivation at the time, and that no officer of the state has any power to determine this question so as to bind the state, the result would be to place the titles of such lands, even in the hands of innocent purchasers from the patentee, continually in jeopardy thereafter at the instance of the state, as succeeding officers may see cause for changing the original decision as to its character. It is clear that this would not be a sound public policy. It is to the interest of the state that when persons have honestly acquired title from the state to such lands, upon applications made in good faith, and upon a decision thereon by the state officers of the facts involved, such titles should not be subject to attack in future on the ground that the original decision was wrong.

[3] The first count does not allege that the decision of the surveyor general was made by reason of any mistake, and it is not claimed by the attorney general that this count is based upon the theory of equitable relief on the ground of mistake. It is based solely on the theory that no power exists in any state officer to grant land of that character to one not an actual settler, or in excess of the prescribed area. For these reasons we think the first count does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

[4] The addition in the second count of allegations of fraud on the part of the purchasers, and of knowledge thereof on the part of the present owners, clearly bring it within the rules regarding fraud, and render that count good as a cause of action to set aside the patent upon the ground that it was procured by actual fraud.

[5] The main controversy upon this appeal arises over the question whether or not the action is barred by the statute of limitations. Section 315 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides the general statute of limitations which runs against the state. It declares that the state will not sue any person "for or in respect to any real property" unless the state's "right or title shall have accrued within ten years before" the action or proceeding is commenced. The words "right or title" in this passage are to be construed to mean "cause of action." People v. Banning Co., 167 Cal. 643, 646, 140 Pac. 587. If this section applies to the case, it would follow that the action is not barred. There can be no dispute over the proposition that the cause of action stated in the complaint is an action in respect to real property. It asks that a patent for real property be canceled, and that the state be declared to be the owner of the land which the patent apparently disposed of. The respondents claim that the case is governed by subdivision 4 of section 338, providing that an action for relief on the ground of fraud or mistake is barred within three years from the time of the discovery of the fraud or mistake. This theory is based upon the language of sections 335 and 345 of the same chapter in which section 338 is found. Section 335 is the first section of chapter 3, tit. 2. It declares that:

> "The periods prescribed for the commencement of actions other than for the recovery of real property, are as follows."

Then follow the remaining sections of the chapter, including those last mentioned. Section 345 declares that:

"The limitations prescribed in this chapter apply to actions brought in the name of the state or for the benefit of the state, in the same manner as to actions by private parties."

We cannot agree with the contention of the respondent that these provisions make the three-year statute applicable to an action of the character herein presented. Although the second count is based upon an alleged fraud perpetrated by the applicant and the syndicate which procured the conveyance to the defendant, yet it is not exclusively an action for relief on the ground of fraud. Its main purpose is to obtain for the state a cancellation of the patent, issued for its land by its officers acting under the influence of the fraudulent acts alleged, and to have the state declared to be the owner of that land. It is clearly an action in respect to land, as well as an action for land, and it is governed by the provisions of section 315 aforesaid. This proposition is well settled in this state. Sections 315, 318, and 319 are contained in chapter 2 of the article aforesaid. This chapter is entitled "Time of Commencing Actions for Recovery of Real Property." Its provisions relate to that subject, and fix the period of limitation for actions by private persons to recover real property or the possession thereof, and also for actions by the state, as above mentioned. It has been held in a number of cases that an action by a private person to recover real property, based upon allegations that the title was procured to be conveyed by such person by means of fraud, though an action seeking relief on the ground of fraud, is nevertheless an action for the recovery of real property, and is not barred by the period of three years fixed by section 338, but by the five-year period fixed by section 318. These decisions are based on the proposition that the actions referred to in chapter 3 of said article are "actions other than for recovery of real property," and that, when the main purpose of an action is to recover real property for the plaintiff, it is barred in five years, and not in three years. Oakland v. Carpentier, 13 Cal. 552; Goodnow v. Parker, 112 Cal. 441, 44 Pac. 738; Murphy v. Crowley, 140 Cal. 141, 73 Pac. 820; South Tule, etc., Co. v. King, 144 Cal. 454, 77 Pac. 1032; Hager v. Shindler, 29 Cal. 47; Scholle v. Finnell, 166 Cal. 551, 137 Pac. 241. This proposition is elaborately stated and argued in the cases cited, and it is unnecessary to discuss it further in the present case. The same rule must obviously be applied to an action by the state in respect to land claimed by it, the object of which is to have the state declared to be the owner thereof, and to have a fraudulent patent therefor canceled. Such action is not barred until the expiration of ten years from the issuance of the patent attacked.

In support of their claim regarding the statute of limitations, the defendants rely on People v. Blankenship, 52 Cal. 619. In that case the only relief asked was the cancellation of the patent. Apparently no relief was asked regarding the land itself, and the sole discussion was upon the proposition that it was an action solely for relief on the ground of fraud within the meaning of subdivision 4 of section 338 aforesaid. The principle of the case was condemned in Goodnow v. Parker, supra, and in Murphy v. Crowley, supra. Both of these cases were suits by private persons similar to the case at bar to recover possession of land and set aside deeds therefor under which the defendants held, alleged to have been obtained by fraud, and so far as People v. Blankenship may be deemed to be a decision that, where the restoration of the land to the rightful owner is the main object of the action, the three-year statute applies, it must be considered as overruled by the later cases. The same must be said of People v. Noyo Lumber Co., 99 Cal. 456, 34 Pac. 96, which is also cited by the respondent. There was no serious discussion in either case of the question involved in the present case. We are of the opinion that the demurrer was improperly sustained, as to the second count.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SLOSS, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.; MELVIN, J.; WILBUR, J.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.

---

177 Cal. 488

In re VERWOERT. (Sac. 2626.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 13, 1918.)

1. GUARDIAN AND WARD 🔑97—PRIVATE SALE—POWER OF COURT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1787, providing that upon the petition of a guardian for sale of property the court may, if the same has been prayed for in the petition, order such sale to be made either at public or private sale, and section 1789, providing that provisions of the chapters of the Code relating to sales of property by administrators shall apply to sales by guardians, where the petition of a guardian for sale of land was silent as to whether the sale should be private or public, the court could direct a private sale, in view of section 1544, providing that every such sale must be ordered to be made at public auction, unless in the opinion of the court it would benefit the estate to sell at private sale.

2. GUARDIAN AND WARD 🔑101—SALE OF REALTY—RIGHTS OF PURCHASER.

Where petition for sale of ward's land gave full information as to trust deed against same, and stated that it was the purpose of the guardian to pay the debts of the ward, including that secured by the trust deed, the purchaser could not refuse to go on with the sale because of such incumbrances; the rule of caveat emptor applying to such sales.

3. GUARDIAN AND WARD 🔑101—SALE—VACATION.

Where bidder refused for unfounded reasons to comply with the terms of the sale, and the guardian asked to have order of confirmation revoked for such cause, bidder cannot be heard to complain of vacation of order confirming sale.

4. GUARDIAN AND WARD 🔑101—SALE OF REALTY—VACATING ORDER.

Where bidder refused for unfounded reasons to comply with the terms of the sale, and the guardian asked to have order of confirmation revoked for such cause, the court was justified in making an order vacating order confirming sale.

5. GUARDIAN AND WARD 🔑101—VACATING ORDER CONFIRMING SALE—FINDING.

On application of guardian for vacation of order confirming sale of land, where the purchaser's answer was in effect a repetition of his refusal to carry out the terms of the sale for unfounded reasons, there was no real issue of fact, and it was unnecessary for the court to make and file findings of fact and conclusions of law.

6. GUARDIAN AND WARD 🔑101—REFUSAL OF PURCHASER TO CARRY OUT SALE—RIGHT OF GUARDIAN.

The guardian had the right to endeavor to secure another purchaser after defendant's refusal for unfounded reasons to carry out the terms of the sale.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; M. L. Short, Judge.

In the matter of the guardianship of Herman C. Verwoert. From an order vacating an order confirming sale and vacating the order of sale, W. O. Jenkins, purchaser at the sale, appeals. Affirmed.

H. Scott Jacobs, of Hanford, and W. O. Jenkins, for appellant. John G. Covert, of Hanford, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Alfreda Verwoert, as guardian of the estate of Herman C. Verwoert, obtained an order directing the sale by her as such guardian, of certain real estate belonging to the ward. The order directed that the sale be made at private sale, one-half cash, the balance on a credit not to exceed three years, with interest. The petition did not ask that the sale be at private sale, but was silent on that point. The guardian made a sale to W. O. Jenkins, appellant herein. A return of said sale was duly made, and the court made an order confirming the same. Thereupon Jenkins gave notice to the guardian that there were certain defects in the title to the land, and in the proceedings for the sale, and that as soon as such defects were removed he would complete the first payment and comply with the terms of the order of sale. The alleged defect in the title consisted of the fact that there was an outstanding deed of trust conveying the property to trustees to secure the sum of $21,000 owing to the Sacramento Bank. The defect alleged to exist in the proceedings was that the petition for the sale did not ask that the sale be made at private sale. Thereupon the guardian moved the court to vacate the order confirming the sale, upon the ground that the purchaser had refused to complete the same, unless the alleged defect in the proceedings was removed and the incumbrance arising from said deed of trust satisfied. The appellant appeared and resisted the motion. After hearing the evidence, the court granted the motion, and thereupon made an order vacating the order confirming the sale, and also the order directing the guardian to make the sale. From this order the said Jenkins prosecutes this appeal.

[1] The objection made by Jenkins to the validity of the sale is untenable, and his objection to the title of the ward in the land sold to him was not sufficient cause for his refusal to go on with his purchase. The claim that such a sale is invalid, if made at private sale, where the petition therefor did not ask for a sale at private sale, is not supported by the statute. Section 1787 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that upon the petition of a guardian for a sale of property the court "may, if the same has been prayed for in the petition, order such sale to be made either at public or private sale." Section 1789 provides that the provisions of the chapters of the Code relating to sales of property by administrators, shall apply to proceedings for such sales by guardians, unless otherwise specially provided in the chapter relating to guardians' sales. Section 1544 of the chapter relating to sales by administrators provides that:

> "Every such sale must be ordered to be made at public auction, unless, in the opinion of the court, it would benefit the estate to sell the whole or some part of such real estate at private sale; the court may, if the same is asked for in the petition, order or direct such real estate or any part thereof to be sold at either public or private sale, as the executor or administrator shall judge to be most beneficial for the estate."

The effect of these provisions is not, as the appellant contends, to require the petition to pray for a private sale in order to give the court authority to order such private sale. The Code provides for two contingencies relating to private sales. The semicolon in the above quotation from section 1544 separates two distinct propositions. The first proposition is that if the court, exercising its own discretion, believes that a private sale would benefit the estate, it can so determine, and thereupon make the order accordingly. Section 1787 does not expressly declare in such a case whether the court can order the sale at private sale, or must order it at public sale; but by virtue of section 1789 the provisions of section 1544 are carried into the law respecting sales by guardians, and the court is authorized to order a guardian to sell at private sale if it deems the same beneficial to the estate. But the court may take another course, in case the petition lays the foundation therefor, which is to leave the question of selling at public or private sale to the discretion and judgment of the administrator or guardian. This is provided for both in section 1544 and in section 1787. By each, however, in order to give the court this power to commit the matter to the discretion of the guardian or administrator, it is necessary that the same be prayed for in the petition. In the present case the petition was silent on the subject, but the court had power, under section 1544, in the exercise of its own discretion, to direct that the same be made at private sale.

[2] With respect to the title, the rule of caveat emptor applies. A guardian, in making a sale in pursuance of an order of court, does not warrant the title to the property sold. He merely sells such title as the ward may have therein, and, unless the order of sale provides otherwise, the purchaser takes the property subject to all incumbrances thereon. He is bound to examine the title and satisfy himself regarding it before he makes his bid. Halleck v. Guy, 9 Cal. 197, 70 Am. Dec. 643; Miller & Lux v. Gray, 136 Cal. 261, 68 Pac. 770. In this case the petition for sale gave full information of the trust deed, and stated that it was the purpose of the guardian to use the money derived from the sale to pay the debts of the ward's estate, including that secured by the trust deed. The order of sale was general, and made no provision for the discharge of the trust deed. Having bid with this information, Jenkins could not claim to have been misled, and he had no right to raise the objection or refuse to go on with the sale because of said incumbrance.

[3] Appellant further insists that the court below had no power or jurisdiction to vacate the order confirming the sale to him. In support of this proposition he cites Estate of West, 162 Cal. 352, 122 Pac. 953; Estate of McCarthy, 169 Cal. 708, 147 Pac. 941, and Estate of Leonis, 138 Cal. 194, 71 Pac. 171. These decisions, in effect, merely declare that after a sale has been made, and either before or after the confirmation thereof, the bidder at the sale has a vested interest in the proceedings, and a right to have the sale carried out, upon compliance on his part with the terms specified in the order under which it was made. They do not hold that he has such right without such compliance. The decision in the Estate of Leonis does not, as appellant contends, hold that the court is without any power whatever to vacate a sale of real property made by an administrator or guardian, except where the proceedings are unfair or the price disproportionate to the value, as provided in section 1552 of the Code of Civil Procedure. All that the case really decides on that point is that, under the facts shown in that case, the court had no power to vacate the sale, except for those reasons. It cannot reasonably be claimed that after a bidder for unfounded reasons refuses to comply with the terms of the sale made to him in pursuance of an order of the court, and the guardian for that cause asks to have the confirmation revoked, such purchaser, still refusing to go on, can be heard to object to the revocation, and by that means prevent a sale to another who will comply or compel the sale to himself upon terms other than those prescribed in the order. This is, in effect, what the appellant is here attempting.

[4] There is no merit in the claim that the application to set aside the order confirming the sale, and the order directing the sale did not show sufficient facts to justify such order. The facts we have stated appear therein. What we have already said is sufficient upon that point.

[5] It was not necessary, in proceedings of this character, for the court below to make and file findings of fact and conclusions of law. There was no real issue of fact. The answer of the appellant to the application of the respondent was a mere reiteration of his objections to the validity of the order of sale and to the title of the ward to the property sold, and a demand that the guardian be required to remove the objections and make the title good. It was, in effect, a repetition of his refusal to carry out the sale on the terms of the order. No evidence was necessary to sustain the order of the court. There was, however, sufficient evidence of the facts.

[6] It is claimed that the court erred in refusing to permit the purchaser to show that, after appellant's refusal to complete the sale as above stated, the guardian had been endeavoring to secure other purchasers. She had a right to do so after the appellant's refusal. These comprise all the questions discussed in the briefs.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.; SLOSS, J.

35 Cal. App. 796

BECKETT v. STUART. (Civ. 2501.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Jan. 9, 1918.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ⚷631—RECORD—SUFFICIENCY.

On appeal from the judgment alone under the alternative method where there is before the court a typewritten copy of the judgment roll certified by the clerk of the trial court, the appeal will not be dismissed because of the absence of record showing proceedings at trial, as is designated under Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, to take the place of a bill of exceptions, a typewritten copy of the judgment roll presenting such record as entitles the appeal to be heard on the merits.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by Ida R. Beckett against Z. B. Stuart. On motion to dismiss defendant's appeal. Denied.

Hocker & Austin, Simms & Fulwider, and Stephen Monteleone, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. Rupert B. Turnbull, of Pasadena, and Hugh Kelly and Joe Crider, Jr., both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from the judgment alone under what is known as the alternative method. There is before us no record showing the proceedings at the trial, but there is on file a typewritten copy of the judgment roll, certified by the clerk of the trial court. Respondent moves to dismiss the appeal because of the absence of such record of the trial as is designated, under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure, to take the place of a bill of exceptions; but, under the opinion of the Supreme Court denying an application for rehearing in McKinnell v. Hansen, 167 Pac. 887, the typewritten copy of the judgment roll presents such a record as entitles the appeal to be heard on the merits. The record of the proceedings at the trial is not necessary as a predicate to the right to such hearing.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

---

35 Cal. App. 793

BALBOA AMUSEMENT PRODUCING CO. et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (Civ. 2453.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Jan. 9, 1918.)

MASTER AND SERVANT ⚿373—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT — ACCIDENT "ARISING OUT OF EMPLOYMENT."

Where a motion picture company plant occupied four corners of a street intersection, and an employé, whose duty it was to remain in the vicinity until needed, was loitering in the street talking with other employés about social affairs and was run over by a director's automobile, the accident was not one arising out of the employment within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 279).

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Henry Stanley to obtain compensation for personal injuries. Opposed by the Balboa Amusement Producing Company, a corporation, the employer, and the Georgia Casualty Company, a corporation. There was an award by the Industrial Accident Commission, and the employer and the insurance company apply for a writ of review. Award annulled.

Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, for petitioners. Christopher M. Bradley, of San Francisco, for respondents.

WORKS, Judge pro tem. The Balboa Amusement Producing Company was engaged in the making of motion pictures, and Henry Stanley was an actor employed by it. On the day of the accident out of which this controversy arises, Stanley reported to the company for duty at the usual time in the morning, but was told that his services were not then needed. However, the rules of the business required him to remain at the plant of the company, or on the "lot," to adopt the parlance of the motion picture industry, for possible service during the day. The situation of the company's lot was peculiar, and out of the peculiarity arises the question to be decided in this proceeding. Parts of the plant occupied the four corners of intersecting streets in the city of Long Beach, and the two thoroughfares were constantly used by the officers and employés of the company in passing between the portions of the plant on the respective corners in the discharge of their duties. On the morning of the accident, after reporting for service, Stanley crossed one of the streets, proceeding from the place where he had reported to a dressing room on one of the other corners. His purpose in going to the dressing room was to change his coat, merely for his own comfort, after which he intended to recross the street to play a game of chess in a part of the plant known as the extra room. On his return from the dressing room he stopped in the street, where he engaged in conversation with two other employés of the company. The conversation was purely social, and related to the private affairs of the participants in it. While the little knot of persons was congregated in the street, one of the directors of the company approached in an automobile, intending to stop at the location of the group. In attempting to stop his car the driver accidentally struck the accelerator, with the result that the car pitched forward, struck Stanley, and injured him. He applied to the Industrial Accident Commission for relief under the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act, and the Commission made an award in his favor. The petitioners, admitting that the accident occurred in the course of Stanley's employment, contend that his injuries are not compensable under the statute, for the reason that they did not arise out of the employment.

The respondents, in justification of the award, cite many cases from jurisdictions outside of California in which compensation has been made for injuries suffered by employés while on public streets, but to them we need not specifically refer, as we believe them to be distinguishable from the case now before us and because the decisions of the Supreme Court of this state upon the present question are both numerous and clear. We cite Coronado Beach Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 682, 158 Pac. 212, L. R. A. 1916F, 1164; Fishering v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 690, 158 Pac. 215; Kimbol v. Industrial Accident Commission, 173 Cal. 351, 160 Pac. 150, L. R. A. 1917B, 595, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 312; Ward v. Industrial Accident Commission, 164 Pac. 1123, decided May 2, 1917. In the first of these cases it is said (172 Cal. 685, 158 Pac. 213, L. R. A. 1916F, 1164):

---

⚿For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

> "The accidents arising out of the employment of the person injured are those in which it is possible to trace the injury to the nature of the employé's work or to the risks to which the employer's business exposes the employé. The accident must be one resulting from a risk necessarily incident to the employment. * * * It 'arises out of' the occupation when there is a causal connection between the conditions under which the servant works and the resulting injury. It need not have been foreseen or expected, but after the event it must appear to have had its origin in a risk connected with the employment, and to have flowed from that source as a rational consequence."

There is also a very complete statement of the same rule, in different language, in Kimbol v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, a part of the statement being:

> "The causative danger must be peculiar to the work and not common to the neighborhood."

When measured by the standards set down in these cases, it is not difficult to satisfactorily conclude the present proceeding. Even if it were conceded that injuries suffered by Stanley would have been compensable if they had resulted from an accident happening to him while actually traversing the street on the way from changing his coat, for his own convenience, to a contest at chess, for his own pleasure, we have by no means settled the matter. If we admit that his risk in crossing the street was a risk incident to his employment, upon the theory that, for the purpose of crossing and recrossing, the street was a part of the company's lot, we are yet afield. The thoroughfare was certainly not a part of the lot in the sense that Stanley might properly have loitered, or stood in social converse, upon it, as he might very properly have done upon any part of the lot located upon the corners of the intersection. When he stopped in the street he assumed a risk common to all who might sojourn there in the same manner. Under such circumstances his employer is not called upon to make compensation for his injuries. They did not arise out of the employment.

The award is annulled.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

---

35 Cal. App. 797

Ex parte MOONEY. (Cr. 709.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 9, 1918.)

BAIL ⚷49—CAPITAL CASES — CONTROLLING FACTOR.

That petitioner has been acquitted upon one of several indictments for murder pending against her, while persuasive, is not a controlling factor in the determination of an application for bail.

In the matter of the application of Rena Mooney for a writ of habeas corpus. Petition denied, and petitioner remanded.

Maxwell McNutt and Nathan C. Coghlan, both of San Francisco, for petitioner. F. L. Berry, Deputy Dist. Atty., and John D. Harloe, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The defendant is restrained of her liberty under a bench warrant issued out of the superior court of the state of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, upon eight separate indictments presented by the grand jury in cases entitled "People of the State of California v. Rena Mooney" numbered 7530 to 7537, inclusive, wherein the defendant was charged with the murder of eight different persons. Upon one of these indictments only the defendant has been tried and acquitted by a jury. The record of that case is before us, as are also the proceedings before the grand jury in each of these several indictments which have not yet been put to trial.

The rule by which this court must be governed in determining this matter was early laid down in the case of Ex parte Troia, 64 Cal. 152, 28 Pac. 231, and was later followed and reaffirmed in the case of Ex parte Curtis, 92 Cal. 188, 28 Pac. 223, in which latter case Chief Justice Beatty declared the rule to be that bail should be denied in capital cases "when the evidence is sufficient to warrant a grand jury in bringing in an indictment, or, what practically amounts to the same thing, when the evidence is sufficient in law to sustain a capital conviction." Quoting from the case of Ex parte Troia, supra, the learned Chief Justice further stated:

> "This court, in denying the application for bail, said: 'We cannot say, upon the evidence before us, that the superior court ought to set aside the verdict, as not justified by the evidence, should the jury find the petitioner guilty of the higher degree of the crime charged. We ought not to anticipate the action of the jury by discharging the prisoner from actual custody, with or without bail, upon evidence which we are not prepared to say is so insufficient as that a verdict requiring a capital sentence, based upon it, should not be permitted to stand.' I do not doubt," says the Chief Justice, "the soundness of this rule."

It is needless to say that the rule thus early stated, and since uniformly adhered to in this state, is binding upon this court.

After a careful examination of the record before us we are satisfied that it is to be given full application to the facts of the matter now under consideration.

It is, however, urged by the petitioner that the fact that in one of these several causes she has been tried and has been found not guilty by a jury is a controlling circumstance, requiring a variance in the instant case from the rule above stated. After an examination of the authorities bearing upon this question we are satisfied that the fact of the petitioner's acquittal upon one of these several indictments pending against her, while ordinarily persuasive, nevertheless it is not a controlling factor in the determination of an application for bail. It is to be presumed that the courts and prosecuting officers will perform their duty promptly in presenting others of these several causes for trial. Upon the present state of these causes we are of the opinion that the rule set forth in the case of Ex parte Curtis, supra, should be given application.

It follows that the petition will be denied, and the petitioner remanded; and it is so ordered.

---

35 Cal. App. 806

Ex parte WEINBERG. (Cr. 723.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 9, 1918.)

In the matter of application of Israel Weinberg for a writ of habeas corpus. Denied, and petitioner remanded.

Maxwell McNutt and Edwin V. McKenzie, both of San Francisco, for petitioner. Louis Ferrari, Deputy Dist. Atty., of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The defendant is restrained of his liberty under a bench warrant issued out of the superior court of the state of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, upon eight separate indictments presented by the grand jury in cases entitled "The People of the State of California v. Israel Weinberg," numbered 7530 to 7537, inclusive, wherein the defendant was charged with the murder of eight different persons. Upon one of these indictments only the defendant has been tried and acquitted by a jury. The record of that case is before us, as are also the proceedings before the grand jury in each of these several indictments which have not yet been put to trial.

We are of the opinion that the rule adopted in the matter of Ex parte Mooney, No. 709, 171 Pac. 109, this day decided by this court, as well as the reason for its application, are to be given full application to the instant case. Upon the reasoning and authorities in the case of Ex parte Mooney, supra, the application herein will be denied, and the petitioner remanded; and it is so ordered.

---

35 Cal. App. 802

In re WELLS. (Cr. 336.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 10, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑655(1)—MOTION TO STRIKE TESTIMONY — SUFFICIENCY OF MOTION.

Where the index to reporter's transcript contains no reference to the exhibits, a motion to strike out an exhibit, which fails to point out where the exhibit can be found, will be denied.

2. EVIDENCE 🔑314(1) — HEARSAY — JUDGMENTS—ADMISSIBILITY TO SHOW FACT.

A finding of a court on conflicting evidence in an action for fraud is hearsay in a hearing on application to practice law, in which respondent is entitled to examine witnesses as to the charges made against him.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑656(1)—CORRECTING ERRORS IN TRANSCRIPT.

The appellate court in an original proceeding cannot correct errors in a transcript of evidence taken before a referee, where there is nothing to show whether or not the stenographer took down the evidence as given.

In the matter of the application of T. Alonzo Wells to practice law. Motion to strike out testimony taken before a referee. Granted in part.

See, also, 174 Cal. 467, 163 Pac. 657.

Clyde Bishop, R. Y. Williams, Joe C. Burke, L. A. West, and S. M. Reinhaus, all of Santa Ana, for petitioner. T. Alonzo Wells, in pro. per. S. N. Johnstone, of Los Angeles, H. N. Mitchell, of Sacramento, and M. C. Atchison, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Counsel for respondent have filed a motion to strike out certain portions of the testimony taken before the referee named, designated, and appointed by the court to take testimony in this proceeding. It was understood and agreed by and between counsel on both sides that this motion should be disposed of before briefs addressed to the merits are filed. The portions of the testimony which respondent asks be stricken out are specified in the written motion, and, having considered the same, we now state the conclusions arrived at. The grounds of the allowance of the motion as to certain testimony are those stated by respondent in his written application to strike out. Where the motion is denied it is because the reasons stated for striking out are not legally tenable as to those portions of the testimony.

1. The motion as to all the testimony of the witnesses George W. Minter and G. W. Stevens is granted.

2. The motion as to the testimony of the witness R. Y. Williams, designated as subdivisions a, b, and c in the written motion, is granted.

3. The testimony of the witness W. H. Thomas, designated as subdivisions a, b, c, and d in said written motion, is stricken out.

[1] 4. The motion to strike out petitioner's Exhibit D is denied for the reason that the written motion fails to point out where the said exhibit may be found in the transcript. The index to the reporter's transcript contains no reference to the several exhibits, and it is not the duty of this court to search that voluminous document to find the exhibit, counsel themselves not having taken the pains to designate the particular part of the transcript in which it may be found.

5. The motion to strike out those portions of the testimony of the witness Clyde Bishop, designated as subdivisions a, b, c, i, m, n, o, and s, is granted. The motion as to those portions designated as subdivisions d, e, f, g, h, j, k, l, p, q, r, and t is denied.

6. The motion to strike out petitioner's Exhibit E is denied for the reason given above for the ruling as to petitioner's Exhibit D.

7. The motion as to the portions of the testimony of the witness George W. Moore, designated as subdivisions a, b, c, and d, is denied.

8. The motion as to the portions of the testimony of the witness C. C. Johnson, designated as subdivisions a and b, is denied.

9. The motion as to the testimony of James McMillan, subdivisions a and b, is denied.

10. The motion as to the testimony of the witness C. E. Lavering, subdivisions a and b, is denied.

11. The motion as to the testimony of W. D. Seeley, subdivisions a and b, is denied.

12. The motion as to the testimony of J. E. McGowen, subdivisions a and b, is denied.

13. The motion as to the testimony of Sterling Price, subdivisions a and b, and the motion as to the testimony of the following witnesses, is denied: J. T. Stockton; A. W. Morehouse; R. L. Draper and Henry Brooks; Joe Gothard, Dr. G. A. Shank, and C. H. Mansur.

14. The motion to strike out all the testimony of Henry Brooks, Joe Gothard, and C. H. Mansur is denied.

15. The motion as to the testimony of H. J. Forgy, subdivisions a and d, is denied. As to the testimony of said Forgy, designated as subdivisions b and c, the motion is granted.

16. The motion as to the testimony of the witness James J. Conrad, designated as subdivisions a and b, is denied.

[2] 17. The motion to strike out the statement on motion for a new trial in the case of Commercial Bank of Santa Ana, a Corporation, Plaintiff, v. T. A. Wells and J. E. Wells, Defendants, is granted. The said statement is in the transcript before us, beginning on page 279 and ending on page 290 thereof. The general ground upon which we base the order striking out the said statement is that it is hearsay. This testimony was offered for the purpose of showing that, in the above-mentioned case, in which the statement was prepared, the respondent fraudulently secured a loan of $550 from the said Commercial Bank, Wells and his wife having joined in making a promissory note to the bank for said sum. From the said statement on the motion for a new trial it appears that, about a year and a half before the $550 transaction with the said bank was had, Wells borrowed from the latter the sum of $350. It further likewise appears that, either on the first or second of the two said occasions on which he borrowed money from the bank, Wells told the cashier that a certain tract of land in his wife's name was unimcumbered. After the $550 loan was made to the respondent by the bank, the latter learned that the wife of the respondent had, on the 3d day of June, 1903, filed a homestead on said land. The $550 loan was made on the 31st day of August, 1903.

As a defense to the action by the bank on the $550 note, Wells pleaded and proved his discharge in bankruptcy by the United States District Court for the Southern District of California on the 29th day of January, 1906. It was admitted by Wells at the trial that his note to the bank for $550 was included in his schedule of liabilities filed in the proceeding in bankruptcy, and was therefore affected by the adjudication discharging him from all obligations or liabilities then existing against him.

Thus, it will be seen, it became a question of vital importance in that case whether the representation made to the bank by Wells that his wife's land was unincumbered was made when he obtained the loan for $350 or when be obtained the loan for $550. Upon this question there was, according to the statement on motion for a new trial, a sharp conflict in the testimony, Wells having testified that the representation was made when he borrowed the $350 and the bank officials having testified that the representation was made when he borrowed the sum of $550. Of course, the trial court had to determine this conflict and did so by finding in favor of the bank. Manifestly, this was only the opinion or judgment of the trial judge, and, while such opinion or judgment would be conclusive against the respondent here in certain instances which could be mentioned, still it cannot be held to be otherwise than hearsay in this proceeding, in which the respondent is entitled, as to all of the several distinct charges formally preferred against him, to be confronted by the witnesses called to support those charges, and to have their testimony taken directly before, and to cross-examine them in the presence and hearing of, the tribunal which must ultimately pass upon the question whether said charges have been sustained by sufficient proof.

[3] 18. This court is in no position to order the transcript of the testimony corrected in the several particulars indicated on pages 24 and 25 of the motion to strike out. We have no way of knowing whether, as respondent contends, the alleged errors are in fact errors or whether the testimony in those particulars was taken down and transcribed by the stenographer as it was given before the referee. We suggest, however, that the attorneys on both sides join in having the stenographer who took the testimony read to them his notes touching the particulars as to which errors are claimed to have been made and agree upon and make such corrections in the particulars referred to as the notes of the reporter may justify.

35 Cal. App. 799

PEOPLE v. HANFORD. (Cr. 697.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 10, 1918.)

1. PROSTITUTION 🔑1—INDUCING MINOR TO BECOME INMATE—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.

Under Juvenile Court Law (St. 1915, p. 1246) § 21, providing that any person who shall induce or endeavor to induce any person under the age of 21 years to so live as would cause such person to become or remain a prostitute, within section 1, subds. 1–13, inclusive, shall be guilty, where defendant knowingly permitted prosecuting witness, a minor, to commit acts of prostitution in defendant's house and encouraged the commission of the same, she was guilty, though prosecuting witness may have been previously immoral.

2. WITNESSES 🔑288(2)—PARTS OF DOCUMENT—RIGHT OF ADVERSE PARTY.

Where defendant's counsel during cross-examination of prosecuting witness read into the record a certain portion of her testimony given before the judge of the juvenile court, the prosecuting attorney had the right on redirect examination to read the portion omitted by defendant's counsel.

3. PROSTITUTION 🔑4—REPUTATION OF PLACE—ADMISSIBILITY.

The character of a house of prostitution may be established by evidence of its general reputation.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Jennie Hanford was convicted of violating Juvenile Court Law, § 21, and appeals from the judgment of conviction and from an order denying her motion for new trial. Affirmed.

Walter J. Thompson and Edward Lomasney, both of San Francisco, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

LENNON, P. J. Defendant was charged by an information filed in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco with the crime of violating the provisions of section 21 of the Juvenile Court Law. She was tried, convicted, and sentenced to imprisonment in the county jail of said city and county. Defendant has appealed from the judgment and the order denying her motion for a new trial.

The evidence is sufficient to establish the crime charged. It shows that the defendant knowingly permitted the prosecuting witness to commit acts of prostitution in the defendant's house and encouraged the commission of the same.

[1] It is no defense that the prosecuting witness may have been leading an idle, dissolute, and immoral life prior to and at the time she went to the house of defendant. The statute under which the defendant was convicted in part provides that:

> "Any person who shall, by an act or omission, or by threats, or commands, or persuasion induce or endeavor to induce any * * * person, under the age of twenty-one years, to do or to perform any act or to follow any course of conduct, or to so live as would cause or manifestly tend to cause any such person to become or to remain a person coming within the provisions of any of subdivisions 1 to 13 inclusive of section 1 of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. * * *" St. 1915, p. 1246.

Thus it is apparent that the Juvenile Court Law not only denounces and condemns acts which tend to make a minor a prostitute, but also those which tend to cause one, already a prostitute, to remain a prostitute. In short, the clear purpose and intent of the statute is to reclaim the fallen as well as protect the virtuous.

Complaint is made of the alleged misconduct of the trial court, but the record does not show that the remarks of the court in response to an objection which it is claimed constituted misconduct were objected to or assigned as misconduct. Moreover, the record shows that the objection which provoked the remarks of the court was immediately withdrawn. This, we take it, was an acquiescence in the pertinency and propriety of the court's remarks, which were addressed solely to counsel for the defendant.

[2] Defendant's counsel, during the cross-examination of the prosecuting witness read into the record a certain portion of her testimony given before the judge of the juvenile court. On her redirect examination the prosecuting attorney read into the record a portion of the same testimony given by the witness in the juvenile court which counsel for the defendant omitted to read. This he had a right to do, for "where parts of a conversation or act or writing are proved, other connected parts should be received." Jones on Ev. (2d Ed.) p. 192. Moreover, even if this had been erroneous defendant failed to make either a timely objection or a motion to strike out.

[3] The court did not err in admitting evidence concerning the reputation of the defendant's house. The character of a house of prostitution may be established by evidence of its general reputation. People v. De Martini, 25 Cal. App. 9, 142 Pac. 898

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; BEASLY, Judge pro tem.

---

35 Cal. App. 788

ZIERATH et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 2510.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Jan. 8, 1918.)

1. CERTIORARI 🔑28(2)—ORDERS REVIEWABLE.

To be reviewable on certiorari, an order of the superior court must have been in excess of the court's jurisdiction.

2. JUDGMENT 🔑150—OFFERING DEFAULT—AMENDMENT OF PLEADING.

After default of a defendant, amending of the complaint in a matter of substance opens the default, and judgment cannot be entered unless the amended complaint is served on the defendant, but if the complaint is only amended as to form, the default is not opened.

3. JUDGMENT 🔑144—OPENING DEFAULT.

In entering judgment on an amended complaint, not served on a defendant who defaulted, the court necessarily decided that the amendment was not one in substance, and it was without power to set aside the default on a motion based on the theory that the court did not have jurisdiction to enter the judgment, and it makes no difference how erroneous the judgment was.

Certiorari by A. C. Zierath, W. F. McCann, J. B. Giel, T. E. Amlin, and Walter S. Booth, Jr., as trustees for the stockholders and creditors of Zierath Combination Drill Company, to review an order of the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Los Angeles and the Judge thereof, setting aside a judgment against A. B. Small in the action of Zierath and others against the Midway Southern Oil Company of Long Beach and others. Order annulled.

Alfred H. McAdoo and David E. Bergman, both of Los Angeles, for petitioners. John E. Daly and James H. Daly, both of Long Beach, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. This is a proceeding by writ of review whereby petitioners are seeking to have annulled an order setting aside a default judgment entered against one A. B. Small in an action of Zierath et al. v. Midway Southern Oil Co. of Long Beach et al. In that action the plaintiffs as judgment creditors of the corporation sued to obtain judgment against stockholders for the amount due on said previous judgment, but not exceeding as to any stockholder the amount of his liability for the unpaid portion of the amount subscribed by him or by his predecessor in ownership of the stock as a subscribing purchaser of such stock. An amended complaint was filed, in the ninth paragraph of which it was alleged that upon each of the shares of stock of said corporation there has been paid by the subscriber, owner and holder thereof an amount equal to 20 cents and no more per share; also that each of the defendant stockholders agreed with said corporation, at the time when he subscribed to and became the owner and holder of the shares of stock charged to him in the complaint, that he would pay the balance of the par value of said shares of stock so remaining unpaid to said corporation, or for its use, when legally called upon to so do. On March 1, 1915, the summons and a copy of this amended complaint were served upon the defendant A. B. Small, and his default for not appearing in the action was duly entered on January 19, 1916. No judgment was entered against him, except as hereinafter stated. On November 17, 1916, an amended complaint was filed in two counts. The first count duplicated the allegations of the first amended complaint. The second count was a copy of the first count, except that it omitted the ninth paragraph and substituted therefor other allegations. These substituted allegations described certain transactions whereby all of the capital stock of the corporation, except five $1 shares theretofore issued was originally issued to C. R. Faulstick as fully paid and nonassessable stock at the par value of $1 per share; the defendants being transferees of portions of that stock. It was alleged that the stock was so issued in consideration of the transfer by Faulstick to the corporation of certain interests in real property; that said property was not at that time worth any sum substantially near the value at which it was received, and that neither Faulstick nor the directors of the company who consummated said transaction with him either knew, thought, or believed that said interests in real property had a market value of the sum of $1,000,000, at which it was received, or a market value substantially near said sum. Further allegations were made tending to show that said transaction and the issuance of said stock for said insufficient consideration was intended to operate as a fraud upon future creditors of the corporation. The allegations of said substituted paragraph did not admit that the consideration paid to the corporation for said stock was equal in value to 20 cents per share of the stock or equal to any other specified sum.

The second amended complaint having been served upon some of the defendants, but not upon the defendant A. B. Small, and some of those defendants having answered, the case came on for trial, and at the conclusion thereof findings were filed and judgment was entered against certain of the defendants named in the complaint. We may disregard the findings, as they would be surplusage so far as a defaulting defendant was concerned. The judgment recited that the summons and complaint and amended complaint were duly and regularly served upon the defendant A. B. Small, and that his default had been duly and regularly entered. That this recital was not intended to assert that the second amended complaint was served upon Small is made clear by the fact that other recitals of the judgment show that the second amended complaint was served upon other defendants therein named. It is conceded by petitioners herein that the second amended complaint in that action was not served upon the defendant A. B. Small. The judgment was entered on September 21, 1917. Thereafter, on October 23, 1917, notice was given on behalf of A. B. Small, and pursuant thereto a motion was duly made for an order to vacate and set aside said judgment as to the defendant A. B. Small. The motion was supported by an affidavit which we may disregard here, since the facts therein stated, so far as necessary to be considered here, appear in the judgment roll. On November 16, 1917, the court entered a minute order, to the effect that said motion "to vacate and set aside judgment as to said defendant Small is by the court granted." It is this order which the petitioners seek to have reviewed and annulled.

[1] Petitioners necessarily rely upon the proposition that the order in question was in excess of the court's jurisdiction. If in making said order the court acted in an unauthorized mode and thereby exceeded the bounds of its power, its action may be reviewed on certiorari. Carpenter v. Superior Court, 75 Cal. 596, 19 Pac. 174.

[2] The judgment which said order purports to vacate could not be vacated in response to such a motion as made in this case, unless the judgment was one which the court did not have power to render. This in turn depends upon the more specific proposition that the court was without jurisdiction to enter its judgment against the defendant A. B. Small (he not having appeared in the action) without service upon him of a copy of the second amended complaint. "It is settled by a long line of decisions that where, after the default of a defendant has been entered, a complaint is amended in matter of substance as distinguished from mere matter of form, the amendment opens the default, and unless the amended pleading be served on the defaulting defendant, no judgment can properly be entered on the default." Cole v. Roebling Construction Co., 156 Cal. 443, 446, 105 Pac. 255, 257. Petitioners herein contend that the second amended complaint did not contain any amendment of a substantial nature, or which could in any manner affect the rights of the defendant A. B. Small. We are referred to the cases of R. H. Herron Co. v. Shaw, 165 Cal. 668, 133 Pac. 488, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 1265, and Harrison v. Armour, 169 Cal. 787, 147 Pac. 1166. These were actions similar to the action under consideration here. In Harrison v. Armour the shares of the corporation were $1 each, and it was alleged that no more than 25 cents per share had been paid on the stock subscription. The court said (169 Cal. 792, 147 Pac. 1168) that under the allegations of the complaint "it would have been open to the plaintiff to prove that the patent rights, although turned in at a valuation of $60,000, were and were known or believed by the parties to be worth much less." So the petitioners argue here that the new matter contained in the second count of the second amended complaint consisted of nothing more than evidentiary matter which might have been proved under the allegations of the first amended complaint, which proof would have been for the purpose of showing that only 20 cents per share had been paid on account of the stock held by defendant A. B. Small. For reasons which will next appear we find it unnecessary to express an opinion upon this question.

[3] If the second amended complaint differed from the first amended complaint only in matters of form not in substance affecting any right of the defendant A. B. Small, his default would not be opened by the filing of the last amended pleading. Cole v. Roebling Construction Co., supra; San Diego Savings Bank v. Goodsell, 137 Cal. 420, 425, 70 Pac. 299; Woodward v. Brown, 119 Cal. 283, 304, 51 Pac. 2, 542, 63 Am. St. Rep. 108. In order to determine that the plaintiffs were entitled to judgment against defendant A. B. Small, it was necessary that the court consider the allegations of the amended complaint and of the second amended complaint and determine that the amendments were merely matters of form and not of substance. The court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and by service of the summons and amended complaint it obtained jurisdiction over the defendant A. B. Small. It, therefore, had power to determine the effect of amendments to the pleadings and had jurisdiction to render judgment in accordance with such determination. If the judgment was based upon erroneous conclusions upon the questions thus presented, it was none the less a judgment rendered in the exercise of an established jurisdiction, and could not be set aside except by a mode of procedure provided by law for the review of such judgments. The judgment having been one entered as upon a default, there could not have been a motion for a new trial, nor could there have been a motion for "another and different judgment" under the provisions of section 663, Code of Civil Procedure. The motion to vacate the judgment in question does not purport to have been made to obtain relief under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure. The motion was based, and must have been granted entirely upon the theory that the judgment was void for want of jurisdiction in the court to render any judgment against the nonappearing defendant A. B. Small without service upon him of a copy of the second amended complaint. As we have seen, the court did have jurisdiction to render such judgment. This is so, even though it were conceded now that such action of the court was erroneous. It follows that the court was without jurisdiction to make the order which is here under review.

The order of the court below vacating its judgment against the defendant A. B. Small is annulled.

We concur: WORKS, Judge pro tem.; JAMES, J.

36 Cal. App. 4

SPIER v. PECK, County Treasurer. (Civ. 2512.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Jan. 14, 1918.)

1. STATUTES 🔑181(2)—CONSTRUCTION.
Statutes are to be so construed as not to give rise to an absurdity in their attempted application nor to destroy their efficacy as a whole or in substantial part.

2. STATUTES 🔑184—CONSTRUCTION—PURPOSE.
Strong indices to the legislative intent will always be found upon an inquiry into the nature of the evil sought to be remedied by a statute and the object to be accomplished.

3. OFFICERS 🔑30—SALARIES—HOLDING TWO OFFICES.
Juvenile Court Act (St. 1915, p. 1225) § 18, providing that all probation officers receiving a salary of $75 or more per month shall devote their entire time and attention to the duties of their offices, and no such probation officer, while holding such office and receiving salary therefor, shall be a candidate or seek the nomination for any other public office or employment, prohibits probation officers from acting and receiving the salary under appointment as superintendent of the detention home; the prohibition against being a candidate and seeking nomination in view of the requirement of devotion of entire time being against the holding as well as the seeking of another office.

Original application for writ of mandate by Thomas W. Spier against H. E. Peck, as Treasurer of the County of Ventura. Application denied.

Robert M. Clarke, of Los Angeles, for petitioner. Don G. Bowker, Dist. Atty., of Ventura, for respondent.

WORKS, Judge pro tem. Petitioner is probation officer of the county of Ventura and is also acting under appointment as superintendent of the detention home for the same county, both of the offices, or positions, having their existence under what is known as the Juvenile Court Act (Stats. 1915, p. 1225, Deering's Gen. Laws, Act No. 1770a). The law fixes petitioner's salary as probation officer at $100 per month, and as superintendent of the detention home at $50 per month. Section 18 of the Juvenile Court Act provides, among other things:

> "All probation officers * * * receiving a salary of seventy-five dollars or more per month shall devote their entire time and attention to the duties of their offices, and no such probation officer, * * * while holding such office and receiving salary therefor, shall be a candidate for or seek the nomination for any other public office or employment."

The petitioner presented to the board of supervisors of the county his claim for salary for June, 1917, as superintendent of the detention home, and the claim was allowed. The county auditor approved the demand and issued his warrant for its payment, but the respondent, who is the county treasurer, refused to make payment of the warrant upon its presentation. Thereupon the petitioner instituted this proceeding to enforce the payment.

[1, 2] The respondent contends that section 18 of the Juvenile Court Act, in that part of it from which we have quoted, disqualifies the petitioner, while holding the post of probation officer, from being superintendent of the detention home and, therefore, from drawing the salary annexed to that position. Can the language forbidding a probation officer to "be a candidate for or seek the nomination for any other public office or employment" receive that construction? Statutes are to be so construed as not to give rise to an absurdity in their attempted application and as not to destroy their efficacy as a whole or in substantial part (Murphy v. City of San Luis Obispo, 119 Cal. 624, 628, 51 Pac. 1085, 39 L. R. A. 444; Hannon v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 12 Cal. App. 350, 355, 107 Pac. 335; Madary v. City of Fresno, 20 Cal. App. 91, 96, 97, 128 Pac. 340); all rules of construction having their existence, of course, for the purpose of ascertaining the intent of the Legislature, that being the prime object of the construction and interpretation of statutes. Strong indices to the legislative intent will always be found upon an inquiry into the nature of the evil sought to be remedied by a statute or into the object to be accomplished by it. Bannerman v. Boyle, 160 Cal. 197, 200, 116 Pac. 732; Patton v. Los Angeles Pacific Co., 18 Cal. App. 522, 525, 123 Pac. 613; Odell v. Rihn, 19 Cal. App. 713, 719, 127 Pac. 802; Gise v. Myers, 22 Cal. App. 127, 133 Pac. 500.

In one of the cases above cited (Patton v. Los Angeles Pacific Co.), a statute was under review which provided:

> "An employer is not bound to indemnify his employé for losses suffered by the latter in consequence of the ordinary risks of the business in which he is employed, nor in consequence of the negligence of another person employed by the same employer in the same general business, unless the negligence causing the injury was committed in the performance of a duty the employer owes by law to the employé, * * *; provided, nevertheless, that the employer shall be liable for such injury when the same results from the wrongful act, neglect or default of * * * a coemployé engaged in another department of labor from that of the employé injured, or employed upon a machine, railroad train, switch-signal point, locomotive engine, or other appliance than that upon which the employé is injured is employed. * * *"

The facts of the case were that the motorman of an electric interurban car was injured by the negligence of the conductor of another car. The motorman brought suit against the railroad company for damages. His complaint was assailed by general demurrer and in passing on the demurrer the court said:

> "The objection urged is that single cars, like those upon which the plaintiff and the negligent conductor were employed, are not to be considered as machines or railroad trains, or to be comprehended within the term 'other appliances' as used in the statute. To our minds, influenced by the consideration that the statute must be given a fair and reasonable meaning and be liberally construed to effect the purposes of its enactment (Judd v. Letts, 158 Cal. 359 [111 Pac. 12, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 156]), this contention of appellant is without merit. From the phraseology of the provision quoted it is evident that the Legislature intended to make the law broad in its scope and to preserve the liability of the employer for the employé's benefit in all cases generally where the mechanical device upon which the injured servant is employed is separate and different from that being operated by the negligent employé. By way of closer definition of the department of labor classification, the legislators undertook to and have said in effect that a person is not employed in the same department with another servant where he is at work with or upon a different machine, railroad train, etc.; and in consonance with a rule of fair construction it would be proper to say, if the words 'railroad train' were the only descriptive ones contained in that portion of the statute quoted, that that term as applied to an interurban railway is sufficient to include a single trolley car. Such cars combine in their construction both motors for propulsion and seats for the accommodation of passengers. Used in interurban traffic they perform the same work over long distances as does the steam-propelled train. While a train usually consists of a motor vehicle and cars attached thereto, where these adjuncts are combined in one carriage and serve the same uses, there is no good reason why the one should be said to be a train, within the meaning of the statute, and the other not be so classed. In construing statutes courts are not bound to an interpretation which shall give to words or phrases a literal, close dictionary definition."

In Odell v. Rihn, another of the cases we have cited, the litigation was instituted under the following circumstances: At the time the controversy arose section 4014 of the Political Code provided:

> "The officers of a township are two justices of the peace. * * * In townships containing cities in which city justices or recorders are elected, there shall be but one justice of the peace, and in townships having a population of less than 5,000 there shall be but one justice of the peace. * * *"

It was contended that the city of Richmond was entitled to two justices of the peace under this section. In disposing of the question the court said:

> "We are satisfied that the fifteenth judicial township of Contra Costa county was not at the time of the election in 1910 entitled, under the provisions of section 4014 of the Political Code, to more than one justice of the peace. * * * It is conceded that the judicial township in question consists entirely of the city of Richmond, which, although it has a population of more than 5,000, is provided by charter with a city justice of the peace, who is appointed by the city council. His jurisdiction and duties are concurrent and co-ordinate with those conferred generally upon justices of the peace throughout the state. It is petitioner's contention that the term 'elected' as employed in section 4014, Political Code, should be construed to mean elected by the popular vote of the people. In this contention we cannot concur. Statutes must be read and considered in conjunction with the legislative intent, and then be liberally construed with the object in view of effecting such intent. In restricting the number of justices of the peace to one in townships which include cities in which city justices or recorders are elected, it was evidently the legislative intent not to burden the people of the state with the expense of maintaining more judicial officers than were actually necessary to the needs of the people. The narrow construction of the statute here contended for by petitioner obviously would result in defeating the legislative purpose and intent in that behalf, and is therefore to be avoided if possible. The words 'elected' and 'appointed' ordinarily are not synonymous. In its limited sense the word 'elected' is usually employed to denote the selection of a public officer by the qualified voters of a community. On the other hand the word 'appointed' is generally understood to mean the selection of a public officer by one person who is empowered by law to make the appointment. In its broadest sense, however, the word 'elected' means merely selected. When used in that sense the word 'elected' is synonymous with the word 'appointed'; and where, as in the case at bar, a public officer has been selected by the votes of several members of a city council, it may be truly said in the broadest sense of the term that he was elected. * * * Having in mind the spirit and purpose of the Code section under discussion, it seems to us that the word 'elected,' as used therein, was not intended to apply solely to the election of a city justice by the votes of the people at large; but included as well the selection of a city justice of the peace by the city council or other legislative body in whom the power of election is conferred by law. In other words, it is our opinion that the appointment of a city justice of the peace by the votes of the city council [of the city] of Richmond was tantamount to the election of such justice of the peace in the sense contemplated by the Legislature, and that therefore the fifteenth judicial township of Contra Costa county was entitled to have but one justice of the peace at the time of the election in 1910."

[3] In the present case we have a potent index to the legislative intent in using the words "be a candidate" and "seek the nomination," in the very language of section 18 of the Juvenile Court Act. In the same sentence in which these words are found, and preceding them, it is declared that probation officers "shall devote their entire time and attention to the duties of their offices." It is therefore manifestly in aid of this provision that probation officers shall not be candidates nor seek nominations for other offices or employments. But this plain legislative intent will be frustrated and the provision be reduced to an absurdity if the language employed is to receive a literal construction. The time to be expended by a probation officer in seeking or being a candidate for another office or employment would ordinarily be inconsiderable when contrasted with the time expended by him in occupying and discharging the duties of the new office or employment, if his seeking, or his candidacy, were successful. Moreover, a literal construction would serve to disqualify a probation officer who sought another office or employment successfully, but would not disqualify one who procured and occupied another post without actually or technically seeking it. We are convinced that the Legislature did not intend such an anomaly to arise through the application of the provision now under examination. When probation officers were commanded not to seek other places they were disqualified from occupying such places.

The application for a peremptory writ of mandate is denied.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

---

35 Cal. App. 788

JAMES v. P. B. STEIFER MINING CO. et al. (Civ. 1742.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 8, 1918.)

1. Corporations 🔑320(1) — Stockholder's Suit—Restraining Appropriation by Directors.

Fraudulent appropriation of the funds and the spoliation and destruction of the property of a corporation through the agency of its directors justifies the interposition of equity at the suit, against the corporation and directors, by a stockholder or stockholders, who sustain a fiduciary relation to the corporation whose interests they really represent in the action.

2. Corporations 🔑110 — Stockholder's Suit—Cancellation of Stock.

Issuance of corporation stock without consideration, being a violation of the express provisions of Const. art. 12, § 11, and Civ. Code, § 359, and a breach of trust by the directors, may be redressed in suit against the corporation and directors by stockholder for cancellation of such stock; the corporation being concerned in the cancellation of certificates of stock that have been fraudulently issued and are void.

3. Corporations 🔑110 — Stockholder's Suit—Cancellation of Stock—Pleading.

In action by stockholder against corporation and directors for cancellation of stock, the allegation of the issuance of such stock without consideration, and in fraud and damage of said company, and in violation of the laws of the state, while subject to criticism, was sufficient as against general demurrer.

4. Corporations 🔑312(3) — Liability of Directors—Fraudulent Appropriation.

Where treasury stock is sold, and the proceeds fraudulently appropriated by one having no right thereto with the approval, sanction, and connivance of the directors, they are liable to the corporation, in action by a stockholder, for the amount.

5. Corporations 🔑110—Cancellation of Stock.

Issuance of corporate stock in exchange for worthless land is a fraud against the corporation cognizable in a stockholder's action for cancellation of such stock.

6. Corporations 🔑320(7)—Debts — Notes Given Without Consideration.

In stockholder's action for cancellation of corporation notes and mortgage, allegations that they were given for specified sums, and stating, on information and belief, that the company was not at any time indebted to the payee in any sum whatever, were sufficient to entitle plaintiff to be heard in a court of equity.

7. Corporations 🔑320(5) — Stockholder's Action—Demand.

Demand upon directors to bring action to recover corporation money or property which they have fraudulently appropriated is not required precedent to action by stockholder, if it appears such demand would have been futile.

8. Limitation of Actions 🔑100(1)—Pleading—Discovery of Fraud—Stockholder's Action.

In stockholder's action against corporation and directors for fraudulent appropriation, etc., where some of defendants' acts were quite remote, there should have been an allegation as to when their fraudulent character was discovered by plaintiff; the applicable statute of limitations being Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 4, requiring actions for fraud to be brought within three years from its discovery.

9. Action 🔑50(9)—Stockholder's Action—Improper Joinder.

In stockholder's action against corporation and directors, a complaint stating a cause of action for fraudulent misappropriations, etc., but also alleging false representations of certain defendants inducing plaintiff's purchase of his stock, and illegal levy of assessment on his stock, was demurrable as improperly joining a cause of action for personal wrongs with one for injuries to the corporation.

10. Pleading 🔑225(1)—Sustaining Demurrer—Leave to Amend.

Where a demurrable defect in the amended complaint could easily be remedied, it was error to sustain demurrer without leave further to amend.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by Henry T. James, in behalf of himself and all other stockholders desiring to join, against the P. B. Steifer Mining Company and others. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Frank D. McClure, of Minneapolis, Minn., and Franklin P. Bull, of San Francisco, for appellant. Frank Freeman, of Willows, W. M. Brown, of Los Angeles, and George E. Gardner, of Oroville, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. This appeal, coming up on the judgment roll, is from a judgment duly rendered after a demurrer, both general and special, to the amended complaint, had been sustained without leave further to amend. The order does not specify the ground upon which the demurrer was sustained, but merely sustains the demurrer generally.

The grounds of demurrer are: (1) That the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; (2) that several causes of action have been improperly united, namely, a cause of action in favor of and on behalf of the corporation against said defendants other than the corporation and a cause of action in favor of plaintiff stockholders in their personal capacity, for injuries to their personal rights by said defendant; (3) that the complaint is respectively ambiguous, uncertain, and unintelligible. It may be here interjected that defendants also filed an answer denying all material allegations as to fraudulent conduct and controverting any imputation of evil motives on the part of defendants. With the grounds of demurrer in mind we may turn to the complaint.

The first part of the complaint alleges generally the incorporation of the defendant corporation, the names of its directors and officers, the amount and par value of its capital stock. In paragraph 7 it is alleged that there has been issued to P. B., M. V., S. M.,

H. M., Mrs. Barbara A., and Mary C. Steifer each 56,729⅓ shares of the stock of said corporation "without consideration, and in fraud and damage of said company, and in violation of the laws of the state of California." Plaintiff then purports to set forth the elements excusing a demand upon the directors as being useless and futile to bring an action to vindicate his rights and redress his wrongs.

In paragraphs 9 and 10 plaintiff alleges the purchase by him in August and December, 1911, of 825 shares of supposed treasury stock for which he paid $3,750; that no part of said sum was received by the treasury of said company, "and said money was wrongfully converted from the funds of said company by said M. V. Steifer and Mary C. Steifer and other persons unknown to plaintiff, for their own personal possession and uses, with the approval, sanction, and connivance of the directors of said company, all to the detriment, damage, and fraud of said company, and the stockholders thereof."

Paragraph 11 purports apparently to set forth facts constituting a fraud upon plaintiff (and others named) personally. It avers that in January, 1902, defendants, other than defendant corporation, and others unknown to plaintiff, unlawfully and fraudulently conspired and combined to defraud plaintiff and all others who should purchase stock by organizing a corporation to be known as the P. B. Steifer Mining Company, and placing certain shares on the market for sale and selling the same by false representations. The alleged false representations are then particularly set forth and alleged to be false. Paragraphs 11a and 11b allege that plaintiff and the other stockholders believed the foregoing fraudulent representations; otherwise they would not have purchased stock. Plaintiff, however, does not aver that the stock was not of the value which he gave for it at the time he purchased, nor that he was otherwise damaged by the reliance on said representations.

The complaint then proceeds to set forth the issuance of 347,500 shares of capital stock to P. B. Steifer in return for certain mining land conveyed by P. B. Steifer to the corporation, that said land was worthless, and known to be so by the defendant directors, all of which is a fraud upon the company and a breach of trust. In the same paragraph is alleged the fraudulent expenditure of the corporate money in useless buildings, flumes, and machinery and in the payment of excessive and illegitimate salaries and commissions; that certain shares of stock were sold for sums ranging from $5 to $8 per share; but that of said sums the corporation received at times but $1 a share, and at others nothing, the difference being pocketed by defendants and their confederates. It is then stated that 300 shares of stock were sold to Alice I. Hunt and Louise I. Hunt upon a guaranty that a dividend of $1,500 would be paid thereon, or in default thereof the company would loan said Hunts the difference between the dividend and $1,500; that no dividend was paid, and the officers fraudulently and without authority loaned said Hunts $952.50. It nowhere appears, however, that said sum has not been repaid nor that the Hunts were not responsible persons. Continuing, the paragraph avers the fraudulent issuance to Mary C. Steifer, without consideration, of thousands of shares of stock, the subsequent sale by the corporation of said stock and payment of exorbitant commissions by the corporation, the proceeds going to Mary C. Steifer, the subsequent borrowing by the corporation of said sum from Mary C. Steifer, and the giving to her of the company's notes and mortgage therefor.

Further alleging details of the transaction last above referred to, in paragraph 13 it is stated that the company gave to Mary C. Steifer its promissory notes (setting forth amounts and terms) and a mortgage to secure payment thereof on all the real and personal property of the corporation, and it is stated, on information and belief, that the company was not at any time indebted to said Mary C. Steifer in any sum whatever.

The rest of the complaint complains of the assessment levied on the stockholders of the corporation. It is averred that said assessment is, by the resolution creating it, for the purpose of paying in part an indebtedness of some $89,000 alleged to be due Mary C. Steifer, whereas the total corporation debts amounted only to $7,000, and therefore said assessment is unnecessary; that plaintiff and others have not paid the same, and their stock is advertised for sale; that the said Steifers have never paid the assessment upon their stock, but have fraudulently marked their assessments as paid upon the books of the corporation.

In paragraph 16 it is alleged, on information and belief, that the directors on January 4, 1915, did not levy an assessment upon all the stock of the corporation, to wit, 515,429 shares, but upon 511,949 shares only.

The prayer in substance purports to ask: (1 and 2) That the issuance of the capital stock to the defendants and others named, other than the corporation, be declared illegal and void, and a fraud on the corporation and the shareholders thereof; (3) "that the sale of said capital stock to plaintiff and all other stockholders, other than defendants, was made in furtherance of said conspiracy to defraud them and made upon false and fraudulent representations;" (4) that the mortgage and notes given by the corporation to Mary C. Steifer be declared to have been given without consideration and be declared null and void and canceled; (5) that the assessment be declared unlawfully levied, and that it be set aside and its collection be restrained; (6) that the sale of the stock be restrained; (7) that plaintiffs be given costs and general relief.

That the amended complaint states a cause of action in behalf of the corporation against the directors and those co-operating with them cannot be doubted. The case is brought clearly within the rule announced and illustrated by many authorities to which attention is directed in the brief of appellant. It is sufficient to refer to Woodruff v. Howes, 88 Cal. 184, 26 Pac. 111; Wickersham v. Crittenden, 93 Cal. 17, 28 Pac. 788; California Calaveras Min. Co. v. Walls, 170 Cal. 285, 149 Pac. 595; Whitten v. Dabney, 171 Cal. 621, 154 Pac. 312; Harvey v. Meigs, 17 Cal. App. 353, 119 Pac. 941.

[1] The fraudulent appropriation of the funds and the spoliation and destruction of the property of the corporation through the agency of the directors present an obvious instance for the interposition of equity at the suit of a stockholder or stockholders who sustain a fiduciary relation to the corporation whose interests they really represent in the action. The general principle is stated in High on Injunctions, vol. 2, § 1203, as follows:

> "The protection of the rights of shareholders in incorporated companies against the improper or illegal action of other shareholders, or of the officers of the company, is a favorite branch of the jurisdiction of equity by injunction. And it may be asserted as a general rule that courts of equity may enjoin, in behalf of the stockholders of an incorporated company, any improper alienation or disposition of the corporate property for other than corporate purposes, and will restrain the commission of acts which are contrary to law and tend to the destruction of the franchise, as well as the improper management of the business of the company, or a wrongful diversion of its funds or from depriving plaintiff of his rights as a corporator."

And it is equally clear from the authorities that a court of equity, as far as it can be done, will compel the restitution and restoration of the funds or property of the corporation that have been misappropriated or destroyed by the directors and those acting in concert with them. To make it manifest that such is the case before us we may recall more specifically a few of the facts set forth in the amended complaint.

[2, 3] The allegation in the seventh paragraph as to the issuance of over 300,000 shares of the capital stock without consideration affords an instance of the violation of article 12, § 11, of the Constitution of the state and section 359 of the Civil Code, and the directors thereby committed a breach of trust to be redressed in an action of this character. Naturally the corporation is concerned in the cancellation of certificates of stock that have been fraudulently issued and are void. Cortelyou v. Imperial Land Co., 156 Cal. 376, 104 Pac. 695. The form of said allegation is subject to criticism, but the averment should be deemed sufficient as against a general demurrer.

[4] In the ninth paragraph there is an imperfect attempt to allege that treasury stock was sold to plaintiff and the proceeds fraudulently appropriated by M. V. Steifer with the approval, sanction, and connivance of the directors of the company. If true, the directors would, of course, be liable to the corporation for the amount of the sale, and it could be recovered in this action.

[5] In the twelfth paragraph it appears that the defendants, other than the corporation, issued to said P. B. Steifer 347,500 shares of the capital stock for the right, title, and interest of said Steifer in and to certain alleged mining land when said defendants knew that said right, title, and interest of said P. B. Steifer "was worthless and without value, and that the transfer of said capital stock to said P. B. Steifer was without consideration," etc. Therein, as we view it, is presented, though somewhat inartificially, another instance of fraud against the corporation and cognizable in this proceeding. In the same paragraph is set forth, as we have seen, the useless expenditure of a large amount of the funds of the corporation in the erection of buildings that were not designed or needed for the legitimate purposes of the corporation, and also that large blocks of treasury stock were sold and the money derived therefrom converted to their own use by said defendants; that they also paid to themselves large sums of money for traveling expenses, hotel bills, and salaries out of all proportion to the expenses incurred and the services rendered; that certain shares of stock belonging to the corporation were sold, and only a portion of the proceeds accounted for; that thousands of shares were issued to Mary C. Steifer without consideration; that portions of said stock were sold by the secretary of the corporation, and he was paid therefor out of the funds of the company a large sum for commissions; and that a note and mortgage were given to said Mary C. Steifer to cover money borrowed from her, but which she had received as the proceeds of the sale of said stock fraudulently issued to her as above stated.

[6] In the thirteenth paragraph there is the additional allegation that two notes and a mortgage were given to said Mary C. Steifer for the sum of $49,837.07 and $40,000, respectively, whereas the corporation was not indebted to her in any sum whatever. The foregoing are deemed sufficient specifications of fraudulent transactions affecting the interests of the corporation to establish the right of plaintiff to be heard in a court of equity in this kind of proceeding. As indicated, some of the allegations are subject to verbal criticism, but we think respondents seek to apply too strictly the technical rule of pleading. One or two specifications may be noticed briefly.

[7] The failure of plaintiff to make demand upon the directors to bring the action is sufficiently excused. Of course, it is improbable that they would be guilty of such stultification as to sue themselves to recover for the corporation money or property which they had wickedly and fraudulently appropriated and sequestered. The facts alleged show that such demand would have been ignored or scornfully refused. It is well settled that, where it appears that a demand, if made, would have been futile, it is not required. We may add that the answer furnishes additional confirmation that no such suit would have been brought by the directors. Therein they disavow any corrupt motive, deny any improper disposition of the property of the corporation, and affirm the utmost good faith in all their transactions relating to the affairs of the company.

> "While it is a general rule that a member or stockholder of a corporation cannot have redress from any wrong or injury to the corporation until he has made an earnest effort to secure proper action by the managing body of the corporation, yet when it appears that it would be futile and useless to make a demand upon the corporation or upon its trustees or officers to commence a suit to obtain relief, or that the trustees are parties to the suit complained of and claim the right to do what they did, no such demand may be made." Ashton v. Dashaway Ass'n et al., 84 Cal. 61, 22 Pac. 660, 23 Pac. 1091, 7 L. R. A. 809; Woodruff v. Howes, supra; Von Arnim v. American Tube Works, 188 Mass. 515, 74 N. E. 680; Simon v. Weaver, 143 Wis. 330, 127 N. W. 950.

[8] Nor can it be maintained that the action is barred by the statute of limitations or by the laches of plaintiff. The suit was brought certainly within a reasonable time after the commission of some of the reprehensible acts. This is especially true of the execution of the notes and mortgages to said Mary C. Steifer. Some of the other instances were quite remote, and there should have been an allegation as to when discovery of their fraudulent character was made by plaintiff. The pleading is silent as to that point. In the Whitten Case, supra, it is declared that a stockholder who institutes such an action as this does so "in a purely representative character and as a trustee to redress corporate injuries," and that the provision of the statute of limitations applicable to such action is subdivision 4 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing that actions for relief on the ground of fraud or mistake must be commenced within three years, but the cause of action is not to be deemed to have accrued until the discovery by the aggrieved party of the facts constituting the fraud or mistake.

While the complaint as to some of the specifications is therefore defective in this particular, yet upon the whole there is a sufficient designation of fraudulent acts within a short period anterior to the filing of the complaint to avert this general attack upon the pleading.

[9] As to the misjoinder of causes of action it is undoubtedly true that certain acts of a personal nature resulting in injury to plaintiff individually, and not producing any wrong to the corporation, have been set forth in the complaint in connection with those of the nature to which we have referred. Such, for instance, is the purchase by plaintiff of his stock by reason of the false representations of said defendants. It does not appear that the corporation was damaged by such purchase. Nor can it be held that the corporation would be benefited by the annulment of said purchase. The disposition of the funds arising from the purchase is manifestly of concern to the corporation upon the theory that it was treasury stock, but if plaintiff by reason of false representations paid for the stock more than it was worth, that is a matter of his personal interest, and his wrong should be redressed in a personal action against those who made such representations. The matter of the assessment upon plaintiff's stock involves also, as we view it, a cause of action personal in its nature. The corporation would hardly be in a position to complain because the stockholders paid into its treasury more money than was needed. The individual stockholder is wronged when he is called upon to pay an assessment illegally levied upon his stock, and he may, under certain circumstances, restrain the sale to enforce such assessment, but such contingency does not constitute the basis for an action by or on behalf of the corporation. The observation herein does not refer to the allegation in the complaint as to the failure of the directors to assess a certain number of shares of the capital stock and their conduct in wrongfully crediting payment upon certain other shares. These latter, of course, are of corporate concern, and are properly included in an action like this.

As to this feature of the case we find some profitable suggestions in the opinion of Turner v. Markham, 155 Cal. 562, 102 Pac. 272, wherein it was held that:

> "An action brought by a stockholder for the benefit of a corporation is in its nature and essence to recover redress for some legal wrong which the corporation itself has suffered and to prevent a failure of justice," but "if the corporation itself has suffered no wrong cognizable at law or in equity, it matters not how just and how grievous may be the complaint of the stockholder, nor how complete may be the proof of his individual loss, damage, or injury, but he will be compelled to resort to his individual action to obtain a personal recovery."

Therein is an illustration somewhat in point here to this effect:

> "If A. upon the street sells to B. his own stock under the representation to B. that it is treasury stock, the corporation is not injured, nor is A. estopped in an action by the corporation from asserting that the stock was his own. B., to whom the representations were made, may have suffered by them, may have his cause of action for redress, and may insist upon an estoppel against A., but that estoppel only runs for his benefit and to prevent A. from taking advantage of the wrong which he has perpetrated not upon the corporation, but upon B."

[10] Without going further, we think it can be said that a cause of action for personal wrongs has been improperly joined with one for injuries to the corporation, and that the demurrer upon that ground was well taken. But it is manifest that this defect can be easily remedied, and we are satisfied that plaintiff should have been allowed to amend the complaint.

In Schaake v. Eagle, etc., Can Co., 135 Cal. 472, 63 Pac. 1025, 67 Pac. 759, it was held that:

> "If a complaint states a cause of action, it is an abuse of discretion, apparent upon the face of the record, to sustain demurrers thereto on any ground without granting leave to amend. The fact that the complaint had been once before amended does not justify a refusal of leave to amend in such case. Where the order refusing leave to amend a complaint stating a cause of action was inserted in the order sustaining demurrers thereto, it cannot be presumed that the plaintiff asked leave to amend in advance of the ruling. The order is deemed excepted to by force of the statute, and the plaintiff is not required to move to vacate or modify it in order to have the abuse of discretion reviewed upon appeal."

We think the judgment should be reversed, with direction to allow the plaintiff to amend his complaint if he so elects.

It is so ordered.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

176 Cal. 738

HALL v. THURSTON. (L. A. 4053.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 14, 1917.)

1. Bills and Notes 🔑524—Title to Sustain Action—Evidence.

The possession of notes, showing no payments thereon duly indorsed by the payee, constitutes a prima facie showing of plaintiff's right to recover, which, coupled with proof that the transfer complained of made to plaintiff's assignor was done by order of the board of directors of a rightful holder, of which board defendant was a member present and acting, is sufficient.

2. Bills and Notes 🔑489(3) — Actions — Defenses—Pleading.

The rejection of defendant's offer in evidence of a purported agreement between himself and his assignee of his own indorsed notes for the purpose of showing equities in defendant's favor by which plaintiff would be bound is not error, where such equities or agreements were not pleaded.

3. Bills and Notes 🔑489(3)—Pleadings—Bona Fide Purchasers after Maturity.

Where, under Code Civ. Proc. § 368, a note is assigned, after maturity any defenses existing in favor of the maker at the time or before notice of assignment are not available, unless pleaded.

4. BILLS AND NOTES ⟹427(3) — PAYMENT AND DISCHARGE.

The maker's payment of a note to a former holder after notice of transfer was at his peril.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; A. J. Buckles, Judge.

Action by F. R. Hall against L. F. Thurston. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

B. F. Woodard and E. J. Fleming, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. A. C. Routhe, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment entered in favor of plaintiff upon two promissory notes made by defendant, payable to his own order and by him indorsed and delivered to the International Security Company (a corporation), of which one Newton J. Skinner was at the time president.

The complaint alleges that after their maturity the notes were for a valuable consideration transferred by said corporation to said Skinner, who thereafter for value transferred them to one George C. Smith, by whom they were delivered to plaintiff. The answer admits the making and delivery of the notes to the International Security Company for a valuable consideration and as a defense to the cause alleges that at all the times mentioned the notes were the property of said corporation, and that "Skinner falsely and fraudulently secured possession thereof"; that no transfer of the same was made by said corporation; and "that prior to the commencement of the action plaintiff paid to said International Security Company the entire indebtedness represented by said promissory notes, together with interest thereon."

[1] Upon the ground of want of sufficient evidence to sustain the same appellant attacks the finding that after the maturity of the notes they were for a valuable consideration transferred to and became the property of Newton J. Skinner. In the absence of want of consideration pleaded for the making of the notes, we are unable to perceive the materiality of the finding so far as it concerns defendant. However, conceding it to be material, possession of the notes by plaintiff, duly indorsed by the payee therein named, and upon which no payments appear to have been made, was as to plaintiff a sufficient prima facie showing to establish his right to recover thereon. In addition to this fact, there was evidence tending to show that the notes were, by resolution of the board of directors of the International Security Company, ordered transferred in settlement of an account known as the Magee account in which Skinner had some interest, which transfer so made by the president of the company appears to have been ratified by the board of directors of which defendant was a member present and acting in the transaction.

[2] The action of the court in sustaining plaintiff's objection to defendant's offer in evidence of a written agreement made by him with the International Security Company acting through Skinner, then president of said company, is assigned as error. Appellant claims this agreement related to said notes and modified their terms in reference to his obligation for the payment thereof, and thus, as between the defendant and the company created equities in his favor whereby plaintiff was bound. A sufficient answer to his contention and the alleged error predicated upon the ruling of the court in sustaining plaintiff's objection to the question asked defendant, "Did you make an agreement (with the company) by which these notes were not to be paid?" is that no such equities or agreements were pleaded and no tender made by answer of any issue under which the document was admissible in evidence. Moreover, the agreement on its face makes no reference to the notes involved in the action. There was no error in the ruling.

[3] Immediately following the ruling upon the question last referred to counsel for defendant said, "Your honor rules that we cannot put in any evidence as to the payment of these notes?" to which the court replied, "It is just about that way." For the reason that the answer did not allege facts constituting any defense to the notes in the hands of plaintiff as legal holder thereof the ruling was correct. They were payable to the maker by whom they were indorsed, and hence passed by delivery. Bank of Lassen Co. v. Sherer, 108 Cal. 513, 41 Pac. 415. The delivery constituting an assignment thereof was made by the International Security Company after the notes had matured. As provided in section 368 of the Code of Civil Procedure, they were as to plaintiff subject to any defenses existing in favor of defendant at the time or before notice of the assignment. As stated, the only defense pleaded was that plaintiff was not the owner of the notes (as to which the court upon sufficient evidence found in favor of plaintiff), and the alleged fact that defendant prior to the commencement of the action paid, not the notes, but "the indebtedness represented by said promissory notes" to the International Security Company. Clearly if at the time of the transfer made by the company defendant had paid the notes, or if subsequent thereto he had without notice of the assignment made payment, such facts, if pleaded, would constitute a defense. Bank of Stockton v. Jones, 65 Cal. 437, 4 Pac. 418. It is not alleged, however, that payment was made before notice of the transfer. Indeed, we may say the state of the record is such that defendant could not truthfully have made such allegation. Hence, since proof of the allegation, in the absence of evidence that payment was made prior to notice, as to which there was neither averment nor offer of evidence, would constitute no defense to the action.

[4] After the transfer of the notes prior to payment thereof, of which fact defendant by uncontradicted evidence is shown to have had notice, payment thereof if made by him to the International Security Company, having, as he knew, no interest therein, was at his peril.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

---

176 Cal. 745

DESERET WATER, OIL & IRRIGATION CO. v. STATE. (Sac. 2081.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 14, 1917.)

APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑835(2)—REHEARING—MATTERS NOT URGED ON ORIGINAL HEARING.

Where, in a suit to condemn land within a national forest reservation as land of the state, the defense that the state had parted with its title by offering the land to the United States as a basis for lieu land selections was treated as in issue, and evidence thereon was introduced, and the decisions of the state and federal Supreme Courts were based thereon, the objection could not be made on a rehearing in the state Supreme Court that the pleadings were insufficient to present this defense.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Mono County; William S. Wells, Judge.

On rehearing. Judgment reversed.

For former opinion, see 167 Cal. 147, 138 Pac. 981.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John T. Nourse, Deputy Atty. Gen. (Percy V. Long, City Atty., and J. F. English, Asst. City Atty., both of San Francisco, amici curiæ), for the State. A. H. Ricketts and Metson, Drew & Mackenzie, all of San Francisco, and Horatio Allen, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Upon appeal to this court the judgment of the trial court was affirmed, for reasons given in the opinion. 167 Cal. 147, 138 Pac. 981. Under writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States (243 U. S. 415, 37 Sup. Ct. 394, 61 L. Ed. 821), that court decided that the construction which this court put upon the federal statute, therein following the decision of the highest federal court which had spoken upon the matter (Hibberd v. Slack [C. C.] 84 Fed. 571), was erroneous, and that, while the state of California had acquired title to the lands in question it had waived its right to such lands. The lands were withdrawn from sale by the state by an act of the Legislature, and the surveyor general of the state had offered the land back to the United States as bases for lieu land selections. The effect of the acts of the state under the construction which the Supreme Court of the United States has put upon the federal statute is not doubtful. In equity the state of California has surrendered its title to these lands to the United States, and only the action of an executive department of the United States—the Land Office—is necessary to complete the legal transfer of title.

Upon rehearing before this court, however, it is argued that the sole allegation touching this matter is simply that the state alleges "that the land described in plaintiff's complaint is surveyed land and is wholly situate within the exterior boundaries of a permanent reservation." It is contended that this allegation is insufficient to present the defense that the state had thus parted with its title, and that to treat it as presenting such a defense would be to do violence to the admissions in the pleading that the land is owned by the state of California. But to this it must be answered that at the trial the pleadings were accepted as being sufficient to present the issue which was elaborately discussed in the former decision of the case and which formed the subject of review by the Supreme Court of the United States. The matters having been accepted as being questions in issue, evidence having been addressed to them pro and con, and the decision by this court and by the Supreme Court of the United States having been based thereon, respondent cannot be heard upon the objection which it now presents.

It follows therefrom that the judgment appealed from must be reversed, and it is ordered accordingly.

---

176 Cal. 687

BUDD v. HUGHES et al. (L. A. 4068.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 13, 1917.)

1. EVIDENCE 🔑391 — PAROL EVIDENCE AFFECTING WRITING—BILLS OF SALE.

Oral evidence will not be received to vary the terms of a written instrument, a rule applicable in actions between parties to a bill of sale.

2. EVIDENCE 🔑419(7)—PAROL EVIDENCE AFFECTING WRITING — NONAPPLICATION OF RULE WHERE CONTROVERSY IS BETWEEN PARTY TO WRITING AND ONE NOT A PARTY.

Where the lessor of a motion picture theater, having re-entered for nonpayment of rent, executed bill of sale of the personalty therein, including theater chairs installed by her tenant, to a corporation, selling and transferring the property for $7,500, in action by the assignee of the tenant against the lessor's executor and executrix to recover for the personalty thus wrongfully sold, evidence that other considerations than the tenant's personalty entered into the transaction resulting in the bill of sale was not inadmissible as varying the terms of the bill of sale, since where the controversy is between a party to a written contract, and one who is neither a party nor privy to one who is, the rule excluding parol evidence to explain, vary, modify, or contradict a writing does not apply.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1071(1)—HARMLESS ERROR—FINDING OF NO INDEBTEDNESS.

In an action for money had and received by defendant for plaintiff's use, error in finding that defendant was not indebted to plaintiff's assignor in any sum was cured by judgment rendered for plaintiff for $2,000.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑883—HARMLESS ERROR—COMPELLING PLAINTIFF TO AMEND.

Where the court, at close of trial, stated the allegations of the complaint were such that judgment could not be given in plaintiff's favor without amending, though on the evidence he was entitled to recover, whereupon plaintiff under protest amended, he was not in a position to assert he was prejudiced by the court's action, as it was optional with him whether or not he amended and took judgment, or, in the absence of amendment to like effect in the answer, let judgment other than as confessed therein go for defendant.

5. PLEADING 🔑8(2)—CONCLUSION OF LAW.

A complaint alleging that defendant was holding certain property as trustee for plaintiff pleaded a mere conclusion.

6. TRUSTS 🔑352—CONVERSION OF PERSONALTY IN THEATER BY SALE—RIGHT OF TENANT TO ENTIRE PRICE.

Where the lessor of a motion picture theater, whose lessee placed certain personalty therein, after re-entry sold the whole business for a lump sum, there was no such commingling of goods as entitled the lessee to the whole purchase price received, when the value of his goods thus converted by the lessor was readily ascertainable.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Finlayson, Judge.

Action by Harold Budd against Henry West Hughes and Rosy B. Hughes, as joint executor and executrix, respectively, of the last will and testament of Mattie W. Hughes, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying his motion for new trial, he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

Willis S. Mitchell and Davis, Kemp & Post, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. W. W. Butler, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

